A. Yes, I think I did, and to go further on: you are quite right to say that it was, up until the day itself, that we were not quite sure whether they were going to ask to go to the Guildhall or not, and you will recall that there was a meeting held at barrier 14 between the leaders of the NICRA march and the RUC to determine that point.

So, I would have to say that I would agree with Superintendent Frank Lagan here, that the best way to avoid confrontation was to allow the march proceed, which in fact we did.[4]

Mr. Rawat: Was that a general view as to the way that marches should be handled in the city at that time, perhaps in a less confrontational, softly, softly approach,

A. Yes, I think it was in accordance with the way we were running our operations in the city at the time." Day 266/39/13 to Day 266/42/1

11.2.24.4 This analysis is also of course consistent with the Brigade Order itself which envisages at 7(b)(2) that "Where it is impracticable to make such arrests, photographs of ringleaders and participants are to be taken, for identification and arrest at a later stage." G95.567

11.2.24.5 This body of evidence suggests that:

contemporaneous notes when interviewed.

i) Chief Superintendent Lagan's analysis was consistent with the general approach, adopted by the military, to security operations in Derry at that time;

ii) The approach was not absurd, particularly in light of its eventual inclusion in the Brigade Operation Order for Bloody Sunday.

11.2.24.6 For the reasons set out above, it is submitted that the Inquiry should conclude that Brigadier MacLellan shared Chief Superintendent Lagan's view that the march should be allowed to proceed to the Guildhall. This approach reflected the prevailing wisdom within 8 Brigade as to the best approach to policing the ban on marches and was consistent with the military policy operational in Derry at that time.

Responsibility for the Decision to Stop the March

11.2.25 It is nonetheless apparent that Brigadier MacLellan is correct when he states that, the decision whether or not to stop the march "was not up to me or Mr. Lagan", B1279.032 paragraph 31 and that any discussion between Brigadier MacLellan and Chief Superintendent Lagan was 'academic'. In reality the local security forces in Derry had no input into the decision about whether the march would be allowed to reach the Guildhall.

11.2.26 The decision to stop the march finds its origins in the memo sent by General Ford to General Tuzo on the 10 January. General Ford advised General Tuzo that he had "told Commander 8 Brigade that he was to prepare a plan over this weekend based on the assumption that the march was to be stopped as near to its starting point as was practical and taking into account some form of battle (therefore he must choose a place of tactical advantage) and also the fact that the minimum damage must be done to the shopping centre." G48.301

[4] In fact, while the march was allowed to proceed to its destination of Free Derry Coroner without interference, it is clear from the Operations Order for Operation Forecast that had NICRA decided that the march should proceed to the Guildhall it would have been prevented from doing so.

11.2.27 The views expressed in that memo, and in particular:

i) the contempt expressed by General Ford for Chief Superintendent Lagan;

ii) his dissatisfaction with 8th Brigade and Brigadier MacLellan; and,

iii) his desire to restore law and order in Derry; permitted of only one outcome.

Regardless of the views expressed by the local security forces, or the consequences of stopping the march, the NICRA march would be stopped "as near to its starting point as was practical and taking into account some form of battle". G48.301

11.2.28 While that memo related to the march scheduled for the 16 January 1972 it is clear that the approach outlined by General Ford on the 7 January 1972, was the approach eventually adopted in Operation Forecast.[5]

11.2.29 Brigadier MacLellan is also correct in suggesting that the "Government were bound to decide that the march should be stopped, and that the Joint Security Committee would share this view." G128.849 On the 21 January 1972 Lt. Col. Ferguson met Brian Faulkner at a social function, where it was made clear to him, by both Mr. Faulkner and his wife, that the situation which had pertained on the 2 January when civil rights protestors marched along the M1 could not be repeated. It is evident that from an early stage, little weight would attach to the views of the local security forces in determining the policing strategy for the day. Day 281/43/11 to Day 281/44/18

11.2.30 As is clear from Section 9.3 General Ford's view that this march had to be stopped was not a minority opinion within HQNI. On the 24 January when Brigadier MacLellan was meeting Chief Superintendent Lagan and Superintendent McCullagh, the Chief of Defence Staff was meeting Generals Tuzo and Ford. G70.437 It is evident from the notes of that meeting that there was no prospect of the march being allowed to proceed to the Guildhall.

11.2.31 General Ford's reaction to the signal from Brigadier MacLellan, communicating Chief Superintendent Lagan's views G70A.441.001 is also revealing. General Ford's response was not to telephone Brigadier MacLellan to discuss the concerns of the local security forces about the potential consequence of stopping the march but rather to order him to prepare an outline plan by the following day, the 26 January. G69.435, G69.436 This plan "to be based on the blocking of all approaches from the Bogside and the Creggan to the Guildhall, the blocking points to be held by teams of soldiers armed with federal riot guns covered by snipers in case the gunmen intervened. CLF also stressed that we had to prevent the hooligans and rioters from damaging Protestant shopping areas of the City, by saturating these areas with troops." B1279.032 paragraph 32

11.2.32 As soon as it was communicated to General Ford that the local security forces were of the view that the march should proceed he took steps to ensure that this would not happen.

Local security concerns not relevant to the Decision

11.2.33 In their evidence to this Inquiry Brigadier MacLellan and General Ford have sought to suggest that local security issues determined the decision to stop the march. In our submission these reasons are advanced because of the recognition that the underlying reason for the decision: the objective of demonstrating the military's strength and securing victory over the protestors, with the consequent change of military policy in Derry, is one which cannot be acknowledged. [See 9.1 above]

11.2.34 Brigadier MacLellan has stated that he was "concerned that if the march had been allowed to go to the Guildhall, the hooligans would have had a heyday, busting the place up and looting. This would have been followed by a sectarian flare up". B1279.032 paragraph 30 General Ford, on the other hand, suggests that it was the fear that "it was inevitable at an early stage the IRA and hooligans would take over control of this illegal march". WT11.5D and B1143 paragraph 15

11.2.35 The evidence of contemporaneous documents is that these factors amount to an ex post facto justification for the decision to stop the march, and had no bearing on the decision at the time. We say this for the following reasons:

i) Brigadier MacLellan has never advanced his explanation prior to the establishment of this Inquiry and it is inconsistent with his previous accounts for the reasons set out above.

ii) General Ford's explanation, based as it is upon a briefing apparently received from the senior commanding officers in Derry whom he met on the 7 January 1972, is inconsistent with the evidence of Brigadier MacLellan and Col. Ferguson on this issue. Col. Ferguson evidence about G48.299-301 is to the effect that "I never had considered – or was asked to consider the option of stopping the march at its source . . . it was definitely a march that was going to take place and so my riding instructions, I think, were very different from what is in that letter." Day 281/22/3 to Day 281/22/23 While Brigadier MacLellan's explanation for the necessity of stopping the march is at variance with the evidence of General Ford.

11.2.36 In reality the decision to stop the march and the decisions which flowed from it, resulted from a change in military strategy in Derry, heralded by General Ford's memo to General Tuzo. Contrary to the evidence of General Ford and Brigadier MacLellan, neither the security of the city of Derry or its population, nor the requirement that law and order be enforced, provided the justification for the decision to stop the NICRA march 200 yards from the Guildhall. The march was to be stopped in order to demonstrate that the army was able to police the ban on marches and the army was able to police Derry, regardless of the consequences.

11.3 Decision that the Military should Police the March 11.3.1 On the 10 January 1972 Lt. Col. Steele prepared, what he has described as, a memo setting out the concept of operations for the proposed march on the 16 January 1972. G49.302 That memo was produced in response to General Ford's order, referred to in his memo to General Tuzo, G48.300 and was thus prepared on the assumption that the march was to be stopped as near to its starting point as practicable.

11.3.2 The Operations Order for Operation Forecast produced some 2 weeks later G96.581 amounted to a significant change in approach from that envisaged by Lt. Col. Steele in G49.302. In the original concept:

i) The RUC would play the prominent role in stopping the march, it was only in the event of marchers breaching the RUC cordon that the military would intervene.

ii) The force levels for 8 Brigade would be increased by 2 Companies to be held in reserve at Drumahoe barracks and to be deployed in the event of either: an angry reaction to stopping the march; or other incidents in the Brigade area. There was no provision for an arrest operation directed at hooligans. G49.305

11.3.3 In this section we propose to address the decision to remove operational control from the RUC and place it in the hands of the military, the decision to mount an arrest operation will be addressed in Section 11.4 below.

11.3.4 The explanation advanced by Brigadier MacLellan and Lt. Col. Steele, for the change in approach between the 2 documents, is the difference in the estimated size of the 2 marches. A figure in the region of 10,000 was the estimate for the march of the 30 January 1972 while figures of 1,000 – 3,000 had been estimated for the earlier march. Day 261/36/13 to Day 261/37/21 and Day 266/35/1 to Day 266/36/6

11.3.5 General Ford's explanation for the change is that: "it appears to be the case that the forecasts of the size of the later march and its potential repercussions for law and order in Londonderry were such that large numbers of troops would be required and military control would be necessary." B1208.038 paragraph 7.25 In his evidence to the Inquiry he appears to suggest that the "potential repercussions for law and order in Londonderry" envisaged were "the indications of the extent of the rioting that was likely to take place". However, as was pointed out to General Ford, the prophesy of increased rioting was predicated upon the assumption that the march would be stopped. Day 254/47/9 to Day 254/49/16 A prediction foretold also by Lt. Col. Steele's memo, which stated that the "strength of the march could be in proportion to our attitude to stopping it." G49.302

11.3.6 The decision to change the character of the operation, from an RUC controlled operation, to one controlled by the military, was the decision of General Ford, made in advance of any discussions with the Chief Constable, at the Director of Operations meeting held on the 26 January 1972. G75.459

11.3.7 Paragraph 8 of the first draft of the statement prepared by Brigadier MacLellan for the Widgery Inquiry makes it clear that

i) General Ford made the decision that soldiers would be used to man the blocking points, and that this was in direct response to brigadier MacLellan's signal to General Ford which communicated Chief Superintendent Lagan's views that the march should be allowed to proceed to the Guildhall. B1279.015 paragraph 6

ii) The decision that "[t]he containment of the Creggan March would be a Military Operation with the RUC in support, and the military in command at all levels" was also the decision of General Ford. B1279.015 paragraph 8a This decision followed General Ford's receipt of Brigadier MacLellan's outline plan, following which he ordered Brigadier MacLellan to come to HQNI and ordered him to include this, among other elements, in the plan.

11.3.8 This decision necessarily had the approval of General Tuzo given that:

i) General Tuzo as GOC was "responsible for the control, tasks and deployment of all security forces in Northern Ireland" and only the GOC could dictate that the "RUC come under the direct command of a military commander in certain areas." G20.142 paragraph 5a

ii) General Tuzo attended the Director of Operations meeting at which it was determined that this would be a military operation.

11.3.9 It is arguable that the size of the march necessitated a more prominent role for the military. It is however noteworthy that the joint Army/Police Instruction, introduced by way of implementation of the 'firmer measures' agreed at the JSC meeting of the 13 January 1972, envisaged that the RUC would be to the forefront in policing the ban on marches. It was only in "the event of the police cordon being forcibly broken by the procession, [that] Army action will follow in accordance with the [joint Police/Army plan]." G59.363 paragraph 5 Thus the type of operation envisaged by the JSC, by the RUC and the military, following the renewal of the ban on the 18 January, was entirely consistent with the memo produced by Lt. Col. Steele, but a far remove from the Operations Order for Operation Forecast.

11.3.10 It is our submission that, following his visit to Derry on the 7 January 1972, General Ford had come to the conclusion that the policy of containment, as operated by 8 Brigade, was not working, and that a change of policy was necessary if law and order was to be enforced. The march offered General Ford an opportunity to break the stalemate but given his distrust of Chief Superintendent Lagan, it was vital that the operation by a military one. Thus it is submitted that, the primary motivation for the increased prominence of the military in the operation, was to give HQNI effective operational control over the security operation mounted in Derry on 30 January 1972.

11.4 Decision to Have an Arrest Operation

11.4.1 The second crucial change between the operation envisaged on the 16 January and Operation Forecast was the decision to include an arrest operation in the concept of operations.

11.4.2 Lt. Col. Steele's memo does not contemplate a major arrest operation. The memo envisages the arrest of ringleaders in the event that the march is stopped, or in the alternative, photographing those breaching the ban and arresting them at a later stage. G49.303 paragraph 5

11.4.3 In our submission the reasoning which informed the decision to have an arrest operation had a number of far-reaching consequences:

i) The launch of the arrest operation was rendered inevitable;

ii) Separation was never part of the concept of operations.

General Ford made the decision to have an Arrest Operation

11.4.4 In Brigadier MacLellan's statement to this Inquiry he said "I was given a direct order by General Ford to launch an arrest operation if the soldiers were attacked by hooligans and he specifically allotted 1 Para for the task. This was not a matter for debate and there was no discretion as far as I was concerned." B1279.033

11.4.5 The decision that there should be an arrest operation, involving 1 Para, was communicated to Brigadier MacLellan on the 25 January. In his notes of that conversation Brigadier MacLellan notes that the: "CLF sees 1 Para in reserve in City to "counter-attack" i.e. go round the back to arrest 300-400 rioters". G69.435

11.4.6 Moreover, it seems clear that an arrest operation had been in contemplation as far back as the 10 January, at which stage General Ford issued a warning order to 1 Para with respect to the planned march of the 16 January. While there is no express reference to an arrest operation in the memo, General Ford ordered Brigadier MacLellan to draw up a plan "taking into account the likelihood of some form of battle." G48.301

11.4.7 At the meeting at HQNI in Lisburn, General Ford gave more detailed order:

> "he directed that Tactical Headquarters and 3 Companies of the 1st Parachute Regiment should be held centrally behind the blocking points in William Street area, and launched in a scoop-up operation to arrest as many rioters and hooligans as possible." B1279.016 paragraph 8(k)

11.4.8 It is evident from the statement of Lt. Col. Steele that the outline plan drafted by 8 Brigade, and sent to General Ford prior to the meeting in Lisburn, had not included an arrest operation:

> "Brigadier MacLellan's plan was to observe the march and contain it. I recall the CLF expressing a view at the meeting that this was an opportunity to arrest any hooligan element. Brigadier MacLellan and I expected there to be hooligans present, and that therefore there would be violence. Accordingly, the CLF said that if the hooligans were going to be there he would allot 1 Para to carry out an arrest operation and the CLF thought that this would be a chance for a major scoop up operation." B1315.003 paragraph 14

Reasons for an Arrest Operation

11.4.9 General Ford advances a number of reasons for the decision to include an arrest operation in the concept of operations.

11.4.10 In his supplementary statement to the Widgery Inquiry his explanation was as follows:

> "An arrest operation had been part of our contingency plans on all possible occasions. I have already described the damage that the hooligan element was doing to the William Street area.

We normally have insufficient troops in Londonderry to launch a major arrest operation. Secondly, it is difficult to achieve surprise. Thirdly, on an average afternoon only 20 to 50 of the hooligans operate.

I anticipated that the hooligans would turn out in something approaching their full strength on this occasion. One of my anxieties was that after the inevitable emotional speeches the hooligans would be reinforced by a thousand or more marchers and would bear down on Waterloo Place with the aim of swamping our troops and causing extensive damage to the shopping centre. Such a major riot would have been difficult to counter. It was for this reason that I moved up the 1 Kings Own Border Regiment as an additional reserve. I foresaw that if such an event happened the level of violence would be very high for anything up to three days after the march.

On the other hand, if an opportunity did occur before the end of the rally when the hooligans were separated from the main crowd and we could have arrest a large number of them, I hoped by this means we would have prevented a major escalation of violence later that evening." B1152 paragraph 18

11.4.11 Thus it appears that the arrest operation was part of the concept of the military operation for the following reasons:

i) There was a larger number of troops in Derry than normal;

ii) An arrest operation on the day of the march would have an element of surprise;

iii) There would be a larger number of hooligans to arrest;

iv) It would forestall major rioting later that day, and in subsequent days, by hooligans and marchers, following the speeches after the march.

11.4.12 Given the consequences which we submit flow from General Ford's reasoning [see section 11.4.3 above] it is important, in the first instance to consider whether the analysis which led to the inclusion of an arrest operation as part of the concept of operations was justified.

11.4.13 The two key aspects of General Ford's analysis are:

i) The opportunity created by the NICRA march to launch a major arrest operation, resulting in the removal of a significant number of hooligans from the streets of Derry; and,

ii) The fact that it would forestall major rioting later that day, and in subsequent days, by hooligans and marchers, following the speeches after the march.

11.4.14 The suggestion that the presence of increased force levels in Derry, created a unique opportunity to launch a major arrest operation is somewhat deceptive. While there was an increase in force levels in Derry on the 30 January, the increase in force levels had been identified by Brigadier MacLellan as necessary to stop the march at a time when no arrest operation was envisaged. It was recognised by the military that enforcing the ban on marches "the Force Levels to control urban situations of this sort created by illegal marches are prohibitively high." G82.516 paragraph 6 Moreover, since November 1971, 8 Brigade had had its force levels increased by 1 Battalion for the specific purpose of providing "the opportunity and the force level for the companies of the resident battalions to undertake specific operations" such as the launch of a major arrest operation directed at hooligans. B1122.4 paragraph 17 (Statement Col. Ferguson)

11.4.15 The increase in force levels was not, it is submitted a real factor in determining the decision to include an arrest operation in the concept of operations, except inasmuch as it created the opportunity for General Ford to impose 1 Para on 8 Brigade to launch the arrest operation, rather than a Battalion from 8 Brigade. [This topic is addressed in section 11.5 below]

problem of Derry Young Hooligans. General Ford has suggested in the course of his evidence that there is no link between the proposals contained in his memo to General Tuzo of the 10 January, which contemplate a shoot to kill policy aimed at rioters, and the NICRA march in Derry. He has in effect stated that paragraph 8, which deals with the forthcoming march, has no relationship with the rest of the document:

> "paragraphs 1 to 5 are dealing with the situation as I saw it. Paragraphs 6 and 7 are the suggestion. And then, separate from all that, entirely separate from all that . . . I would start informing him of what I have done about pre-planning for the march on Sunday, 16th January, nothing whatsoever to do with Bloody Sunday." Day 253/66/9 to Day 253/66/22

11.4.17 However, General Ford's explanation of the reason why an arrest operation was necessary demonstrates that the memo is the key to understanding the decisions made in relation to the NICRA march in Derry on Bloody Sunday.

11.4.18 In particular, it was General Ford's analysis of the Derry Young Hooligans in Derry, as a group against whom "the Army in Londonderry is virtually incapable", and the threat he perceived them as posing to Derry's commercial centre, which informed his decision to take advantage of the NICRA march to launch an operation to arrest a large number of hooligans.

11.4.19 The second key aspect of General Ford's reasoning is the risk that after the march, hooligans would join up with rioters and attack the security forces. He envisages that the consequences of such an attack were violent rioting which the security forces would be unable to control and which could continue for up to 3 days. General Ford attributes this anticipated attack to 'emotive speeches' after the march. B1152, B1153

11.4.20 It is significant that this analysis forms no part of the thinking of anyone within the RUC's N Division or within 8 Brigade. Chief Superintendent Lagan envisaged that stopping the march would result in

> "marchers marching on other occasions and at other places. This might have taken place on a working day and in mixed (Catholic/Protestant) population areas and it may have resulted in confrontation between the two populations. It might also have resulted in counter demonstrations from Protestant workplaces.
> 44. From experience, I expected that confrontations between the two populations would start with fighting leading onto stoning and petrol-bombing rather than large-scale destruction of property, serious bodily harm or death.
>
> I refer to the matter raised at the Widgery hearings regarding whether there was a risk that of the meeting that was planned at the end of the march took place and if inflammatory speeches were made, hooligans would go into the shopping and business area and cause great damage with violence lasting up to three days (D 17 34C). I did not anticipate that speeches of that nature would have been made on that day." JL1.9 paragraphs 43 to 44

11.4.21 Neither Brigadier MacLellan, Lt. Col. Steele, nor any of the Commanding officers within 8 Brigade have given evidence that this was their expectation. There is no evidence from intelligence sources that this was predicted. The speculation that this was a consequence of the march originates exclusively from General Ford and can be attributed directly to his analysis of the security situation in Derry as set out in his memo to General Tuzo.

Launch of Arrest Operation Inevitable

11.4.22 General Ford's analysis meant that the launch of the arrest operation was inevitable for two reasons.

11.4.23 The NICRA march created an opportunity to arrest a large number of hooligans. On General Ford's analysis this opportunity did not exist under normal circumstances because of the force levels in Derry. Moreover the opportunity had to be taken because if it was not then "not only would the city commercial centre be destroyed, but experience had already shown us, in Londonderry, that once you reached that stage, that gradually the extremists took over control of the town." Day 258/23/3 to Day 258/23/25

11.4.24 More significantly, if the arrest operation was not launched then:

> "after the speeches were over last Sunday the hooligans, supported by quite a considerable element of the crowd would have descended on Waterloo Place and the Strand with the aim of doing the maximum damage. I believe that we would have had the greatest difficulty in containing the situation without shooting into the crowd . . .
> It was because of this situation and because of this possibility that we included in the plan for 8 Bde a quick snatch operation . . . to pick up a high proportion of the hooligans and in this was prevent major hooligan activity after the meeting." G121.805

11.4.25 In other words General Ford contemplated a situation where, if an arrest operation was not launched, then after the speeches, the hooligan element would join forces with a large section of the marchers and the only method of containing them would be by shooting them. Day 258/49/22 to Day 258/51/10

11.4.26 Launching the arrest operation was thus crucial to prevent the Doomsday scenario envisaged by General Ford. Significantly, the scenario was one which envisaged shooting into the crowd in order to prevent the security forces being over-run. General Ford has given evidence that in such an eventuality soldiers would be justified in shooting at unarmed civilians because "it is not just the matter that they are overrun which is so important, it is the whole credibility of the Security Forces is then lost". Day 258/51/17 to Day 258/52/2

Separation not Part of the Concept of Operations

11.4.27 Moreover an arrest operation launched in order to prevent the outcome envisaged by General Ford's drew no necessary distinction between rioters and marcher, given that after the speeches, rioters would be backed up by, up to, a thousand marchers. B1152, B1153

11.4.28 In circumstances where the arrest operation had to be launched, and there was no necessary distinction drawn between marchers and rioters it is our submission that the concept of separation formed no part of the concept of operations. Separation is a complete fabrication, developed in the aftermath of Bloody Sunday to justify the army's actions in launching the arrest operation.

11.4.29 General Ford has stated in the course of his evidence that there was a clear distinction drawn between marchers and rioters, and that arresting marchers was not part of the concept of operations.

> "separation was an essential part – a prerequisite to the launching of the arrest operation; separation of the marchers and all those with them, well away from the hooligans and any civilians who cared to stay behind with the hooligans. . . . if there had not been [separation] there would not have been an arrest operation." Day 254/56/4 to Day 254/57/3

11.4.30 Yet in none of General Ford's orders to Brigadier MacLellan about the need for an arrest operation is there reference to the concept of separation. Moreover the orders received on the 26 January in Lisburn suggest that action against marchers was part of the concept of operations, rather than expressly excluded:

> "(1) troops were to take no action against Marchers until either an attempt was made to breach the blocking points or violence, erupted, in the form of stone, bottle, and nail bomb attacks against the Security Forces. . . .

(3) Ringleaders of the March need not necessarily be arrested on the spot. . . ." B1279.015-016 paragraph 8(d)

11.4.31 These orders are repeated in the Operations Order itself at 7(b):

"(1) . . . The Security Forces are to take no action against the Marches until either:

(a) An attempt is made to breach the blocking points.

(b) Violence against the Security Forces, in the form of stone, bottle and nail bombing, takes place

(2) Illegal marches are to be halted and disperse on ground of our own choosing. If possible ringleaders are to be arrested on the spot. Where it is impracticable to make such arrests, photographs of ringleaders and participants are to be taken, for identification and arrest at a later stage." G95.567 paragraph 7(b)

11.4.32 When questioned by MOD counsel at the Widgery Inquiry General Ford was asked:

"Q. was part of the concept that the leaders of the marchers should be arrested?

A. Yes." WT10.7D

11.4.33 Although it does appear that this was not the answer that MOD counsel were looking for as Mr Gibbons went on to state:

"Q. Or not?

A. If possible. The directive issued to both the Army and the RUC for dealing with illegal marches was that if practicable the leaders would be arrested at the time, either by the RUC under the Public Order Act or by the Military under the Special Powers Act". WT10.7E

11.4.34 Maintaining the distinction between marchers and rioters is crucial to maintaining the myth of separation. Yet the evidence suggests that not only was separation not a factor in the arrest operation as conceived by General Ford, but was contra-indicated by his analysis. General Ford's analysis meant: the arrest operation had to be launched at the optimum time for catching the largest number of rioters; there was no distinction between rioters and marchers; and, the concept of separation was entirely irrelevant until 13 people had been killed and 14 wounded as a result of the decision to launch the arrest operation.

11.4.35 It is our further submission that the inevitability of the launch of the arrest operation is also key to addressing the following issues: whether General Ford put pressure on Brigadier MacLellan to launch the arrest operation; his role in launching the arrest operation; and, whether 1 Para went into the Bogside in breach of orders. These issues are addressed in 'Military Planning on the Day' below.

11.5 Decision to Use 1 Para

11.5.1 The decision to use 1 Para, was an integral part of the decision to include an arrest operation into the concept of operations. It is clear from the evidence, that the decision was General Ford's, and was a decision in respect of which Brigadier MacLellan was not consulted,[6] and about which he had no discretion.[7]

11.5.2 The decision to dictate troop deployment in an operation, ostensibly mounted by 8 Brigade, is a vivid example of the extent to which General Ford supplanted Brigadier MacLellan and took effective operational control in developing the concept of operations for Operation Forecast.

[6] "Q. . . Do you thing you would ever have asked either Brigadier MacLellan, or any of the commanding officers of the local regiments, who they thought should be used as the arrest force? A. I am certain I did not ask any of the commanding officers, and I am pretty certain I did not ask Brigadier MacLellan either."

[7] "I was given a direct order by General Ford to launch an arrest operation if the soldiers were attacked by hooligans and he specifically allotted 1 Para for the task. This was not a matter for debate and there was no discretion as far as I was concerned." B1279.033

11.5.3 In our submission 1 Para were allocated the task of mounting the arrest operation, for very specific reasons:

i) 1 Para had a reputation for being aggressive and going in 'hard'. Their reputation was the determining factor in their being selected as the arrest force.

ii) General Ford's dissatisfaction with 8 Brigade and Brigadier MacLellan meant that he wanted a Battalion which was not part of 8 Brigade.

iii) He also wanted a Battalion who did not operate the policy of containment, operational within 8 Brigade at that time. To achieve this he needed a Battalion from outside the area whose whole approach was different from that of 8 Brigade, and in line with General Ford's change in policy. "Derry and Belfast were as different as chalk and cheese, and our job in Derry at the time was to maintain a containment line, albeit in an aggressive manner, which was so different to the role required of units in Belfast". CJ2.8 paragraph 40 (Col. Roy Jackson)

iv) Had he used a Battalion from within 8 Brigade, Brigadier MacLellan would have more influence and control over the Battalion, and the arrest operation.

11.5.4 We make this submission on the following basis:

i) The decision to use 1 Para contravened standing operational procedures;

ii) The reasons advanced for the decision to use 1 Para are patently untrue;

iii) There was significant controversy about, and opposition to, the decision to use 1 Para, even before they had murdered 13 people. The reason for the controversy was the recognition within 8 Brigade that the decision amounted to: the implementation of a change in military policy in Derry; and, a deliberate affront to 8 Brigade.

Breach of Standard Operational Procedures

11.5.5 It is our primary submission that the use of a Reserve Battalion to conduct the centre-piece of the military operation on Bloody Sunday, the arrest operation, contravened standing operational procedures. We say this for the following reasons:

i) The use of a Reserve Battalion with no experience of the area was highly unusual. This is evident from the KOSB Standing Operations for Internal Security duties in Northern Ireland in relation to Riot Control 'It is generally better to use reinforcing troops to man the base line and use those soldiers with local knowledge of the area to carry out flanking movements.' G24.187.20(e)

ii) Brigadier Kitson, an acknowledged expert on internal security operations: "made the point about reserve troops from different Brigades only being used in static positions, or in areas where only "Three right turns" would be needed to get into position." CK1.4 paragraph 7

11.5.6 The reason for this being the obvious one, troops who are unfamiliar with an area, would be at a disadvantage relative to local troops, in circumstances where they were involved in an arrest operation. "[I]n a general sense obviously where you have to plunge around and do not know the land, you would be at a slight disadvantage between people who did." General Kitson, Day 237/54/11 to Day 237/55/17

General Ford's Reasons for Using 1 Para

11.5.7 General Ford advances the following reasons for the decision to use 1 Para.

"(i) The units in 8 Brigade were already committed in areas which they knew around the perimeter of the City.

(ii) The City battalion (that is the one covering the William Street area etc) was 22 Light Air Defence Regiment Royal Artillery. This was not an infantry battalion but an artillery regiment temporarily being used in an infantry role and was not suited for a major arrest operation.

(iii) The Province reserve (1KOB) were my reserve. They only became operational on 13 January 1972 and had no experience of arrest operations, major or minor. A major arrest operation would certainly have been beyond their capabilities until at least the middle of February or so.

(iv) As the reserve battalion of 39 Brigade in Belfast, 1 PARA were not committed to permanently holding any particular area.

(v) The third Brigade in Northern Ireland had no reserve battalion.

(vi) 1 PARA had been in the province for well over a year. They had much experience, more than any other battalion in Northern Ireland, both in carrying out arrest operations and in coming under and countering terrorist fire.

(vii) They could be spared for three or four days by Commander 39 Brigade." B1208.031

11.5.8 General Ford was of the view it would not have been feasible to use one of the resident battalions to carry out the arrest operation because:

> "Each of the battalions in 8 Brigade had an area of responsibility, and they each knew their area well. To be responsible for a particular area involved not only knowing the geography, but also knowing the history of operations for that area, the intelligence of that area, the relationship with the RUC, and so on. Using, for example, the Royal Anglians or the Green Jackets for the arrest operation would have meant replacing them with 1 PARA and 1 PARA then having to take responsibility for their area. In military terms such a short term solution would have made no sense." B1208.032 paragraph 5.4

11.5.9 It is our submission that the reasons advanced by General Ford do not stand up to scrutiny. We take no real issue with the reasons advanced at (iii-v) but those are not in our view determinative of the issue. We propose to address the main reasons advanced below:

1. The units in 8 Brigade were already committed in areas which they knew around the perimeter of the City.

11.5.10 In our submission the converse is true and "the use of other regiments in the areas of responsibility allocated to them was predicated upon [General Ford's] direction that 1 Para were to be used specifically as the arrest force?" Day 258/65/21 to Day 258/65/25

11.5.11 General Ford gave orders that the plan "was to be based on the blocking of all approaches from the Bogside and Creggan, the blocking points to be held by teams of soldiers . . . covered by snipers". B1279.015 Thus soldiers, who would normally have other duties, were manning blocking points which did not normally exist, and covering those blocking points with snipers. In our submission the manning of static blocking points, particularly at locations where no real trouble was expected, was a task which could have been allocated to any unit.

11.5.12 General Ford when questioned about this aspect of his reasoning suggested that resident battalions could "filter through those members of the public with legitimate business to conduct, which may well be necessary for the benefit of the community". Day 258/66/12 to Day 258/66/20 But of course, as was pointed out to him and General Ford accepted, once the blocking points were in place, no-one was going to be allowed through, so it made no difference whether the troops were local or from outside the area.

11.5.13 General Ford stated in oral evidence that "Presumably headquarters 8th Brigade committed soldiers to man barriers in areas in which they were very familiar, presumably." Day 254/19/19 to Day 254/19/21 If using soldiers in areas familiar to them is central to his decision to use 1 Para as an arrest force, it is difficult to understand why he never expressly ordered Brigadier MacLellan in those terms.

11.5.14 Moreover, as is evident from the allocation of troops on the day, the establishment of blocking points meant that a significant number of troops were not working in their normal area. An example of which is the fact that, a Company of 2 Royal Green Jackets, operated under the control of the 22nd Light Air Defence Regiment manning Barrier 14.[8]

11.5.15 More significantly, the evidence of Lt. Col. Welsh was to the effect that two of his companies were in "reserve at Magilligan". Day 282/25/19 to Day 282/26/14 Clearly that was a role 1 Para, as reserve Battalion could have filled in place of 2 Royal Green Jackets with little difficulty.

11.5.16 It is evident that not only did General Ford never order Brigadier MacLellan to use soldiers in their own areas he never explored the practicality of soldiers operating within their own areas on Bloody Sunday.

11.5.17 It is submitted that this reasoning does not stand up to scrutiny because it is a patently dishonest attempt by General Ford to explain his decision to use 1 Para as the arrest force given that "It was the one regiment that [General Ford] introduced into this equation which resulted in the problems" and led to the deaths of unarmed civilians. Day 257/29/1 to Day 257/29/6

2. The City battalion (that is the one covering the William Street area etc) was 22 Light Air defence Regiment Royal Artillery. This was not an infantry battalion but an artillery regiment temporarily being used in an infantry role and was not suited for a major arrest operation.

11.5.18 The 22nd Light Air Defence Regiment had only arrived in Derry in November 1971. Prior to that the two resident battalions, 1 Royal Anglian and 2 Royal Green Jackets had alternated the City Battalion role for three weeks at a time. B1122.4 paragraph 17 (Statement Col. Ferguson)

[8] Col. Ferguson,'s statement: "The grouping was complex in that two of my batteries came under the command of 1 R Anglian, and in return one company of 2RGJ and one company 1 Para came under my command." B1122.11 paragraph 62

Moreover they had only taken over as the City Battalion on the 21 December 1971. Day 281/16/15

11.5.19 Thus the resident Battalions, both of which were infantry battalions, were extremely familiar with the William Street area having been operating in that area until November 1971 in three weekly cycles. The Royal Anglians had operated in the area since July 1970 while the Royal Green Jackets had operated their since May 1971.

11.5.20 Moreover, the reason for the allocation of 22nd Light Air Defence Regiment to Derry was to provide "the opportunity and the force level for the companies of the resident battalions to undertake specific operations." B1122.4 paragraph 17 (Statement Col. Ferguson)

11.5.21 Thus, the deployment of the 22nd Light Air Defence Regiment in Derry, was for the express purpose of facilitating the resident battalions to conduct operations, such as the arrest operation mounted on Bloody Sunday.

11.5.22 The resident Battalions had extensive experience of operating in the Bogside and Creggan, they were familiar with the geography and familiar with the hooligans and their tactics. A fact acknowledged by General Ford:

> "Q. there is no-one better placed, as you have already indicated, to know the area, to know the buildings, to know the localities, to know the escape routes than the resident battalions?
> A. I would agree.
> Q. There is no-one better placed to be able to identify those involved in habitual rioting, whether or not they themselves are habitual rioters or simply persons who have arrived to take an opportunity of the occasion.?
> A. I agree . . ." Day 258/67/7 to Day 258/67/11

11.5.23 General Ford's focus on the 22nd Light Air Defence Regiment is entirely misplaced, given their recent arrival in Derry and the purpose for which they arrived, and is a further example of the extent to which General Ford was anxious to avoid giving an honest explanation for his decision to use 1 Para.

> 3. 1 PARA had been in the province for well over a year. They had much experience, more than any other battalion in Northern Ireland, both in carrying out arrest operations and in coming under and countering terrorist fire.

11.5.24 Both of the resident Battalions in Derry had been in Northern Ireland for over a year. The Commanding Officer of the Royal Anglians has provided this Tribunal with information about his battalions experience, and success, in the mounting arrest operations in the Bogside. CJ2.5 paragraphs 19 to 20

11.5.25 There is no evidence, beyond General Ford's assertion to that effect, that 1 Para had greater experience than either 1 Royal Anglian or 2 Royal Green Jackets in carrying out arrest operations, or coming under terrorist fire. In the specific context of Derry they had no experience at all.

4. 1 Para could be spared for three or four days by Commander 39 Brigade

11.5.26 When questioned on this matter General Ford appears to have contradicted himself, suggesting that a factor in using 1 Para as the arrest force, was the fact that as such they would be able to leave Derry more swiftly.

> "I can only say again that when I look at the whole picture, which is what I had to do, including denuding Belfast of its reserve battalion, to have denuded them for possibly five days, and I think that Brigadier Kitson would have found that unacceptable? Day 258/75/22 to Day 258/76/1

11.5.27 Thus in oral evidence General Ford stated that the risk that 1 Para might have to stay in Derry for up to 5 days, (for reasons not adequately explained, Day 258/75/22 to Day 258/76/24) influenced the decision to use them as an arrest force. Yet in his statement to this Inquiry one of the reasons for their use as an arrest force was the fact that they could be spared for 3-4 days.

11.5.28 This contradiction is a classic example of the lengths to which General Ford was prepared to go in order to justify his decision.

11.5.29 It is submitted that the reasons advanced by General Ford for using 1 Para as the arrest force do not stand up to scrutiny and have been fabricated in order to justify a decision which led to the deaths of 13 innocent people.

11.5.30 In reality either resident battalion could have mounted the arrest operation in Derry on Bloody Sunday, they had the advantage in terms of knowledge of the geography and the tactics of the hooligans and experience in mounting arrest operations. The consequent changes in deployment would not have caused any difficulty, either for 1 Para, or for the security of 8 Brigade. General Ford ordered Brigadier MacLellan to use 1 Para because he wanted them to be the arrest force, for reasons unrelated to the reasons advanced in his statement to this Inquiry.

Controversial Decision in 1972

11.5.31 There is an abundance of evidence that the decision to use 1 Para was controversial in 1972, even in military circles, and that the reason for the controversy was the recognition that the decision to use 1 Para was:

i) A decision to implement a change in military policy in Derry;

ii) A calculated insult to 8 Brigade.

11.5.32 The clearest evidence on this issue was given to the Inquiry by Col. Roy Jackson, the Commanding Officer of 1 Royal Anglians. He has given evidence that he not only disagreed with the decision to use 1 Para as the arrest force, but that he communicated that disagreement directly to Brigadier MacLellan.

11.5.33 In his statement to this Inquiry he states that:

> "I was surprised that 1 Para had been nominated to be "in reserve and available for a scoop up operation to be carried out on foot"(sic). 1 Para did not know the area and had not operated in the Bogside before. Also, everyone was aware that the Paras had a reputation for tough action and the citizens and hooligans of Londonderry would be greatly surprised if Belfast arrest procedures were carried out on them. I just wondered who had thought out this deployment: it reflected a change of policy – and emphasis – on future operations in Londonderry." CJ2.8 paragraph 37

11.5.34 Col. Jackson was quite clear that his reasons for objecting to the use of 1 Para were, the fact that "they were tough and rough and did not know the area, did not know the civilian population, did not know one brick from another round Rossville Flats, and yet we did". Day 285/33/15 to Day 285/34/11

11.5.35 Col. Jackson was also quite clear that the decision was an insult to the soldiers in his battalion "I think the soldiers felt affronted as much as I did that those with the wisdom called in an outside battalion to do something that the soldiers and I thought was our job." Day 285/38/17 to Day 285/38/23

11.5.36 It is clear that his dissatisfaction with the decision was so strong that he took what he described as the unusual step of raising it with Brigadier MacLellan, at the first opportunity he could, in the immediate aftermath of the Co-ordinating conference and asked him to communicate those views to HQNI. Day 285/33/21 to Day 285/36/6

11.5.37 There is a conflict of evidence on this issue to the extent that Brigadier MacLellan states that he does not remember this conversation, and that he believes that had it taken place he would have remembered. It is submitted that Col. Jackson gave clear evidence on this issue, and that his evidence that the conversation occurred should be preferred to the account given by Brigadier MacLellan.

11.5.38 There is also evidence before the Tribunal that Col. Welsh, the Commanding Officer of the Royal Green Jackets, was unhappy about the decision to use 1 Para as the arrest force. In his statement to this Inquiry he stated:

> "The arrest operation involving the First Battalion The Parachute Regiment was mentioned. They were the 39 Brigade Reserve. They had been trained by Brigadier Frank Kitson who was a tough man and the commander of 39 Brigade. If there was anything nasty to do, they did it. However I do not think that at that stage any of us anticipated that there would be shooting by the army.
>
> I was disappointed that my Battalion did not have a role, for we did know the ground well. We were trying to do the best we could to get on with the Catholic population and perhaps there was a feeling that the troublemakers were being dealt with in a tougher fashion in Belfast than in Derry. That may have been one of the reasons why the Parachute Regiment was brought in.
>
> I can recall that at some stage I telephoned [Brigadier MacLellan] to ask why the Royal Green Jackets could not take a more active role and his reply to me was "No, Peter. I have had my orders". I left it at that." B1340.002 paragraphs 9 to 13

11.5.39 In an interview with Peter Taylor, some 20 years after Bloody Sunday, Col. Welsh told Peter Taylor that he disagreed with using 1 Para, given their conduct in Magilligan the previous weekend. He also confirmed that he "had telephoned the brigade commander, Brigadier Robert MacLellan, to say it was mad to bring the Paras in, only to be told by the brigadier that he had his orders and he was going to carry them out." T234 and Day 282/37/7 to Day 282/38/9

11.5.40 Lt. Col. Ramsbotham, military assistant to General Carver at the time, has also given evidence that those same concerns were expressed by Col. Welsh to him, prior to Bloody Sunday

> "Peter Welsh also told me about his concerns that it was intended to bring 1 Para to Londonderry for the march on Sunday 30 January. His feeling, with which I completely agreed, was that Londonderry was very different to Belfast. 1 Para had been used as shock troops in Belfast and were the wrong people to bring in to this particular operation. My concern was not, solely, because it was 1 Para; it was because it was the Reserve troops who were to be used, who were from outside the area and therefore were not familiar with the ground."[9] KR2.4 paragraph 20

11.5.41 Col. Ferguson also stated that he had a 'hazy' recollection theat "following the march at Magilligan, CO 2RGJ told me that he had gone to the Brigade Commander to dissuade him from using the 1 Para for the march, on 30 January 1972." B1122.10 paragraph 53

11.5.42 Col. Ferguson was asked about this during the course of his oral evidence and confirmed that while he had no doubt that Col. Welsh had gone to the Brigade Commander, he was unclear whether he had heard that from Col. Welsh himself or one of his officers. Day 281/46/3 to Day 281/46/22

11.5.43 During the course of his evidence to this Inquiry, Col. Welsh appeared to accept General Ford's explanation for the decision to deploy 1 Para as the arrest force:

"Q. Was any reason ever given to you for the use of the Parachute Regiment instead of the Royal Green Jackets?

A. Oh, yes, I think – I mean – it was quite clear we, at that time – I think the roles in the battalions had changed and we were in the county, and it would have meant taking us out of the county role and going into the city and it would have meant mucking up all the battalions, I think, so that was the plain reason, which I did not appreciate at the time." Day 282/34/10 to Day 282/34/18

i) That he believed that the Royal Green Jackets should have been given a more active role and ought to have been considered for the arrest operation. Day 282/34/19 to Day 282/35/7; Day 282/35/20 to Day 282/35/24; Day 282/56/1 to Day 282/56/17; Day 282/60/11 to Day 282/60/22; Day 282/62/7 to Day 282/62/15; Day 282/63/5 to Day 282/63/19

ii) That he communicated that to Brigadier MacLellan, who made it clear that this was a decision over which he had no control. Day 282/34/19 to Day 282/34/24

iii) That, no matter which battalion conducted the arrest operation, there was going to be a certain amount of "mucking-up" of the battalions. Day 282/56/18 to Day 282/58/12; Day 282/62/7 to Day 282/62/15

iv) That he did believe that 1 Para had gone over the top at Magilligan and for that reason were not the best troops to deploy as the arrest force for the NICRA march in Derry. Day 282/12/6 to Day 282/12/20; Day 282/34/24 to Day 282/35/24; Day 282/38/1 to Day 282/38/9; Day 282/632/11 to Day 282/63/19

v) That at that time he believed that the reason the Paras were being used was because of their reputation as a 'tough' unit and because their approach was different from that of 8 Brigade who were "trying to get on with the Catholic population." Day 282/33/22 to Day 282/34/5; Day 282/35/20 to Day 282/35/24

11.5.45 In relation to the statement and evidence of Lt. Col. Ramsbotham, Col. Welsh has stated that he has no memory of this conversation and while

[9] Sir Ramsbotham makes it clear in the same paragraph that he did not think that Reserve troops should accepting that his memory of the events of 1972 was poor, he appeared to suggest that the conversation had not happened. Day 282/67/8 to Day 282/67/18

11.5.46 It is our submission that Lt. Col. Ramsbotham's evidence is to be preferred for the following reasons:

i) Because Lt. Col. Ramsbotham's evidence is that he has a clear recollection of this conversation while Col. Welsh has expressed himself as being unsure about the accuracy of his recollection on this point;

ii) Because he recollects advising General Carver of the contents of the conversation and General Carver advised him that deployment of troops was a matter for HQNI; and,

iii) Because the contents of the conversation are entirely consistent with the views held by Col. Welsh at the time, and expressed by him at the time, and subsequently.

11.5.47 It is therefore our submission that, prior to Bloody Sunday, the decision to use 1 Para for the arrest operation was recognised by the two most experienced officers in Derry, as:

i) A clear departure from the military policy operational in Derry at that time;

ii) An unwise decision in view of 1 Para's reputation and their recent behaviour in Magilligan;

iii) An unwise decision in view of 1 Para's lack of knowledge or understanding of Derry, either geographically or militarily;

iv) An implicit, if not explicit criticism of the approach of their battalions.

11.5.48 Moreover, both officers felt so strongly about the matter that, independently of each other, they raised it with the Brigade Commander, and in the case of Col. Welsh effectively alerted General Carver to the disquiet within Derry about the decision.

11.5.49 Neither officer saw any difficulty at the time with deploying 1 Para to replace their troops for the duration of the operation.

11.5.50 For the reasons set out above it is our submission 1 Para were allocated the task of mounting the arrest operation, because of: their reputation as tough; General Ford's dissatisfaction with 8 Brigade and the difference in the approach of battalions in Belfast to battalions in Derry.

11.6 Conclusions

11.6.1 In our submission each of the decisions identified above contributed directly to the use of lethal force in Derry on Bloody Sunday.

Decision to stop the March 11.6.2 It is our submission that the analysis of Chief Superintendent Lagan was correct and had the march been allowed to proceed to the Guildhall, while there might have been some rioting afterwards, it would have been controllable by the security forces and there was a risk of greater violence in circumstances where the march was stopped.

Decision that the March be policed by the Military

11.6.3 It is our submission that this decision was primarily informed by the desire on the part of General Ford to remove operational control from the RUC in order to implement a tougher policy against Derry Hooligans. Replacing the RUC with the military gave General Ford effective control over the concept of operations and enabled him to make the decision to have an arrest operation and to use 1 Para as the arrest force.

11.6.4 It is our further submission that the differences between the RUC and the military rendered the military unsuitable for involvement in an operation of this type. The decision took place against a background in which the military in Northern Ireland had been involved in a significant number of controversial shooting incidents, in which unarmed civilians had been killed. [See Section 9.2 above] Soldiers had not been provided with training in the policing of civil disobedience in a manner designed to minimise to the greatest extent recourse to the use of lethal force. Rather the military approach was to opt for maximal force.

The Decision to have an Arrest Operation

11.6.5 The decision that a major arrest operation should be part of the concept of operations was a decision made by General Ford for the reasons he has given to this Tribunal.

11.6.6 An arrest operation should only have been launched if it was both necessary and appropriate, given the circumstances on the ground. General Ford's concept of the military operation resulted in a situation in which:

i) The launch of the arrest operation was inevitable; and,

ii) The concept of separation never formed part of the concept if operations and was developed as a concept following the killing of unarmed civilians.

The Decision to use 1 Para

11.6.7 It is submitted that the evidence before the Tribunal is to the effect that if an arrest operation was necessary it should have been conducted by troops familiar with the territory, the people and the military policy applicable in Derry at that time.

11.6.8 The decision to use 1 Para was based primarily upon their reputation and amounted to a decision to take on and defeat the Derry Young Hooligans; and to, demonstrate a 'tougher' policy on the streets of Derry, both to the citizens of Derry, and to 8 Brigade.

11.6.9 It is submitted that the decision to use 1 Para had the gravest consequences in terms of increasing the risk of the use of lethal force for the following reasons:

i) 1 Para were aggressive and confrontational in their approach, they entered the Bogside in an aggressive and confrontational manner and had a greater willingness to use lethal force than other units.[10]

ii) Members of 1 Para regarded themselves as going into the Bogside in order to breach the No-Go area and demonstrate that 1 Para could go anywhere in Northern Ireland. This led to a confrontational attitude on their part and a willingness to engage in the use of lethal force in circumstances which were unjustified.[11]

iii) Members of 1 Para regarded themselves as being there to demonstrate to 8 Brigade how to deal with rioters, again this led to a confrontational attitude on their part and a willingness to engage in the use of lethal force in circumstances which were unjustified.[12]

iv) 1 Para had a view of Derry based entirely upon what they had witnessed on the News and what they understood from the attitude of their commanding officers, i.e. that the Bogside was a dangerous place controlled by IRA gunmen, backed up by rioters and it was a place where the army feared to tread.[13] This view was entirely at odds with the knowledge of 8th Brigade. This meant that they had a heightened sense of fear and anticipation going in to the Bogside and in consequence were more likely to overreact to Lt. N's shots.[14]

[10] That is evident from their conduct in Magilligan. The Tribunal is also referred to our submissions at Section 9.3 and 9.7. Sergeant O B575.107 paragraphs 3 to 4

[11] General Jackson, during an interview with Mr Moynahan in 1972, said that he "felt that the 1st Battalion had helped to ensure that there were no-go areas in Belfast, and that a certain contempt was felt for such areas existing elsewhere in the province."CJ1.15. General Jackson commented further on this matter at Day 318/57/20 to Day 318/59/6. The Tribunal is referred to the evidence of the following soldiers from 1 Para on this issue: INQ 1581 C1581.2 paragraph 11, INQ 1237 C1237.12 paragraph 77, INQ 739 C739.1 paragraph 3, Soldier U B787.001 paragraph 5, Sergeant O B575.107 paragraphs 3 to 4, Soldier J B289.001 paragraph 6 and Day370/89/24-90/14, INQ 131 C131.6 paragraph 33, INQ 1093 C1093.1 paragraph 7, INQ 1544 C1544.1 to C1544.2 paragraph 7 and INQ 1574 C1574.2 paragraphs 9 to 12

v) Lack of knowledge of the geography of the area inevitably increased the sense of tension among soldiers and contributed to an atmosphere of disorientation and chaos leading to an increased risk of gunfire. In particular they were hyped-up about the Rossville Flats and Rubble Barricade, perceiving them as dangerous locations sheltering gunmen which contributed to the likelihood of their shooting in circumstances which were unjustified. Also a local unit would have confined their arrest operation to the junction of Rossville Street, William Street and would not have ended up in the Rossville Flats car-park or in Glenfada Park.[15]

vi) Many of 1 Para went in with a very fixed view about the existence of Barricades, based upon their experience of operations in Belfast, where Barricades were not allowed to exist. This meant that they were more likely to anticipate being fired upon from the Rubble Barricade, because of the failure of the people behind the Barricade to run away and the fact that at least some stood throwing missiles in the direction of soldiers. Derry soldiers would not have assumed the existence of gunmen and nail-bombers behind the Rubble Barricade and would not have been so eager to fire.[16]

vii) 1 Para regarded themselves, particularly when operating at Battalion strength, as autonomous once the arrest operation was launched (if it was). They operated outside the control of 8 Brigade in circumstances where a local unit would have had greater communication with and would have been more responsive to, control from 8 Brigade.

viii) 1 Para's contempt and disregard for 8 Brigade and their sense of themselves as autonomous contributed directly to their decision: firstly, to put pressure on 8 Brigade to launch the arrest operation when it was not appropriate to launch such an operation; and to launch the arrest operation without an order from Brigade. A local unit would not have launched the arrest operation without an Order from Brigade.[17]

[15] See for example the evidence of Soldier 128, a Captain in the 2nd Battalion Royal Green Jackets, who described soldiers from C Company entering the Bogside via Barrier 14 and describes the last soldier as turning around, pointing his weapon at ECHO OP and shouting gunman. According to Soldier 128 the 1 Para soldier was under the mistaken impression that civilian gunmen were located on the top of the Embassy Ballroom. Day 303/28/10 to Day 303/29/18

ix) Once a decision had been made to use 1 Para were to be used, they should have been appropriately briefed by 8 Brigade in relation to: the geography of the area; locations from where 1 Para could launch an effective arrest operation; how Derry rioters operated and how the general body of marchers would be likely to behave. 8 Brigade ought to have assisted 1 Para directly in their reconnaissance of the area. .

11.6.10 In our submission it is thus possible to draw the following conclusions from the manner in which the concept of the military operation developed:

1. The concept of military operations was devised entirely by General Ford, neither N Division, nor 8 Brigade had any input, significant or otherwise into the decisions made.
2. The decisions stem from General Ford's analysis of the security situation set out in his memo to General Tuzo. G48.299
3. None of the decisions was informed by the need to minimise to the greatest extent possible the risk of the use of lethal force. On the contrary all of the decisions were informed by an analysis which concluded that the use of lethal force against unarmed civilians was almost inevitable, if law and order were to be enforced.

12. Sanction of Plans by Stormont/Westminster

12.1 Introduction & Summary of Submissions

12.1.1 The diverse elements which constituted the conditions for the occurrence of Bloody Sunday fused on 30 January 1972.

12.1.2 One element was the fact that the British Government allowed the Stormont Government to exercise disproportionate influence over security matters, including the use of the army. They thereby failed to exercise any or appropriate control over the use or disposition of its armed forces by the Stormont Government - a government which shamelessly discriminated against Catholics and which resisted the modest reforms being urged upon them and which was engaged in a relentless search for firmer security measures against the common enemy which included NICRA marchers and hooligans.

12.1.3 Another element was that the British Government tolerated, if not encouraged, in Northern Ireland, the use of unlawful violence including lethal force.

12.1.4 The essential elements of Operation Forecast, and those which contributed directly to the use of lethal force were sanctioned by both the British Government and the Stormont Government. They include the following:

(i) The decision to prevent the march reaching the Guildhall;

(ii) The decision to mount a major military operation;

(iii) The CGS' dispositions which, inter alia, involved a massive military deployment of 20 companies;

(iv) The decision to mount a significant "arrest" operation;

(v) The decision to use 1 Para.

(vi) The decision to run the risk that the lives of innocent civilians might be endangered.

(vii) The neglect of both governments to take steps to ensure that the operation was conducted in a manner designed to minimise to the greatest extent possible the risk to the lives of innocent civilians.

12.1.5 The "arrest" operation should never have been contemplated or at very least put on a highly contingent basis subject to stringent conditions and under constant review at the highest level before launching.

12.1.6 Both governments foresaw, as a possible outcome, that the military operation might endanger the lives of innocent civilians and that this was a risk that they were prepared to run. Clearly if they did not foresee such a risk they ought to have foreseen it.

12.1.7 Instead the march was treated as routine operation the implementation of which was left to a low level.

12.1.8 In the event they failed to take steps to ensure that the operation was conducted in a manner designed to minimise to the greatest extent possible the risk to the lives of the people participating in the march and others.

12.1.9 Both governments allowed the view to be disseminated without disapproval that "NICRA was being taken over by the IRA and hooligans". Thus, in effect, conflating these three diverse elements into a common enemy. They thus failed to ensure that vital distinctions between these three disparate groups were maintained.

12.1.10 The equating of the hooligans with the IRA was promulgated without disapproval. Not only is this apparent from the Ford memo (which everyone denies having seen) but also from the manuscript (but not typed) record of the GEN 47 meeting on 27 January.

12.1.11 It is apparent from the contemporary documents that in the weeks leading up to Bloody Sunday Protestants were becoming increasingly agitated about the failure of the security forces to enforce the ban against Catholic marches, see, for example an assessment approved by the Joint Intelligence Committee at their meeting on 6 January 1972 G46AA.2.88.1.1. See also G70.437 which is a report of the visit of the CDS to Northern Ireland on 24 January 1972 in which it is recorded that the GOC referred to NICRA as "the active ally of the IRA". The same document records that the ban on marches is the "major current problem" and at G70.439 that:

> "... (The COS subsequently gave it as his opinion, and D Int agreed, that the Protestants have got used to the Roman Catholic bomber/gunman (whom they don't see) and are more likely to react increasingly aggressively to the sight of NICRA supporters defying the law)".

12.1.12 Dalzell-Payne's background paper on marches records that the extension of the ban was seen by Paisley and his followers as a "final surrender to the IRA" and that the immediate reaction to the announcement in Stormont "was that the loyalist section of the community was going to be outraged and that victory had been given to the IRA". It further records that "even one of the most liberal minded Stormont MPs" said that the suppression of loyalist parades and the continued failure to control the IRA and to prevent the civil rights movement from demonstrating publicly "will invite a protestant backlash" see G82.518.

12.1.13 In that context the march on Sunday 30 January 1972 was going to be one of the first major acts of defiance and accordingly both governments ought to have been keenly interested in knowing how the security forces were going to deal with it. Those whose duty it was to keep them informed would have been expected to do just that.

12.1.14 The contemporaneous documents reinforced by some of the evidence the Tribunal has heard, demonstrates that the two governments foresaw or ought to have foreseen, at least as a possible outcome, that the operation might endanger the lives of the marchers and others.

12.1.15 In any event it is clearly established that neither government took steps to ensure that the operation was conducted in a manner designed to minimise to the greatest extent possible the risk to the lives of the marchers and others.

12.1.16 The contemporaneous documents nonetheless cogently demonstrate that the two governments foresaw or ought to have foreseen that the military operation might involve a serious risk that innocent civilians might be shot and that this was a risk that they were prepared to run or were indifferent to.

12.1.17 The failure of the respective governments, whose duty it was to protect the right to life of the marchers and others, to take all feasible measures to vindicate the right to life and to minimise to the maximum possible extent the risk to innocent lives deserves the utmost censure.

12.2.1 At the JSC meeting of 6th January G47.289 to G47.298 it was noted:

> "Londonderry: "The Prime Minster mentioned that the Strand Trader association had asked him to meet a deputation about a spread of violent activity into the William Street area of the city. The Parliamentary Secretary at the Ministry of Home Affairs stressed the harm that this was doing to business interests in the area and the danger of further spread. The GOC undertook to discuss the situation on the spot with members of the Association." G47.291

12.2.2 The GOC sent General Ford to meet with the Strand Traders and the result is his notorious memo to the GOC entitled "The Situation in Londonderry as at 7th January" G48.299 to G48.301 where at G48.300 paragraph 6 he discusses the shooting of selected ringleaders of the Derry Young Hooligans ("DYH"):

> "The weapons at our disposal – CS gas and baton rounds – are ineffective. This is because the DYH operate mainly in open areas where they can avoid the gas (and some have respirators, many others make-shift wet rag masks) and in open order beyond the accurate range of baton rounds. Alternatively, they operate in built up areas where, because of their tactics and the personal protection they have, CS gas has to be used in vast quantities and to such an extent that it seeps into nearby buildings and affects innocent people, often women and children. Attempts to close with the DYH bring the troops into the killing zones of the snipers. As I understand it, the commander of a body of troops called out to restore law and order has a duty to use minimum force but he also has a duty to restore law and order. We have fulfilled the first duty but are failing in the second. I am coming to the conclusion that the minimum force necessary to achieve a restoration of law and order is to shoot selected ringleaders amongst the DYH, after clear warnings have been issued. I believe we would be justified in using 7.62mm but in view of the devastating effects of this weapon and the danger of rounds killing more than the person aimed at, I believe we must consider issuing rifles adapted to fire HV .22 inch ammunition to sufficient members of the unit dealing with this problem, to enable ring leaders to be engaged with this less lethal ammunition. Thirty of these weapons have been sent to 8 Brigade this weekend for zeroing and familiarisation training. They, of course, will not be used operationally without authorisation".

12.2.3 At the next meeting of the JSC on 13 January 1972 G52.315 the following note appears in the minutes:

> "The GOC also indicated that following a meeting with businessmen in Londonderry certain measures were in mind with a view to putting down the troublesome hooligan element there. It was a very difficult problem to solve within the law."[1] 12.2.4 It is clear that this minute went to Carrington's Private Secretary on 18 January.

12.2.5 It is difficult to see what other than Ford's memo the GOC could have had in mind when he made this contribution to the meeting. The only document to issue from the meeting with the STA, so far as we know, was Ford's memo. Surely the "certain measures" referred to are those contained in that memo. This conclusion is reinforced by the comment that "it was a very difficult problem to solve within the law."[2]

12.2.6 It must also be remembered that there are two people present at JSC

[1] The reference in this document to it being a "difficult" problem appears to chime with the reference by Sir Edward Heath in the minutes of the GEN 47meeting dated 27 January where he refers to the "difficulties" facing the army when dealing with comparatively peaceful marches – see para.14.3.10 hereof meetings who report directly to London. The first is GOC Tuzo himself, whose direct superior was General Carver the CGS. Sir David Ramsbotham when giving evidence stated that Tuzo and Carver had a private phone line and were often in contact Day 254/103/15 to Day 254/103/17. In addition, there is the UK Representative in Northern Ireland, at that time Mr Howard Smith. The UK Rep reported directly to the Home Office, we are in possession of documents which show that he was in contact with the Home Secretary himself see e.g. INQ1.645 and INQ1.646 to INQ1.655.

[2] See also G60A.367.1 which is an Airgram in which the American Consul in Belfast is reporting back to America and in which the following paragraph appears: "Mr Bloomfield said the Prime Minister [Mr Faulkner] and Cabinet believe the Army is winning the battle against the IRA, and plan no let up in the military campaign. He also said there is no possibility of a major alteration in the present internment policy until the violence ceases. To 'keep Westminster at bay" the Government is "hoping for a major military victory in the near future'".

12.2.7 That these lines of communication were open and used is clear from the submission dated 26 January 1972 from AW Stephens (Head of DS 10) to the Defence Secretary about the proposed march on 30 January G74.457 to G74.458 which states:

> "2. It is primarily up to the Joint Security Committee in Northern Ireland to decide on the tactics which the security forces should adopt for dealing with this march. The JSC is due to meet as usual tomorrow morning and we hope to hear the outcome during the afternoon. However, we agreed this morning that it would be helpful for members of the Northern Ireland Policy Group to be aware, before tomorrow's meetings of the Group and of GEN 47, of the line which the GOC and UK Rep propose to take at the JSC meeting".

12.2.8 Later in the document he says:

> "The UK Rep and the GOC consider and the Home Office and MoD are inclined to agree" G74.458 paragraph 7

12.2.9 In his paper Mr Stephens notes that the march "seems certain to attract a larger number of people than any of the previous illegal marches which they have attempted to stage since Christmas" G74.457.

12.2.10 Mr Stephens further indicates that > "... there would be no objection to arresting anyone on the fringe of the march who was causing trouble; and it seems only too likely that, once the march is brought to a halt, there will be at least some hooliganism. The GOC therefore has in mind to attempt to arrest a fair number of such hooligans and to arrange for a special court sitting on Monday morning, before which they can be brought" G74.458

12.2.11 At the JSC Meeting on 27 January 1972 at which the GOC and the UK Representative were both present the Minutes record that the proposed marches on Saturday (Dungannon to Coalisland) and Sunday (Londonderry) posed considerable problems but that the Londonderry marches presented "more serious difficulties and security action will be primarily an army operation ... the operation might well develop into rioting and even a shooting-war" G76.465.

12.3 Role of the Westminster Government

12.3.1 In the context of what was anticipated would be the biggest civil rights march since the highly contentious extension of the ban such a major military operation to enforce the ban inevitably posed a serious risk to innocent civilians.

12.3.2 According to Sir Edward Heath the general policy agreed between the British Government and the Stormont Government was that marches "should be constrained with a view to avoiding ... situations which put members of the civilian population at risk". And furthermore that "within that policy" responsibility for operations rested with the CC and GOC KH4.5 paragraph 19.

12.3.3 However, as pointed out in the previous section entitled "Background to the Day" at Section 10 the army had already proposed, with the express approval of Stormont and Westminster, to take a more confrontational approach to the policing of illegal marches, even where to do so would provoke a violent situation which would not otherwise occur.

12.3.4 If the general policy was as stated by Sir Edward Heath then a major military operation which might develop in the manner foreshadowed in the JSC minute (putting at risk innocent members of the civilian population) would be outside the terms of the agreed policy and as Sir Edward Heath agreed such action would not just be outside the general

12.3.5 It follows therefore that if the army authorities were aware that innocent members of a civilian population might get killed, they would have to come first to Stormont and then to Westminster. If they were going to take action or allow such a situation to arise which might put innocent members of a civilian population at risk that would be a breach of the general policy and they would not be entitled to do that without authority. Without clearance from both governments they would be operating in breach of the policy.

12.3.6 At an absolute minimum the army officers concerned right through to Lord Carver in particular would have recognised the need to inform the government in relation to the forthcoming march that innocent civilians might be at risk.

12.3.7 Mr Stephens was shown the JSC minute dated 27 January and the following question was put to him:

"Q. Plainly those at the Ministry of Defence, there being a UK Rep there as well as you keeping in tough with the GOC, knew perfectly well that there was a reasonable possibility of a shooting war on this march; did you not?

A. We were certainly aware of that possibility because that possibility was inherent in any operation of this size".

Day 273/86/23 to Day 273/87/4

12.3.8 When asked did he recollect it ever being suggested that perhaps an arrest operation of any size should not take place in the context of a very large march where innocent people might get shot he stated "I do not remember it being put in those terms" Day 273/87/17 to Day 273/87/21.

12.3.9 That the operation was a political decision jointly approved by the Stormont Government and the British Government emerges from a number of sources. It is convenient to mention at this stage the submission from Mr Stephens to the Defence Secretary dated 26 January 1972 about the proposed march in which he said that it was "primarily" up to the JSC to decide on the tactics which the security forces should adopt for the march. He enlarged upon this in his evidence when he said that it was "basically" the responsibility of the Northern Ireland Government and that what British Ministers were doing, as it seemed to him, was exercising what he referred to as a "power of non-disallowance". He said that in the last analysis British Ministers could have interfered with the concept that was being adopted because of their responsibility for the army. But they decided not to interfere. Day 273/88/9 to Day 273/89/4

12.3.10 At the GEN 47 meeting of 27 January 1972 G79aa.487.006 to G79aa.487.007 the CGS described a large army operation involving the deployment of 20 companies of troops.

12.3.11 Summing up, the Prime Minister said "the meeting appreciated the difficulties which the Army faced when dealing with comparatively peaceful marches. This was essentially a job for the police, but the RUC did not possess the necessary numbers and incidents of confrontation between the Army and the civil population were inevitable." G79.487

12.3.12 There is, therefore, a difference between what, according to the minutes of the meeting, was reported to GEN 47, as compared to what was reported to the JSC. In the GEN 47 minutes there is no mention of an arrest operation, nor is there any indication that the proposed operation may develop into "rioting and even a shooting war". The "difficulties" with which the army were said to be faced when dealing with peaceful marches were not spelt out nor does the minute elaborate on what was meant by the reference to the incidents of confrontation between the army and the civil population which were said to be inevitable.

12.3.13 Accordingly, either the GEN 47 committee was not informed that a "shooting war" or anything comparable might develop or there was such discussion and it is not reflected in the minutes. Alternatively, they learnt of it after the GEN 47 meeting but before the march and certainly in time to issue the second telegram discussed hereafter.

12.3.14 They must certainly have been aware that a significant arrest operation was contemplated in view of the submission A W Stephens to Lord Carrington on 26 January 1972 G74.457 to G74.458 where he states:

> "it seems only too likely that, once the march is brought to a halt, there will then be at least some hooliganism. The GOC therefore has in mind to attempt to arrest a fair number of such hooligans..." G74.458 paragraph 7

12.3.15 Accordingly they ought to have been aware, as a result of this information, that the GOC intended to mount a significant arrest operation involving the arrest of a "fair number" of hooligans. It must always be remembered that in the military mind the hooligans operated in tandem with the IRA hence the no-policy until the Bogside could be dominated.

12.3.16 Moreover, in view of the significance of this particular march, the massive military operation which it was going to involve, the events at Magilligan the previous week involving the paratroopers, the article in The Guardian L7 to L9 criticising the paratroopers and Sir Burke-Trend's briefing note to Sir Edward Heath G75CA.462.5.1 to G75CA.462.5.4 one of the matters that Sir Edward Heath and GEN 47 would have wanted to know and would have been expected to have been informed about was whether a significant arrest operation was planned and, if so, whether the paratroopers were going to be involved. They would also have wanted to know the "attitude" to be adopted by the security forces if the ban was openly defied.

12.3.17 Sir Geoffrey Johnson Smith in his statement to the Tribunal KJ3.2 paragraph 11 stated "... I think I would have been aware of the decision to use the parachute regiment to assist in handling the civil rights march as this was, at the time, au courant".

12.3.18 Giving oral evidence Sir Geoffrey resiled from this and indicated that it was only after Bloody Sunday that he was aware that the Parachute Regiment had been deployed Day 279/8/1 to Day 279/9/25. In our submission as indicated in paragraph 11 of his statement Sir Geoffrey was aware before the march that the Parachute Regiment was to be used in the policing of the march. Consequently he has given untruthful evidence to the Tribunal by indicating that he only became aware of this fact after Bloody Sunday.

12.3.19 Lord Carrington stated Day 280/85/15 to Day 280/85/17 "well, we knew, of course, that the Paras were there in Northern Ireland. So I suppose one could infer from that that it was likely that they might be used". The decision to launch a highly aggressive killing machine with a reputation which they enjoyed of brutal handling of demonstrators into what was clearly going to be an explosive situation was apparently regarded as unremarkable.

12.3.20 In an interview conducted in 1983 between Brigadier MacLellan and journalist Des Hamill he stated as follows:

> "I was told by General Ford to prepare my plans for it. I went down with my brigade major to see him and his D1. I had a written plan and we went through it. We agreed we did not have enough people locally, so he allocated additional forces, 1 Para, who were the reserve batallion in Belfast.
> The plans went back to London so the whole thing was approved before it ever started". B1279.003.012

12.3.21 In this connection we also refer to the evidence of Sir David Ramsbottham: Day 254/190/3 to Day 254/190/17

> I think you have agreed this much: that you and General Carver undoubtedly knew that there was going to be an arrest operation carried out by 1 Para; is that fair?
> A. What we knew was, that the plan was to stop the march at the barriers and hopefully that it would disperse and that if they did not disperse then reserves were deployed who could carry out an arrest operation and because the troops were not available in Londonderry, they would have to be taken from elsewhere in the Province and the selected battalion were 1 Para, who were better equipped for it than the Province reserve, who had only just arrived in the Province.
> Q. So the answer is: yes.
> A. Yes, so that is what we knew.

12.3.22 The march on Sunday was going to be one of the first major acts of defiance in light of the Northern Irish renewal of the ban and it was accordingly important, if not imperative, for the British Government to know how the security forces were going to react to it. Sir Edward Heath agreed that this was so - Day 289/162/11.

12.3.23 Sir Burke-Trend's briefing note at G75CA.462.5.4 paragraphs 12 to 13 states:

"Marches and Demonstrations

12. You may wish to question the Secretary of State for Defence about recent suggestions in the Press and on television that the Army over-reacted against some of the Civil Rights demonstrations last weekend and that, in particular, soldiers of the Parachute Regiment, by being unnecessarily rough, have gratuitously provoked resentment among peaceful elements of the Roman Catholic population.

13. Overshadowing this question, however, is the graver issue of the attitude to be adopted by the security forces if the renewed ban on marches is openly defied. Are we able - and prepared - to deal with that situation? Perhaps the question should be urgently with Mr Faulkner during his visit to London".

12.3.24 This submission has quite clearly been made to assist the Secretary of State for Defence in his preparations for the proposed meetings of the MoD's Northern Ireland Policy Group and GEN 47, both scheduled for 27January. (In the event it appears that the NIPG meeting was cancelled see G75D.462.005).

12.3.25 On Day 285/94 Mr Clarke announced that on the previous Friday the Cabinet Office, contrary to what the Tribunal had been earlier led to suppose, there were in fact some manuscript notes for the GEN 47 committee meetings. There are some very important matters that appear in the manuscript notes that inexplicably do not appear in the typescript notes. For example, in the transcription of the manuscript minutes of the GEN 47 meeting of 27 January when the CGS is reporting the position he is recorded as saying in relation to the march in Derry "IRA will seek max. publicity: and this may provoke Prot. counter action" G79aa.487.6.

12.3.26 See also G79A.487.4 (Sir Burke Trend's manuscript notes which specifically refers to "NICRA being taken over by IRA and hooligans" which, contrary to the evidence given by Sir Edward Heath indicates that he believed not only that NICRA and the IRA were close allies but also that NICRA had in fact been taken over by the IRA).

12.3.27 Sir Edward Heath accepted that he never carpeted anybody after Bloody Sunday even when he appreciated afterwards that there had been innocent casualties. He never complained that he had not been informed that innocent people might be put at risk as a result of the operation. We submit that he did not make such an inquiry because it was known that innocent casualties were going to be risked and that this was a risk that they were prepared to take as part of the "war". This may shed some light on what GEN 47 had in mind when they mentioned the unspecified "difficulties" which the army faced in dealing with comparatively peaceful marches which comprised for the most part peaceful demonstrators.

12.3.28 From the transcription of manuscript minutes of the GEN 47 meeting the following emerges:

(i) that GEN 47 "approved CGS' dispositions"; G79aa.487.6

(ii) it was being represented that "NICRA was being taken over by the IRA and hooligans"; G79aa.487.6 It is to be observed that bracketing the IRA and the hooligans together in this way thereby, inter alia, elevating the threat from hooligans chimes very closely with the theme being discussed in the Ford memo.

(iii) that the "IRA will seek max. publicity: and this may provoke Prot. counter action" G79aa.487.6.

12.3.29 The term "IRA" as it is used in this context appears to embrace NICRA and hooligans. We know from other material that NICRA was regarded as the active ally of the IRA and that those who opposed the army were regarded as the Queen's enemies. Again from the point of view of the Stormont regime and Protestants it is clear that it was the failure to control, inter alia, NICRA which was regarded as provoking a Protestant backlash. Sir Arthur Hockaday accepted that the failure to appreciate and reinforce the distinction between NICRA marchers on the one hand and the IRA could have quite dangerous consequences. Day 271/48/19 to Day 271/49/8.

12.3.30 The contemporaneous manuscript notes contradict the essential elements of the evidence of Sir Edward Heath. These manuscript notes were provided to the parties whilst Sir Edward was giving evidence. These notes are highly material in any assessment of the accuracy or veracity of his evidence.

12.3.31 Even when these manuscript notes were put to Sir Edward Heath his evidence still remained that he was unaware of the CGS' or indeed anyone else's plans for dealing with the march.

12.3.32 In G100A.605.1 dated 31 January 1972 there is a statement by the CGS (again which doesn't appear in the formal minute) "only shooting into crowds was directed against hooligans" - not gunmen. In other words, the CGS was telling Gen 47 that the shooting was into crowds against hooligans, the very topic General Ford was talking about in his memo dated 7 January. There is not the slightest indication in the note that Sir Edward Heath or anyone else present responded by enquiring as to why on earth they had shot into crowds nor any indication that they said this is unacceptable and outside the Yellow Card or that this was unanticipated and came as a great surprise.

12.3.33 In the minute from Dalzell-Payne dated 27 January 1972 G82.512 he stated:

> "The attached paper has been prepared as background to the current situation, and to try to anticipate some of the problems we may face on Monday 31 Jan 72, if events on Sunday prove our worst fears. Shortage of time has not allowed its clearance with headquarters Northern Ireland".

12.3.34 In the section of his paper entitled "Conclusions" G82.518 he states at paragraph13:

> "13. It is not possible to enforce the ban rigidly with the force levels available and we can only hope to deal with two or three large scale demonstrations at any one time. In order to deal with them effectively however, we must take stronger military measures which will inevitably lead to further accusations of "brutality and ill-treatment of non-violent demonstrators. ..."

12.3.35 And in the recommendation section of his report G82.519 he states:

"14. We must accept that the current force level cannot be appreciably increased merely to impose a bon on marches. If we accept that the ban must continue, we are left with two possible courses of action, besides speeding up legal proceedings:

a. An extension of the ban to include all public meetings.

b. Additional measures for the physical control of crowds which threaten to march.

15. The only additional measure left for physical control is the use of firearms i.e. "Disperse or we fire." Inevitably it would not be the gunmen who would be killed but "innocent members of the crowd." This would be a harsh and final step, tantamount to saying "all else has failed" and for this reason must be rejected except in extremis. It cannot, however, be ruled out. We must await the outcome of the events planned for the weekend 29/30 Jan 72, see what effect our firmer measures have, and then if necessary advise the Home Office to urge Mr Faulkner to use his power under the Public Order Act to ban all public meetings, and speed up legal proceedings".

12.3.36 Accordingly, prior to 30 January, it was anticipated that firmer measures would be taken which would lead to accusations of the use of excessive force.

12.3.37 Another piece of evidence from which it can be inferred that Sir Edward Heath and GEN 47 foresaw that the military operation might endanger the lives of innocent civilians is to be found in the evidence of Sir David Ramsbotham from which it appears that Day 254/190/18 to Day 254/193/4. In particular when he was asked whether he was aware that on 27 January the JSC themselves, when approaching the arrest operation, themselves envisaged the risk of a "shooting war" he stated "I was aware that everyone knew there was a risk". Day 254/192/17 He said that he was "quite certain" that General Carver would have alerted the Prime Minister as to the possibility. This ought not to surprise anyone. What does beggar belief is the assertion that they were not told unless indeed it was that Lord Carver and others felt Northern Ireland was not a high priority. The politicians had abdicated responsibility for this intractable problem. If things went wrong no heads were going to roll. In those circumstances he might have felt there was no urgent necessity to bring everyone on board. He also said that General Carver "certainly" alerted Lord Carrington which was "why, as I mentioned, he set up the arrangements, so that he should be told exactly what happened so he could then inform them as quickly as possible, realising there having been shooting" Day 254/192/22 to Day 254/193/4 12.3.38 In addition, it can also be inferred that the GEN 47 meeting was told more than is minuted by the text of a telegram sent to the UK Rep's office on 28 January G90.549 which states:

> "Ministers would like the suggestion put to Mr Faulkner that a statement be issued by Northern Ireland Government before Sunday's march"

12.3.39 One of the aims of such a statement, the telegram continues, would be:

> "To prepare public opinion here and in Northern Ireland for violent scenes on TV and following the march".

12.3.40 The telegram is signed "Douglas-Home".

12.3.41 The very worst case contemplated by the GEN 47 meeting, as minuted, was in the Prime Minister's summing up where he says:

> "incidents of confrontation between the Army and the civil population were inevitable." G79.487

12.3.42 The telegram clearly contemplates something other than simple "incidents of confrontation" which were commonplace and for which the public would not have to be prepared. Unless, of course, the information leading to that comment by the Prime Minister was not included in the minute.

12.3.43 The only other documentation available to us that may have been noted/intervened between the GEN 47 meeting and the telegram was the paper of Col Harry Dalzell-Payne G82.512 to G82.521. That paper is dated 27 January 1972 so it is not clear whether it would have been seen in time for the GEN 47 meeting. There would however appear to be little point in circulating it for use after that meeting had concluded, given that the march was to be discussed there. The paper was circulated to, inter alia, the MA/CGS (Military Assistant to the CGS Sir David Ramsbotham who has told the Tribunal that he also travelled in to work with Dalzell-Payne). Giving evidence to the Tribunal Sir David has said that sending something to him was a sure way of getting it to the CGS.

12.3.44 The covering letter to the paper G82.512 states:

> "The attached paper has been prepared as a background to the current situation, and to try to anticipate some of the problems we may face on Monday 31 Jan 72, if events on Sunday prove our worst fears. Shortage of time has not allowed its clearance with Headquarters Northern Ireland."

12.3.45 The paper itself does not anticipate dealing with hooligans or the IRA but enforcing the ban on marches and possible means for dealing with those who act in defiance of the ban. The paper was prepared in particular for the Bloody Sunday march.

12.3.46 Given the above a number of possibilities arise:

(i) Those at GEN 47 level were never told that there might be rioting nor an arrest operation nor that there might be shooting as a result of the march. This seems unlikely given the contents of the AW Stephens memo of 26th, the Dalzell-Payne memo of 27th and the telegram of 28th, it is also incredible given what is known about the contacts between NI and Whitehall;

(ii) The GEN 47 minutes do not accurately reflect what was said at the meeting.

12.3.47 However it is interesting that Sir Edward Heath notes in his statement that:

> "the tenor of the discussion was that this could be expected to be a comparatively peaceful march but that (as with all marches in the Province at that time) IRA or hooligan attempts to infiltrate and exploit the march for their own purposes could never be ruled out and must be prepared for in contingency planning...." KH4.6 paragraph 22

12.3.48 The third possibility is that other meetings or discussions about the march took place outside the formal constraints of GEN 47 and that we have no documentation about what happened at these meetings.

12.3.49 Sir Edward Heath in 1972 never indicated to anyone that what happened on Bloody Sunday was completely unforeseen. For example, in his phone call with Taoiseach Jack Lynch there is not the slightest suggestion that the bad news had not been anticipated.

12.3.50 The telephone call with the Taoiseach also reveals that he was telling him that he had, contrary to his evidence before this Tribunal, anticipated that the march was bound to attract the intervention of the IRA - see Day 290/88/15 to Day 290/89/20.

12.3.51 The transcript indicates that Sir Edward Heath was maintaining that there was a serious risk that at some stage associated with this march that the IRA were bound to intervene. Sir Edward Heath said this because he was obliged to support and foster the army line that the IRA intervened and that was why the army had to fire back. But it does demonstrate that Sir Edward Heath and the British Government foresaw as a possibility that the military operation might endanger the lives of innocent civilians and that this was a risk which they were prepared to run. Moreover, Sir Edward Heath never made the case that the military operation had been designed in a manner to minimise to the greatest extent possible the risk to the lives of the people participating in the march. On the contrary, he was quite unapologetic. he transcript records:

> "The reason it was against the law ... we have all known that if you have a march of this kind it will lead to a clash between the communities and it will also lead to gunmen intervening and everybody was warned yesterday".
> Day 290/90/4 to Day 290/90/8

12.3.52 This reference to the warning is a reference to the second telegram and demonstrates that Sir Edward Heath understood that to be a warning not just about ordinary hooligan activity but something considerably more serious and for which the public had to be prepared in advance. This reinforces the point made earlier that this telegram was to prepare the public for something rather more than "incidents of confrontation" which were commonplace at that time.

12.3.53 Although he later resiled from it transcript records the following question and answer Day 290/91/9 to Day 290/91/22:

A. Well that was a very firm and sensible warning.

Q. Exactly.

A. That they did not want marches because this was what could happen.

Q. This was the proposition I put to you: that you knew this is what could happen on this march, did you not?

A. Yes, but one wanted it not to happen and that is what we were trying to get.

Q. The answer to the question is: yes, you did appreciate the risk of violence and gunmen intervening in this march; do you agree?

A. No

Q. You have just agreed?

A. No.

12.3.54 In other words the British Government may have hoped that it would go off peacefully but they appreciated that there was a serious risk that innocent civilians may be shot. The British Government had appreciated before the event that there was a serious risk to civilian population.

12.3.55 The telegram and the statement that was put out indicated that everybody around Sir Edward Heath appreciated full well that the military operation might endanger the lives of innocent civilians but they were nevertheless prepared to run this risk.

12.3.56 When the statements were being made on behalf of the government in the House of Commons and the House of Lords, that was the opportunity to inform Parliament and the public that as far as the government was concerned there was no plan to enter the Bogside, there was no arrest operation to be mounted on that day, that it was all going to be low key and it wasn't appreciated that there would be a large number of casualties and that the responsibility for the decision was the JSC.

12.3.57 The statements reveal that, contrary to the case being made before this Tribunal, that they did foresee that the military operation might endanger the lives of innocent civilians and were nevertheless prepared to run this risk. So real was this apprehension that it was felt necessary to warn the public in advance of this possible outcome. Their reaction after the event is only consistent with the case that they had foreseen the risk to innocent civilians. In fact their case at the time was the complete opposite to that which is being maintained before this Tribunal.

12.3.58 Lord Balniel, for example, made it very clear that it was known in advance that gunmen would take advantage of the march endangering innocent civilians when he stated:

> "I turn now to the events of Sunday afternoon in Londonderry. Intelligence information had given the security forces good reason to believe that the IRA would exploit the opportunities afforded by the march and subsequent rioting to amount attacks on security forces".
> V26 column 2 which is precisely what Sir Edward had told Taoiseach Jack Lynch on the 31st.

12.3.59 Moreover Lord Carver in his statement at KC8.3 pararaph 18 states that on learning about what had happened on 30 January that his "first reaction was to heave a sigh of relief that so few had been killed".

12.3.60 Lord Balniel's statement also turns to the question of the responsibility for launching the arrest operation. He said "the arrest operation was discussed by the Joint Security Council". It went on to say "further [after] decisions had been taken by Ministers here". V27 column 1

12.3.61 Accordingly it is clear that Westminster knew and indeed had to know that there was an arrest operation being mounted and that Gen 47 must have taken decisions in respect of the arrest operation since there is nothing else that Lord Balniel could have been referring to.

12.3.62 Moreover not only does it appear that the arrest operation was discussed by the JSC and that decisions had been taken at Westminster but also that it was known that the Parachute Regiment was being deployed. Thus at

V27 column 275 it states:

"... The arrest operation was discussed by the Joint Security Council (sic). Further decisions had been taken by Ministers here....

The Parachute Regiment, the Belfast reserve battalion had been deployed to Londonderry as a precaution..."

Lord Balniel's statement

12.3.63 Lord Balniel's statement was made after Sir Reginald Maudling's statement in the House of Commons on 31 January and Lord Carrington's statement on the same date. His statement was very detailed and raised the important themes of:

(i) separation of marchers and rioters (the first public tatement introducing the concept of separation);

(ii) The use of crowds as cover by the IRA for the launch of attacks;

(iii) The fact that there was good intelligence which pointed to the IRA launching attacks on the security forces from the cover of the march;

(iv) The experience and discipline of the Parachute Regiment.

12.3.64 Of even greater significance is the fact that his statement as well as that of Sir Reginald Maudling and Lord Carrington completely failed to mention:

(i) That they didn't know any arrest or any major arrest operation was planned;

(ii) That the whole operation was intended to be played low-key;

(iii) That they hadn't known that the Parachute Regiment was to be used;

(iv) That the risk of innocent casualties was completely unanticipated; and

(v) That they didn't mention that the operation had been without approval or authority or outside the terms of the agreed policy.

12.3.65 The fact that these statements did not mention the essential elements of the matters which are currently relied upon before this Tribunal prevents any credence being attached to claims to the contrary.

12.3.66 Apart from the statements in the House of Commons and the House of Lords there were a number of guidance telegrams which were sent to UK Missions and Embassies around the world for their information. None of these telegrams contained any of the essential elements referred to above which are currently relied upon and, according to the statement of Kelvin White KW3.28 paragraph 4:

> "The aim of such guidance telegrams was to present HMG's case as fully as possible. If at some point HMG's point was vulnerable, that too would be included, with a "best available" answer suggested. No deliberately false information would have been knowingly included in such telegrams. To lie was not only morally wrong and against the rules but clear folly as it could well be exposed and the British posts abroad would be furious".

12.3.67 See also KW3.60 which states:

> "(7) SENIOR OFFICERS ENVISAGED SHOOTING MIGHT OCCUR? BETTER NOT TO HAVE HAD ARREST OPERATION?
> CERTAINLY THERE WAS A RISK. THIS IS A REGRETTABLE FACET OF ARREST OPERATIONS IN AREAS WHERE THE IRA ARE ACTIVE. IT IS NO ARGUMENT FOR GIVING RIOTERS FREE REIN TO DO WHAT THEY LIKE, AND LORD WIDGERY ACCEPTED THAT ARRESTS WERE A LEGITIMATE SECURITY OBJECTIVE".

12.3.68 It is therefore clear that the government was doing all it could to make sure that the army's version of events was made public in advance of the Widgery Tribunal. It had therefore set up a supposedly independent inquiry into the events, on the basis that Bloody Sunday was an event of urgent public importance and that there were conflicting versions as to the events of that day. At the same time, it was shamelessly promoting the army version of events at home (Lord Balniel's speech in the House of Commons on 1st February; Dalzell-Payne's briefing of defence correspondents on 31st January) and abroad (the guidance telegrams above). This is reinforced by the statement of Kelvin White where he says that "the aim of such guidance telegrams was to present the British Government's case as fully as possible". See also Sir Burke-Trend's handwritten notes dated 28 February 1972 in which the Attorney General is noted as having said "Army Council alert to do justice to our case" OS1.895 and the cross-examination of Sir Edward Heath Day 287/87/10 to Day 287/91/24. It is therefore clear that the British Government's line on Bloody Sunday was that of the army. They make no bones about it in the exchanges with the A-G during Widgery. Notwithstanding that the government was shamelessly promoting its version of events, it is highly significant that it failed to disclose to the British public or the wider world in 1972 the key elements upon which reliance is now placed.

12.3.69 A statement from Lord Crawford, formerly Lord Balniel, was only served after the oral evidence had been completed and is dated 20 February 2004. At KC10.16 paragraph 51 where he is dealing with his statement to the House of Commons he states "... we believed that it was vital that the facts, as we understood them, should be laid out to Parliament and to the country. I have no doubt that it was the proper thing to do and that those who provided me with the facts did so in good faith".

12.3.70 He stated that it was his clear duty to "provide what facts were available to Parliament at the very earliest opportunity" KC10.19 paragraph 23. He further states at KC10.19 paragraph 25 "the presentation of the army's case was important....It would have been wrong in a democratic society not to have explained to Parliament the facts about this very serious and tragic event as we knew them ..."

12.3.71 It is quite clear that the real imperative was to get the army's line out in public from a Government Minister before Widgery was formally announced. We do however now know from Sir Burke Trend's manuscript notes that GEN 47 were advised formally by the CGS Lord Carver, on the morning of 31 January (within hours of the killings) that "Shooting into crowds was only directed at hooligans" i.e. not gunmen G100a.605.1. Lord Crawford, Lord Carrington and Sir Edward Heath were all present at that sub-committee meeting and would have listened carefully to what they were being told by Lord Carver. It is absolutely clear that the fact that shooting into crowds was only directed at hooligans was withheld from Parliament and the country.

12.3.72 Accordingly, contrary to what Lord Crawford has stated, the object of the exercise in making the statement to the House of Commons was not to provide "what facts were available" to Parliament.

12.3.73 We should also point out that there is a manifest inconsistency between Lord Crawford's claim on the one hand in his statement at KC10.13 paragraphs 41 to 42 that the British Government did not know that there was a risk of shootings and that that was a risk that they were prepared to run and the claim at KC10.13 paragraph 52 that "intelligence information had given the security forces good reason to believe that the IRA would exploit the opportunities afforded by the march and subsequent rioting to mount attacks on the security forces".

12.3.74 In the minutes of the GEN 47 meeting on Monday 31 January G100.601 to G100.605 there is no indication that Sir Edward Heath questioned the CGS about what had occurred or suggested that Sir Edward Heath and the British Government were not aware that anything like this might happen. Sir Edward Heath never expressed horror at any stage, in public or in private, because he knew from the beginning what the risks were.

12.3.75 There is nothing in the debate of 1 February any more than there is on 31st by anyone on behalf of the government indicating that they did not appreciate that there would be such a high level of casualties, that it was all low-key and that it was in fact the responsibility of the JSC alone.

12.3.76 Notwithstanding Sir Edward Heath's statement KH4.6 paragraph 22 where he stated that as with all marches IRA or hooligan attempts to infiltrate and exploit the march could never be ruled out and must be prepared for in contingency planning. He said in cross-examination Day 290/131/14 to Day 290/13/18 that he did not even ask the CGS, in the context of a large civil rights march what he was going to do about the IRA who he claimed might infiltrate the march. If this be so, it gives a clear indication that the risk of endangering the lives of innocent civilians was certainly not something that caused great concern.

12.3.77 In an interview, speaking about his reaction to the Widgery Report, Lord

Carrington said at Side B A3/24.30 to 29.12

> "The plan for the eh operation for the inevitable trouble that was going to arise as a result of this march – because everybody must have known it would lead to trouble – was first of all approved by Joint Security Committee in Northern Ireland and subsequently by Ministers here".

12.3.78 What is attributed to Lord Carrington in this interview also chimes with what Lord Balneil told the House of Commons in his statement referred to above.

12.3.79 The Tribunal is also referred to L.204 which is a Daily Mail Report entitled "No action against Army" in which the following was attributed to Lord Carrington:

> "Lord Carrington said that the secret plan approved by Ministers in London and Army chiefs for dealing with the illegal Civil Rights march had included provision for a possible arrest operation by the Parachute Regiment".

12.3.80 Although Lord Carrington denied in his evidence that there was any secret plan he accepted that he had never, prior to giving evidence at the Tribunal, challenged what had been attributed to him Day 280/105/21 to Day 280/108/5

12.3.81 In L.212 which is a Sunday Times Insight Report entitled "The Decision to put Civilians at Risk" the following paragraph appears in Column 3 (after having referred to Lord Balniel's statement in the House of Commons):

> "... Buy why did authority for the arrest operation have to come right from the top? Outside the Tribunal, army officers and Stormont civil servants have told us that any major operation in the Derry "enclave" had to be a political decision."

12.4 Conclusion

12.4.1 The inescapable inference is that the approval for the operation on Bloody

Sunday had to be a political decision approved by the Stormont Government and the British Government the essential elements of which involved, at least, the following:

(i) The decision to prevent the march reaching the Guildhall;

(ii) The decision to have a major military operation involving British armed forces;

(iii) The decision that this would or might involve a significant "arrest" operation;

(iv) The decision that the Paratroopers would be involved;

(v) The decision to allow a major military operation to proceed in which they foresaw, as a possible outcome, that the lives of innocent civilians might be endangered;

(vi) The decision to run the risk that the lives of innocent civilians might be endangered.

(vii) The neglect of both governments to take steps to ensure that the operation was conducted in a manner designed to minimise to the greatest extent possible the risk to the lives of innocent civilians.

13. Military and Police Intelligence before the March

13.1 Introduction and Summary of Submissions

13.1.1 In the immediate aftermath of the shootings, both the Government and the Army claimed publicly and privately (in internal reports) that, prior to the march, "reliable and detailed intelligence reports" had been received to the effect that the IRA planned to use the crowd cover at the march to launch attacks on the Army. Even though there were several isolated incidents of civilian firing on soldiers, it is clear from the evidence that both branches of the IRA planned not to be engaged in attacks on the Army on Bloody Sunday. Moreover, although in the Army's view there was an ever-present risk that the IRA would engage in hostile action, the assessment made by the senior officers responsible for planning Operation Forecast was that the IRA were unlikely to mount an attack on soldiers at or near the march.

13.1.2 The significance of this matter is as follows. First, if the IRA did not plan to engage in hostile action on Bloody Sunday and the military intelligence assessment was to like effect, this is evidence pointing to the conclusion that the IRA did not mount an attack on soldiers on the day except, as is recognised, in a belated and ineffectual response to the shootings by the paratroopers. Secondly, if it was the assessment of the Army Command that the IRA were unlikely to mount an attack on soldiers at or near the march, they ought to have ensured that this was fully appreciated by the soldiers engaged in the arrest operation. Although at the Brigade Order Group Conference "the last thing in anybody's mind was shooting", according to Col Steele, some of the soldiers involved, including officers and men in the Parachute Regiment, were led to believe and may have believed that there was a risk of their being fired upon, especially from the Rossville Flats, when this was not true. In consequence, many soldiers may have been unduly apprehensive about this risk and therefore more disposed to use lethal force either as an unwarranted pre-emptive measure or as an over-reaction to a perceived threat or simply following the lead set by others. This is particularly the case in the context that Nationalists, including residents of the Bogside and Civil Rights marchers, were perceived as either the enemy or operating hand-in-glove with the enemy and could be killed with impunity.

13.1.3 Our submissions are that:

(i) Both the Official IRA and the Provisional IRA planned not to be engaged in attacks on the Army at or near the march on Bloody Sunday.

(ii) Neither of these organisations had previously taken advantage of a Civil Rights march to mount an attack on the Army or the Police.

(iii) The RUC's assessment was that they would not attack the soldiers.

(iv) The Army's assessment was that, although there was always a risk that the IRA could attack soldiers, it was unlikely that this would happen.

(v) The thrust of any intelligence that was received by the Army must have been to the effect that neither of the IRA organisations was planning an attack.

(vi) The signal of 27th January 1972 from the Director of Intelligence to Brigadier MacLellan was (properly) regarded as unreliable and inaccurate insofar as it suggested that "the IRA" would use the crowd as cover for an attack on the Army and it was discounted accordingly.

(vii) Neither the contents of the signal nor the information from Observer C, if this was the source of the same, could properly be described as either reliable or detailed.

(viii) Nor was there any other report to this effect, so that it was also incorrect to suggest that there was more than one such report, reliable or detailed or otherwise.

(ix) Specifically, the evidence of Observer B is false and, whether or not the documents supplied by MI5 (the Security Service) are authentic, they do not support Observer B's claims that "the IRA" was planning any hostile action against the Army on Bloody Sunday or that he supplied information to this effect to his handlers.

(x) The suggestion about "reliable and detailed intelligence reports" was therefore fabricated and must have been known by senior officers to have been fabricated.

(xi) The Information agencies deliberately engaged in a campaign of disinformation to support the Army case.

(xii) The conduct of the Intelligence agencies, Information agencies and the senior officers who were involved in manufacturing a story that the Army had such intelligence gives rise to the adverse inference that they did so because they knew it was necessary to fabricate such evidence to reinforce the claims that the shootings were justified.

13.2 The Intelligence network in Northern Ireland in 1972

13.2.1 The intelligence gathering efforts of the Army and police in Northern Ireland in 1972 were co-ordinated by the Director of Intelligence for Northern Ireland, "David", who had been seconded by the Security Service (MI5) for this purpose. He was responsible to the GOC and liaised with the UK Representative, Howard Smith, who later became head of the Security Service. For ease of reference, the military intelligence network in Northern Ireland is set out in a chart at Appendix 1. This chart is not complete but it represents our best efforts to construct the Intelligence network from the material available to us.

13.3 The evidence that the Army expected no IRA action

13.3.1 The starting point for the consideration of this issue is the fact that, as of 30th January 1972, neither the Official IRA nor the Provisional IRA had exploited Civil Rights marches for the purpose of mounting shooting or bombing attacks on the IRA or police. There is no record of any Civil Rights march being attended by such attacks and none of the witnesses recalls any occasion when the IRA used such a march as cover to attack the Army or police. This in itself should have given rise to the expectation that the march in Derry would not be accompanied by gun or bomb attacks.

13.3.2 In order to guarantee a peaceful march, organisers sought and received assurances from both the Officials and Provisionals that they would not engage in any action that would compromise the peaceful nature of the march. Martin McGuiness was second-in-command of the Provisional IRA in Derry at the material time. He was told on the previous Thursday (27th January) that an approach had been made to his OC by people representing the Civil Rights movement and on the day before the march he was instructed to issue orders to all volunteers that the IRA would not engage militarily with the Army or police, to ensure that the Civil Rights march passed off peacefully. (KM3.1) This decision was relayed to and accepted by all members. (KM3.1) OIRA 3 was the Officer Commanding the Official IRA in the North West. He confirms that the order given on the days leading up to Bloody Sunday was that no units or volunteers were to incite any confrontation with the Army or police or to commence any offensive action against them, on the grounds that they did not wish to do anything that would risk bad publicity for the march or its purpose. (AOIRA 3.2 at paragraphs 5-6) This is confirmed by OIRA1 (AOIRA1.4 paragraph 6), OIRA2 (AOIRA2.2 paragraph 4), OIRA4 (AOIRA4.2 paragraph 7) and OIRA5 (AOIRA5.2 paragraph 8). The evidence provided by IRA members themselves is supported by the evidence of a number of civilians, including Dr Raymond McClean (AM105.2 paragraph 11, and Day 175/8/11 to Day 175/11/24), Michael Havord (AH46.3 paragraph 10 and Day 125/14/13 to Day 125/20/11-20) and Hugh McMonagle (AM369.1 paragraph 2 100/2/22 to Day 100/4/21).

13.3.3 Since both organisations planned positively to suspend all hostile activity on Bloody Sunday and this information was communicated not only to their own members but to other civilians for the purpose of reassuring the Civil Rights movement, this is the information that ought to have been passed on to the Police and Army if they received any information from reliable informants.

13.3.4 This was indeed the RUC's belief and expectation. Superintendent Lagan said in his Eversheds statement that he did not think the IRA or anyone else would shoot at the troops. He based this belief on his "general knowledge at the time". (JL1.7 paragraph 19) He did not disclose his sources. Detective Constable Hunter was one of three RUC Special Branch officers who travelled from Belfast to Derry for the march. He was given a briefing by Detective Chief Inspector Donnelly, who had apparently seen David's signal of 27th January containing the suggestion that "the IRA will use the crowd as cover". (See the handwritten note on the covering letter of 27th January 1972 at G81A.511.1) Detective Constable Hunter's recollection is that he was not told there would be shooting at the security forces. (Day 186/9/19 to Day 186/9/20) He also said that he had no knowledge of IRA gunmen previously opening fire in the course of a Civil Rights march or anywhere near a Civil Rights march (Day 186/10/19 to Day 186/10/22) Detective Chief Inspector Donnelly "specifically ... [has no recollection] .. .. of the likely actions of the IRA on the day or the sources of any such information" (JD7.3 paragraph 2).

13.3.5 This testimony is supported by the Special Branch's contemporaneous written assessments. In the assessment for the period ending 19th January 1972 at Appendix B, "Forthcoming events", the entry against the march is: "no trouble anticipated". It will be noted that this entry appears as an Appendix to the main body of the assessment (G64.380), which contains extensive discussion of the general situation as well as of the activities of relevant organisations such as both the Goulding and Brady IRA's, as they were known, and NICRA. For reasons which were not explained either by the PSNI or anyone else, the assessment for the period ending 26th January 1972, i.e. the last assessment before Bloody Sunday, has not been supplied although we do have a copy of the assessment for the following week, the period ended 3rd February 1972 (G112.697). The most recent Special Branch assessment prior to the march is therefore missing. However, a document entitled "Forthcoming Events", (G78.484) which is in exactly the same form as Appendix B to the Special Branch assessments, has been provided as an attachment to minutes of the Joint Security Council meeting held on 27th January 1972 (G76.464) The entry against the march in Derry on Bloody Sunday specifies the time, route and speakers. The only other comment is: "No opposition anticipated but it is anticipated that marchers will clash with the Security Forces". There is no suggestion that anything more serious was expected. Specifically, there is no reference to the possibility of shooting or bomb attacks. It is highly likely that the body of the assessment would have contained a more extensive discussion of police expectations for the march and there must be at least a suspicion that the body of the assessment is missing because it contradicted the Army's subsequent story that IRA violence was anticipated.

13.3.6 Lord Carver, Chief of the General Staff, said that the Army was "dependant on the RUC for all intelligence" (KC8.2 paragraph 7). Sir David Ramsbotham, the Military Assistant to Lord Carver, agreed that "the Army had to rely on Intelligence Information provided by the RUC". (KR2.1 paragraph 3) The Director of Intelligence, David, did not specifically advert to the degree to which the Army relied on RUC Special Branch for its intelligence but his deputy, Col. GS Intelligence, INQ2241, when asked what he did to find out whether the IRA had any specific plans for the march, said:

> "We went to Special Branch. We are now talking about that time of the operations in NI when military intelligence was on a very weak ground; it had not got established at that stage, it was becoming established, which it later did. So the answer would be: we did not have detailed sources of intelligence of our own; we had the low grade information coming in from people; we relied on Special Branch and our organisation from MIO's to guide us along." (Day 284/64/8 to Day 284/64/17)

When asked for the source of the intelligence contained in the notes for the Brigade Order Group conference under the heading "Latest Intelligence Assessment" (G88.537), Col. Steele, then Brigade Major, said: "I should imagine most of it came from the RUC". (Day 266/75/11)

13.3.7 It can be safely assumed, therefore, that the Army did rely on the police assessment, which was that there was no likelihood of an IRA attack on soldiers at or near the march.

13.3.8. There is no indication in either the HQNI INTSUMS or the Brigade INTSUMS immediately preceding the march of any expectation of gun or bomb attacks on the Army or of any other hostile IRA action at or near the march. In 8 Brigade's INTSUM No. 101 of 26th January 1972 (G72.445), the Army's belief in relation to the march was that "all civil rights groups, whether IRA Goulding or Brady aligned, will combine together in an attempt to cause maximum embarrassment to the Security Forces". (G72.451 paragraph 27) Apart from the fact that nothing more than "embarrassment" was expected, there is no suggestion that either IRA would be directly involved. In the "Outlook" section, there was specific reference to an increased threat of cross-border action by IRA (Brady) ASU's. It was also expected that "planned protest demonstrations, which have the aim of provoking confrontations with the Security Forces and creating publicity and fuel for propaganda, will cause further trouble". This was said to apply particularly to the Bloody Sunday march. (G72.452) paragraphs 31 to 33) This suggests an expectation of no more than public disorder. The HQNI INTSUM 4/72 of the following day (G80.488) refers to the march as one that would "present particular problems and a greater than usual opportunity for demonstrating the difficulties of preventing violations of the ban in Republican areas" (G80.491 paragraph 23). There is no reference to the IRA or any anticipated gun or bomb attack on the Army in connection with the march. This INTSUM did go on to deal specifically with expectations of IRA activity but there is no suggestion in this context either of IRA activity at or near the march. The expectation was that IRA activity in the country and border areas was likely to intensify and that both factions were likely to continue to attempt to mount spectacular operations in Belfast. (G80.492 paragraph 24) In Annex D under the heading "Detailed Reports" and the sub- headings "IRA Brady – Operations and Plans," there is no reference to any plans in connection with Bloody Sunday. (G80.505 paragraph 2) This page is heavily redacted but we assume that there are no entries relevant to Bloody Sunday.

13.3.9. The HQNI Operational Summary dated 28th January 1972 (G83.522) repeated in its "Outlook" section the suggestion that the march would present a greater than usual opportunity for demonstrating the difficulties of preventing violations of the ban in Republican areas. It added: "Intelligence reports indicate that the IRA are determined to produce a major confrontation by one means or another during the march". (G83.526) There is no indication of the nature, contents or sources of these reports or what is meant by a "major confrontation". The context suggests that what was envisaged was serious public disorder, bearing in mind that the IRA did not engage in pitched battles with the Army. The term "confrontation" itself suggests that what was envisaged was that the IRA would engineer a confrontation between either marchers or rioters on the one hand and the Army on the other. It was clear from the terminology used in connection with IRA activity in other parts of the Operational Summary that if shooting or bombing attacks had been anticipated in connection with the march this would have been stated in these terms.

13.3.10 In the MOD's Weekly Intelligence Report for NI of 28th January 1972 (G85), in the "Outlook" section, Brigadier Lewis wrote: "Apart from a hard core of professional hooligans who would certainly be seeking to exploit the situation as the rally disperses if not before, gunmen may be present."

(G85.532 paragraph 18). It should be noted that the Outlook section in this report seems to have been taken almost entirely from the Outlook sections in the HQNI INTSUM of 27th January and the Operational Summary of 28th January referred to above. Sentences in those Outlook sections have been either copied exactly or paraphrased. The reference in the Operational Summary Outlook to Intelligence reports indicating that the IRA were determined to produce a major confrontation by one means or other during the march appears to have been paraphrased so as to read "gunmen may be present" in Brigadier Lewis's report. In other words, the suggestion that "gunmen may be present" may represent a misunderstanding of the contents of the Operational Summary. Certainly, there is no indication that it is based on any other material. If it is not based on the Operational Summary, the complete absence of any detail suggests that it is little more than speculation. Taken at its height, it raises no more than the possibility that gunmen may be present, rather than the expectation that gunmen were likely to be present and likely to attack the Army.

13.3.11. There is no indication in any of the MO4, DS10 or other MOD documentation of knowledge of any intelligence concerning IRA plans to attack the Army.

13.3.12. On the face of it, the Op Order No. 2/72 (Op Forecast) of 27th January 1972 (G.95.564) indicates an expectation of hostile IRA action. Under the heading Background, the following appears:

"f. We expect a hooligan element to accompany the marchers, and anticipate an intensification of the normal level of hooliganism and rioting during and after the march. Almost certainly snipers, petrol bombers and nail bombers will support the rioters.

g. Bombers may intensify their efforts to destroy business and shopping premises in the city during the event, while the attention of the security forces is directed towards the containment of the march. (G95.565 paragraph 1)

13.3.13. Under the heading "The Threat", one of the threats was assessed to be "IRA terrorist activity, to take advantage of the event, to conduct shooting attacks against the Security Forces and bombing attacks against business, shopping and commercial premises in the City centre". (G95.565 paragraph 2b) Judging by the HQNI INTSUM and 8 Brigade's own INTSUM referred to above, there was no intelligence or indeed any other basis to support these suggestions. They are also difficult to reconcile with other aspects of the Op Order, including the plan to conduct an arrest operation on foot (G95.570 paragraph F), not to mention the intention to "collect and conduct press and TV men around deployment areas" (G95.573 paragraph 9(6). More importantly, these expectations, insofar as they were ever real, were significantly downgraded at the Brigade Order Group Conference the following day. The first two serials in the notes for the Conference (G88.537) correspond with the first two sections in the Op Order, namely "Background" and "Threat". It was in the background section of the Op Order that reference was made to snipers, petrol bombers and nail bombers supporting the rioters but there is no reference to this at all in serial 1 of the notes for the Conference. Under the heading "Latest INT assessment" in the Background section of the notes, there is a reference to the mood of NICRA being non-violent and a note that hooligan violence was inevitable. But there is no suggestion of any intelligence or other expectation concerning snipers, petrol bombers and nail bombers. Under the heading "Threat" in the notes to the conference, it is stated "no change from the Op Order" and summarises in note form the four matters assessed in the Op Order as threats, including "IRA activity to take advantage of event". G88.537). Significantly, this is referred to as a "threat" or, in other words, a risk. It is not expressed as an expectation or as something in respect of which there was intelligence.

13.3.14. However, the clearest indication that, notwithstanding the alarmist terms of the Operational Order, there was no genuine belief or expectation that the IRA would mount attacks on the Army on Bloody Sunday, apart from all the documentary and other evidence referred to above, is the testimony of those most directly involved in planning the operation. The Operational Order was drafted by the Brigade Major, Colonel Steele. He did not expect the IRA to launch an attack on the Army. When asked by Counsel to the Inquiry if he recalled whether at the Coordinating Conference there was discussion of the possibility of shooting, he replied:

> "No, there was not .. .. there was no question of – there was no discussion on the risk of fire as far as I remember.. .. Shooting was the very last thing on anybody's mind". (Day 266/87/10 to Day 266/87/22). Emphasis added.

13.3.13. When asked specifically about paragraph 4 of the signal from the Director of Intelligence in which it was stated that "Source believes that the marchers will be armed with sticks and stones and he expects that the IRA will use the crowd as cover", his reply was that he was very surprised to read that because "that is directly opposite to everything that we had been told about what the marchers would do, that they would not be armed with sticks and stones, but that they would be orderly and peaceful". (Day 266/76/11 to Day266/77/1)

13.3.16 General MacLellan, the Officer Commanding 8 Brigade, told the Tribunal that the arrest operation was launched believing that there would be no firing, and that "nobody would attempt to murder the soldiers doing it" (Day 262/5/2 to Day 262/5/3). He said that there was no discussion or determination of what might or should occur if the Army were fired on and he did not think it was raised with him." (Day 262/7/11 to Day 262/7/14) The absence of any discussion of this issue can be explained only on the basis that there was no real expectation that the Army would be fired on.

13.3.17. David, the Director of Intelligence, was asked by Eversheds if there was any intelligence of which he was aware that specifically predicted that the IRA would attempt to exploit the march as cover for attacking the Army. He did not remember any intelligence specific to the march in question to that effect

(KD2.2 paragraph 8). Nor, when he was giving his testimony (Day 330/23/22 to Day 330/24/5), was he assisted by the production of his signal to Brigadier MacLellan. He suggested that it was endemic at that time that the IRA would join marches to exploit opportunities to cause trouble for the Security Forces (KD2.2 paragraph 8). In his second statement, he said that he asked the Security Service staff if they could identify any further documents to illustrate this point. (KD2.11 paragraph 27) Having trawled all the documentation available to them, the Security Service were unable to come up with a single example of the IRA using a Civil Rights march to engage in hostile activity against the Army. Nor could David provide an example himself (Day 330/54/21 to Day 330/55.1). His deputy, Col GS Intelligence in HQNI, INQ2241, could recall no occasion on which the IRA had used a march for cover for an attack on the Security Forces (Day 284/69/23 to Day 284/70/6). Captain INQ2225, one of the Military Intelligence Officers who reported to David, said that neither Special Branch nor he had any intelligence of what the IRA were going to do on the day. (Day 384/131/19 to Day 384/131/21) Captain INQ2225 had "no recollection of NICRA or any Civil Rights march ever being used or manipulated by the IRA to provide crowd cover for sniping at the RUC or the Military. That was not the modus operandi of the IRA. It was not the marches themselves that would be used by the IRA as opportunities for sniping, it was riots." (C2225.3 paragraph 13). Having said that, he accepted that, at Barrier 14 where he was deployed, there was no sniping at soldiers (Day 384/141/3 to Day 384/141/5) even though the rioting there was as fierce as he could ever remember in Derry (Day 384/140/25 to Day 384/141/2). Not only did Captain INQ2225 have no recollection of any report immediately prior to the march of people having been drilling in the area of the Rossville Flats in preparation for an ambush, but he did not recall ever hearing of paramilitary drilling in the Rossville Flats (C2225.8 paragraph 50). Nor does Major INQ2555 (GS02 INT) remember any significant intelligence about the possibility of trouble at the march (C2555.4 paragraph 18).

13.3.18 INQ1803, the GS03 Int and Sy at 8 Brigade, said that his understanding at the time corresponded with General Steele's understanding, as expressed in General Steele's testimony to the effect that paragraph 4 of the Signal from David was "directly opposite to everything that we had been told about what the marchers would do" (Day 293/67/23 to Day 293/67/25). General Steele's recollection that "shooting was the very last thing on anybody's mind" reflected his own recollection of the Co-ordinating Conference. He did not remember any discussion in the Conference about shooting. (Day 293/70/10 to Day 293/70/14) He confirmed that if there had been any assessment made by him to the effect that the IRA were expected to engage in attacks on the Army that would have appeared in the notes for the Co-ordinating Conference at serial 1, "Background to Event, Latest Intelligence Assessment" (G88.537, and Day 293/73/19 to Day 293/73/24). Although he said there was always a threat that the IRA could take advantage of an event (Day 293/73/11 to Day 293/73/13) he could not specifically remember any Civil Rights march that was exploited by the IRA in the sense that it was used as an opportunity to shoot soldiers (Day 293/74/24 to Day 293/75/7).

13.3.19 INQ7 was the 1 Para Intelligence Officer. He had no recollection of the possibility of shooting by the IRA being discussed at the 1 Para Battalion Order Group Conference (Day 292/21/1 to Day 292/21/4). He said it "would have been alluded to because of the extract from the INTSUM's" but when it was pointed out to him that the most recent INTSUM (B1295.1 paragraph 27) did not refer to the possibility of shooting he said that in various (presumably previous) INTSUM's there had been reference to shooting at Security Forces and that a march is good cover for such activity. (Day 292/21/18 to Day 292/21/24) However, he could not cite an example of a Civil Rights march where the IRA had used the march as cover to attack the Army (Day 292/82/25 to Day 292/83/4) and what he would have known from the INTSUMs was that there was no prediction of any IRA activity in the sense of a planned attack on the Army on Bloody Sunday (Day 292/83/25). He had no recollection of Col. Wilford telling him about shooting or the possibility of this happening (Day 292/86/13 to Day 292/86/24)

13.3.20 General Ford told Lord Widgery that he thought it "unlikely" that gunmen would open fire (B.1203) and also told Desmond Hamill that he "thought that gunmen would not intervene" (B.1208.3.17). None of the staff in the HQNI Information Policy / Psyops unit had any knowledge of intelligence to the effect that the IRA planned to use the march for the cover of attack on the Army. Colin Wallace said that "our information from inside the Republican Movement and from NICRA was that the organisers had obtained a promise from the IRA that they would not exploit either the march or the rally". (KW2.9 paragraph 51). INQ1873 has no recollection of being offered any intelligence that indicated that the IRA planned to use the march as cover for their gunmen (Day 242/22/19 to Day 242/22/24). Mr Mooney said he had no reason to expect the IRA to use the march as cover for gunmen (Day 239/119/16 to Day 239/119/22). When it was suggested to Col Tugwell that passages in a thesis written by him in 1977 (B133.101) suggested that there was "no adequate evidence that the IRA had any plans to start shooting in the Bogside on Bloody Sunday" he had to concede that it "leans in that direction" Day 241/132 This, of course, was a thesis based not only on intelligence and information received prior to the march but in the years thereafter.

13.3.21 There is no evidence of any last-minute change of plan to take account of recently received intelligence to the effect that the IRA planned an attack on the soldiers. Indeed, the way in which the Paras were deployed contraindicates an expectation of shooting. The first pig (Lt. N's) parked in open ground with its rear doors opening towards the Flats, the second pulled into the carpark itself directly underneath Block 1 and in full view of Blocks 2 and 3 while the rest of the convoy stopped in the middle of Rossville Street with soldiers debussing onto open ground.

13.3.22 Apart from the Observer C material discussed further below, there is not a single primary source report pre-dating Bloody Sunday that suggests that the IRA planned to use the crowd as cover to launch an attack on the Army.

13.3.23. The Operational Survey for the week ending 4th February 1972 said "the extent to which the Londonderry shootings arose out of deliberate IRA planning or out of swift reaction to an unforeseen situation is difficult to assess at this stage" (G115.744) but it would not have been difficult to assess if reliable intelligence had been received indicating deliberate IRA planning.

13.3.24 According to Martin Ingram, the former FRU member, he saw documents recording intelligence received prior to the march from both Official and Provisional IRA agents that there was no intention to undertake military during the march. (KI2.4 paragraph 8)

13.3.25 Finally, the Army Team at the Widgery Tribunal looked for material to indicate that the Army had, prior to the march, received specific intelligence of IRA plans to attack soldiers at the march but, according to Colin Wallace, they could not come up with any.

13.4 The evidence that the Army did expect IRA action

13.4.1 The evidence, such as it is, that "reliable and detailed intelligence reports" to the effect claimed by the Army had indeed been received in advance of the day consists of the following:

(i) General Ford's memo of 7th January 1972 concerning the march planned for 16th January: "It is the opinion of senior commanders in Londonderry that if the march takes place, however good the intentions of NICRA may be, the DYH backed up by the gunmen will undoubtedly take over control at an early stage." G48.301 (8) This was contradicted in his subsequent evidence to Lord Widgery and his interview with Desmond Hamill. See above at paragraph 3.20.

(ii) The statement in the HQNI Operational Summary for the week ending Friday 28th January 1972 to the effect that "intelligence reports indicate that the IRA are determined to produce a major confrontation by one means or another during the march" (G83.526). This is discussed above at paragraph 3.9.

(ii) The statement at paragraph 18 of the Weekly Intelligence Report by Brigadier Lewis (BGS (Int) DIS) for the week ending 29th January suggesting that "gunmen may be present" at the march (G85.532). This is discussed at paragraph 3.10.

(iii) References in the Operational Order: "Almost certainly snipers, petrol bombers and nail bombers will support the rioters" G95.565(1)(f); and "IRA terrorist activity to take advantage of the event, to conduct shooting attacks against SFs . . ":G95.565 (2)(b). This is discussed at paragraph 3.13.

(iv) The reference at the Co-ordinating Conference:"Threat (2) IRA activity, to take advantage of event." :G88.537 (2). This is discussed at paragraph 3.13.

(v) The suggestion in Desmond Hamill's notes that General Ford told him that he had received an intelligence report on 29th January indicating that the IRA were determined to produce a major confrontation (B1208.4.6). This reflects the wording used in the Operational Summary. The report is not further identified but, insofar as it is a reference to the Signal from David, it is discussed further below. Whether or not he did receive such a report, he also told Desmond Hamill that he did not expect gunmen to intervene.

(vi) Statements made subsequently in internal army reports, the statement in the House of Commons and the New York BIS press statement that such reports had been received, but these were all statements made after the event.

(vii) Observers B and C and the signal sent by David. As appears above, the signal sent by David was completely discounted by the senior officers responsible for planning Operation Forecast. As such, it had no impact on the planning of the military operation on Bloody Sunday. Nevertheless, it appears to have been the sole basis on which the Army and the Government claimed that "reliable and detailed intelligence reports" had been received prior to the march to the effect that the IRA would use the march as cover to attack soldiers. As such it must be examined carefully.

13.5 Observers B and C and the Signal from David

13.5.1 There is only one written document pre-dating Bloody Sunday that suggests that the Army had intelligence to the effect that the IRA would use the crowd as cover to attack soldiers. This is the signal from David dated 27th January (KJ4.45). The most salient features of this document are as follows. First, it could certainly not be described as "detailed". Secondly, as both General MacLellan and General Steele readily acknowledged, it was clearly not "reliable". Thirdly, it was based on a single report from a single source rather than a multiplicity of reports as suggested by the Army's use of the plural. Fourthly, even if is entirely genuine, which is not conceded, it was (correctly) discounted completely by all those involved in planning the military operation, so it could not have been regarded at the time as either reliable or accurate. Fifthly, it was not in fact reliable or accurate since neither IRA faction attacked the Army either by using the crowd as cover or at all. Indeed, even if the Soldiers' case is taken at its height, the accounts by soldiers of civilian fire do not bear any relation to the prediction contained in the signal. Sixthly, the apparent source of the information contained in the signal, namely Observer C, clearly appreciated that there was no attack on soldiers on Bloody Sunday since even he could not bring himself to furnish a report to that effect after the event, even though he was specifically tasked to ascertain what had happened on the day and had been in contact with his handlers during the period immediately following the day. Seventhly, there has still not been produced any prior primary source report from Observer C or anyone else to the effect that the IRA planned to use the crowd as cover for an attack on the Army. The signal from David is claimed to have been based on an oral report from Julian. The report of the contact with Observer C was not written up until after Bloody Sunday, for reasons which have still not been satisfactorily explained.

13.5.2 Prior to the "discovery" of the signal from David and the materials concerning Observers C and D, there was no documentation of any kind pre-dating Bloody Sunday that referred to specific intelligence of IRA plans for the day. The sole basis for the suggestion that there had been such intelligence was the statement of Observer B and the Security Service documents attached thereto.

13.5.3 In March 2000 we were provided with a statement by Observer B to the effect that, among other things, he had witnessed the drilling of IRA Auxiliaries at Rossville Flats in the week leading up to Bloody Sunday. He contended that from his own observations and from speaking to other persons he formed the view that these Auxiliaries were practising an ambush on soldiers on Bloody Sunday. He claimed to have telephoned his handlers on 25, 26 and 27 January to give them this information. He claimed to have telephoned one of his handlers again on the day after Bloody Sunday with further information about how several men had been seen running from Rossville Flats after the shooting started and that they loaded two Thompson sub-machine guns, a rifle and a pistol into a car before driving off. He claimed that his evidence was corroborated by contemporaneous documents attached to the statement. Examination of this and other intelligence material leads to the following conclusion. First, not only do the attached documents not support Observer B's accounts but they positively contradict them in material respects.

Secondly, the available records suggest that Observer B did not make any report of such activity before Bloody Sunday either to his Army handlers or to his Security Service handlers. Thirdly, it is now apparent from the Observer C material that no relevant reports were provided by Observer B before Bloody Sunday; his handlers did not seek any reports from him even after Bloody Sunday; and the reports that he did supply support the evidence that the IRA arrived on the scene only after the event. Fourthly, Observer B could never have been regarded as an impartial witness. Apart from the fact that his accounts of drilling before Bloody Sunday are transparently ridiculous, the little we have been allowed to know about him is sufficient to indicate that he had connections with the Parachute Regiment and with Loyalist extremists.

13.5.4 As we have already discussed in Section 4, the manner in which the material concerning Observers B and C was disclosed tends to suggest information manipulation on the part of the Intelligence Services. The manner in which evidence has been given by Security Service agents gives rise to the unavoidable conclusion that they cannot be regarded as reliable, honest, or impartial witnesses. James, now deceased, led the Tribunal to believe that Observer B was the source who "pinpointed just about all the intelligence the Army had about Derry" and that, by implication, the "detailed and reliable intelligence reports" about the IRA plans for the day must have emanated from him. He did not even mention Observer C. It is now apparent that Observer B was of peripheral importance, that Observer C was the only resident informant in Derry of any value and, even after the event, that neither could come up with any information supporting the Army's case that they had merely fired back in response to civilian gunfire.

13.5.5 It is now proposed to examine in detail the material concerning Observer B, Observer C and the Signal from David.

13.6.1 Observer B was English, strongly anti-Republican, intensely loyal to the UK and was handled as an agent by officers of the Parachute Regiment for about four months (Day 325/70/7 to Day 325/73/25). He also won the trust of Loyalist extremists (Day 325/78/19 to Day 325/79/1078) and worked closely with a Loyalist organisation (Day 325/73/23 to Day 325/73/25) He saw himself as playing a leading role in supporting the British Army in Northern Ireland. (KJ4.1 paragraph 3) Although he implied in his statement that he received only travelling expenses (KO2.2 paragraph 4) he did receive a salary and bonuses from August 1972. (Day 325/82/17 to Day 325/82/21) and KM10. 2 paragraph 7)

13.6.2 In his statement, he says that he was in Derry on 25th January 1972. (KO2.2 paragraph 6) This is not supported by any record to which Observer B refers but it is difficult to believe that Observer B could have recalled this date or the details of what appear in the paragraphs following without access to records. This gives rise to the inference that he did have access to records which had been withheld from the Tribunal.

13.6.3. At KO2.2-3 paragraphs 7 to 10, he describes seeing a group of about 40 men drilling in Glenfada Park and then marching across Rossville Street before entering Rossville Flats through the main entrance located between Blocks 1 and 2. It is hard to imagine how this could have occurred without being witnessed by soldiers or police officers on the City Walls and, as they would have crossed Rossville Street, from OP Echo on the Embassy Ballroom building. In KO2.4 paragraph 12, he claims that he saw the men spread out along the three landings of Block 2 apparently practising ambush tactics. This again would have been in full view of soldiers in OP Echo and is patently absurd. In KO2.5 paragraph 13, he says that he telephoned his Army handler, IO1, that evening, i.e. Tuesday 25th January, describing what he had seen and that he told him again when he spoke to him on the telephone the following day (Wednesday 26th).

13.6.4 In paragraph 16, he says that on Thursday 27th January he saw the men drilling again in the same fashion and telephoned IO1 that day to tell him what he had witnessed. This is his last claimed sighting of any relevant events prior to Bloody Sunday.

13.6.5 Officer M, a Security Service officer, has checked the Security Service records in relation to Observer B. He confirms that "while the records suggest that Observer B remained in contact with IO1 at that time, they contain no reference to specific contact between them on 25, 26th, 27th or 31st January 1972". (KM10.2 paragraph 5) Nor is there any other record of any kind in anyone's possession supporting Observer B's account or his claim to have passed on his account to any of his handlers. However, there is a record that he met Julian on Thursday 27th January and there is no suggestion there that he passed on to Julian any information about drilling. The most significant aspect of the meeting, judging by the record thereof, is the fact that Julian paid Observer B £10 expenses. (KM10.3 paragraph 6 and KM10.5).

13.6.6 Observer B saw nothing himself on Bloody Sunday but he claims to have spoken to two men, A and B, the next day. He claims that they told him that after the shooting had gone on for a couple of minutes they observed several men run from the Rossville Flats to a Ford Cortina marked at point C on the map at KO2.18 (KO2.6 paragraph 17) As appears from P329, soldiers on the City Wall would have had a clear view of any car parked in that position and the activities of any persons near it. Observer B says that, according to A, two men opened the boot of a car and threw in two Thompson sub-machine guns, a rifle and a pistol before getting into the car and driving off. He claims that B said that the back of the car was full of Thompsons. Observer B then telephoned IO1 with this information shortly afterwards. (KO2.6 paragraph 17) As noted above, there is no record of any such contact. In addition, Observer B claims that document 1 of the attached Annex A details the conversation, save that he did not say anything about weapons being distributed from the car. This document is at KO2.9. It is a Security Service document rather than an Army document, even though the report was allegedly made to an Army handler. The details in this document conflict with the allegations in Observer B's statement and, in the most important respect, are to the opposite effect. First and foremost, the suggestion in Document 1 is that the weapons were being distributed from the vehicles rather than loaded into them. This is consistent with the case made by IRA members that they arrived after the event and distributed some weapons for the purposes of a retaliatory attack. This is further supported in the document by the suggestion that B talked to a group of Provisionals who were "very angry with themselves for having left their guns in the pub at Free Derry Corner". The entire object of Observer B's account in his Eversheds statement is to suggest that several men had run from the Rossville Flats after having been involved in shooting from there. While Observer B denies saying anything about distributing weapons from the car, this appears not only in Document 1 but also in Julian's note for file dated 4th February 1972. (KM10.4) Secondly, Document 1 refers to "cars", in the plural, and does not mention a Ford Cortina, which is the only car mentioned in Observer B's Eversheds statement. Observer B clearly appreciated that distribution of weapons after the event was inconsistent with involvement in the event itself so he simply fabricated an account involving civilian gunmen running away from the Flats after the shooting and escaping with their weapons in a getaway car.

13.6.7 In KO2.7 paragraphs 19 to 20, Observer B says that he met Julian on 1st February and told him what A and B had told him the previous day. He said that Document 3 of Annex A (KO2.11) detailed the conversation. Document 3 consists of three lines and the only relevant detail confirms that the report was of weapons "being handed out" rather than loaded into a getaway car. The note for file is the note referred to above (KM10.4), in which the report was of a "distribution" of arms.

13.6.8 In KO 2.7 paragraphs 21 to 22, Observer B claims to have been told by X that when the shooting started the auxiliaries were firing from the balconies and that they stashed their weapons in small rooms off the landings. He claims that he reported this information to IO1. Yet again, needless to say, there is no record of any such contact or report.

13.6.9 In KO2.8.1 paragraph 24 he says that on 22nd February 1972 he reported what he saw to IO1and that paragraphs 2 and 3 of Document 5 (KO2.1.3) record what he observed and reported. We are not certain that this document does in fact record any information supplied by Observer B since paragraph 1 indicates that the "source" was tasked to report on the general attitude of the Catholic population in the aftermath of the Bloody Sunday shootings with a specific brief to discover any material likely to be used at the Widgery Tribunal. This was a brief given to Observer C who, unlike Observer B, was, we are told, resident in Derry. In any event, paragraph 2 consists of speculation about civilian firing based on marks in walls at Glenfada Park. Paragraph 3 refers to a report apparently given to the Observer by an unidentified resident of the Bogside. This resident was reported by the Observer to have given him an account of a shooting which is at odds not only with the civilian evidence but also with the soldiers' evidence. As appears from the sketch map at G123.825.001 and KO2.13 paragraph 4, the report was to the effect that soldiers advanced to the rubble barricade but were pinned down there by firing from the Glenfada Flats, whereupon they returned north along Rossville Street to Glenfada Park North and made their way along the western side of the Glenfada Park North car park.

13.6.10 Documents 2, 4 and 6 were not referred to or explained by Observer B but were simply attached to his statement.

13.6.11 Apart from the fact that none of the documentation supports Observer B's accounts, and some positively contradicts it, none of the alleged sources (A, B, C and X) has been traced by the Tribunal, so there is no independent evidence to support his versions. Indeed, there is no evidence of which we are aware to establish that any of the alleged sources actually existed.

13.6.12 James, now deceased, gave Eversheds a statement in March 1999 purporting to support Observer B. At paragraph 5, he said that "Observer B pinpointed just about everything we knew about Londonderry" (KJ2.1). James said that Observer B could see from the area of the Rossville Flats what was going on throughout the area. The impression was created that he lived in Derry. The truth, as we now know, is that he simply visited Derry from time to time (KM10.3 paragraph 6) and that Observer C was the main source in Derry. (Day 325/119/21 to Day 325/120/3)

13.6.13. James claims in paragraph 6 (KJ2.1) that he remembers Observer B contacting him a few days before Bloody Sunday "although it could have been afterward" and Observer B told him that he had been able to witness drilling by the IRA. However Observer B himself did not suggest that he made any report to James and there is no record of any such report.

13.6.14 The contemporaneous intelligence assessments have to be re-evaluated in the light of the information that Observer C (and not Observer B) was apparently the source of the signal that the IRA would attempt to use the march as cover to mount attacks on Security Forces in revenge for Magilligan. For example, in the Director of Intelligence's intelligence assessment for the week ended 31st January, he said (G.108B.6646 paragraph 7) that from an intelligence point of view the interesting factors were, firstly, a forecast that the IRA would attempt to use the marchers as cover to mount attacks on Security Forces and, secondly, that there were those amongst the organisers who were determined to get revenge for the Magilligan incident the previous Sunday. Now that this appears to have come from Observer C, it is apparent that the Director of Intelligence (to whom James and Julian reported) was completely unaware of any relevant intelligence provided by Observer B about drilling or anything else.

13.6.13 Attached to Julian's third statement were a number of documents beginning at KJ4.9, described variously as notes for file and source sheets, written in the kind of standard form and in the degree of detail that would have been expected of intelligence reports for the Security Service. None of these documents refers to any reports made by Observer B concerning Bloody Sunday. The obvious question is why we have seen no such documents relating to Bloody Sunday. When asked why there were no documents of that kind in relation to Bloody Sunday itself, Julian said "there was a change of, um, reporting procedure". (Day 326/25/3 to Day 326/25/4).

13.7.1 In fairness to James, it should be acknowledged that he had recently suffered a brain haemorrhage and he had found it confusing to try to remember events of some 30 years ago. (KJ2.1 paragraph 10) That might explain why James did not mention Observer C. Julian, on the other hand, has no such excuse. Julian made a second statement on 29th June 2001 and a third on 19th June 2002. In neither of these did he mention Observer C

13.7.2 It was not until Julian's fourth statement dated 21st March 2003 (KJ4.30) that Observer C was mentioned and this was at the request of the Inquiry (KJ4.30 paragraph 1). In paragraph 1 of the statement, Julian says that there were "several" volumes of files relating to Observer C and D. When asked about this during his oral testimony, he said the figure "could be 20" and there were "about 80" documents in each file (Day 326/26/2 to Day 326/26/12) so there may be about 1600 documents relating to Observers C and D (the conduit between him and the Security Service). Although Observer C was the Security Service's main agent in Derry, Julian claimed to have forgotten about him. He said that Observer C suddenly came to him because of the signal document (Day 325/119/6 to Day 325/119/12). When asked exactly what it was about the signal that prompted his recollection, he said: " I cannot tell you exactly what it was" (Day 326/29/9). When pressed, he said "It was the, um, nature of the area covered and kind of information." (Day 326/29/11 to Day 326/29/12). With regard to the area, he accepted that when he made his first three statements he knew the area was Derry so that did not help him remember (Day 326/30/2 to Day 326/30/3). He then said it was "the nature of the reporting." The evidence continued as follows:

"Q. What is the nature of the reporting that helped you?
A. I've told you, it was the march and area.
Q. We all knew it was a march, we all knew it was Derry and you knew it was a march and you knew it was Derry when you made your first three statements.
A. Fine, fine.
Q. And that was it?
A. Yes, that is it". (Day 326/31/5 to Day 326/31/12)

13.7.3 We respectfully invite the Tribunal to reject Julian's evidence that he had forgotten about Observer C. Observer C was the main agent in Derry, whose reporting had been shown to the Home Secretary and the Prime Minister and in the weeks prior to Bloody Sunday he had apparently produced a series of reports about plans for civil unrest and other activities locally. If any of this is true, it is simply not credible that Julian would have forgotten about him but remembered Observer B. It is submitted that neither Julian nor the current Security Service staff wished to disclose the existence of Observer C. The obvious reason is that Observer C was apparently tasked to find out what he could about the events of Bloody Sunday (document K at KJ4.75 and Day 325/111/5 to Day 325/111/25) and he was able to come up with nothing which supported any part of the Army case about what happened on Bloody Sunday (Day 326/4213). This is so even though Julian made contact with Observer C either directly or through Observer D on at least 7, possibly 8, occasions between Bloody Sunday and 19th April 1972 (Day 326/44/14 to Day 326/44/19), viz. 1st February (KJ4.80), 2nd February (KJ4.82), 3rd February (KJ4.83), 17th February (KJ4.88), some time before 29th February (KJ4.90), sometime before 14th March (KJ4.92), sometime before 22nd March (KJ4.94), and sometime before 19th April (KJ4.98). In none of the documents recording those contacts is there any reference to any information concerning the events on Bloody Sunday. (Day 326/44/24 to Day 326/45/2) Nor, specifically, did he mention anything about Martin McGuinness either firing the first shot or at all (Day 326/46/7). Indeed, as discussed in section 4.5, some of the documentation attached to Observer B's statement refers to documents that we now know related to Observer C, so that some of the documents attached to Observer B's statement must have been extracted from a file containing documents expressly referring to Observer C. This makes it all the more difficult to understand how the existence of Observer C was not noticed by the Security Service responsible for supplying these documents to the Tribunal.

13.8 The Signal from David

13.8.1 With regard to the Signal, the first relevant document appears to be document E, a telegram dated 10th January 1972 from David to Julian (KJ4.61). In this telegram, David asked Julian for "anything that you can do to let us know whether a march is intended, its forming up place and route, the intentions of the organisers in the event of Security Forces counter action etc. will be very welcome". It should be noted that David did not seem at all concerned about the risk of IRA action and did not seek any intelligence concerning their intentions. Indeed he stated in the telegram that, according to Special Branch, "the organisations primarily concerned were the James Connolly Republican Club, Derry CRA with which are associated the SRG and kindred soulds (sic) of the lunatic left". There was no reference to either IRA faction.

13.8.2 On 14th January 1972, Julian wrote in a note for the file that D telephoned on 12th January to say that C had visited all the places in Derry where he would be likely to gather information about the proposed march but had gleaned absolutely no information about it at all. (KJ4.65)

13.8.3 In a note for file dated 19th January 1971 (sic) (KJ4.67), Julian reported that Observer D had rung to say that the march which was to have taken place in Derry on 16th January would now definitely take place on 30th January. D said it was being organised by members of the IRA, i.e. Officials, who had attended a meeting to which he had previously referred (in document G (KJ4.65)). This, of course, was contrary to the information provided by Special Branch that it was organised by Derry CRA and other elements of the "lunatic left". It is also contrary to the overwhelming evidence that it was organised by NICRA.

13.8.4 There is no other relevant note or source report pre-dating Bloody Sunday. However, some of the contents of David's signal dated 27th January (KJ4.45) bear an obvious resemblance to the terminology used in a note for file apparently written by James on 31st January 1972 (document J at KJ4.73) and a note for file written by Julian on 31st January 1972 (document I at KJ4.69). These notes are written in a curious form. Document J was written before document I – it is referred to in document I. Written as they were the day after Bloody Sunday, they were not only written with those events in mind but they appear to have come into existence as a result of those events. At the beginning of the note at document J, James explained that at about 9.45 am on 31st January (the date of the note) "David phoned and asked me to pass over, within half an hour, the gist of the intelligence we had given to him verbally during the previous week when Julian was in Northern Ireland and in touch with Observer C" (KJ4.73 paragraph 1). James then claims in the note to have repeated to Brigadier Lewis's staff officer the report that he had given to David. The important part is that a reliable source had allegedly reported on 26th January that "it was believed that the marchers would be armed with stones and bottles and that the IRA would use the crowd as cover for sniping attacks on the security forces".

13.8.5 Surprisingly, there is no source report for this information, which was allegedly provided five days before the note for file was written up. In his Eversheds statement dealing with these notes, Julian said that it was "standard practice" for James and himself to make notes of his meetings with agents but not to write up those meetings until they were in a secure environment. It is difficult to believe that neither James nor Julian was in a secure environment until five days after this meeting. When asked about the whereabouts of the notes of his meetings with Observer C, Julian replied that "they would have been destroyed when they were written up" because "it was absolutely pointless keeping notes when you have written up and produced a the (sic) proper document" (Day 326/46/24 to Day 326/46/25). When asked if all his contemporaneous handwritten notes were destroyed, he replied "absolutely right" (Day 326/47/3). The very first document referred to by Julian in that statement was a handwritten message from James to Observer D (KJ4.33 paragraph 8 and KJ4.50). The next was a 5 page bundle also of Julian's own handwritten contemporaneous notes of a meeting with Observer C (KJ4.34 paragraph 9 and KJ4.52). Therefore, for reasons that have not been satisfactorily explained, we do not have either the contemporaneous hand written notes of any such meeting or a source report of such a meeting. The other note for file written by Julian on the same date (document I) suggests it was Julian who met Observer C at Observer D's house on 26th January. He says: "Apart from the intelligence in the note for file at [document J] he also gave me the following, which was passed by me verbally to David that evening" (paragraph 1). He did not record in this note the suggestion that the IRA would use the crowd as cover for sniping attacks on the Security Forces although he did repeat the suggestion that marchers had made plans for alternative routes and were preparing to use a hooligan element to create diversions. It is unclear why this should be repeated and not the reference to the IRA plans.

13.8.6 The signal from David (KJ4.48) contained elements from both of these notes for file. Even a cursory examination makes it obvious why the officers involved in planning the military operation discounted it as unreliable and inaccurate. In paragraph 1, David says that the information should be regarded as "tentative" since it was believed there was to be a further planning meeting. At paragraph 2 he specified the expected route but it is not the route that was taken and, in any event, the route was common knowledge. Paragraph 3 refers to a "possible" diversion in the Brandywell area (which didn't occur) using "young hooligans whom they would prefer out of the way of the march". Indeed this seems at odds with paragraph 4, in which it is suggested that the marchers would be armed with sticks and stones, an activity that would benefit from the presence of hooligans. Of course, with the exception of Donal Moran and his companions (Day 133/51/1 to Day 133/51/9), the marchers were not armed with sticks and stones. Paragraph 4 also suggested the organisers were determined to have their revenge for Magilligan and were determined to get to the Guildhall "come what may". All of this was wrong.

13.8.7 The part now relied upon by the soldiers is the suggestion in paragraph 4 that the source "expects the IRA to use the crowd as cover". Anyone familiar with the Republican Movement in 1972 would have appreciated first of all that there was no single organisation called the IRA. There were two separate and quite distinct organisations, viz the Official IRA and the Provisional IRA.

The latter had split from the former in acrimonious circumstances. Their relationship was characterised by bitter rivalry and often by violent feuding. A reference to the plans of "the IRA" was therefore meaningless and would tend to indicate a complete lack of understanding of or familiarity with the Republican movement. Put another way, the suggestion that "the IRA would use the crowd as cover" would communicate to an informed listener that the provider of such information not only possessed no reliable information about the intentions of either the Official IRA or the Provisional IRA but was not even sufficiently well informed to express unfounded speculation in a convincing manner. It should also be noted that the suggestion in paragraph 4 of David's signal is that the IRA "will use the crowd as cover" without specifying what they would use the crowd as cover for. This gap was conveniently closed by James by including the key words "for sniping attacks" in the note for file written after the event (document J).

13.8.8 The suggestion that the IRA would use the crowd as cover also appeared in the fourth paragraph of the signal in the second half of the sentence that was concerned firstly with the suggestion that marchers would be armed with sticks and stones. This is hardly the kind of prominence that would have been given to information that was meant to convey intelligence to the effect that soldiers were going to be subjected to gun and bomb attacks during the march. In short, the suggestion about the IRA is no more than a passing reference in a paragraph whose main point seems to be that the organisers were "determined to get to the Guildhall come what may". Considerably more time and space was devoted to (inaccurate) information about the proposed route (paragraph 2), the proposed speakers (paragraph 5), anti-Army propaganda beginning in primary schools (paragraph 6 – a suggestion which "infected" the whole document according to Supt McCullagh: (Day 231/164/13 to Day 231/164/23) and the location of new barricades (paragraph 7).

13.8.9 Taken at its height, the "intelligence" contained in the signal was worthless and, insofar as it contained anything other than common knowledge, self-evidently made up by a jaundiced resident who clearly had an axe to grind.

13.8.10 In the event, the IRA did not use the crowd as cover either for sniping attacks or otherwise. Even on the soldiers' accounts, the so-called drainpipe shot was not fired from the crowd and the subsequent shooting did not take place during the march or at soldiers behind barriers, as the signal implied. In most cases, the soldiers claimed that the shooting came from locations such as the Rossville Flats (including the roof and balconies) and from behind the Rubble Barricade, not "under cover of the crowd".

13.8.11 It is not difficult to see how, after considering the signal on its own merits and balancing it against the wealth of intelligence to the effect that shooting or bomb attacks were unlikely, the Army command discounted it altogether. The truth is that neither the Official IRA nor the Provisional IRA had intended to attack soldiers at or near the march and this was the Army's own assessment. A reference to "detailed and reliable intelligence reports" to the contrary effect was part of the smoke screen of disinformation put up after the event to conceal what really happened and to shift the blame.

13.8.12 Finally, it should not be forgotten that neither Observer B nor Observer C made any statements about any of these matters. Neither has ever given oral testimony or, therefore, had their accounts tested under cross-examination. In our submission, their accounts should be rejected for all the reasons set out above.

14. OPERATION FORECAST

14.1 Introduction & Summary of Submissions

14.1.1 While the concept of the military operation was developed by General Ford, the actual planning process involved General Ford, 8 Brigade, in particular Brigadier MacLellan, and Lt. Col. Wilford, the Commanding Officer of 1 Para.

14.1.2 It is clear, as has been set out in Section 11 that General Ford had a significant influence in developing the concept of military operations and that key aspects of decision-making were in fact removed from 8 Brigade by him. By the time 8 Brigade set about planning for the implementation of Operation Forecast, key decisions had been made: the decision to stop the March; the decision that the Army would police the March; the decision to have an arrest operation; and the decision to use 1 Para as the arrest force. Each of those decisions, in our view contributed to the use of lethal force by 1 Para against unarmed civilians on Bloody Sunday.

14.1.3 It is nonetheless the case that this situation was significantly exacerbated by the planning of Operation Forecast, and in particular the planning of the arrest operation, for which 8 Brigade and 1 Para bear primary responsibility.

14.1.4 General Ford however had a significant involvement in the contents of the Operations Order. It is evident, from the statements prepared by General Ford and Brigadier MacLellan for the Widgery Tribunal, that key aspects of the Operation Order which formed the foundation-stone for planning the operation were effectively drafted by General Ford. B1208.077 paragraph 12 and B1279.015 paragraph 8

14.1.5 The planning and co-ordination of Operation Forecast including: the preparation of the Operation Order; the 1 Para 0arrest plan and the conduct of the Co-ordinating conference are crucial to an understanding of how the planning and control of Operation Forecast was not conducted in such a manner as to "minimise, to the greatest extent possible, recourse to lethal force". McCann v. United Kingdom (1966) 21 EHRR 97

14.1.6 It is our submission that:

i) The planning process for Operation Forecast rendered the launch of the arrest operation virtually inevitable once there was rioting at the Blocking Points. This was primarily because General Ford regarded the March as an 'opportunity' to arrest large numbers of rioters and 8 Brigade imposed no effective controls on the circumstances in which the arrest operation was to be launched.

ii) Completely contrary to the case made by General Ford and senior military officers within 8 Brigade, the concept of separation was never central to the planning of the arrest operation. It is our primary submission that the concept of separation formed no part of the planning process or the concept of operations. Inasmuch as it existed at all prior to the launch of the arrest operation, and that is disputed, it was an afterthought by Brigadier MacLellan on the morning of the march, which he failed to communicate to any of the personnel under his command and control who could have ensured that it was determinative.

iii) 8 Brigade failed to exercise command or control over 1 Para in relation to their planning of the arrest operation. Although the Brigade arrest force, 1 Para operated virtually autonomously in relation to their planning of the arrest operation, without reference to either the Brigadier or Commanding Officers within 8 Brigade.

iv) 8 Brigade failed to ensure that 1 Para were adequately briefed in relation to how the arrest operation should be conducted. 1 Para were not given an adequate briefing in relation to: the geography of the area; locations from where 1 Para could launch an effective arrest operation; how Derry rioters operated; how the general body of marchers would be likely to behave; and, the nature and extent of the risk of attack by the IRA.

v) In the event that it is accepted that: there was a BID 150 and, that 1 Para were given the Order to go in over the secure link, then 1 Para and other units were inadequately briefed in relation to the necessity for maintaining an 'element of surprise' in relation to the launch of the arrest operation.

vi) To like effect the Commanding Officer and senior officers within 1 Para, failed to look for direction from or seek guidance or assistance from within 8 Brigade in relation to their planning of the arrest operation. They operated as if they were autonomous and without reference to 8 Brigade.

vii) Neither General Ford, 8 Brigade or 1 Para engaged in any assessment of the risk of the use of lethal force by soldiers and the consequent risk to unarmed civilians, in the event of an arrest operation being launched. In consequence no consideration was given to taking steps which would have minimised the risk to civilian life.

14.1.7 In terms of where responsibility for these decisions lies it is our contention that responsibility can be apportioned as follows:

i) Failings within the Operation Order which contributed to the:

a) Lack of separation;

b) Rendering the launch of an arrest operation inevitable; lie primarily with General Ford and Brigadier MacLellan and to a lesser extent Lt. Col. Steele.

ii) Failings at the level of the Co-ordinating Conference lie with Brigadier MacLellan, Lt. Col. Steele and Lt. Col. Wilford primarily, but to a lesser extent with the Commanding Officers in 8 Brigade.

iii) Failures in the actual planning of the arrest operation lie with Lt. Col. Wilford and his senior officers but also with 8 Brigade and in particular Brigadier MacLellan.

14.2 Launch of Arrest Operation rendered Inevitable

14.2.1 Brigadier MacLellan in his evidence to Lord Widgery was asked:

"Q. To put it another way . . . was the launching of the arrest operation regarded before this day as began as inevitable? A. No." WT11.8D

14.2.2 It is our submission that this was not the case. The Operation Order provided the framework which determined the circumstances in which the arrest operation ought to be launched, key sections of which had been directed by General Ford. General Ford established a framework which set no meaningful controls on the launch of the arrest operation beyond the requirement that there be rioting at the Blocking Points. Such an approach was entirely consistent with his approach to the Civil Rights March, which was that it was an 'opportunity' to arrest as many rioters as possible.

14.2.3 While it will be submitted that primary responsibility for creating a situation in which the launch of the arrest operation was inevitable in circumstances where there was violence at the Blocking Points rests with General Ford, as Brigadier significant responsibility also rests with Brigadier MacLellan. Significantly, throughout the planning process Brigadier MacLellan failed to take any action to ensure that the arrest operation would only be launched if considered both necessary and appropriate.

Operation Order

14.2.4 Responsibility for the Operation Order as eventually drafted does not lie exclusively with 8 Brigade. Key parts of the Operation Order were in fact 'directed' by General Ford at a meeting held in HQNI on the morning of the 26th January 1972, following which the Operations Order was drafted by Lt. Col. Steele on the 27th January 1972. B1315.003 paragraph 15 The relevant sections of the statement, prepared by General Ford in the lead-up to the Widgery Tribunal state as follows:

"12. During the course of this meeting I gave the following directions verbally to the Brigade Commander:

a. The containment of the Creggan Match would be a Military Operation with the RUC in support, and the military in command at all levels.

d. The event was to be handled in as low a key as possible, and for as long as possible. To this end:-

(1) Troops were to take no action against the Marchers until either an attempt was made to breach the blocking points, or violence erupted, in the form of stone, bottle and nail bomb attacks against the Security Forces.

(3) Ringleaders of the March need not necessarily be arrested on the spot, but should be identified and arrested at a later stage.

(4) If the March took place entirely in the Bogside and Creggan it was to be permitted to continue unchallenged.

(e) Once the blocking points had been emplaced no Marchers were to be allowed to proceed through them, except in cases of genuine emergency.

(f) The hooligan element was not to be permitted to damage Business, Shopping and Protestant areas of Londonderry. To this end I directed that Tactical Headquarters and 3 Companies of the 1st Parachute Regiment should be held centrally behind the blocking points in the William Street area, and if an opportunity arose, launched in a scoop-up operation to arrest as many rioters and hooligans as possible.

(g) Blocking points were to be established as far forward as possible, to keep any violence in the Bogside and Creggan areas, and prevent it from overflowing into the Business and Shopping areas.

(h) The maximum number of soldiers were to be 'in the shop window'. They were to be covered by deployment of Observation Posts and by a very large number of snipers, in the anti-sniper role.

(k) Finally I allocated Commander 8 Brigade the following:

(3) 1 PARA (three companies of which were to be used as a Brigade Arrest Force)."

14.2.5 The orders given by General Ford, are directly reflected in the Operations Order as subsequently drafted by Lt. Col. Steele. In particular:

i) Paragraph 12(a) of his statement is reflected in paragraph 7(a)(1) of Operation Forecast. G95.566 paragraph 7(a)(1)

ii) Paragraph 12(d)(1) of his statement is reflected by paragraph 7(b)(1)(a & b) of Operation Forecast. G95.566 paragraph 7(b)(1)(a) and G95.566 paragraph 7(b)(1)(a)

iii) Paragraph 12(d)(2) of his statement is reflected in paragraph

iv) Paragraph 12(d)(3) of his statement is reflected in paragraph 7(b)(2) of Operation Forecast. G95.567 paragraph 7(b)(2)

v) Paragraph 12(d)(4) of his statement is reflected in paragraph 7(b)(4) of Operation Forecast. G95.567 paragraph 7(b)(4)

vi) Paragraph 12(e) of his statement is reflected in paragraph 7(b)(3) and 7(c) of Operation Forecast. G95.567 paragraph 7(b)(3) and G95.568 paragraph 7(c)

vii) Paragraph 12(f) of his statement is reflected in paragraph 7(e) of Operation Forecast. G95.568 paragraph 7(e) viii) Paragraph 12(g) of his statement is reflected in paragraph 7(h) of Operation Forecast. G95.568 paragraph 7(h)

ix) Paragraph 12(h) of his statement is reflected in paragraph 7(i) of Operation Forecast. G95.568 paragraph 7(i)

x) Paragraph 12(k)(3) of his statement is reflected in paragraph 9(f) of Operation Forecast. G95.570 paragraph 9(f)

14.2.6 The sections of Operation Forecast directed by General Ford created the conditions whereby the launch of the arrest operation was virtually inevitable. We say this specifically with reference to paragraph 12(f) of his statement which is reflected in paragraph 7(e) of Operation Forecast. G95.568 paragraph 7(e)

14.2.7 General Ford's statement states:

> " . . . Tactical Headquarters and 3 Companies of the 1st Parachute Regiment should be held centrally behind the blocking points in the William Street area, and if an opportunity arose, launched in a scoop-up operation to arrest as many rioters and hooligans as possible." B1208.078 paragraph 12(f)

14.2.8 While the relevant section of Operation Forecast states:

> "e. Hooliganism. Although NICRA claim that this march is a non-violent protest, the organisers will have no control over the hooligans who will ensure that violence is inevitable. The deployment of troops is to take account of this situation. An arrest force is to be held centrally behind the check points, and launched in a scoop-up operation to arrest as many hooligans and rioters as possible." G95.568 paragraph 7(e)

14.2.9 It has been the consistent evidence of both Brigadier MacLellan and General Ford that they regarded rioting at the Barriers as inevitable. In his Supplementary Statement prepared for the Widgery Inquiry Brigadier MacLellan stated:

> ". . . it was thought unlikely that the stewards of the Northern Ireland Civil Rights Association March would be able to exercise any control over the hooligan element, and I personally thought it almost inevitable that the hooligans would be present in force. . ." B1232 paragraph 18 (See also Lt. Col. Steele Day 266/87/23 to Day 266/88/6)

14.2.10 While in his statement to this Tribunal General Ford stated:

"Previous experience of the DYH, the opinions of those based in Londonderry and indeed common sense all lead to the conclusion that, whatever the intentions of the organisers, the NICRA march would be used as a cover and excuse for prolonged and violent rioting. . . ." B1208.029 paragraph 4.11 (See also B1141 paragraph 7, B1208.075 paragraph 7) 14.2.11 This was also view of the Commanding Officers within 8 Brigade. By way of example, INQ 598 stated:

"there was a general expectation that rioting would take place, specifically at the point where the march was to be diverted away from the commercial centre of the City." C598.3 paragraph 14

14.2.12 A reading of General Ford's statement at B1208.078 paragraph 12(f) does not suggest any that there were any qualifications limiting the circumstances in which the arrest operation would be launched, rather it was a question of mounting the arrest operation if the "opportunity arose". A clear theme running through the evidence of General Ford is that the Civil Rights March presented precisely the "opportunity" needed to arrest large numbers of hooligans and in our submission the reference to "opportunity" should be read in that context.

14.2.13 As Lt. Col. Steele said in his statement to this Tribunal:

"Brigadier MacLellan's plan was to observe the march and contain it. I recall the CLF expressing a view at the meeting that this was an opportunity to arrest any hooligan element. Brigadier MacLellan and I expected there to be hooligans present, and that therefore there would be violence. Accordingly, the CLF said that if the hooligans were going to be there he would allot 1 Para to carry out an arrest operation and the CLF thought that this would be a chance for a major scoop up operation." B1315.003 paragraph 14

14.2.14 Some weight has been attached by senior military figures to the section of the Operations Order wherein it states:

> "The Security Forces are to take no action against the Marches until either:
> (a) An attempt is made to breach the blocking points.
> (b) Violence against the Security Forces, in the form of stone, bottle and nail bombing takes place." 101 G Ops dated 27 January 1972 at G95.567 paragraph 7(b)(1)

14.2.15 However, it is clear from: General Ford's statement; the Operations Order as drafted; and the evidence of Brigadier MacLellan's to Lord Widgery that what was being dealt with at this point in the Operations Order was the issue of taking against the Marchers. General Ford's statement makes specific reference to "action against the Marchers". B1208.077 paragraph 12(d)(1) This entire section of the Operations Order is entitled the "Dispersal of the Marches" G95.567 while "Hooliganism" is a separate topic under which heading the plan involving an arrest force is dealt with. G95.568 paragraph 7(e) In the course of his oral testimony to Lord Widgery, Brigadier MacLellan was asked whether the reference to the arrest of ringleaders contained in Operation Forecast at G95.567 paragraph 7(b)(2), was a reference to marchers, rather than rioters and he confirmed that this was the case. WT11.9 A

14.2.16 It is thus our submission that the plan as conceived by General Ford, was one in which it was only if there was no rioting at the Barriers that an arrest operation would not be launched. This is evident from his explanation of the rationale which underlay the inclusion of an arrest operation in Operation Forecast, in his supplementary statement to the Widgery Inquiry:

> "An arrest operation had been part of our contingency plans on all possible occasions. I have already described the damage that the hooligan element was doing to the William Street area.

We normally have insufficient troops in Londonderry to launch a major arrest operation. Secondly, it is difficult to achieve surprise. Thirdly, on an average afternoon only 20 to 50 of the hooligans operate.

I anticipated that the hooligans would turn out in something approaching their full strength on this occasion. One of my anxieties was that after the inevitable emotional speeches the hooligans would be reinforced by a thousand or more marchers and would bear down on Waterloo Place with the aim of swamping our troops and causing extensive damage to the shopping centre. Such a major riot would have been difficult to counter. It was for this reason that I moved up the 1 Kings Own Border Regiment as an additional reserve. I foresaw that if such an event happened the level of violence would be very high for anything up to three days after the march.

On the other hand, if an opportunity did occur before the end of the rally when the hooligans were separated from the main crowd and we could have arrest a large number of them, I hoped by this means we would have prevented a major escalation of violence later that evening." B1152 paragraph 18

14.2.17 General Ford regarded the March as an opportunity to deal with the rioters and given the view of the local security forces both police and army, that stopping the March from reaching the Guildhall would inevitably provoke rioting, the elements of the Operations Order directed by General Ford were designed to ensure that an arrest operation was inevitable.

14.2.18 Nonetheless, while the Operations Order as directed by General Ford, does not impose limitations as to the circumstances in which the arrest operation should be launched Brigadier MacLellan did in fact qualify the inevitability of the launch of the arrest operation, by reserving for himself the discretion as to whether to launch an arrest operation "in whole, or in part". G95.570 paragraph 9(f)(1)(a) It could therefore be argued that despite the strictures placed by General Ford on the conduct of Operation

Forecast, Brigadier MacLellan did not regard the launch of the arrest operation as inevitable.

14.2.19 Whatever Brigadier MacLellan's views General Ford undoubtedly regarded the launch of the arrest operation as inevitable. It will be submitted in Section 15 that the fact that he did so was key to his decision to put pressure on Brigadier MacLellan to launch the arrest operation. If the arrest operation was launched on the orders of Brigadier MacLellan, which is disputed, it was the pressure from General Ford, coupled with the pressure from 1 Para, rather than any determination that separation had occurred, that resulted in the decision by Brigadier MacLellan to launch the arrest operation when he did.

14.2.20 In any event, given the framework established by General Ford, any limitation on the circumstances in which the arrest operation would be launched had to be imposed by Brigadier MacLellan through the planning process. It will be our contention that:

i) Contrary to the evidence given to this Tribunal, separation was not key to the launch of the arrest operation; and

ii) Brigadier MacLellan failed to exercise any command and control over 1 Para in their conduct of the arrest operation.

Consequently, despite retaining for himself the decision as to whether to launch the arrest operation, "in whole or in part", Brigadier MacLellan failed to take steps to ensure that the arrest operation would only be launched if in the circumstances it was wholly appropriate.

14.3 Separation

14.3.1 According to the evidence of Brigadier MacLellan and Lt. Col. Steele separation of rioters from non-violent marchers was key to the launch of the arrest operation. In the absence of separation it would not have been launched. As Brigadier MacLellan stated in his evidence to Lord Widgery:

"Q. To put it another way . . . was the launching of the arrest operation regarded before this day as began as inevitable? A. No.

Q. Would it have been launched at all unless the main body of peaceable marchers was well separated from the rioters? A. No sir." WT11.8D

14.3.2 It is our submission that the issue of separation, if it formed any part of the thinking within 8 Brigade, was little more than an afterthought. It has been elevated to a condition precedent purely as a means of seeking to minimise the responsibility of Brigadier MacLellan for sending soldiers into the Bogside who engaged in the unjustified and unlawful use of lethal force, resulting in the death of unarmed civilians.

14.3.3 It is proposed to look at the planning process from the Operation Order through to the decision that Col. Welsh would act as an observer in the helicopter in order to demonstrate that separation never formed part of the concept of operations at the planning stage.

Operation Order

14.3.4 To some extent it flows from the fact that the arrest operation was almost inevitable that the concept of separation, upon which so much reliance is placed, did not form a key part of the planning of the arrest plan at the stage at which the Operation Order was drafted.

14.3.5 That said, given that General Ford had only directed some elements of the arrest operation, Brigadier MacLellan could have inserted into the Operation Order a section which made the launch of the arrest operation dependent upon there being separation between the rioters and the non-violent marchers.

14.3.6 At the outset it should be observed that the very fact that it was envisaged within the Operations Order that ringleaders of the March could be arrested, demonstrates that the separation of marchers from rioters formed no part of the thinking of either General Ford or Brigadier MacLellan at that stage. G95.567 paragraph 7(b)(2), WT11.9A

14.3.7 There is no reference in the directions given by General Ford for the need to separate rioters from non-violent marchers before the launch of the arrest operation. Nor is there any reference in the Operations Order itself to separation and no indication in any section of the Order that the concept of separation formed part of the planning.

14.3.8 In justifying the absence of any reference to separation Brigadier MacLellan places heavy reliance on the fact that in drafting the arrest plan he had reserved for himself the discretion as to whether to launch an arrest operation "in whole, or in part" 101 G Ops dated 27 January 1972 at G95.570 paragraph 9(f)(1)(a) :

> " . . . one thing that strikes the reader is that both in the operation order itself and in these notes for the co-ordinating conference, there is no reference to separation; do you know why that is?
> A. Yes, I do. The point is that this operation order was to other people. I had reserved the right to myself to give -- that no moves were to be made until I have the order for the arrest operation to take place.
> So as separation was my decision it would have been giving orders to myself, so to speak." Day 261/75/1 to Day 261/75/11

14.3.9 According to Lt. Col. Steele, there was no need to refer to separation in the Operations Order because the co-ordinating conference was the correct place to discuss it. B1315.006 paragraph 30

14.3.10 It is our submission that if separation was in fact part of the planning at that stage then it was vital that it be included in the Operations Order. According to the evidence of Brigadier MacLellan, the sole method whereby he was going to determine the issue of separation was by reference to Col. Welsh's reports from the helicopter:

"Q. . . . what information was going to be available to you in Ebrington Barracks to decide whether there was separation between rioters and marchers. You would have had verbal reports from the helicopter?

A. Correct.

Q. We can see from the transcript of the Ulsternet that you had reports from a number of units, but predominantly the 22nd Light Air Defence Regiment; they were 90 Alpha?

A. The helicopter is the one I was really listening to you. That was painting the picture for me.

Q. Shall we understand from that it was the helicopter upon which you were principally reliant rather than reports from the ground?

A. They were complimentary, but principally, yes." Day 262/14/19 to Day 262/15/19

14.3.11 Given that this was the case, as Lt. Col. Steele conceded in oral evidence, the issue of reporting on the march and making a determination on the issue of separation was also a very important part of the orders for the day for Col. Welsh. Day 268/84/16 to Day 268/84/23 Yet there is no reference in the Operation Order to any order, either to Col. Welsh, or to the role and function of the helicopter in the Operation Order.

14.3.12 There is a reference in paragraph 9(f)(1)(j) of the Operations Order G95.570 paragraph 9(f)(1)(j) to a helicopter, but as Lt. Col. Steele acknowledged that aspect of the order does not address the issue of separation because:

"That is a different helicopter, as you appreciate. The helicopter in which Colonel Welsh was travelling was, you are quite right, an afterthought, in that it was, it was arranged at the co-ordinating conference the day after this order was written."

Day 268/86/4 to Day 268/86/8 [1]

14.3.13 If the decision to use a helicopter to determine separation was, as Lt. Col. Steele conceded an afterthought, and separation had actually been part of the thinking of Brigadier MacLellan at the stage of the Operation Order, one would have expected references to the need to determine separation in the orders given to other soldiers. Evidence has been given that the soldiers in the best position to determine separation would have been those positioned on the City Walls. CJ2.5 paragraph 23 Yet, despite the fact that the Operations Order provides for the domination of the Containment Line and the area within it by Observation Posts, G95.567 paragraph 7(j) no provision was made for the soldiers on the Walls, in the Observation Posts, or at the Barriers to provide Brigadier MacLellan with information about separation. In consequence, the question of how to determine separation had not been addressed in the Operations Order.

14.3.14 It is also evident that if separation had been an issue at that stage, 1 Para, the Brigade Arrest Force, should have been alive to the issue of separation. It was of crucial importance that 1 Para understood the importance of this issue, as it impacted, not only on their understanding of when the arrest operation would be launched, but also how the arrest operation was to be conducted. Knowledge of the issue of separation would impact directly on the tactics used by 1 Para and would have influenced decisions made by them, for example in relation to the use of vehicles. Yet, there is nothing in the section of the Operation Order dealing with the arrest operation about separation and nothing to alert the Brigade Arrest Force to the fact that separation was key to the launch of the arrest operation. G95.567 paragraph 9(f)

[1] It should be noted at this juncture that it is not accepted that the decision that Col. Welsh should go up in the helicopter was made at the Co-ordinating Conference. Rather it will be our submission that this decision was made on the morning of the Civil Rights March, and that determining separation was not the role and function of Col. Welsh, as per the statement of Col. Welsh. B1334 paragraph 2

14.3.15 In our submission, if separation had been an issue at this stage in the planning process it would have been clearly and unambiguously provided for in the Operations Order, its absence demonstrates that, at that stage in the planning process the concept of separation was not a feature. The absence of any orders in the Operations Order meant that it was vital that this matter be addressed at the Co-ordinating Conference.

8 Brigade Order Group Conference

14.3.16 The 8 Brigade Order Group Conference was held on the 28th January 1972 at 14.30 hours. Attending the Order Group Conference were the Brigadier and his Brigade Major, the Commanding Officers of the various Battalions based in Derry as well as Lt. Col. Wilford. CJ2.7 paragraph 34 It also appears that it was attended by Col GSO1 Ops, INQ 1877 B1122.11 paragraph 60 from HQNI and may have been attended by GSO3 INQ1803 Day 285/25/4 to Day 285/25/10 as well as Inspector Lagan.

14.3.17 The Order Group Conference was the forum whereby the planning for Operation Forecast was co-ordinated between the various Battalions and was held for "the purpose of dealing with all of those matters which involved the interrelationships of different battalions". Day 268/22/6 to Day 268/22/8, B1279.034 paragraph 41

14.3.18 As set out above the absence of any orders in the Operations Order meant that it was vital, if this was a condition precedent to the launch of the arrest operation, that this matter be dealt with in some detail at the Co-ordinating Conference. In particular it was vital that:

i) It be decided how the issue of separation was to be determined; and,

ii) Lt. Col. Wilford should be briefed about the concept of separation, so that he understood both the circumstances in which the arrest operation would be launched and how it ought to be conducted.

14.3.19 Brigadier MacLellan's Notes for the Co-ordinating Conference appear to have been prepared by Lt. Col. Steele.[2] According to Brigadier MacLellan the notes were designed as an aide-memoire to "see that I did not miss anything critical out". Day 261/22 to Day 262/24 Yet there is no mention in these notes of the issue of separation, which on Brigadier MacLellan's evidence was critical to the decision to launch the arrest operation. G88.537-G88.538

14.3.20 No convincing explanation has been advanced for the failure to include separation as a topic for discussion on the Notes of the Co-ordinating Conference. Brigadier MacLellan advances the same argument as that advanced in respect of the Operations Order. Because he had reserved for himself the option of launching the arrest operation "in whole or in part" it meant that "separation was my decision it would have been giving orders to myself, so to speak." Day 261/75/1 to Day 261/75/11

14.3.21 However for the reasons we have set out above, separation necessitated, at the absolute minimum communicating orders to Col. Welsh and Lt. Col. Wilford, and should have been understood by everyone at the Co-ordinating Conference.

14.3.22 Lt. Col. Steele, likewise offers no real explanation for the failure to mention separation in the Notes of the Co-ordinating Conference except to say that "for all I know this was an item that he brought up in his own mind and thought that it ought to be aired after the notes had been prepared." Day 266/83/6 to Day 266/83/18 Again this comment makes it clear that separation was certainly not part of the thinking at the time the Operations Order was drafted.

14.3.23 Nonetheless the Tribunal has been invited by Lt. Col. Steele to accept that separation was discussed at the Co-ordinating Conference. Day 266/83/19 to Day 266/84/2

14.3.24 There is some evidence that suggests that separation may have been discussed at the Co-ordinating Conference. It is our submission that the military evidence from the personnel who attended the Co-ordinating Conference suggests that separation was not mentioned, and that in the event that it was, the military evidence taken at its height suggests that it merely received a brief mention and there was no actual discussion of the topic. Specifically it is submitted as follows:

i) Separation was not in Brigadier MacLellan's Notes for the Co-ordinating Conference because it was not one of the critical issues to be addressed at the Conference.

ii) Contrary to the evidence of Lt. Col. Steele the method whereby separation would be determined was not discussed. In particular, and contrary to Lt. Col. Steele's evidence, Col. Welsh was not ordered at the Co-ordinating Conference to monitor separation from a helicopter and report back to the Brigadier.

iii) Inasmuch as separation was discussed at the Co-ordinating conference it was mentioned as a Standing Operation Procedure, as per the evidence of Col. Jackson.

14.3.25 The height of the military evidence about the discussion of separation at the Co-ordinating Conference comes from Lt. Col. Steele. It is our submission that his evidence on this issue should not be accepted by this Tribunal. According to Lt. Col. Steele:

> "The issue of the separation of the marchers and the rioters was not spelt out in the Operation Order, but it did come up at the co-ordinating conference. This would be the right place to discuss it: the purpose of the co-ordinating conference was to tie up the details of the operation. I remember that Brigadier MacLellan told Lieutenant Colonel Welsh that monitoring the march from the helicopter was to be his specific role, and that he was to report on the progress of the march and to ensure that Brigadier MacLellan knew when separation of the marchers and the rioters had occurred. Brigadier MacLellan made it clear at the co-ordinating conference, in front of all the commanding officers (including Lieutenant Colonel Wilford of 1 PARA) that he would not mount the arrest operation until separation had occurred. It was an indication of the importance that Brigadier MacLellan attached to the issue of separation that he asked such a senior officer to do the monitoring job in the helicopter. He needed somebody he could trust absolutely." B1315.006 paragraph 30

14.3.26 Lt. Col. Steele claims to have a very clear recollection of the discussion of separation at the co-ordinating conference. Day 266/83/19 to Day 266/84/2 His evidence is that separation was discussed in the specific context of Col. Welsh being told "that monitoring the march from the helicopter was to be his specific role, and that he was to report on the progress of the march and to ensure that Brigadier MacLellan knew when separation of the marchers and the rioters had occurred." B1315.006 paragraph 30

14.3.27 Brigadier MacLellan deals with the Co-ordinating Conference in his statement to this Tribunal and makes no reference to the fact that separation was discussed. What he states is that "I do recall stressing that the aim was to use the minimum force necessary." B1279.034 paragraph 41

14.3.28 In his oral evidence to this Tribunal Brigadier MacLellan stated that he was "pretty certain, I am almost sure that I talked about separation and that on no account were people to get mixed up with the marchers and so on." Day 261/22 to Day 261/24

14.3.29 However, there is a significant difference between the evidence given to this Tribunal on the issue of separation as a topic at the Co-ordinating Conference, and the evidence given to the Widgery Tribunal in 1972.

14.3.30 While Lt. Col. Steele did not address this issue directly in 1972, it is nonetheless noteworthy that the central importance placed by Lt. Col. Steele on the need for separation is not reflected in the evidence given by him to Lord Widgery. WT16.78E to 16.79D From that evidence it was clear that in the conduct of an arrest operation Lt. Col. Steele would "expect a person to be arrested who is simply standing in an open space or, for that matter, running away, in the absence of a positive identification that he was one of the people who had been hurling stones". WT16.79B – D This evidence is impossible to square with the rationale which underlies separation, the need to ensure that non-violent marchers would not be caught up in the arrest operation. Lt. Col. Steele's evidence in 1972 undermines entirely his evidence to this Tribunal, as to the central importance given by 8 Brigade to the concept of separation.

14.3.31 Even more significant, is the evidence which Brigadier MacLellan gave 1972. In a statement made for the Widgery Tribunal Brigadier MacLellan stated that:

> "At this coordinating conference I made a particular point of stressing that the event was to be handled in the lowest possible key, that CS gas was only to be used when in imminent danger of being over-run, and the necessity for using minimum force." B1232 paragraph 15 (See also WT11.11 B)

14.3.32 He goes on to state that the "only additional instruction that I gave, on the morning of the 30th January, was that Lieutenant Colonel P M Welsh AC, the Commanding Officer of 2 RGJ, should observe and report on the event from a Sioux helicopter." B1232 paragraph 17

14.3.33 Col. Welsh the officer apparently charged with determining separation, also gave evidence about this matter in 1972. According to the statement prepared by him for the Widgery Tribunal it was only on the morning of the 30 January that he heard that a helicopter was to fly an observer over the march and his "task was to report on progress of the march". B1334

14.3.34 Col. Welsh's testimony is of course, on the question of timing, totally in line with the evidence given by Brigadier MacLellan in 1972. B1232 paragraph 17

14.3.35 Finally, Lt. Col. Wilford, the Commanding Officer of 1 Para, did make reference in the statement he prepared for Lord Widgery to the issue of separation, wherein he states:

> "I called Brigade and told them that now was the time to make arrests but I did not get the order to go until some ten minutes later. The delay was to allow the main uncommitted crowd to get clear." B950 paragraph 14

14.3.36 However, there is no reference in either his statement or his oral evidence in 1972 to that matter having been raised at the Co-ordinating Conference. Moreover his Orders to 1 Para after the Co-ordinating Conference make no reference to the issue of separation, suggesting that it had not been communicated to him as key to the launch of the arrest operation. His mission was "to arrest as many rioters as possible". B945 paragraph 5(a)

14.3.37 Thus in 1972, Brigadier MacLellan and Col. Welsh gave evidence that the decision that Col. Welsh would act as an observer from a helicopter was made on the morning of the March. Evidence which flatly contradicts the evidence of Lt. Col. Steele to this Tribunal. Moreover, even the evidence given by Lt. Col. Steele in 1972 tends to undermine his elevation of the issue of separation to an issue of such key importance.

14.3.38 It is arguable that Lt. Col. Steele receives some level of corroboration from the evidence given to this Tribunal by Col. Jackson and Col. Ferguson. His evidence is by way of contrast, significantly undermined by the evidence of Col. Welsh and the evidence Lt. Col. Wilford. In relation to the evidence which tends to corroborate Lt. Col. Steele, neither the evidence of Cols. Jackson or Ferguson corroborates Lt. Col. Steele on the question of whether there was discussion, and a decision, as to how separation was to be determined.

14.3.39 Col. Jackson gave evidence that he believed that separation was discussed Day 286/80/9 to Day286/80/20 because "this was an SOP for anything to try and arrest the hooligan elements, there had to be separation from the main marchers." Day 286/81/17 to Day 286/81/19 However while he did accept on Day 286 that he believed that separation was discussed, that assertion must be qualified by the fact that what he stated at the outset of his oral testimony on this issue was quite different:

"Q. Do you recall there being a discussion at the co-ordinating conference about whether it was necessary for there to be separation between the marchers and the hooligans before any arrest operation was launched?

A. There always had to be separation before we did anything at all with hooligans. . . . we always had to ensure that separation occurred before we tried snatching hooligans.

I mean it was normal procedure. At free Derry Corner they used to speak, and there used to be separation between Free Derry Corner and Aggro Corner. . .

Q. Do you recall it being discussed at the co-ordinating conference?

A. Not particularly. It was a normal SOP, it was a normal procedure." Day 285/40/20 to Day 285/41/14

14.3.40 Even if it is accepted that Col. Jackson's evidence does lend support to Lt. Col. Steele's evidence that separation was discussed there is a significant difference in their evidence with regard to the nature and extent to which separation was discussed. Lt. Col. Steele is clear that the method whereby separation would be determined was discussed and was the subject matter of a specific order to Col. Welsh. Col. Jackson regards separation as something inevitably mentioned because it was a Standing Operation Procedure, he gives no indication that there was any detailed discussion on the topic or that orders were given to anyone about how separation was determined.

14.3.41 Col. Jackson accepted that the issue of separation was discussed because it was Standing Operation Procedure. In his first supplementary statement he said that "the actual arrest operation needed careful planning in that (all agreed) there had to be separation between the hooligan element and the marchers "on their way home". CJ2.37 paragraph 6 He gave no evidence to suggest that it had been agreed at the Co-ordinating Conference that Col. Welsh was to act as observer from the helicopter. Had this occurred, it seems inevitable that he would have given evidence about that matter given his view that:

> "The use of a helicopter over the Bogside to give third party information to the Commander in Ebrington Barracks on which he had to make the important decision was unsound. The Commander should have been on the Walls of the City and "involved" with the action." CJ2.38 paragraph 6

14.3.42 Given the conflict between what Col. Jackson stated at Day 285/40/20 to Day 285/41/14, and what he went on to state at Day 286/80/9 to Day 286/80/20, there must be a question-mark as to whether he has an independent recollection that separation was discussed. Even if his later account is accepted, his evidence amounts to no more than that there was an understanding that separation should take place, it does not suggest that any decision was made as to how separation should be determined. In fact it is our submission that his evidence is to the contrary effect, there was no real discussion. Given his stated opposition to the use of the helicopter as a means of determining separation, had an order been given to Col. Welsh this is a matter which he would have remembered. It is noteworthy in this respect that Mr. Glasgow QC who questioned Col. Jackson, on behalf of Lt. Col. Steele among others, never put it to Col. Jackson that Col. Welsh had been ordered at the Co-ordinating Conference to determine separation from a helicopter.

14.3.43 Col. Ferguson took the view that the reference in notes made by him, preparatory to conducting his own briefing of his company commanders and battery commanders to "isolate-hooligans", could possibly have arisen from something he heard at the co-ordinating conference, albeit that he had no recollection of any discussions about separation. Day 281/94/4 to Day 281/96/6 Given that Col. Jackson was of the view that this was Standing Operation Procedure within 8 Brigade, and that Col. Ferguson had considered the launch of an arrest operation at the Barriers, Day 281/100/18 to Day 281/101/9 it is equally possible that "isolate-hooligans" was a reference to the arrest operation he intended to launch, rather than a reflection on anything which had occurred at the Co-ordinating Conference.

14.3.44 Moreover Lt. Col. Steele's evidence was that there had been "a very wide discussion about separation and there was discussion about the arrest operation." Day 268/22/24 to Day 268/23/2 Evidence which contrasts sharply with the evidence of Col. Ferguson:

> "My previous experience of these occasions in other theatres was that there would sometimes be quite long discussions about details of the operation, but it became clear to me that on this occasion this was not going to happen." B1122.12 paragraph 64

14.3.45 Even if the reference to "isolate-hooligans" is in fact a reference to separation, which Col. Ferguson accepts as a possibility, it does not support Lt. Col. Steele's evidence that Col. Welsh had been ordered to make the determination on separation from the helicopter.

14.4.46 However the evidence of Lt. Col. Steele is considerably undermined by the evidence of Col. Welsh to this Tribunal. Col. Welsh was the person apparently ordered to monitor the issue of separation, it was his only role and function on the day, and according to Lt. Col. Steele he was selected because of his seniority and the importance of the function. B1315.006 paragraph 30

14.4.47 In those circumstances one would have expected Col. Welsh's evidence in 1972 to have confirmed that it was at the Co-ordinating Conference that he was ordered to determine separation. As has already been noted his evidence in 1972 was that the decision to go up in the helicopter was his and that decision was made on the morning of the 30th January.

14.4.48 In his statement to this Tribunal he stated:

> "I think it was at this conference that I was asked to act as an observer in a helicopter. Having looked at the statement that I gave at the time and my evidence to the Widgery Tribunal I can see that I volunteered, but when I look back my memory is that I was asked by the Brigade Commander. I cannot however be sure which is correct. I cannot now recall any discussions with the Brigade Commander prior to undertaking my role as observer." B1340.002 paragraph 13

14.4.49 Col. Welsh was referred, during the course of his evidence to this Inquiry to Brigadier MacLellan's notes made in advance of the Co-ordinating Conference at G88.537 and was asked:

> "There are no details there of the circumstance is which any arrest operation is to be launched. Do you recall there being a discussion at the co-ordinating conference about the circumstances in which the operation should be launched?
> A. I do not think so." Day 282/21/7 to Day 282/21/12

14.4.50 When questioned about the conflict in his evidence he stated that he "would believe what I said in 1972." Day 282/22/7

14.4.51 Finally, the evidence of Lt. Col. Wilford, to whom as Commanding Officer of the Brigade Arrest Force, it was of central importance that he understood the importance of separation. He was asked about the matter in his evidence to this Tribunal:

"Q. Were you aware that Brigadier MacLellan attached importance to there being a clear separation between rioters and marchers so that any arrest force would engage with rioters and not peaceful civilians?

A. No, but it seems – it seems a reasonable thing.

Q. But you were not aware that that was a matter to which he attached importance?

A. I do not recall that I was." Day 312/59//6 to Day 312/59/13

14.3.52 This account is entirely consistent with Lt. Col. Wilford's approach to the arrest operation. As was pointed out to Lt. Col. Steele, nowhere in the signals coming from 1 Para to Brigade Headquarters; nowhere in Lt. Col. Wilford's orders; and nowhere in his statements "does he ever indicate that separation was something which was vital to the launch of the operation in which he was engaged". Day 268/29/16 to Day 268/31/18

14.3.53 A number of other factors tend to suggest that, as per our submission, separation was not discussed at the Co-ordinating Conference:

i) The fact that no consideration appears to have been given to ordering units on the City Walls or on the ECHO Observation Posts to assist in the determination of separation on Bloody Sunday.

ii) The fact that in his evidence both to the Widgery Inquiry and to this Inquiry Col. Welsh makes clear that he did not know the details of the orders given to 1 Para or where the arrest operation was likely to be launched, making it impossible for him, in fact, to determine whether separation had taken place. Day 282/26/2 to Day 282/27/15 and Day 282/53/13 to Day 282/53/21

iii) The fact that, as will be dealt with in more detail below, 1 Para's arrest plan was not discussed in detail or at all at the Co-ordinating Conference, which would have been necessary of anybody was to be in a position to assist the Brigadier in making his determination about separation from his location at Ebrington Barracks.

14.3.54 It is our submission that when he gave evidence to this Tribunal that he had a clear recollection that there was "a very wide discussion about separation and there was discussion about the arrest operation" he was lying. Day 268/22/24 to Day 268/23/2

14.3.55 Even, if it is accepted by this Tribunal that Brigadier MacLellan did, on the morning of Bloody Sunday, ask Col. Welsh to determine whether separation had taken place from his position as an observer in the helicopter, the failure to deal with separation at the Co-ordinating Conference meant that, in reality such an exercise was meaningless, for the following reasons:

i) Soldiers positioned on the City Walls were not ordered to assist in the determination of separation, depriving Brigadier MacLellan of vital information from a location which, in the opinion of Col. Jackson, the longest serving Commanding Officer in Derry, was the best vantage point from which to determine separation. CJ2.38 paragraph 6

ii) Soldiers positioned on Observation Posts at the Embassy Ballroom were not ordered to assist in the determination of separation, depriving Brigadier MacLellan of vital information, in circumstances where Col. Welsh considered that separation could be more easily determined from the Embassy Ballroom than from the helicopter. Day 282/75/3 to Day 282/75/10

iii) A method of determining separation was chosen which was at best unreliable, the exercise being conducted by someone who acknowledged that he was not a trained observer. B1340.003 paragraph 17 Day 283/3/11 to Day 283/3/25

iv) Col. Welsh was deprived of vital information to assist in his determination of the issue of separation, namely the likely location of the 1 Para arrest operation. WT10.55A

v) Lt. Col. Wilford was not provided with vital information in relation to the circumstances in which the arrest operation were to be launched which would also impact upon decisions as to how the arrest operation was to be conducted, in particular with regard to the decision to use vehicles, which would inevitably destroy such separation as existed.

14.3.56 Separation has become, for senior military witnesses, and in particular for Brigadier MacLellan, General Ford and Lt. Col. Steele, the key to their defence for the decision to put 1 Para into the Bogside on Bloody Sunday. There has however since 1972 been a recognition that, if this defence was to have any substance separation of necessity must have been discussed at the Co-ordinating Conference, any later and it could have no meaningful effect on the outcome of the day. In order to maintain the fiction developed in 1972, Lt. Col. Steele has had to perjure himself about the nature and extent of the discussion of separation, if there was one, at the Brigade Order Group Conference on the 28th January 1972. That Lt. Col. Steele, Major General Steele as he now is, should engage in perjury in order to defend, not himself, but his former Brigadier, is a classic demonstration of how all-pervasive the army culture of closing ranks is. It moreover demonstrates the willingness, even now, of soldiers at the highest levels within the British Army to lie in order to prevent the truth about Bloody Sunday from being established.

1 Para Arrest Plan

14.3.57 It should be noted at the outset that, given our submissions above, to the effect that separation was not discussed at the Co-ordinating Conference and was not therefore communicated to Lt. Col. Wilford, it is somewhat inevitable that the concept would not make its way onto Lt. Col. Wilford's orders to 1 Para.

14.3.58 The evidence in relation to Lt. Col. Wilford's orders therefore, reinforces our submission that the evidence given in 1972 about this issue, completely undermines the suggestion made by Lt. Col. Steele that separation was discussed at the Co-ordinating Conference.

14.3.59 Lt. Col. Wilford did not give written Orders to 1 Para, WT11.38D he simply gave verbal Orders in respect of which the notes have been retained. G94.562 – G94.563

14.3.60 As with all the documentary evidence relevant to the planning stage of Operation Forecast, nothing in the notes suggests that separation formed any part of the concept of operations.

14.3.61 Lt. Col. Wilford held his Order Group on the 29th January 1972 where he issued his orders for Operation Forecast. In a statement prepared for the Widgery Tribunal he expanded upon the orders given, stating:

"a. I went through the Brigade Operation Order in detail to ensure we all understood the Situation the Mission and Execution . . .

b. My own mission 'To arrest as many rioters as possible'.

c. The Execution of our mission. I explained that until the rioting started it was not really possible for me to be specific in my plans and I therefore gave a general idea on how I thought it could go. The marchers has two routes from Bishops Field: Route One would bring them in from the South along Rossville Street into William steer with possible filters through to Waterloo Street and Magazine Street. If rioting broke out from this approach I considered that two companies would come in from the North and one fro the East to pinch them out from a retreat West and South. Route Two would bring them into William Street at the Junction with Lonemoor Road and although confrontation would not take place until the William Street barrier it would likely spread backwards and it would be necessary to put in two companies together to get the maximum impact and achieve mutual support. . . I was going forward where I could see the crowd and get an early view of its behaviour. On this confidently expected to move the companies forward to jump off points.

14.3.62 While Lt. Col. Wilford develops in some detail, in his statement for the Widgery Tribunal, his concept of operations, again there is no reference to the concept of separation. Most tellingly nothing in the 'Execution' of his mission, as set out in his statement, addresses the need for his soldiers to seek to distinguish between the non-violent marchers and rioter. Nor is there any reference to the need for separation, prior to launching the operation, a notable omission given that Lt. Col. Wilford was himself "going to be forward where I could see the crowd and get an early view of its behaviour." B945 paragraph 5c

14.3.63 In our submission, Lt. Col. Wilford's arrest order lends support to our submission that the concept of communication was never discussed with him, either at the Co-ordinating Conference or at any other forum.

Col. Welsh in the Helicopter

14.3.64 In 1972 both Brigadier MacLellan and Col. Welsh gave evidence to the effect that on the morning of the 30th January Col. Welsh was to act as an observer in the helicopter. Their evidence parts company in that according to Brigadier MacLellan, he ordered Col. Welsh to act as observer, while according to Col. Welsh he volunteered. B1232 paragraph 17, B1334 paragraph 2

14.3.65 It is noteworthy that in relation to the orders given Brigadier MacLellan's statement refers simply to Col. Welsh being instructed to "observe and report on the event from a Sioux helicopter." B1232 paragraph 17 His statement does not state that Col. Welsh was instructed to determine whether separation between the non-violent marchers and the rioters had occurred.

141.3.66 Col. Welsh does state that this was part of his instructions stating that:

> "I was briefed to inform Brigade Headquarters, should a riot situation develop, when the main body of marchers had separated from the rioters. If a riot situation develops one often faces great difficulty in splitting the rioters from spectators.

Information on this point was therefore of importance to Brigade Headquarters. I had no knowledge of any detailed orders given to 1 Para or any other possible snatch unit. I assumed that if an adequate separation occurred, a snatch operation might be mounted." B1334 paragraph 4

14.3.67 On the face of it therefore, it appears that on 30th January 1972 separation was a concept which Brigadier MacLellan considered.

14.3.68 Taken at its height, this evidence suggests that separation was an afterthought a decision taken at the very last minute and in circumstances where Brigadier MacLellan had failed to communicate the importance of separation to either, the Brigade Arrest Force, or other units within Brigade who could have assisted in the determination of that issue.

14.3.69 There are two aspects to our submissions in relation to this issue:

i) On the assumption that Col. Welsh was ordered to determine the issue of separation from the helicopter, he was ordered to carry out an impossible task, because with the information which had been provided to him and in the conditions available to him, it was simply not possible for Col. Welsh to make such a determination.

ii) In fact, no weight can be attached to the evidence given by Brigadier MacLellan and Col. Welsh about the issue of separation in 1972, because it has been demonstrated, at this Tribunal that both witnesses gave misleading, unreliable and potentially dishonest evidence to the Widgery Inquiry about the issue of separation.

Determining Separation from the Helicopter Impossible

14.3.70 It is submitted that if separation was vital to the launch of the arrest operation as Brigadier MacLellan has claimed then, even on the morning of the 30th January he would have ordered troops positioned on the City Walls, on the Embassy Ballroom and in other Observation Posts to assist in his determination of the issue of separation.

14.3.71 Col. Jackson has given unchallenged evidence that the City Walls were the best location for determining separation. CJ2.38 paragraph 6 While Col. Welsh considered that separation could be more easily determined from the Embassy Ballroom than from the helicopter. Day 282/75/3 to Day 282/75/10

14.3.72 Moreover as Col. Welsh acknowledged, determining separation from the helicopter was a difficult, if not impossible task:

> "Would it also be correct, General, that you experienced difficulties in maintaining a consistent view of what was occurring on the ground?
>
> A. Yes, that is correct. The helicopter, on the whole – it does not stay still, it has to circle around and move about.
>
> Q. Would it also be correct to say that apart from the movement of the helicopter, the view you would have would have been less than optimum?
>
> A. That us because of the movement of the helicopter, yes, and in the helicopter you can only see through the bubble in front or out of the door in the side if the helicopter is leaning over.
>
> Q. Therefore, the information that you could actually convey to the brigade headquarters was of limited value?
> A. Um, that is – it might be of limited value if we are the wrong height and facing in the wrong direction. Most of the time I think we were at a sensible height and we could see what was going on." Day 283/3/11 to Day 283/4/4

14.3.73 This in a context where as Col. Welsh acknowledged himself he was not a trained observer. B1340.003 paragraph 17 But what fundamentally undermined Col. Welsh's inability to carry out his allotted function, if that was the case, was the complete failure to brief him adequately in relation to the 1 Para arrest operation.

14.3.74 As Col. Welsh has always acknowledged he was deprived of vital information to assist in his determination of the issue of separation, namely the likely location of the 1 Para arrest operation. WT10.55A When questioned about this issue by Mr. Elias QC, he was clear that he had no knowledge about 1 Para's arrest operation:

> "You were giving your evidence on 3rd March, five weeks after the co-ordinating conference, would it be a safe inference . . . that there could not have been discussion at the co-ordinating conference, or indeed with you at any time, before you went up in the helicopter, about detail of the arrest operation that was proposed?
> No, I do not think there was any." Day 282/53/13 to Day 282/53/21

14.3.75 Absent such information, it is submitted he could not assist Brigade in the determination of the issue of separation.

14.3.76 Of course Brigadier MacLellan could not in fact have briefed Col. Welsh about 1 Para's arrest operation because he was a ignorant as Col. Welsh of Lt. Col. Wilford's plans, never having sought even an outline plan from Lt. Col. Wilford, as will be seen below.

14.3.77 Thus taking Brigadier MacLellan and Col. Welsh's evidence at its height, issuing an order to Col. Welsh to determine separation on the morning of the March, was a completely ineffective measure which could never have produced the desired outcome. Absent other methods of determining separation and a proper briefing of Col. Welsh, it demonstrates a complete lack of effective planning on the part of Brigadier MacLellan.

Reliability of Brigadier MacLellan and Col. Welsh on the Issue of Separation

14.3.78 In order to ascertain the reliability of the evidence of Brigadier MacLellan and Col. Welsh on this issue, it is necessary to consider their evidence about the topic of separation in its entirety. It has been seen in the course of this Tribunal that the evidence given by Brigadier MacLellan and Col.

Welsh to the Widgery Tribunal about separation was in material respects both inaccurate and misleading. This has been accepted by Col. Welsh.

14.3.79 The fact that these witnesses gave inaccurate and misleading evidence about separation in 1972 has two consequences:

i) It is directly relevant to an assessment of their credibility on the topic of separation. It will be our submission that the inaccuracies in their evidence go to undermine both their credibility and their reliability as witnesses on this issue.

ii) The nature of the inaccurate and misleading evidence is also relevant. The evidence makes it clear that, in fact, Col. Welsh had not communicated that separation had occurred before 1 Para went into the Bogside. If that is factually correct, then it undermines completely any suggestion that separation was a condition precedent to the launch of the arrest operation.[3]

14.3.80 The first and most crucial aspect of Brigadier MacLellan's evidence on this issue is the fact that in the very first statement made by him for the Widgery Inquiry he stated that:

> "At 1607 hours when it was confirmed by the troops on the ground that the hooligans in William St had become isolated from the NICRA Marchers, who were moving slowly and dispersing 300 metres away down Rossville St, I gave orders that the preplanned hooligan Arrest Operation should be launched." B1222 paragraph 6

14.3.81 Given Brigadier MacLellan's consistent assertions since making that statement that separation was communicated at 1604 from the helicopter, no weight can be attached to his evidence on this topic. In the hours after Bloody Sunday he maintained that separation was determined by troops on the ground. Troops who had never received a single order or direction about determining separation, by the time he gave evidence to Lord Widgery he had expressly ordered Col. Welsh to determine the issue of separation from the air.

[3] This is an issue which will be developed more fully in Section 15 at this stage the issue is being examined in order to assist in determining whether separation formed any part of the planning of the operation.

14.3.82 Both Col. Welsh and Brigadier MacLellan gave evidence in 1972 which suggests that Col. Welsh had made a determination that separation had taken place and that this was communicated to Brigade Headquarters before the Paras went in to the Bogside.4

14.3.83 According to Col. Welsh:

> "At about 1535 I saw the confrontation in William Street. After the water cannon was used I saw the crowd move down Rossville Street. Activity continued in William Street and I saw CS gas fired. The bulk of the crowd moved down Rossville Street. I reported when the tail of the crowd had passed the [North Block of] Rossville Flats.
> At this point I am satisfied that the matchers who had moved into Rossville Street were clear of the northern point of the Rossville Flats, going south." B1334 paragraph 5 to 6

14.3.84 In his evidence to the Widgery Inquiry Col. Welsh asserts that he communicated to Brigadier MacLellan that the tail of the crowd had passed the northern end of the Rossville Flats. WT10.56C

14.3.85 While Brigadier MacLellan states that:

> "At 1547 hours Commanding Officer 2 RGJ, airborne in a Sioux helicopter, indicated that the separation of the hooligan element from the bulk of the marchers was beginning to take place." B1234 paragraph 24
> "At 1604 hours . . . I was now told that the separation of the hooligans was complete . . ." B1234 paragraph 27

14.3.86 Brigadier MacLellan develops that in his evidence to Lord Widgery stating that:

"There was one other message to the helicopters. At about 16.04 we got through to Colonel Welsh – I do not know if it is in the log – for I asked for confirmation and was told that the tail of the marching crowd had passed the Rossville Flats. I remember that.

Q. It is not in the log. A. Certainly it happened.

Q. You remember that? A. Yes.

Q. The tail of the crowd had passed the Rossville flats. A. Yes.

I confirmed with Colonel Welsh the separation was complete, as I have just mentioned. Then I decided an arrest operation was necessary." WT11.14A-D

14.3.87 Thus, according to the evidence given by Brigadier MacLellan to Lord Widgery, Brigade Headquarters contacted Col. Welsh in the helicopter and sought and obtained confirmation that there was separation between the marchers and the rioters.

14.3.88 It is now evident from both the radio logs and the evidence of Col. Welsh that Brigadier MacLellan is wrong about this issue and that this simply never occurred:

"Q. You have had an opportunity, I understand, to look at the rest of the log. It is right, is it note, at no stage do you say in terms that separation has occurred?

A. No.

Q. For the purpose of the arrest operation, you were required to say, were you not, when – if it occurred – separation took place?

A. That was what it was hoped I could do.

Q. At no stage did you do that; is that right?

A. No, I put it in other sort of words, I think, just trying to describe what there was on the ground." Day 282/44/22 to Day 282/45/25

14.3.89 Col. Welsh went on to acknowledge that his statement to the Widgery Inquiry that he had "reported when the tail of the crowd had passed the north end of the Rossville Flats" B1334 paragraph 5 was inaccurate. Day282/48/9 to Day282/48/24

14.3.90 Col. Welsh was unable to explain to this Tribunal "why you felt able to tell Lord Widgery you had not only identified the gap between Aggro Coroner and the Rossville Flats, but also reported it". Day 282/51/5 to Day 282/51/24

14.3.91 Therefore according to the evidence given by Col. Welsh to this Tribunal:

i) Brigadier MacLellan's statement in 1972 to the effect that he had contacted the helicopter, sought confirmation that separation had occurred, and received that confirmation, was inaccurate.

ii) His own statement in 1972 that he had reported that the tail of the crowd had passed the north end of the Rossville Flats was also inaccurate.

14.3.92 Brigadier MacLellan by way of contrast has sought to stand by his evidence in 1972 that he had communicated with the helicopter about separation. However he now claims that the confirmation that separation had occurred was communicated by his Brigade Major and that he had merely assumed that the Brigade Major had done a final check with the helicopter:

> "If we could go . . . to W128, there is a message at 1604, which is recorded in the log, but it is not a communication either to or from the helicopter, it is a communication from 22LAD referring to there being a crowd of about 50 at the corner and about 150 hooligans at the junction.
> Do you accept that, despite what you told Lord Widgery, there was not in fact a message either to or from the helicopter at about 1604?

A. No, I do not accept that. When I gave evidence to Lord Widgery . . . I was firmly of the impression that there had been a message.

I cannot explain that, but I was absolutely firmly of the impression that . . . the check had been made finally with the helicopter about separation." Day 262/67/19 to Day 262/68/14 (See also Day 262/55/16 to Day 262/567/17)

14.3.93 Having been taken through his evidence in 1972 and the discrepancies between that evidence and the radio logs, Brigadier MacLellan went on to insist that:

"30 years later I still have the impression that I asked the brigade major if separation was complete and was assured it was." Day 262/70/16 to Day 262/70/18

14.3.94 Not only has Lt. Col. Steele has confirmed to this Tribunal that he did not have any further communication with the helicopter beyond serial 348 at 15.59 W127 it is also the case that on Bloody Sunday Brigadier MacLellan would have been in a position to hear any communications between his Brigade Major and the helicopter from his office. Day 267/67/17 to Day 267/76/20

14.3.95 As Lt. Col. Steele has confirmed Brigadier MacLellan's "information was the same as my information because it was based entirely upon the brigade net. . . . So what we come down to is that the confirmation that I gave to him, my assessment of separation was based on those serials in the Ulster net that we have already been through." Day 267/67/16 to Day 267/76/17

14.3.96 Therefore when considering the evidence of Brigadier MacLellan and Col. Welsh, inasmuch as it amounts to evidence that separation was a necessary pre-requisite to the launch of the arrest operation one also has to consider the following:

i) The fact that Col. Welsh now accepts that he did not communicate to Brigadier MacLellan that there had been separation, even in the terms he claimed to have communicated that fact in 1972;

ii) The fact that Col. Welsh contradicts Brigadier MacLellan's evidence to Lord Widgery to the effect that he had communicated directly with the helicopter and sought specific confirmation of separation.

iii) The fact that Col. Welsh contradicts Brigadier MacLellan's evidence to Lord Widgery to the effect that he ever used the term separation.

iv) The fact that the radio logs demonstrate that there was no communication between Brigade Headquarters and the helicopter at the relevant time, or at all, which confirmed separation.

v) The fact that contrary to Brigadier MacLellan's evidence to this Tribunal Lt. Col. Steele did not have any further communication with the helicopter beyond serial 348 1559 W127 and that fact could not but have been known to Brigadier MacLellan in 1972.

14.3.97 What is most remarkable of all however and evidence which in our submission completely and totally undermines any suggestion that determining separation was part of his function was the evidence given by Col. Welsh to the effect that the launch of the arrest operation came as a complete surprise:

> "From what I can remember – I think this is an accurate memory – is, looking down, I saw, totally unexpectedly . . . I saw the vehicles that I thought were Pigs . . . and I had not seen them go there and I had not heard it on the brigade net and, therefore, I can only presume that at the particular time we were circling around or for some reason could not see that, because when I saw them I was surprised. I think I said to the pilot, "Good Lord, the Paras have one in," if I have got my timing right." Day 283/10/14 to Day 283/10/25

14.3.98 If, as both Brigadier MacLellan and Col. Welsh claimed in 1972, his purpose in going up in the helicopter was to determine separation and he did in fact communicate separation, or words to that effect to Brigadier MacLellan, then the inevitable consequence was that the arrest operation would be launched. Col. Welsh's surprise at the launch of the arrest operation completely undermines any evidence that suggests he had in fact made a determination that separation had occurred. It also tends to undermine the suggestion that this was the function and purpose for which Col. Welsh was in the helicopter in the first place.

14.3.99 Both Brigadier MacLellan and Col. Welsh gave misleading, if not dishonest evidence to the Widgery Tribunal, about the issue of separation in 1972. Both claimed that the fact of separation had been communicated to Brigade Headquarters in clear and unambiguous, albeit different, terms in 1972 and both have been forced to acknowledge by reference to the objective evidence that this is not in fact the case.

14.3.100 Col. Welsh has now accepted the inaccuracy of his testimony to Lord Widgery in 1972, Brigadier MacLellan persists in the face of objective evidence to the contrary in seeking to maintain the fiction, despite having had to acknowledge that objectively speaking there is no evidence that separation had occurred. Given the misleading testimony given by both witnesses in 1972 about separation, it is submitted that no weight can be attached to their evidence that Col. Welsh had been ordered to determine separation. The more accurate description of Col. Welsh's role can be found in the statement of Brigadier MacLellan to the effect that Col. Welsh had been instructed "observe and report on the event from a Sioux helicopter." B1232 paragraph 17

14.3.101 It is our submission that:

i) The issue of separation did not form part of the concept of operations when the Operations Order was drafted;

ii) The issue of separation was not dealt with at the 8 Brigade Order Group Conference;

iii) Inasmuch as separation was mentioned, it was perfunctory in the extreme and it certainly did not occupy the key position to which it has now been elevated by General Ford, Brigadier MacLellan and Lt. Col. Steele;

iv) No discussion took place at the 8 Brigade Order Group Conference as to how the issue of separation was to be determined;

v) No order was given to Col. Welsh at the Order Group Conference that he should determine the issue of separation;

vi) That separation was part of the concept of operations was not communicated to Lt. Col. Wilford at the Order Group Conference, or in any other way.

vii) If separation ever formed part of the planning of operation, which is disputed, it was the subject of an inadequate briefing by Brigadier MacLellan of Col. Welsh, at the very last minute, to determine separation.

viii) If Col. Welsh was briefed to determine separation it was a task which it was impossible for him to fulfil because of: the difficulty in determining separation from the helicopter; and, the lack of information given to him about 1 Para's arrest operation.

14.4 Command & Control Issues

14.4.1 It is our submission that 8 Brigade failed to exercise command or control over 1 Para in planning the Brigade Arrest Operation. Despite the fact that they were the Brigade arrest force and ostensibly operated under the control of 8 Brigade, 1 Para were allowed to act autonomously in relation to their planning of the arrest operation, without reference to either the Brigadier or the Commanding Officers within 8 Brigade.

14.4.2 Effectively 8 Brigade abdicated responsibility for exercising control over the conduct of the arrest operation, resulting in a badly planned and purely executed arrest operation, carried out by soldiers who saw their function as teaching 8 Brigade and the Derry rioters a lesson and had unnecessary recourse to lethal force resulting in the loss of life on Bloody Sunday.

14.4.3 Primary responsibility for this abdication of responsibility rests with Brigadier MacLellan. The fact that essential elements of Operation Forecast had been dictated to him by General Ford, did not entitle him to wash his hands of the Brigade arrest operation. The Operation Order placed the responsibility for unleashing 1 Para into the Bogside on Brigadier MacLellan. As such Brigadier MacLellan had a clear responsibility to the people marching in the Civil Rights March in Derry to ensure that an arrest operation should not be launched unnecessarily and that the soldiers involved in an arrest operation should be operating under the strict control of 8 Brigade.

14.4.4 There are three elements which arise in relation to command and control:

i) The fact that 1 Para operated virtually autonomously in their conduct of the arrest operation, with insufficient command and control being exercised by 8 Brigade. 1 Para were given, and perceived themselves as having been given virtual 'carte blanche' to conduct the arrest operation as they say fit. This directly contributed to 1 Para's willingness to disobey orders in launching the arrest operation and conducting a shooting operation in the Bogside without any reference to Brigade Headquarters.

ii) Para were inadequately briefed as to local conditions and in particular: the geography of the area; locations from where 1 Para could launch an effective arrest operation; how Derry rioters operated; how the general body of marchers would be likely to behave; and, the nature and extent of the risk of attack by the IRA. 1 Para's ignorance of local conditions heightened the sense of tension among soldiers, as well as resulting in widespread confusion when the arrest operation was mounted and contributed significantly to their use of lethal force on Bloody Sunday.

iii) There was a complete failure on the part of 8 Brigade, to set up an effective system of liaison and communication between the various units involved in Operation Forecast, creating the potential for, and in fact causing considerable confusion on the day. One element of this failure relates to the suggestion that the Order to launch the arrest operation was given over the secure link, or BID 150. If that is in fact correct 1 Para and other units were inadequately briefed in relation to the necessity for maintaining an 'element of surprise' in relation to the launch of the arrest operation. In this respect it is our primary submission that 1 Para entered the Bogside without authorisation from 8 Brigade, as will be developed in Section 15 below.

14.4.5 While there are disparate elements in relation to the failure of 8 Brigade to exercise command and control over the arrest operation and over 1 Para the key to each of the failings identified above was the failure on the part of 8 Brigade to take control of the planning of the arrest operation. 8 Brigade gave no direction to 1 Para, in relation to the conduct of the arrest operation, there was no discussion with 1 Para about the conduct of the arrest operation and ultimately, right up to the minute it was launched 8 Brigade had no knowledge about how 1 Para were going to conduct the arrest operation.[4]

Operation Order

14.4.6 A remarkable feature of the Operations Order is the brevity of the section of the Operations Order dealing with 1 Paras role and function on the day and the lack of any detail as to how the arrest operation ought to be conducted.

14.4.7 The Orders to 1 Para which include the arrest operation are contained at 101 G Ops dated 27 January 1972 at G95.567 paragraph 9(f) and state as follows:

[4] It should be noted that the term launched is not intended to imply that the operation was launched on the orders of Brigadier MacLellan. It is our primary submission that there was no Order for 1 Para to go in and that 1 Para went into the Bogside in breach of Orders and without express authority from Brigadier MacLellan. That submission will be developed further in Section 15. While the term launched is used throughout this Section it should not be interpreted as a concession that 1 Para went into the Bogside with the authorisation of Brigadier MacLellan.

"(1) Maintain a Brigade Arrest Force, to conduct a 'scoop-up' operation of as many hooligans and rioters as possible.

(a) This operation will only be launched, either in whole or in part, on the orders of the Bde Comd.

(b) The Force will be deployed initially to Foyle College Car Park . . . where it will be held at immediate notice throughout the event.

(c) The Scoop-up operation is likely to be launched on two axis, one directed towards hooligan activity in the area of William St/Little Diamond, and one towards the area of William St/Little James St.

(d) It is expected that the arrest operation will be conducted on foot."

14.4.8 The constant refrain from Brigadier MacLellan and Lt. Col. Steel has been to the effect that it was for Lt. Col. Wilford to provide the detail of the plan and it was not their primary responsibility:

> "all I can say is that, as I said previously, one can merely give a concept and then the man on the ground has to do the best he can. That plan we have just been looking at, the arrows, were prefaced by "expect," "likely," because we did not know where the hooligans would be, we could guess but we did not know or he did not know until the thing started." Day 261/59/12 to Day 261/59/18

14.4.9 In our submission there should have been more detail in the Operation Order about the arrest operation particularly in view of the fact that 1 Para who had been assigned to 8 Brigade for the purpose of carrying out the arrest operation had never operated in Derry before. It was therefore vital that there was detailed guidance and direction about where the arrest operation should be conducted and how it should be conducted. In this respect the Tribunal is referred to the Operations Order for Operation Hailstone, which sets out in explicit detail precisely what was required of each unit which was part of the arrest operation and how the arrest operation was to be conducted. 115/1 G Ops dated 17 July 1971 at G3.24

14.4.10 While it is accepted that Operation Hailstone was exclusively an arrest operation, given the necessity to ensure that the arrest operation was conducted properly, it is our submission that insufficient guidance was given to 1 Para in the Operations Order and this contributed to:

i) The fact that 1 Para were not well briefed as to local conditions; and.

ii) The fact that 1 Para operated virtually autonomously in their conduct of the arrest operation.

14.4.11 It also the case that other units were directly affected by how 1 Para conducted its arrest operation, whether by virtue of the fact that 1 Para would have to access the Bogside via Blocking Points manned by them, or 1 Para would be operating in an area overlooked by their Observation Posts and sniper posts. These units were given inadequate information to ensure that their conduct assisted in the smooth running of the arrest operation.

14.4.12 Finally, there is no reference in the Operations Order to either:

i) The fact that the order to go in is to be given over the secure link, or, in the event that it is suggested that reference to the BID 150 could not be placed in an Operations Order, ii) The fact that there was a need to maintain an 'element of surprise' in relation to the launch of the arrest operation.

14.4.13 If Brigadier MacLellan were to retain operational control over the conduct of the arrest operation on Bloody Sunday, it was necessary for the Operations Order to set out in detail the orders to 1 Para in terms of how they were to conduct the Brigade arrest operation. In the event that Brigadier MacLellan determined that the Operation Order was not the place in which to set out this detail, then the conduct of the Co-ordinating Conference took on an added significance.

14.4.14 In essence the Operations Order failed to:

i) Put in place any system for command and control over 1 Paras conduct of the arrest operation.

ii) Provide direction for 1 Para in view of their lack of knowledge about local conditions.

iii) Set up any effective system of liaison and communication between the various units involved in Operation Forecast.

iv) Failed to make reference to: the Bid 140; the secure link, or the 'element of surprise'.

8 Brigade Order Group Conference

14.4.15 While it is not accepted that there should not have been significantly more detail in the Operations Order, particularly when one compares the Operations Order for Operation Forecast to that for Operation Hailstone, it is clear that the appropriate place for discussing the detail as to how the arrest plan was going to be conducted by 1 Para was the Co-ordinating Conference:

> "This would be the right place to discuss it; the purpose of the co-ordinating conference was to tie up the details of the operation." B1315.006 paragraph 30

14.4.16 Lt. Col. Steele gave evidence to this Tribunal that not only had there been discussion about separation at the Co-ordinating Conference, it was also the case that there had been "discussion about the arrest operation." Day 268/22/25

14.4.17 It is submitted that this suggestion is contradicted by the evidence of virtually every participant at the Co-ordinating Conference, and that it was the failure to discuss the arrest operation at the Co-ordinating Conference which is key to the difficulties which followed.

8 Brigade's Lack of knowledge about 1 Para's arrest operation

14.4.18 As to what happened at the Co-ordinating Conference. Lt. Col. Wilford did not in fact give written Orders to 1 Para, WT11.38D he simply gave verbal Orders in respect of which the notes have been retained. G94.562 – G94.563 It follows that no written Orders about the arrest operation to be conducted by 1 Para were placed before the Co-ordinating Conference.

14.4.19 Aside from the oral evidence of Lt. Col. Steele referred to above the evidence overwhelmingly suggests that the Brigade arrest operation was simply not discussed. In particular, the evidence of all of the Commanding Officers within 8 Brigade is to the effect that there was no discussion at the Co-ordinating Conference about 1 Para's arrest plan.

14.4.20 It is evident from Brigadier MacLellan's evidence that not only was there no discussion but that he did not regard any such discussion as necessary.

"Q. This is clear is, is it not: neither at the co-ordinating conference, or indeed at any later time before or on the day of Bloody Sunday, did you ask Colonel Wilford what plan he had in mind?

A. No, I did not.

Q. Should you not have done so?

A. I do not think so." Day 263/58/11 to Day 263/58/17

14.4.21 According to Col. Welsh in his evidence to the Widgery Inquiry in 1972 he did not know any detail of the arrest operation that 1 Para were going to conduct he simply knew that "there was a possibility that the 1st parachute Regiment and posses from others might be used to arrest rioters if a suitable opportunity arose." WT10.55A

14.4.22 In his statement to this Tribunal Col. Welsh stated:

> ""I am not sure whether I was aware of the detail of the arrest operation. I think I was probably aware in general terms that it would involve some form of pincer movement and the fact that it would go ahead if the opportunity arose."

You seem to be speaking there of your state of knowledge at and after the co-ordinating conference; is that right?

A. I suppose so. I cannot remember.

Q. In 1972 your evidence was that you did not know; on the day, the details of the orders given to 1 Para; is that correct?

A. Yes." Day 282/25/15 to Day 282/26/5

Thus confirming his 1972 account.

14.4.23 When questioned on this issue by Mr. Elias he was referred to his Widgery evidence and asked:

"would it be a safe inference, given that, of course, you were telling the truth to Lord Widgery, that there could not have been discussion at the co-ordinating conference, or indeed with you at any time, before you went up in the helicopter, about detail of the arrest operation that was proposed?

A. No, I do not think there was any." Day 282/53/13 to Day 282/53/21

14.4.24 Col. Jackson also gave evidence to the same effect:

"I do not believe, in my own mind, that Wilford spoke in any depth about his operation . . . I thought he was allowed to get on on his own. I mean, nothing came out of that co-ordinating conference to say how the scoop-up operation would be carried out. I know it was a need to know basis, this operation, . . . But nothing on that conference gave any idea of what was going to happen.

There was a bit in the brigade order about [the fact that the arrest operation is likely to be mounted on two axes]

A. There was a bit, but I mean it was not really explained whether this was a scoop up operation or, as it happened to be in the end, was merely a frontal assault.

A. But other troops other than the Para would have to be involved, and this is the co-ordination, in retrospect, that I do not think was shown. I mean, they were going through blocking positions with RGJ, 22 Light Air Defence regiment, and things like that.

But I do not think, in retrospect, we were told sufficient about what the scoop-up operation was about." Day 285/43/17 to Day 285/45/5

14.4.25 Col. Ferguson's evidence was to like effect. In his statement to this Inquiry he noted in a general way the fact that discussion about the operation was extremely limited:

"My previous experience of these occasions in other theatres was that there would sometimes be quite long discussions about details of the operation, but it became clear to me that on this occasion this was not going to happen." B1122.12 paragraph 64

14.4.26 In his oral evidence he was specifically questioned about a quote which appeared in a draft Sunday Times article which purported to come from someone who had attended the 8 Brigade Order Group Conference, which stated:

"The mood of the meeting was one of complete determination that this really big arrest operation should go through." S193

14.2.27 Col. Ferguson was asked about the Co-ordinating Conference in light of the Sunday Times quote:

"Reading that, does that bring back any recollection of the attitude of the meeting to the arrest operation, or not?

A. When it says the mood of the meeting was one of complete determination, that would indicated there was a discussion saying, "Yes, we are right behind you, or words to that effect. There was none of that, there was no discussion." Day 281/55/7 to Day 282/56/4

14.4.28 Finally INQ598, the Commanding Officer of the Coldstream Guards was asked:

"Q. What I am really asking you, General, is whether you can remember any detail, if it was discussed in your presence, for example, of just how that arrest operation would be mounted?

A. No, because I do not think it was discussed in detail, the operation at the conference. I think that would presumably – I mean, 1 Parachute Regiment were told to get on with it and it was the commanding officer's plan would be the detail of it?

Q. That would have been unlikely to have been discussed in you presence anyway and at the co-ordinating conference?

A. Very, yes." Day 272/24/9 to Day 272/24/21

14.4.29 While Inspector Lagan in his statement to this Tribunal stated that: "The discussion was fairly general. The arrest operation was to be carried out by the Paras. Nothing was discussed within my hearing about 1 Paras role." JL1.12 paragraph 63

14.4.30 Primary responsibility for the failure to establish what 1 Para's arrest plan was must lie with Brigadier MacLellan. Brigadier MacLellan ought to have either drafted a detailed arrest plan and ordered Lt. Col. Wilford to carry it out, with an appropriate level of discussion about the how the plan was going to be co-ordinated at the Brigade Order Group Conference. Alternatively, he ought, as General Ford did to him, directed Lt. Col. Wilford to present him with a detailed plan which could then have been discussed at the Conference. As Brigadier the responsibility ultimately rests with him. That said some responsibility for this failing must also lie with the Commanding Officer of 1 Para, Lt. Col. Wilford.

14.4.31 As Col. Jackson put it:

"they should have discussed with the brigade commander their modus operanda and how they intended to do the arrest operation." Day 286/87/10 to Day 286/87/12

14.4.32 It is apparent that he made no attempt to develop a detailed plan prior to the Co-ordinating Conference or even afterwards. In that right up until the point at which the arrest operation was launched Lt. Col. Wilford had never put his concept of operations into writing.

14.4.33 Lt. Col. Wilford's view that "until the rioting started it was not really possible for me to be specific in my plans" B945 paragraph 5 meant that right up until the point at which the arrest operation was launched not even his own Platoon Commanders were aware of how the arrest operation was to be conducted. In those circumstances, absent clear and express orders from 8 Brigade, they were never going to have any information from Lt. Col. Wilford about his plan, given that he did not seem to know what it entailed himself.

14.4.34 The evidence demonstrates that there was virtually no discussion at the Co-ordinating Conference about the details of what was a Brigade arrest operation and specifically that:

i) 8 Brigade took no steps to establish what 1 Para's plan was;

ii) Likewise 1 Para gave 8 Brigade no information about how they proposed to conduct the arrest operation; and,

iii) 8 Brigade gave 1 Para no direction, guidance or assistance in determining how they should conduct the arrest operation;

iv) Again 1 Para did not seek any assistance from 8 Brigade, either through the Co-ordinating Conference, or by any other mechanism as to how the arrest plan was to be conducted;

Lack of assistance to 1 Para re local conditions

14.4.35 It follows from what has been said about the conduct of the Co-ordinating Conference that no guidance or assistance was given to 1 Para by 8 Brigade in organising this arrest operation.

14.4.36 Evidence has also been given that after he raised his objection to the use of 1 Para, and because of his concerns about their lack of knowledge of local conditions that Col. Jackson asked

> "Lieutenant Colonel Steele to contact Lieutenant Colonel Wilford to say I would be available for any information or advice he may need for his operation. I do not know if Lieutenant Colonel Steele ever relayed my offer, but Lieutenant Colonel Wilford did not contact me before, on, or after 30 January 1972." CJ2.9 paragraph 42

14.4.37 Lt. Col. Steele maintains that he has no recollection of this exchange, but it is not expressly disputed. Day 268/169/11 to Day 268/169/22

14.4.38 In fact, it seems from the evidence of Brigadier MacLellan that the fact that Lt. Col. Wilford had had an opportunity to carry out a reconnaissance was sufficient assistance from the perspective of 8 Brigade. As he pointed out Lt. Col. Wilford had had:

> "two days, or certainly time to do a reconnaissance and, as the tactical plan was his, before he had done a reconnaissance, there was no point really discussing it with him, almost." Day 261/75/19 to Day 261/75/24

14.4.39 A fact which fails to address that assistance and guidance as to where and how the arrest operation was to be conducted would have assisted in the conduct of the reconnaissance.

14.4.40 Apparently Lt. Col. Wilford had conducted a reconnaissance prior to his attendance at the Co-ordinating Conference. There is some confusion about the nature and extent of the reconnaissance conducted by 1 Para. According to Lt. Col. Wilford he was definitely the only member of 1 Para to go up to Derry prior to Bloody Sunday to carry out reconnaissance. Day 312/22/1 to Day 312/22/5

14.4.41 INQ 1495, a Captain of A Company of the Royal Anglians gave evidence that he had conducted a reconnaissance with a number of officers from 1 Para approximately a week before Bloody Sunday and that the suggesting of accessing the Bogside, via the wall at the Presbyterian Church had been his. C1495.2 paragraphs 14 to 15.

14.4.42 His evidence is undermined by the suggestion that this occurred a week before Bloody Sunday, in circumstances where the Operations Order was not finalised until the 28th January, and also by his evidence that there was more than one officer. Not only is Lt. Col. Wilford clear that he conducted his reconnaissance on his own, but no other officer of 1 Para gives evidence of having been in Derry or participating in any reconnaissance prior to the day itself. In our submission INQ 1495 may well have assisted Lt. Col. Wilford in his reconnaissance but in terms of the nature and extent of the reconnaissance the evidence of Lt. Col. Wilford is to be preferred.

14.4.43 It is noteworthy in that respect that Lt. Col. Wilford stated that:

> "Because of the task which had been given to me, that is to make an arrest operation, I had already considered -- immediately . . . that I would have to conduct a pincer movement. And I had looked at the ground as best as I could -- because of course I could not go into the Bogside, I could only be on the outside of it -- and that I would conduct a pincer movement in a particular area, in an area of about 200 yards by 200 yards . . . Day 312/24/12 to Day 312/25/7

14.4.44 The evidence thus suggests that Lt. Col. Wilford's reconnaissance was conducted without ever having entered the Bogside. It is moreover the case that it appears to have been conducted in a helicopter and/or car, albeit it is unclear whether the reference to the helicopter is purely a reference to how he got to Derry, again suggesting that Lt. Col. Wilford did not even look at the access points on foot. B1110.023 paragraph 38 to 39

14.4.45 By any account, the reconnaissance conducted in the manner suggested could have yielded relatively little information to Lt. Col. Wilford about how to conduct his arrest operation. It moreover appears that, beyond his attendance at the Co-ordinating Conference and Col. Jackson's offer of assistance, which may or may not have been communicated to him by Lt. Col. Steele, Lt. Col. Wilford received no assistance.

14.4.46 It is submitted that Lt. Col. Wilford should have received extensive assistance, as the Commanding Officer of an outside unit being required to conduct a crucial aspect of Operation Forecast, the arrest operation.

14.4.47 Col. Jackson has identified the type of areas in which assistance would have benefited Lt. Col. Wilford in the conduct of the arrest operation and could have prevented many of the difficulties eventually encountered on Bloody Sunday itself:

i) That they needed to have discussed their planned operation on the ground with the Brigade Commander, so that they were with someone with sufficient local knowledge to assist them in their reconnaissance.

ii) They needed to know the access routes into the Bogside. 1 Para's lack of knowledge in relation to this issue was of course of direct relevance to how the arrest operation eventually began to unravel on Bloody Sunday itself, resulting in a last minute change of plan.

iii) Equally the need to know escape routes so that rioters could be cut off.

iv) The issue of what Col. Jackson has described as the "Derry sound" whereby because of the topography and geography, soldiers could become confused as to where gunfire was coming from and could become very disoriented.

v) That the arrest operation should not have been launched in pigs because that would simply serve to drive rioters deeper into the Bogside. Day 286/87/10 to Day 286/89/10 and Day 287/7/10 to Day 287/8/4

14.4.48 It is also of course the case that a proper briefing would have enabled Lt. Col. Wilford to have a realistic idea of the level of threat to be anticipated on entering the Bogside, rather than the view he had picked up from the television.

14.4.49 It is our primary submission that 1 Para should not have been used to conduct the arrest operation. However given that Brigadier MacLellan had no choice in this matter he should have taken such steps as were within his power to ensure that 1 Para had been adequately briefed about local conditions, this he palpably failed to do.

Failure of Co-ordination

14.4.50 It flows inevitably from the failure to have any discussion about the Brigade arrest operation that there was a consequent failure of co-ordination of the roles of the different units in assisting 1 Para with the arrest operation.

14.4.51 Nonetheless it is an issue that merits highlighting in particular because of the claim that the Order to launch the arrest operation was given over the secure link. It is also noteworthy because it was an issue specifically raised at the Co-ordinating Conference and ignored by Brigadier MacLellan.

14.4.52 Col. Ferguson has given evidence that at the end of the Orders Group he raised two issues. One related to the sue of lethal force and is addressed in more detail below, the other related to:

> "the complexity of the grouping of the companies, in that there were elements of four battalions deployed in a small area, the containment line was L-shaped and four companies/batteries were grouped with new battalion HQs. 1 Para was likely to have to pas through elements of other battalions, though at this stage it was not known which. Most of those participating had not worked with each other at this level. I asked whether there were to be any special arrangements to be made for the liaison between the battalions in view of the complexity of the grouping. By this, I was asking whether liaison officers would be exchanged between the battalions in order to help communications. The answer I received was "no". I did not press this point any further . . . The grouping was complex in that two of my batteries came under command of 1 R Anglian, and in return one company of 2RGJ and one company of 1 Para came under my command. There was, therefore, a potential for confusion on the day." B1122.11 paragraph 62

14.4.53 As will be seen in Section 15 communications did not work as efficiently as they ought. With 1 Para issuing direct orders over the Brigade net to the 22nd Light Air Defence Regiment to lift the barriers in circumstances where had liaison officers been exchanged it might not have been necessary to makes such a communication over an insecure radio network.

14.4.54 What is beyond doubt however, is that the 'element of surprise' which like the concept of separation, has become a key part of the defence of senior military officers, in that case Lt. Col. Wilford who it is contended entered the Bogside without authorisation, was never mention.

14.4.55 The persons in attendance at the Co-ordinating Conference were senior officers, there can have been no question of their not knowing about the existence of a BID 150 in the event that there was one in Derry. Had the need to exercise care in communications over the Brigade net been communicated then 1 Para would have exercised more care in its communications leading up to the launch of the arrest operation. Alternative means of communicating the need to open the Blocking Points to other units could also have been agreed in advance so that this did not need to be communicated over insecure means.

14.4.56 It is our contention that the failure to mention the BID 150 and the 'element of surprise' is because, as will be developed in Section 15, the issue of the secure means fits neatly with the incontrovertible fact that no such order was recorded by Mr Porter on the Brigade net. Some explanation had to be found for that fact, other than an admission that 1 Para went in to the Bogside in breach of orders.

In Conclusion

14.4.57 The evidence of Brigadier MacLellan to this Inquiry as to the state of knowledge of 8 Brigade right up until the moment the arrest operation was launched is telling:

"A. My recollection is that I authorised the arrest operation to start and the plan for how it was to be conducted was that of CO 1 Para.

Lord Saville: Does that last answer mean, General MacLellan, you did not know what the plan was?

A. I did not know the detailed plan, sir, no.

Lord Saville: As I understand it your evidence is that your recollection is that you simply, in effect, said to 1 Para: carry out your plan; is that right?

A. That is in effect -

Lord Saville: In effect.

A. Yes, sir.

Lord Saville: Without knowing what the plan was.

A. Yes, sir.

Lord Saville: Apart from the fact the object of the exercise was to arrest people." Day 262/75/14 to Day 262/76/6

14.4.58 In our submission, this encapsulates precisely the state of knowledge of 8 Brigade about 1 Para's arrest operation. Right up until the point at which the arrest operation was launched, they knew nothing, other than that "the object of the exercise was to arrest people." The converse was also true in that 1 Para knew nothing of the expectations of 8 Brigade other than that they were to "arrest the maximum number of rioters". G94.562 paragraph 2 Or as Brigadier MacLellan put it:

"Well, the commanding officer had a straightforward mission, which was to arrest as many hooligans as possible." Day 261/52/5 to Day 261/52/7

14.4.59 The evidence of the participants of the Co-ordinating Conference is in fact entirely consistent, not only with what Brigadier MacLellan stated about his state of knowledge to the effect that 8 Brigade knew nothing, other than that "the object of the exercise was to arrest people" Day 262/75/5 to Day 262/76/6 but also with Brigadier MacLellan's characterisation of the relative responsibilities of 8 Brigade and 1 Para in relation to the Brigade arrest operation:

"Sure. Can I try and explain, that when you, in the military terms, if you issue an operation order, that is really to get everybody to the start line, to the off. But as I think von Clausewitz said, no plan survives first contact.

You may anticipate what you think will happen, but you have no idea how the other side will react. So, really when it comes to the tactics employed, it was very much up to the commanding officer, because he was able to see the ground, see where the hooligans were and be flexible. So I cannot really sort of give you the mechanics. I do not know, I mean, I was not second-guessing him.

Q. In terms of responsibility, it is down to the commanding officer of the unit concerned, which in this case is 1 Para?

A. Correct." Day 261/50/2 to Day 261/50/18

14.4.60 A consistent theme in Brigadier MacLellan's evidence to this Inquiry was that he had no responsibility other than to provide for an arrest operation and to set out in the most general terms how that operation was to be conducted. Any flaws in how the arrest operation was conducted were in consequence to be laid at the door of Lt. Col. Wilford. At a later stage in his evidence he stated that:

"I think all I can say is I expected them to arrest people that you have mentioned. How they did it, I do not think was in my mind." Day 262/85/5 to Day 262/85/7

The Tribunal is also referred to Brigadier MacLellan's oral evidence at Day 261/58/25 to Day 261/59/18 and Day 262/76/7 to Day 262/76/13 in relation to this issue.

14.4.61 The truth of the matter is, as was suggested to Brigadier MacLellan

"having had 1 Para imposed upon you, and perhaps resenting the implication that they could do the job better than any of the home battalions in 8 Brigade, you were content merely to let 1 Para get on with it without giving them the sort of guidance and assistance and planning you might have given if they had been a home battalion?" Day 263/58/19 to Day 263/58/25

14.4.62 It is our submission that Brigadier MacLellan's approach represented a grave abdication of his responsibility to exercise command and control over the launch of a Brigade arrest operation. The reality was that, right up until 1 Para went into the Bogside, neither the Brigade Commander, nor the Commanding Officers of 8 Brigade had any idea of how 1 Para were going to conduct the Brigade arrest operation, beyond the information contained in the Operation Order. In those circumstances effective co-ordination was simply not an option.

14.5.1 It was common case among the citizens of Derry, the security forces and their political masters that the Derry Civil Rights March had the potential to bring thousands of unarmed people onto the streets of Derry. While it was anticipated by the security forces that preventing the March from reaching the Guildhall could result in violence at the Blocking Points, the violence anticipated took the form of rioting by unarmed civilians.

14.5.2 Using soldiers armed with lethal weapons as a means of crowd control inevitably creates a serious risk of the indiscriminate and arbitrary use of lethal force in circumstances completely disproportionate to any threat faced by the security forces. On Bloody Sunday itself, the ostensible objective of Operation Forecast was to prevent marchers from reaching the Guildhall and to contain the March within the Bogside and Creggan. That objective was easily met with the use of Barriers, riot guns and water cannon, yet at the end of the day 13 people were killed as a result of the use of lethal force by soldiers and 13 more seriously injured. This because of the use of lethal force entirely disproportionate to the situation faced by soldiers armed with SLRs.

14.5.3 It was thus vital that the military officers and their political masters addressed their minds to imposing controls on the circumstances in which it was appropriate for soldiers to use lethal force, given the possibility of indiscriminate firing, particularly in circumstances where soldiers were armed with weapons as lethal and potentially indiscriminate as SLRs.

Anticipated Threat

14.5.4 On the face of it, the Operations Order appears to indicate an expectation of hostile IRA action. Under the heading Background, the following appears:

> "f. We expect a hooligan element to accompany the marchers, and anticipate an intensification of the normal level of hooliganism and rioting during and after the march. Almost certainly snipers, petrol bombers and nail bombers will support the rioters.
> A. Bombers may intensify their efforts to destroy business and shopping premises in the city during the event, while the attention of the security forces is directed towards the containment of the march. G95.565 paragraph 1

14.5.5 While according to the Operations Order the Threat posed by the March included the following:

"a. A deliberate attempt to defy the marching ban, resulting in a direct confrontation being made between the marching contingents and the Security Forces.

b. IRA terrorist activity, to take advantage of the event, to conduct shooting attacks against the Security Forces, and bombing attacks against Business, Shopping and Commercial premises in the City Centre.

c. Hooligan reaction to the general excitement of the event, in the form of stone, bottle and nail bombing of troops, arson of private premises and vehicles, and a high degree of violence throughout the event, it will intensify during the closing stage of the event, especially in the William St/Rossville St area; it is possible that hooligan violence may continue thereafter for several days." G95.567 paragraph 2

14.5.6 However as we have set out at Section 13 above there was no intelligence or indeed any other basis to support these suggestions. These suggestions are also difficult to reconcile with other aspects of the Operations Order, including the plan to conduct an arrest operation on foot G95.570 paragraph 9(f)(1)(d), not to mention the intention to "collect and conduct press and TV men around deployment areas". G95.573 paragraph 9(6)(b)

14.5.7 In any event, these expectations, were significantly downgraded at the Brigade Order Group Conference the following day. We would refer the Tribunal to our submissions at Section 13 above wherein it is demonstrated that such intelligence as there was, was to the effect that the mood of NICRA was non-violent subject to a note that hooligan violence was inevitable. There was clearly no intelligence to suggest any "IRA activity to take advantage of event". G95.567 paragraph 2(b)

14.5.8 It is moreover apparent from the consistent evidence of all senior officers within Derry that the reference in the Operations Order to the threat of "IRA activity to take advantage of the event" was no more than a routine re-statement of an ever-present possibility, as opposed to an expectation of IRA activity.[5]

14.5.9 Brigadier MacLellan gave evidence to this Tribunal that the arrest operation was launched "believing that there would be no firing, and that nobody would attempt to murder the soldiers doing it". Day 262/5/1 to Day 262/5/3

14.5.10 While Lt. Col. Steele stated that at the Co-ordinating Conference:

> "No, there was not . . . There was no question of – there was no discussion on the risk of fire as far as I remember it. . . . Shooting was the very last thing that was in anybody's mind." Day 266/87/21 to Day 266/87/22

14.5.11 Col. Jackson, the Commanding Officer of the Royal Green Jackets, one of the resident battalions, in his statement to this Tribunal dealt with the intelligence available to the Commanding Officers in Derry prior to the Civil Rights March and threat as anticipated by 8 Brigade:

> "As far as I was aware the NICRA march was expected to reflect a carnival atmosphere." CJ2.7 paragraph 31

14.5.12 Col. Jackson went on to state that:

> "The Co-ordinating Conference would have commenced with the Intelligence Officer's reports of the current intelligence picture which, essentially, was no change. . . . The perceived threat was that there was likely to be a deliberate attempt to defy the ban on the march." CJ2.7 paragraph 35

[5] Col. Welsh is the only officers who gave no evidence about this topic stating that he had no recollection of any discussion re shooting. Day 282/29/2

14.5.13 Col. Jackson was then asked about the level of threat as set out in the Operations Order and was shown G81A/511.5 paragraph 4 the transcript of a signal sent to the Director of Intelligence to Brigadier MacLellan. In relation to that signal Col. Jackson stated that there was no specific intelligence about what the IRA's plans were for the day. Day 285/26/7 to Day 285/27/4 Or as he had stated at an earlier stage:

"We did not have the intelligence, or any intelligence at all, to think that that march was other than, as far as we were concerned, a normal march." Day 285/15/11 to Day 285/15/14

14.5.14 Col. Jackson was also questioned about an interview given by him to Jimmy McGovern's team in which he had stated:

"I never knew anyone was expecting anything other than a few shots fired. . . .

I thought the march had something of a carnival atmosphere. That was what I was expecting. I was expecting the odd gunman too, of course. But masses of people turned up and there was no threat. You knew they would not attack you. It would have been stupid to fire from within the crowd because it would have endangered others." CJ2.56

"Q. On what basis did you expect a few shots to be fired?

A. They were always being fired from July, 1971, if a military target presented itself.

Q. Did you have any other specific reason to think that a few shots would be fired on the day?

A. No, and few shots were fired on the day, at my battalion. .

Q. Did you have any specific intelligence that led you to think there would be the odd gunman present?

A. No, other than what had happened in the past." Day 285/27/15 to Day 285/28/9

14.5.15 Col. Jackson also acknowledged that there had not been any intelligence to the effect that the IRA would not fire because of the size of the crowd, stating:

> "No, we could not allow that to be part of any operational plan. We had to be – make sure the soldiers knew that they were targets." Day 285/28/22 to Day 285/29/2

14.5.16 What follows from Col. Jackson's evidence is that, there was no intelligence to suggest any specific threat consequent upon the March and while there remained an ever-present threat to the security forces, he was of the belief that because of the size of the crowd the IRA were less likely than normal to engage in shooting at the soldiers. Moreover, it is apparent from Col. Jackson's statement at CJ2.7 paragraph 35 that the real threat which the Co-ordinating Conference was concerned with was the threat of a deliberate attempt to defy the ban on marches..

14.5.17 Col. Ferguson, the Commanding Officer of the 22nd Light Air Defence Regiment, also gave evidence about the expectations of 8 Brigade in relation to paramilitary activity. In his statement to this Tribunal he said that:

> "I thought it was likely that at some stage during the proceedings there would be shooting." B1122.11 paragraph 63

14.5.18 Col. Ferguson was asked to enlarge on the circumstances in which he thought there might be shooting:

> "In my mind . . . was that there had always been extremists in Irish politics, on both sides of the political divide, who might not be under control of their various organisations, who might well just take the occasion to come out and take a pot-shot at someone. . . ." Day 282/49/16 to Day 281/50/1

14.5.19 That risk was quantified by Col. Ferguson as a "possibility", rather than a likelihood. Day 282/50/2 to Day 281/50/8 Moreover Col. Ferguson was also very clear that he had no expectation that the IRA or any other terrorist organisation would have planned to attack the security forces

> "I had been a soldier for quite a long time and I had been in a number of situations where there were terrorist organisations in existence, but generally speaking the ethos of a terrorist organisation, is not to get engaged in pitch battles with the Security Forces, because it is not really in their interests. That was one point. Their interest, in the second, that they would almost certainly be bound to lose.
> The second point is that – understanding the situation in Londonderry, though elements of the civil rights organisation and the IRA might have similar long-term objectives, i.e. the creation of a Republic of all Ireland, it would have seemed to me that it was not in the interests of that general objective for the IRA to be involved at all. It was, in fact, against their interests because they would be, as it were, taking away from the legitimacy and the – of the civil rights organisation who were, after all, protesting against internment. So I suppose that was why I thought the two things would be separate and it would not be in the IRA's interest to be involved.
> That is why I said at the beginning that the image in my mind was the renegade, perhaps old-fashioned, Official IRA man just coming out to have a pot-shot at someone." Day 281/50/14 to Day 281/51/14

14.5.20 The only possible qualification from within 8 Brigade was the view expressed by INQ598 the Commanding Officer of the Coldstream Guards who in his statement to this Inquiry stated that having spoken to people before the March and that "they felt there would be trouble." C598.2 paragraph 8 However it is clear from his evidence to the Inquiry that, again there was no specific intelligence and what he was describing was the fact that soldiers "were constantly faced with the fact we might be fired on in everything we did". Day 272/8/12 to Day 272/8/22

14.5.21 While Inspector Lagan's evidence to this Tribunal, consistent with his evidence to the Widgery Tribunal was that:

> "I did not think that the IRA or anyone else would shoot at the troops at the time that the confrontation that the confrontation at the William St barrier was taking place and the people in the area were dispersing . . . I based this belief on my general knowledge at the time and not on information that came from any specific source. I could not see that the IRA or others would fire while the march was still taking place because of the dangers it would place the marchers in." JL1.7 paragraph 19

14.5.22 In our submission the evidence from the security forces in Derry, involved in the Order Group Conference, about the threat anticipated from the IRA can be summarised as follows:

i. There was no intelligence available to the Co-ordinating Conference that there was any organised IRA threat expected. Day 285/15/11 to Day 285/15/14, Day 285/26/7 to Day 285/27/4

ii. There was no intelligence to suggest that individual gunmen would seek to take advantage of the event in any way. Day 285/28/1 to Day 285/28/9

iii. Because of the reality that the IRA did target members of the security forces there was an ever-present threat to members of the security forces which was no greater than normal. Day 285/28/1 to Day 285/28/9, Day 272/8/12 to Day 272/8/22

iv. There was nonetheless a belief that because of the size of the crowd the IRA were less likely than normal to engage in shooting at the soldiers because it "would have been stupid to fire from within the crowd because it would have endangered others." CJ2.56 And the reality was that "Shooting was the very last thing that was in anybody's mind." Day 266/87/21 to Day 266/87/22 (See also

v. However, the ever-present threat to soldiers could not be ignored. Day 285/28/25 to Day 285/29/2

14.5.23 It is our submission, therefore that, while it was accepted as an ever-present possibility that someone might shoot at the security forces, in reality there was an expectation that the risk of lethal force being used against the security forces was relatively minor, albeit it could not be ignored.

Failure to Address the Risk of the Use of Lethal Force

14.5.24 The evidence from the persons who attended the 8 Brigade Order Group Conference is that the risk of the use of lethal force in a crowd situation was not discussed.

14.5.25 In this respect Lt. Col. Wilford's evidence stands somewhat at odds with the evidence from other witnesses. In 1972 he stated in relation to the Co-ordinating Conference that "If firing was directed at the troops the situation would demand counter action as necessary. There was to be a massive deployment of snipers in the anti-sniper role." B944 paragraph 4

14.5.26 It was subsequently suggested by Lt. Col. Wilford in an interview he conducted for the programme "Inside Story Special – Remember Bloody Sunday" that he had raised the possibility of shooting at the 8 Brigade Order Group Conference but that he had been effectively ignored.

> "And then I asked, "But if this arrest operation turns into a shooting match, what do we do then?" It was dismissed . . . The answer to my question was "Oh well, that completely changes the situation". I accepted it, I suppose, because I was used to the Belfast situation again that if you're fired upon you return fire. .

. . I would have liked to have known how we were actually going to deal with it: whether in fact we were going to take part or were we to actually pull back and leave them at it." X135.11

14.5.27 This evidence has been contradicted by other persons at the 8 Brigade Order Group Conference, who have stated that they do not recollect it being said, although they appear to have regarded it as unlikely that it was said.[6]

14.5.28 In his evidence to this Tribunal Col. Wilford has reverted to his 1972 position stating that:

"I had not refreshed my memory from the contemporaneous documents before I gave this television interview. It appears from my 1972 statement that this issue was addressed at the co-ordinating conference." B1110.025 paragraph 48

14.5.29 In his oral evidence he was asked about the nature of the discussion about what was to happen if fire was directed against troops:

"Q. Do you have now any recollection of what was discussed or considered under that heading?

A. No, I have not, but I think I would be absolutely straightforward: the Yellow Card was in operation and that was sufficient." Day 312/30/5 to Day 312/30/10

14.5.30 Senior officers from 8 Brigade were asked about whether it was discussed at the Order Group Conference what ought to have happened in the event of shooting, with the consequent risk of civilian casualties. What is evident from this body of evidence taken as a whole is that this matter was not discussed at the Co-ordinating Conference.[7]

[6] Lt. Col. Steele "No, I cannot, I cannot remember him saying "what happens if there is shooting", I do not recall that at all." Day 267/3/3 to Day 267/3/5 , Brigadier MacLellan Day 262/2/1 to Day 262/2/15 Col. Ferguson Day 281/53/1 to Day 281/53/4 Col. Jackson CJ2.8 paragraph 38

14.5.31 Brigadier MacLellan did not appear to regard it as a matter which it was necessary to discuss at the Co-ordinating Conference. He was of the view that the Yellow Card was sufficient to give guidance to the Commanding Officer of 1 Para. Day 262/2/10 to Day 262/2/15 When asked to address himself specifically to the risk to innocent civilians in the event that soldiers opened fire, even if justified, his view was:

> "it was really up to the individual soldiers and their non-commissioned officers and officers to control the situation as best they can
> I do not think one could give detailed orders about a battle which one was not in control of." Day 262/5/4 to Day 262/5/9

14.5.32 Thus, on Brigadier MacLellan's analysis there was simply no obligation on him as the Brigadier of 8 Brigade and the person who was to authorise the arrest operation to even apply his mind to what, if any steps could have been taken to minimise the risk to civilian life.

14.5.33 Lt. Col. Steele also suggested that the response to Lt. Col. Wilford's question, had it been asked was to take "action in accordance with the Yellow Card." Day 267/3/5 to Day 267/3/10

14.5.34 Crucially however Col. Ferguson, the Commanding Officer of the 22nd Light Air Defence Regiment has given evidence that he raised this very issue at the Co-ordinating Conference. He put this matter in his statement to this Inquiry in the following terms:

[7] Brigadier MacLellan, "But at any rate, so far as you were aware, there was not any discussion or determination of what might or should occur if the Army were fired on? A. No, and I do not think it was raised with me." Day 262/7/11 to Day 262/11/14 Lt. Co. Steele Day 267/3/11 to Day 267/3/21

"I thought it was likely that at some stage during the proceedings there would be shooting. In these circumstances, and in a built up area, it would be very difficult for individual soldiers to know who was shooting and from where. One shot was all that it might take for everyone to believe that they were coming under fire. It, therefore, seemed sensible to me to ask if there were any plans to modify the rules of engagement. By that, I meant the rules of engagement being modified downwards, perhaps to the extent that at the outset, decisions to open fire would be reserved to officers. I did not develop this idea in my question but that was what I had in mind. The response to my question was negative." B1122.11 paragraph 63

14.5.35 Col. Ferguson indicated that the negative response came from Brigadier MacLellan Day 281/251/19 and went on to develop on why he had envisaged the risk:

"I should mention one point in relation to why I was concerned, there was also a danger, because there were so many different units involved, of soldiers of one unit firing at another because of the way that the containment line was L-shaped. So there were two aspects to it." Day 281/52/1 to Day 281/52/10

14.5.36 As Col. Ferguson acknowledged he did not develop the latter point at the meeting but "it would have been possible that I might have been asked, either by the brigade commander or the brigade to expand and say: what is it you have in mind; what are your concerns, but that was not done." Day 281/52/16 to Day 281/52/19

14.5.37 Col. Jackson, although having no recollection of the issue being raised nonetheless regarded it as a query which might well have been raised:

"I had spoken with Colonel Ferguson previously, when he arrived, because I handed over the city to him on 21st December, and it was either on 21st December or before that that I mentioned the business of the Derry noise.

So he was aware that there was a problem." Day 287/6/21 to Day 287/7/9

14.5.38 That the Yellow Card could be modified downwards has been evidenced by Lieutenant 119 of 1 Para who in his statement to this tribunal stated that:

> "The only variation in this approach arose on occasions as a result of specific orders from Brigade. We might, for example, be ordered not to respond to petrol bombers with live fire for a defined period of time due to specific and particular political reasons known to Brigade. However, on the expiry of such an order we would return to the standard response described above . . ." B1752.010 paragraph 9

14.5.39 There was therefore clear precedent for the modification of the Yellow Card, in a way which reduced the risk of the use of lethal force by soldiers. If the Yellow Card could be modified down for periods in Belfast, there could be no justification for failing to consider this option in the context of a march which would involve thousands of unarmed civilians on the streets.

14.5.40 Moreover the concerns expressed by Col. Ferguson and endorsed by Col. Jackson were concerns which were also expressed by soldiers of a much more junior rank than the officers attending the 8 Brigade Order group Conference.

14.5.41 Soldier 128, a Captain in the Second Battalion of the Royal Green Jackets, had been briefed as a sniper in an Observation Post close to Barrier 14 on the day of the March. He gave evidence to this Inquiry about his concerns on hearing live rounds, shortly after the Paras had entered the Bogside:

"Q. In paragraph 20 you say:

"I was fully aware that a large number of rounds had been fired and I immediately feared the worst. It was always very difficult to identify from where shots were being fired in the Bogside because of the layout of the area and the Rossville Flats, which would distort sounds. When you hear shots, as a soldier, your automatic reaction is to fire yourself, which is a difficult reaction to stop. I was concerned that the troops who had gone into the Bogside had believed that they were under fire and had lost control of their firing. When firing breaks out in tense situations it can spread very quickly and is very difficult to control. Direct action is often necessary."

Should we understand from that paragraph that the concern that you had was that the troops who had gone into the Bogside might have opened fire in the mistaken belief that they were under fire themselves?

A. No, I do not think you would be right to draw that conclusion.

Q. The point you are making is that you were concerned that the troops had believed, rightly or wrongly, that they were under fire?

A. Yes. I mean, the wider point is the concern that I had at the time, and still do, is that in a firefight it is extraordinarily difficult to control fire. People, when they are frightened, tend to fire indiscriminately – it is human nature, I am afraid – and a heck of a lot of training goes into ensure that that does not happen. But I have experienced it. I was involved subsequently in training soldiers for duties in Northern Ireland, and it is a problem. I suspect it always has been, and my impression at the time, because of the number of rounds being fired, was that there may have been some problems with fire control." Day 303/31/21 to Day 303/33/6[8]

[8] See also his evidence when he describes the last soldier from C Company turning around having gone through Barrier 14, pointing his weapon at ECHO OP and shouting 'gunman'. According to Soldier

Obligation to Address the Risk of the use of Lethal Force

14.5.42 While it was apparently accepted that the risk of the use of lethal force against soldiers was either the same as or less than the risk in normal circumstances, it seems that the view was taken that soldiers should not be briefed that there might in fact be a reduced risk because of the obligation to protect soldiers' lives:

> "We had to be – make sure the soldiers knew that they were targets." Day 285/29/1 to Day 285/29/2

14.5.43 What did not apparently receive consideration was what steps should have been taken to protect the lives of the thousands of unarmed civilians marching in circumstances where soldiers armed with SLRs were sent out to police a public order situation, which was likely to involve an arrest operation of persons engaged in rioting. This despite the fact that all soldiers present were aware of the fact that the SLR was an indiscriminate weapon, in that even if it hit its target, in a crowded situation it could also cause death or injury to innocent bystanders as Col. Jackson acknowledged:

> "there were so many, many people that day that, if the military had opened fire, if we had opened fire, there would have been subsidiary casualties". Day 285/28/16 to Day 285/28/19

14.5.44 The reality is that the paratroopers did not open fire in response to any IRA shooting. While there was limited IRA shooting that took place after the Paratroopers opened fire and seems to have gone unnoticed by soldiers. There were a number of factors about Bloody Sunday which should have led, not merely Brigadier MacLellan, but his superior officers, Generals Ford and Tuzo, and his political masters in Whitehall and Westminster to take steps to:

128 the 1 Para soldier was under the mistaken impression that civilian gunmen were located on the top of the Embassy Ballroom. Day 303/28/10 to Day 303/29/18

i) Modify the Yellow Card, imposing additional restrictions on the circumstances in which lethal force could be used;

ii) Modify the Yellow Card to comply with the Government's obligations under Article 2 of the Convention;[9] and

iii) Made it expressly clear to the paratroopers that, whether they came under hostile fire on entering the Bogside or whether they believed they were under hostile fire, they ought to disengage rather than return fire in a crowd situation. If it was appropriate to order the paratroopers not to conduct a running battle with rioters down Rossville Street, it was at least as appropriate to order them not to conduct a running gun battle in the same area.

14.5.45 In our submission the failure to issue those directions was a clear breach of the obligation of all involved to ensure that the operation was conducted in such a manner as to minimise to the greatest extent possible the risk to life.

14.5.46 These factors were as follows:

i) There was going to be thousands of unarmed civilians on the streets of Derry.

ii) This march was going to be 'policed' by soldiers armed with SLRs, a non-discriminate high velocity weapons. Bullets from an SLA were capable of passing through walls and killing the people inside and were capable of passing through the intended target and killing other people indiscriminately. That on the assumption that a soldier actually hit his intended target.

iii) The soldiers who were going into the Bogside were unfamiliar with Derry, thus heightening their sense of being under threat and heightening their sense of fear, iv) The soldiers going into the Bogside had a reputation for being aggressive. A reputation witnessed by 8 Brigade on Magilligan Strand and a reputation sufficient to cause more than one of the Commanding Officers in 8 Brigade to express concern about their use as an arrest force.

v) There is a body of evidence from soldiers in 8 Brigade that because of the topography of the Bogside, it was difficult to identify where gunfire was coming from and soldiers could easily become disoriented. That difficulty could only be exacerbated in soldiers unfamiliar with the area.

vi) That in any situation where a shot was fired, whether at or by soldiers, fire control was an issue "When firing breaks out in tense situations it can spread very quickly and is very difficult to control." B1802.04 paragraph 20.

vii) That in Northern Ireland, the history of the use of lethal force by soldiers had demonstrated that soldiers in Northern Ireland were not slow to engage in the use of lethal force and that in both Belfast and Derry soldiers had fired and killed people who were demonstrably unarmed and in what has been characterised as 'disputed' circumstances.

14.5.47 All of the above factors should have resulted in steps being taken to reduce the risk of soldiers engaging in lethal force. Contrary to what Brigadier MacLellan stated this was not a matter which should have been left up to "the individual soldiers and their non-commissioned officers and officers to control the situation as best they can." Day 262/5/4 to Day 262/5/9 Nor was it the fact that "the locals were aware of bombs going off every day, the shooting and so on. So they would have been aware . . .that throughout life at that stage in that area there was an element of risk" and that they should not "look for trouble" but try to "avoid trouble" a justification for his evasion of responsibility. While the individual soldiers are responsible for their acts of murder the responsibility for failing to minimise the risk to civilian life lies with their senior officers and in particular Brigadier MacLellan, General Ford and General Tuzo, as well as their political masters on the joint Security Committee and in Whitehall and Westminster.

14.5.48 The consequences of this omission were grave. The evidence suggests that Lt. N fired the first shots in the Bogside (in breach of the Yellow Card) and that other soldiers may genuinely have misinterpreted this as civilian gunfire. Had the Yellow Card been modified downwards or had there been an instruction to withdraw in a disciplined fashion in such circumstances, the shootings that followed might have been averted. In the absence of any such ground rules, the Paratroopers felt free not only to remain in the area but to deploy lethal force against civilians as they saw fit.

14.5.49 The failure to address the risks to civilian life of the use of lethal force by soldiers in the Bogside on Bloody Sunday contributed directly to the loss of 13 lives and the serious injury of 13 more.

15. MILITARY OPERATION ON THE DAY

15.1 Introduction

15.1.1 Having failed comprehensively to minimise the risk of the use of lethal force by the security forces in the planning stage, the arrest operation on 30th January 1972 was carried out with inadequate control systems and unclear objectives. The usurpation of planning by General Ford, encompassing the deliberate selection of 1 Para to conduct the arrest operation, diluted Brigadier MacLellan's authority and rendered him impotent to prevent, let alone control the manner of the launch of the operation.

15.1.2 Although 8th Brigade set out the likely axes of movement for the arrest operation in the Op Order G95.570, Colonel Wilford failed to brief Brigadier MacLellan about his proposed operation in any detail.

15.1.3 Conversely neither Brigadier MacLellan nor Lieutenant Colonel Steele made sufficient inquiries of Colonel Wilford to apprise themselves of the potential strength, direction or tactics planned for an arrest operation under their command. In normal circumstances it would be astonishing for Brigadier MacLellan not to seek to approve a plan or agree a framework for 1 Para to work within given that up to 249 soldiers could be involved in close proximity to up to 10,000 civil rights marchers.

15.1.4 However, Brigadier MacLellan knew that these were not normal circumstances. As outlined above in Section 12 the Brigadier understood the import of General Ford's interference in the plan and did not want to risk censure for attempting to put 1 Para on a tight leash prior to the march. The Brigadier knew that the plan was not his own and that on paper he was to leave 1 Para with "carte blanche". However, Brigadier MacLellan had retained unto himself the authority to launch the operation in whole or in part and it is clear that he intended to control or limit the operation through his direct authority via Brigade Net. The end product was a dangerously vague plan with mechanics of control which were deficient and deliberately muddled.

15.1.5 Almost from the moment 1 Para arrived in Derry those with responsibility for command and control began to lose operational control of events incrementally and at differing levels. From Brigadier MacLellan down to the lowest section commander in Support Company failures of command and control in the execution of the arrest operation, brought about by inadequate planning and obfuscation of authority, resulted in the deaths of 13 people and injury of 14 more.

15.1.6 These operational failures are attributable on a personal basis to Brigadier MacLellan, Lieutenant Colonel Steele, Colonel Wilford, Major Loden and the individual platoon and section commanders under his control.

15.2 The Order "Given"

15.2.1 Was an order given?

15.2.1.1 One of the central components of the case made by the soldiers both at the Widgery Inquiry and at this Inquiry was that 1 Para was given a direct order by 8 Brigade to launch the arrest operation.

15.2.1.2 It is submitted that the preponderance of the evidence does not support the assertion that the order to go in was given via a secure link. It is alleged that 1 Para entered the Bogside without authorisation from 8 Brigade.

15.2.1.3 In the alternative, it is submitted that if 8 Brigade HQ did give an order authorising the arrest operation,

(i) it should not have been given

(ii) it was an order given in precise and clear terms

(iii) it was disobeyed and/or grossly exceeded by 1 Para

15.2.2 There was no order given at all

15.2.2.1 There is a considerable body of evidence which casts doubt on whether 1 Para received authorisation at all prior to going into the Bogside. It is correct to say that the military account that a BID 150[1] was used to communicate the order to go in fits neatly with the incontrovertible fact that no such order was recorded by Mr Porter on the Brigade net.

15.2.2.2 Therefore the question of whether 1 Para received an order at all rests entirely on the existence and use of a secure net. It is submitted that there was no secure net, and that even if there was, it was not used to convey any order to go in.

Secrecy, the stated purpose for secure net was completely defeated

15.2.2.3 Prior to the alleged order given over the BID 150, transmissions made over the Brigade net comprehensively defeated the supposed purpose of using a secure net. Ostensibly the secure net was to be used on 30th January 1972 to give 1 Para the element of surprise so that when the order to go in was given, eavesdroppers on the Brigade net could not hear it and thereby avert rioters of the impending operation.

15.2.2.4 It was widely known in army circles and among some sections of the general population that army communications including the Brigade Net could be picked up by an ordinary radio or television set with a small amount of retuning of the set in question. (James McCafferty AM60.1, Jimmy Porter, AP9) Consequently the army developed the practice of not discussing intentions or plans over these insecure nets. In fact a directive was issued by 8 Brigade on 10th November 1971 stating:

> "We must accept the fact that our Pye communications, which can be picked up on transistor radios and TV sets, are completely insecure. No mention of future intentions is to be made over the Pye network unless the new fixed cursor SLIDEX code is used. All units are to ensure that normal voice procedure security is used by all ranks over our communication networks. Ordinary telephones may be used for restricted matters only in a guarded manner; privacy telephones can only be used for confidential administrative matters, and are not to be used for future operational intentions." (G27.207)

[1] For the purposes of these submissions references to "BID 150" encompass the full working apparatus, ie BID 150 encryption device coupled with a C42 No. 3 radio

15.2.2.5 The success of the planned arrest operation was of great significance to the army, with General Ford hoping that anywhere up to 400 hooligans would be arrested. 1 Para had attempted to keep a low profile in making their way to Derry. Surprise and impact was one of the key factors in the execution of the arrest operation. Using a secure net to organise and authorise the launch of the operation would have excluded the risk of the element of surprise being lost. The BID 150 would have been ideal for this purpose.

15.2.2.6 However, if the officers manning the Gin Palace had access to a BID 150 and were aware of its purpose, it is inexplicable why they proceeded to make transmissions over the Brigade net which had the effect of openly advertising 1 Para's intentions well in advance of the alleged order to go in. The officers in the Gin Palace INQ 2033 and INQ 1853 were Captains in Battalion HQ who would both have attended Colonel Wilford's O Group in their respective capacities as Regimental Signals Officer and Motor Transport Officer. Indeed the Regimental Signals Officer INQ 2033 had previously commanded Anti-Tank and Machine Gun Platoons and presumably had wide field experience. (Day 352/111/3 to Day 352/111/10)

15.2.2.7 As can be seen from the table below, as early as around 15.39 it would have been obvious to anyone listening to the Brigade net that army units were seeking to come through barriers to disperse the crowd. Moreover, the request for permission timed at 15.55 was made by an officer in the Gin Palace in uncoded and clear language naming both the object of the operation and the desired target area (William St/Little James St).

Porter Transcript Excerpts

Timings taken from 8 Brigade Log

15.2.2.8 Anyone listening to the Brigade Net could have easily worked out exactly what operation was planned over 10 minutes before it actually happened. Any prospect of secrecy or surprise was utterly defeated. The suggestion that a tactical advantage was still available to 1 Para by the giving of the order over a secure net is a chimera in which the military have invested a good deal of their credibility in relation to the BID 150.

15.2.2.9 Indeed even Lieutenant Colonel Steele, the witness who has the greatest vested interest in the concept of the secure net providing secrecy, had to admit his surprise when confronted by the facts in making his witness statement in 2000:

> "I am today rather surprised that 1 PARA used the Brigade net for this request, since the BID 150 secure net was specifically set up for such communications". B1315.008 paragraph 42

15.2.2.10 It should be noted that on their evidence, soldiers at the Gin Palace had access all day to a fully functional secure net as well as a telephone line, both of which they knew would have been more secure than the Brigade net. The officers in the Gin Palace could easily have made all of their sensitive communications surrounding the arrest operation with 8 Brigade on the secure net. Furthermore, it was not ventured by the officers in the Gin Palace that they simply forgot about the BID 150. In fact INQ 1853 alleged that there was a signaller at the Gin Palace devoted to the BID 150 all day.

15.2.2.11 Given their experience and detailed knowledge of the utility of the BID 150 it is apparent that INQ 2033 and INQ 1853 never had in mind any overriding necessity for surprise or secrecy, the stated purpose for using a BID 150. It necessarily follows that there was no plan or directive to use a secure net for the order to go in to give 1 Para a tactical advantage.

Lack of documentary evidence surrounding BID 150

15.2.2.12 There is very little documentary evidence to support the assertion that 1 Para had and/or used BID 150 equipment for operational purposes in Derry on 30th January 1972. Although the BID 150 was classified as TOP SECRET, no convincing evidence was proffered to show that the normal practices of army procedure (signals instructions, requisition forms, provision for a secure log) were obviated on the grounds of its classification. If anything, common sense would dictate that more bureaucracy should follow such a highly valued piece of technology, not less, both to secure its safety and to ensure proper usage.

15.2.2.13 Although 4 sets of BID 150 equipment were requested by 8 Brigade on 20th December 1971 (G43.279) not one corresponding document has been produced acknowledging receipt of the equipment or subsequent documents dealing with distribution and usage within the 8 Brigade area. In fact all of the documents disclosed to this Inquiry which deal with the use of the BID 150 within the 8 Brigade area post date 30th January 1972.

15.2.2.14 The 1 Para Signals Instruction for the day (W287), including net diagrams, does not make mention of the secure net or BID 150 at all. It was suggested by INQ 2033 that this document would not have included reference to the BID 150 since it was classified (C2033.4 paragraph 17). However, the BID 150 was only the encryption unit attached to a C42 (No. 3) radio unit. The C42 required tuning to a pre-determined frequency to allow it to communicate with other radios on the secure net in the same fashion as any other radio. No mention is made of a secure frequency (which could have been included without revealing the name or even nature of the equipment), nor are there any provisions specifying whether they are to collect the encryption card from 8 Brigade HQ or from 39 Brigade HQ, or a reminder of to whom they are to speak in order to get the card.

15.2.2.15 The Royal Anglian Signals Instruction for the day (W363) also makes no reference to secure net or BID 150 capability, even to say that it is not to be used on the day.

15.2.2.16 In contrast, the 8 Brigade Signal Instruction prepared later that year and dated 22nd August 1972 (W305) devotes almost a full page at W307 to the purpose, operation, and security of the BID 150 Brigade Secure Net. It is instructive to note that less than seven months after 30th January 1972 the BID 150 was openly acknowledged and documented in this instruction which was marked "CONFIDENTIAL". The suggestion that the BID 150 could not be acknowledged on paper is not only illogical in operational terms but it is also undermined by later documentary evidence.

15.2.2.17 Other than the word of the soldiers involved there has been no evidence produced to show that the BID 150 was in service either in 39 Brigade or 8 Brigade prior to 30th January 1972. The MoD has not produced a single signals instruction, signals briefing paper or other documentary record pre-dating 30th January 1972 verifying its operational use. Therefore there is no evidence to show that 1 Para possessed a BID 150 to bring to Derry, or that 8 Brigade had one to use in concert with them.

Infrequent use of the secure net

15.2.2.18 Lieutenant Colonel Steele said he only used it for two transmissions to 1 Para all day (note that he said one to Widgery), one of which was the order to go in. INQ 2033 on the other hand claimed that he may have used the secure net three or four times[2] on the day to speak to Brigade.

[2] Day 352/143

INQ 2033's recollection of events was somewhat hazy and in particular his description of the BID 150 as a one-to-one net was entirely erroneous[3]. Furthermore, Lieutenant Colonel Steele gave evidence in 1972, whereas INQ 2033's first statement was made in 2000. It is suggested that Lieutenant Colonel Steele's evidence, if any, is to be preferred over INQ 2033's evidence on this matter.

15.2.2.19 It can be seen in the Porter transcript that at some time around 6.30pm, 1 Para were attempting to contact 8 Brigade using their telephone line.

Bun W Ref	Item	To	From	Event
W146	685	65	0	Hello, 65, this is Zero. Grateful if you'd telephone me on the civil line when you are finished with it. Over.
	686	0	65	Zero, wilco. Out.
	687	65	0	Hello 65, this is Zero. Reference my last message, it is a matter of priority now that you contact Seagull as soon as possible. Over.
	688	0	65	65. Roger. We're trying ring you, but the number's engaged at the moment. We'll keep trying. Out.

15.2.2.20 Item 687 shows that Lieutenant Colonel Steele (Seagull) was anxious to speak to 1 Para. The telephone lines were understandably busy at the time at Brigade HQ. The officers at the Gin Palace responded saying they would keep trying to get through on the telephone. If there existed a direct hotline to Lieutenant Colonel Steele's office in the secure net it would obviously have been the easiest and most secure way for either party to get in touch. The fact that it was not used or even suggested in the above transmissions lends further weight to the premise that the secure net did not exist.

[3] Day 352/133 However secure net was simply an analog signal voice net with encryption.

15.2.2.21 On Lieutenant Colonel Steele's own evidence the secure net was used twice on the day. At a time when it would have been the ideal means of communication it was left idle. There is no logical explanation for the virtual redundancy of such a highly valued and high-tech piece of equipment. If the BID 150 had been in service that day it would have been used more often and to greater effect than alleged by the soldiers in their evidence.

The absence of the resident battalions from the secure net

15.2.2.22 If the 4 BID 150 sets requested on 20th December 1971 had arrived at 8 Brigade prior to 30th January 1972, and one of them was functional at Brigade Headquarters one would expect that at least 3 of the resident battalions would also be operational on the secure net. It is submitted that the equipment would have required testing and configuration in the 8 Brigade area prior to its use in major operation.

15.2.2.23 However very few of the officers manning the Operations Rooms of the resident battalions recalls having a BID 150 on the day. Colonel Roy Jackson told this Tribunal that in his time in Derry he never had access to a secure radio Day 285/64, and again at Day 287/31.

15.2.2.24 INQ 406 of the 22nd Light Air Defence Regiment says that there was a BID 150 in the battalion headquarters on the day Day 274/37 and that INQ 1041 was manning it. INQ 1041 however has no memory of this and was in fact one of the watchkeepers and was one of those responsible for maintaining the battalion log (C1041.2 paragraph 10). David Ramsbotham told the Inquiry that the request made on 20th December 1971 (G43.279) was in fact a request for additional sets and that 8 Brigade already had a small number Day 254/115. However INQ 1903 says that prior to the delivery of BID 150s he recalls occurring in early 1972 there were no BID 150s in 8 Brigade (Day 253/92).

15.2.2.25 Lieutenant Colonel Steele was careful to insist in his evidence to Widgery that only 8 Brigade and 1 Para were able to communicate on the secure net. He knew that the smaller the circle surrounding the order to go in the smaller the chances were of the story unravelling.

15.2.2.26 Contrary to what INQ 2033 claimed in his evidence at Day 352/132/3, the secure net was not a special one to one type of net. It was introduced as a secure Command Net supplemental to the Brigade Command Net. It too was an analog signal transmitted on an agreed frequency.[4] The difference was provided by the BID 150 which encrypted and decrypted the signal at either end. Any battalion HQ with a BID 150 and the appropriate encryption card would be able to access the secure net in the same fashion as they would the Brigade net. There was no restriction on how many call signs could operate on it. The limiting factors were the number of BID 150 sets and the possession of the correct card by each unit.

15.2.2.27 It would have been possible for 8 Brigade and 1 Para to use an exclusive encryption card not available to the resident battalions, however no evidence has been produced to show that that is what happened and there are no convincing reasons as to why such a course would have been desirable.

15.2.2.28 A secure net including the resident battalions would potentially have been of great operational value on 30th January 1972. Sitreps from positions on the Embassy Building or the City Walls about the state of the crowd and timescales in relation to separation of marchers and rioters could have been provided in great detail over the secure net. It would have been tactically advantageous to keep transmissions about the position of the rioters and the proposed arrest operation off the Brigade net entirely. In addition, 1 Para were reliant on the resident battalions to open barriers and could have requested such action without eavesdroppers overhearing.

15.2.2.29 The convoluted story that only 8 Brigade and 1 Para had access to the secure net was no more than a convenient ex post facto damage limitation exercise on the part of Lieutenant Colonel Steele and 1 Para. The lack of merit of its premise from an operational tends to show that even if it existed no one used a BID 150 on the day.

Not informing HQNI

15.2.2.30 HQNI in Lisburn was monitoring events in 8 Brigade through sitreps sent via secure telex from 8 Brigade HQ Operations Room (C2090.10 paragraph 21 and C2090.14). 8 Brigade were under a duty to inform HQNI of sitreps received and operational decisions made. Ultimately HQNI would report to the MoD, and the MoD would report to the Prime Minister therefore accurate and up to date information was of the essence.

15.2.2.31 Often the matters passed to HQNI were of minor significance, such as serial 57, W28, "Creggan Rd crowd going N approx 50-60. CS drifting up behind". At the time it was allegedly sent the order to send 1 Para on a scoop-up operation would have been the most significant transmission of the day. It would have been self-evident to even the most junior watchkeeper that HQNI would want to know of this immediately. However there is no entry in the HQNI log corresponding to the alleged order to go in given by Lieutenant Colonel Steele.

15.2.2.32 Furthermore, staff officers in HQNI had the capacity to listen to 8 Brigade net if they chose since it was being relayed via Slieve Galleon to Lisburn (C2090.14). Therefore they could hear everything transmitted over the Brigade net but could not hear messages sent over the secure net or telephone lines. This made it even more important for 8 Brigade to relay key transmissions which had been sent via the secure link. It is submitted that HQNI would have expected to be notified of the exact time of launch of the arrest operation along with its targets and strength as soon as it was launched. It is submitted that lack of any entry in the HQNI log corresponding to the order to go in is indicative that no such order was given by 8 Brigade.

Incredible nature of Gin Palace account

15.2.2.33 INQ 2006 told the Inquiry that he was manning the secure net all day. He said that at the crucial time he took the initial message from 8 Brigade which was "Yes, go, go" (C2006.12 paragraph 48). Having received this message he said he then threw the headset he had been listening to through the hatch back to the watchkeepers to take the full order. When questioned, initially INQ 2006 was fairly sure about throwing the headset:

"Q. How clear is the recollection of throwing the headset of the radio to an Ops Officer?

A. As clear as I can make it after such a long time. I believe what happened, because we had been badgering for a long time to get the go, when brigade told me yes, go, go, I just remember, I think, taking the headset off, throwing it through the hatch. It would be easier for me to do that, do not forget the line was still open and I would then grab hold of the handset, the telephone handset and then carry on writing." Day 386/174/13

15.2.2.34 However, when it was suggested to him that the watchkeepers in fact had their own handset for the secure link INQ 2006 conceded that the throwing of the headset may not have happened at all:

"Q. If the position were that as signaller you had a headset and a microphone?

A. Yes.

Q. But that there was a separate telephone handset leading through to the Ops Officer, is it possible that when you received that initial communication from brigade, you simply then just shouted across to the Ops Officer who then picked up the telephone handset and spoke to brigade?

A. Quite possibly". Day 386/174/23

15.2.2.35 INQ 2006 says that he handed over the handset to the watchkeepers as soon as he heard the words "Yes, go, go" (Day 386/185/9). There is no explanation as to how Lieutenant Colonel Steele was supposed to know that he was to wait to speak to a second person to deliver the complete order. Furthermore it has never been suggested by Lieutenant Colonel Steele that he had to go through two separate soldiers at 1 Para HQ to deliver the order over the secure link. Transmissions are not delivered to thin air, particularly those over a net being used for the first time. The person transmitting will normally seek an acknowledgement that the other person is receiving before proceeding into the body of the message. If this normal procedure was followed on this occasion INQ 2006 would have had ample opportunity to acknowledge Lieutenant Colonel Steele and then pass on to his watchkeepers.

15.2.2.36 To add to the bizarre nature of the story INQ 2006 told this Inquiry that after passing on the handset to the watchkeepers he left his post and smoked a cigarette (Day 386/176/6). The C42 attached to the BID 150 required tuning to the correct frequency like any other radio, and signals officers were posted to ensure that radios (which had a tendency to drift) were kept in tune. INQ 2006's recollection that at the crucial time of the day he was able to walk away from the Gin Palace for a smoke is clearly at odds with his job.

15.2.2.37 Neither INQ 1853 or INQ 2033 can recall receiving the order to go in. Certainly, neither of them recalls having a handset thrown at them by a signaller who then got up and went for a smoke. This account provided by INQ 2006 is false and misleading.

Chief Superintendent Lagans evidence re: "I am sorry, the Paras have gone in"

15.2.2.38 Chief Superintendent Lagan gave evidence about Brigadier MacLellan's reaction upon hearing that 1 Para had gone in. He first described the Brigadier's reaction in his statement signed on 10th March 1972:

"I heard the reports of confrontations at the various barricades and that the main body of the marchers had gone down to Free Derry Corner. The Brigadier who had presumably gone to his Operations Room, came into the office and said 'The Paratroops want to go in'. I said 'For heaven's sake hold them until we are absolutely certain the marchers and the rioters are well separated'. He left me again. After an interval he returned and said 'I am sorry, the Paras have gone in'. I did not hear the order to the Paras to move, over the radio". (JL1.2 paragraph 6)

15.2.2.39 When questioned about his understanding of what Brigadier MacLellan meant Chief Superintendent Lagan was clear that the Brigadier had not sent 1 Para in himself:

Mr Stocker: You have said you made the comment 'For heaven's sake, hold them'; did the Brigadier make any reply?

Answer: He did not make any reply, but he left his office, and I assumed that he was going into the OPs room to pursue my suggestion.

Question: How long was he absent?

Answer: I cannot be specific about it, but after a short interval he returned to me and he said 'I am sorry, the Paras have gone in'.

Question: Had you overheard on the radio any order for them to go in?

Answer: I did not, my Lord.

Question: We have been told that there were a number of radio networks, one of which, the Ulsternet, is capable of being overheard and another network, which is a secure network, which is not capable of being overheard, so far as is known; did you know where the secure link was?

Answer: Truthfully no, my Lord, I assumed it would be in the Ops room.

Lord Widgery: It probably was not on a set to which you could listen?

Answer: That is quite possible.

Question: Are you sure about the 'sorry'? You appreciate the importance of it. The Brigadier, according to you, came back and said 'I am sorry, the Paras have gone in'. You are satisfied about him saying 'sorry'?

Answer: I am completely satisfied. The two things, the words he used and the tone of voice in which he expressed them, impressed themselves on my mind.

Mr Stocker: That is capable of two meanings. By the phrase 'I am sorry', did you take him to be, as it were, apologising, or did you take him to be expressing his own view that he was personally sorry about it?

Answer: I assumed, my Lord, that in view of what I had said earlier he expressed his sorrow to me. I also interpreted the meaning from the tone he used that he was not personally responsible for them going in.

Question: That was the conclusion --

Answer: That was my own conclusion. JL1.38 D

15.2.2.40 Under cross-examination by Mr McSparran Chief Superintendent Lagan was even clearer in expressing his opinion.

Question: Your view was that the entry of Paratroopers, or the launching of the Paratroopers, was not as a result of his order at that time?

Answer: That is how I read the situation, my Lord.

Question: Did he say, or indicate anything to you, which would have led you to the belief that he had given such an order?

15.2.2.41 When directly questioned by Lord Widgery Chief Superintendent Lagan stood firmly by his opinion:

Lord Widgery: I am very anxious not to leave this with any doubt about what you are telling me, Mr Lagan. I think what you are telling me is that the order, when given, as far as you could see, was the Brigadier's order, rather than that a mistake had occurred and somebody else had let the Paratroopers' Regiment off the leash without the Brigadier's instructions. I think what you are telling me is the first of those two.

Answer: When the Brigadier said to me 'Sorry, the Paras have gone in', my immediate reaction to it was that they had gone in on somebody else's instructions and not on his. I would have thought, in view of an earlier comment to me, that he would have consulted with me again before he would have sent them in. JL1.54 F

15.2.2.42 In his statement to this Inquiry Chief Superintendent Lagan deals with his contemporaneous interpretation of the words "I am sorry, the Paras have gone in"[5]. He is unambiguous that the interpretation he gave to Widgery was entirely consistent with the words spoken and the manner in which they were delivered JL1.17 paragraph 97. Consequently Chief Superintendent Lagan's 1972 evidence stands uncontradicted.

He firmly believed that Brigadier MacLellan had not been involved in the decision to send 1 Para in.

15.2.2.43 Brigadier MacLellan denied the inference made by Chief Superintendent Lagan in a letter to General Ford of 15th March 1972 (B1279.001). Brigadier MacLellan admitted that he did have a conversation with Chief Superintendent Lagan after he had given the order, but that it was not in the terms alleged:

"I then returned to my office and told Lagan that the arrest operation had started. I cannot remember the exact words which were used but as far as I can recall Lagan then said 'Well I hope they are separated enough'. I replied 'I am assured that they are, but anyway it is too late to stop them now'. I suppose I may have said '.....anyway I'm sorry but it is too late to stop them now' but I do not remember using the word 'sorry' and if I did it was in this context and certainly not because I regretted having just given the orders for the arrest operation to start". (B1279.002)

15.2.2.44 He told this Inquiry that he did not recall saying the words but that if he did he meant, "I am sorry, I know you wanted it otherwise". Day 262/75/7

15.2.2.45 However insistent the protests by Brigadier MacLellan, as the person with the most to lose he is open to the allegation that he would deny it in any event. Chief Superintendent Lagan's evidence is unambiguous in his understanding of Brigadier MacLellan's words. Although it is a subjective interpretation it supports the case that 1 Para entered the Bogside without the authorisation of 8 Brigade.

The lifting of the barriers

15.2.2.47 The order to 22nd Lt AD to lift barrier 14 did not come from 8 Brigade, rather it came from 1 Para W128, item 370. A battalion to battalion command is not the normal method of issuing orders in the army. Whilst the battalion on the receiving end may assume that the battalion requesting has authority for its actions it cannot be sure unless it receives a direct order from a superior command. This uncertainty would be exacerbated if the receiving battalion was not party to a related order broadcast on a net to which they had no access.

15.2.2.48 In the event it would appear that the 22nd Lt AD did comply and passed the order from their headquarters to A Company of the Royal Green Jackets who were manning barrier 14, but they barely had time to react. So rushed was the whole operation that 1 Para had to go through a small gap in the wire on the east side of William Street. Commander C Company said he would have preferred if the barriers had been opened in the middle of the road allowing them to go through in tactical formation rather than single file. Day 294/151/16

15.2.2.49 Furthermore, barrier 12 was not mentioned at all by 1 Para in their request/order to the 22nd Lt AD, nor does it feature in the Brigade log. The soldiers manning barriers 14 and 12 were not ready to open them. INQ 1326 who was commanding the troops at barrier 12 said that there was a delay of 10 seconds while his men undid the wire (Day 301/113/3). Soldier S, who was driving the lead Pig through barrier 12 told Lord Widgery that he was halted at the barrier for "about a minute" (B711 E). 8 Brigade had not indicated that the soldiers at the barriers ought to be ready. The procedure lacked organisation and coherence suggesting that 8 Brigade had been circumvented and 1 Para went in of their own volition.

There was no order

15.2.2.50 All the foregoing factors demonstrate clearly that even if 1 Para had a functional BID 150 unit in Derry it was not used to receive the order to go in. The account provided by the soldiers is false and there was no order to go in at all. 1 Para therefore entered the Bogside without authorisation from 8 Brigade.

15.2.2.51 After he realised that 1 Para had commenced the operation without permission it is alleged that Lieutenant Colonel Steele instructed the log keepers in the Operations Room at Ebrington to retrospectively insert an entry in the log reflecting authorisation from 8 Brigade. It is noteworthy that the order recorded in the Brigade log at serial 159 is commensurate with the level of permission sought by 1 Para in their last request. Lieutenant Colonel Steele could only assume that the operation prematurely launched by Colonel Wilford was the one he had requested.

15.2.2.52 Since the watchkeeper manning the Brigade net would not have heard any such transmission, Lieutenant Colonel Steele knew that he had to take personal responsibility for the alleged order from an early stage. He knew that if he took ownership of this serial that he would be the only person at 8 Brigade HQ who could speak to its veracity. Furthermore, by claiming that only 1 Para had secure means he excluded the resident battalions from the equation, leaving the officers in the Gin Palace as the only remaining people who could answer questions about the order to go in. Neither INQ 1853 or INQ 2033 made a statement in 1972, nor were they called to give evidence to Lord Widgery despite the allegations made by Mr McSparran or the controversy surrounding the order to go in.

15.2.3 If the order was given, in what terms was it given?

15.2.3.1 In the alternative, if it is accepted that there was an order to go in given by 8 Brigade it is submitted that the order was a direct order in precise terms. There was no ambiguity or difficulty in language requiring interpretation. The order is recorded in the 8 Brigade log at serial 159, W47.

159	1609		BM	Orders given to 1 PARA at 1607 hrs for 1 sub unit of 1 PARA to do scoop up OP through barrier 14. Not to conduct running battle down Rossville St.

15.2.3.2 Lieutenant Colonel Steele insisted at Widgery that the order recorded at serial 159 was only the gist of the order he gave to 1 Para. He explained to Widgery (after some prompting from his counsel[6]) and has maintained since that the order he gave was in the following terms: 1 Para to launch the arrest operation, with one of the sub units going through barrier 14 and a prohibition from conducting running battles down Rossville Street.

15.2.3.3 Brigadier MacLellan says the Brigade Major gave the order in his presence over the secure net. His recollection did not include reference to barrier 14. In his statement to Widgery at B1235 Brigadier MacLellan says that the orders were that:

"(a) The operation was to be launched forthwith to arrest as many rioters as possible in the area of the junction William Street/Rossville Street.

(b) 1 Para were not to conduct a running battle down Rossville Street and not to get involved with the Northern Ireland civil rights association marchers".

15.2.3.4 In his statement for the Widgery Inquiry Colonel Wilford says that he was "ordered to make arrests" (B950 paragraph 15). The only qualification which he says he received was that there were to be "no running battles" (B988 E). Colonel Wilford maintains that he did not receive any restriction as to the number of companies in the order (B1110.032 paragraph 87).

15.2.3.5 The officers manning the Gin Palace have no direct recollection of the terms of the order which they say came over the secure net. INQ 2033 states that they would have passed on the order word for word Day 352/159/5 to 352/160/13.

15.2.3.6 It is worth noting that the 1 Para log bears some resemblance to the order recorded in the Brigade log. It is recorded at serial 31, W90.

Serial	DTG	To	From	Event	Action
31	1610	9	+	Move 3 now through K14. Also C/S 1 No running battles

15.3 Should the order have been given?

15.3.1. The order to commence the arrest operation is timed in the Brigade log as having been given at 1607. At that time 8 Brigade knew or ought to have known that it was unnecessary, inappropriate and reckless in all the circumstances to launch an arrest operation at all.

15.3.2 As comprehensively exposed earlier in section 16.3, separation of the rioters from the marchers was never a key plank of the planning for the arrest operation. If it featured in the thinking of any of the soldiers at all on 30th January 1972 it was no more than an afterthought.

15.3.3 Whether or not separation was in fact a pre-condition enshrined in the planning of the arrest operation, it is submitted that separation never in fact occurred on the day.

15.3.4 Furthermore it is submitted that the rioting at barriers 12 and 14 had subsided to a level where there was no longer a need to disperse the crowd. As a result of the reduction in the numbers involved in the respective riots combined with the distance they were from the barriers, at the point the order was given there was no realistic prospect of arresting more than a few rioters.

15.3.5 Brigadier MacLellan and Lieutenant Colonel Steele either knew or ought to have known that the above circumstances prevailed at 1607.

15.3.6 The facts surrounding 8 Brigade's decision to launch

15.3.7 Brigadier MacLellan had made the decision to control the operation on 30th January 1972 from his Brigade Headquarters at Ebrington. Having no view of proceedings or live CCTV link 8 Brigade were entirely reliant on information relayed by units on the ground, both through the Brigade net and telephone land lines. As is demonstrated by Appendix I below all of the relevant pieces of information were in fact broadcast over the Brigade net and are recorded on the Porter tape.

15.3.8 No additional information was received by 8 Brigade to assist in their decision whether or not to launch the operation. Therefore the key source to consider when examining the propriety of 8 Brigade's decision to launch is the Porter transcript. It must be borne in mind however that the decision to launch any arrest operation was in the context of policing a large peaceful march with some civil disorder on the fringes. The table below contains all of the information available to Brigadier MacLellan in the run up to 1 Para entering the Bogside.

	361	0	76	People in the Creggan Road seem to be dispersing in a northerly direction suffering from the effects of CS gas, which was not thrown by us. Over.	1602
	362	76	0	Zero. I missed the first part of that transmission. Say it again. Over.
	363	0	76	76. Crowd in Creggan Road seem to be dispersing in a northerly direction. Over.
	364	76	0	Zero. Roger. Out.
	365	0	90A	Hello, Zero, this is 90A. There is now a crowd of about 500 on Fox's Corner being addressed from a loudspeaker van. These appear to be normal civil rights people. There's still a crowd of about 150 hooligans at junction Rossville Street/William Street. Over.	1603 1604 (3)
	366	90A	0	Zero. Roger. Out.
	367	0	90A	Hello, Zero, this is 90 Alpha. People at the moment are advancing on the House Martin-wrong, on serial 14, using a corrugated iron shield. Have you any idea yet what time it was 65 was going in? Over.	1609
	368	90A	0	Zero. Roger to your first. As for your second, leave that for the moment. Out.
	369	0	76	Zero, this is 76. Most of the people in Creggan Road which are dispersing are children, women and old people. Out.	1609

	370	90A	65	Hello, 90, this is 65. Can you lift barrier 14, where our call sign will be coming through? Over.
	371	65	90A	90 Alpha. Wait. Out.
	372	90A	65	Hello, 65, this is 90A, serial 14 now being lifted. Over.	1609
	373	65	90A	64 [sic], roger. Out.
	374	65	0	Zero. Roger. Out.
	375	0	61Y	Zero, this is 61 Yankee. The crowd as I see it now is about 70 in Chamberlain Street. The people on Aggro Corner have been driven away by the last fusillade of gas cartridges, are moving down towards the meeting, which has now in strength to I think about 200 people on the corner behind the Flats. Over.	1610
W129	376	61Y	0	Zero. Roger. 90 Alpha, acknowledge. Over.
	377	90A	0	90 Alpha, acknowledge. Over. 90 Alpha, did you hear that last from 61 Yankee? Over.
	378	0	90A	90 Alpha. No. Over.
	379	90A	0	Zero. Roger. There are 70 hooligans in Chamberlain Street. Ah, most of those who have dispersed from Aggro Corner are moving down, ah, are moving down Rossville Street. Over.
	380	0	90A	90 Alpha. Roger. Out.
	381	0	61Y?	Ah, Zero, the appearance of the pigs and four tonners in Rossville Street has now effectively moved all the crowd out of Chamberlain Street and they are now forming behind the Flats. Over.	1612

Porter Transcript Excerpts

15.3.9 The best anyone in possession of the above information could have said about the situation just before 1607 hours was that 500 or so people had gathered to hear speeches at Free Derry Corner and 150 or so rioters were present at the junctions of William Street/Rossville Street. In our submission, given the general drift of people away from the march and the rioting, it would also have been valid to surmise that there were people strung in unknown numbers between these two groups. On the basis of the above transmissions there was no way of knowing whether separation of the rioters and the marchers had occurred.

15.3.10 The photographs taken by Mr Tucker from Block 2 of the Rosville Flats (EP28.1 et seq) demonstrate the disposition of the crowd on Rossville Street and the wasteground immediately prior to and after the entry of 1 Para into Rossville Street. They show a large number of people spread around the wasteground at Rossville Street giving lie to notion that any kind of separation had occurred at all. Brigadier MacLellan told this Inquiry that he did not realise that this was the scene on Rossville Street (Day 263/6/6 to 263/6/14). It is our submission that although he couldnot be sure of the exact scene on Rossville Street Brigadier MacLellan suspected that there were many innocent bystanders along the length of the street.

15.3.11 It is submitted that the reason that Brigadier MacLellan placed the "no running battles" restriction on 1 Para was to prevent them becoming embroiled with the marchers.

15.3.12 Brigadier MacLellan and Lieutenant Colonel Steele between them knew that "spectators" were a regular feature at the fringes of riots. These persons, who did not assist those rioting, but who were curious to watch the confrontation with the army were present at every riot.

15.3.13 The staff at 8 Brigade HQ were aware that the topography of the entire area surrounding the Rossville Street/William Street junction made the likelihood of conducting a successful arrest operation targeted at rioters based at that junction minimal. From the junction of Rossville Street/William Street there are myriad routes available to escape snatch operations conducted either on foot or in vehicles. In fact soldiers conducting an operation in vehicles would be hampered in pursuit of fleeing rioters through the numerous side alleys and walkways in the vicinity of Columbcille Court, Glenfada Park and Abbey Park.

15.3.14 It is submitted that the riot was no more severe than usual and Brigadier MacLellan was not given any indication by the units on the ground that the situation was getting out of hand. In fact 22nd Lt AD told 8 Brigade at 1551:

"15 is clear, but serial 14 is suffering from a certain amount of stoning from the same hard core of hooligans on the Rossville Street/William Street corner" (W126, item 332).

15.3.15 Brigadier MacLellan conceded in his evidence that soldiers coming from barrier 12 would have faced considerable difficulty in making legal arrests, a matter which was of some concern to him prior to the march Day 262/98/14 262/102/3. In the event 8 Brigade did not make any attempt to ensure that 1 Para had been watching the stone throwing at barriers 12 and 14. As a result Brigadier MacLellan knew that any arrests made were in danger of being illegal arrests.

15.3.16 In the minutes leading up to 1607 Brigadier MacLellan, on the basis of the information he received, could not have believed:

(i) that separation of the rioters from the marchers existed, or

(ii) that an arrest operation against the remaining rioters was necessary or safe

15.3.17 For all of the above reasons at the time of launch 8 Brigade knew or ought to have known that there was no real prospect of arresting any more than a handful of stone throwers at the risk of putting Parachute Regiment soldiers into close proximity with large numbers of civil rights marchers.

15.4 Nature of the order given

15.4.1 Brigadier MacLellan, Lieutenant Colonel Steele, Colonel Wilford and other former soldiers have asked the Tribunal to accept that when Brigadier MacLellan gave 1 Para the order to commence the arrest operation he implicitly left Colonel Wilford carte blanche in the conduct of the operation.

15.4.2 The Tribunal in our submission ought to reject this argument completely. The former soldiers propounding this construct wish this Tribunal, over 30 years later, to retrospectively authorise actions which were expressly forbidden in plain English in the order actually given.

15.4.3 In our submission, if an order was given at all which is disputed, it is accurately recorded in the Brigade log at serial 159. This order is broadly reflected in the 1 Para log, except that the 1 Para log has A Company (C/S 1) moving in addition.

15.4.4 In effect 8 Brigade gave authorisation for 1 Para to conduct the operation requested at 1555: "He [Wilford] would like to deploy one of his sub units through barrier 14 around the back into the area William Street/Little James Street. He reckons if he does this he will be able to pick up quite a number of yobbos".

15.4.5 Brigadier MacLellan authorised a snatch operation to be conducted by C Company from barrier 14 up to the junction of William Street/Rossville Street. The Brigadier knew that rioters would flee down Rossville Street but did not want 1 Para soldiers to chase after them into the general crowd and so placed the "no running battles" limitation on the operation. His expectation was that, in line with the Operation Order, that it would be conducted on foot.

15.4.6 In our submission there is no mystery to the order given by Brigadier MacLellan. Reading more into the words than are present or disregarding portions of it are merely attempts to obfuscate simple English with illogical jargon.

15.5 Lack of liaison between units & no semblance of pincer movement

Colonel Wilford's O-Group

15.5.1 Colonel Wilford briefed his company commanders and battalion staff on 28th January 1972. Notes prepared for this purpose are at G94.562, with the hand-written version at B968.1. Wilford states at G94.562
"If the march takes place and confrontation becomes hostile, the battalion will deploy forward to break up the rioters and make the maximum number of arrests. At this stage I cannot give a detailed tactical plan. I will give the company deployment in our forming-up position and then give my concept of how I think the battle can go".
The notes are extremely sparse as acknowledged in Colonel Wilford's accompanying note B968.5

15.5.2 In his statement to this Inquiry Colonel Wilford says that whatever option he took it would be a pincer involving all three companies in order to conduct the operation B1110.027 paragraph 54.

A Company's planning and movement

15.5.3 Commander of A Company INQ 10 made a statement on 31st January 1972 including a Diary of Operations at C10.8. He states that he was given orders at 1612 to "advance into Lower Road and turn East into William Street to assist Sp Coy in their task of arresting rioters at the William St/Rossville St junction"[7]. He goes on to describe the outcome:

"My movement caused the rioters to my front to run in the direction of Sp Coy, where some of them were arrested".

It is implied in the above entry that A Company's movement was co-ordinated with that of Support Company in the overall scheme of the arrest operation.

15.5.4 However this alleged co-ordination is not reflected in any planning as understood by INQ 10. He says in his statement to this Inquiry at C10.3 paragraph 17 that he knew that A Company was on the right flank of the operation, and that his task was a simple one:

"'A' Company's task was simple – if there was rioting in front of us then we were to make arrests".

In oral evidence INQ 10 gave more detailed evidence about his understanding of his mission that day:

A. As far as I was concerned, A Company -- as I recall, A Company was -- my task was to arrest rioters to my front, wherever my front might happen to be.

Q. So if one goes back to your operational order at B1343.8, and if one looks at the second sentence:

"... I received orders for an operation in Londonderry from my commanding officer. These operations were to commence on 30th January 1972, and involved my company in a support role. Its task was to arrest any members of the NICRA march who were rioting in my area."

Then you give:

"To this end I gave orders to my to cover.

"Mission. To arrest persons involved in riotous behaviour."

So again, does that operational order tend to [7] INQ 10 no longer has a recollection of the actual order which came through to him. (Day 289/16/9 to Day 289/16/12) confirm that your function was to arrest rioters who were operating ahead of you or to your front, as you have just indicated?

A. Unless I was ordered to do something -- to operate elsewhere. Day 289/44/1 to Day 289/44/21

15.5.5 Furthermore the assertion that A Company's movement caused rioters to run and be arrested by Support Company does not stand up to scrutiny. It is accepted that Support Company did not arrest any rioters at the junction of William Street/Rossville Street. In fact they never stopped at the junction of William Street/Rossville Street. If A Company turned left down William Street, the most they could have seen of Support Company would have been a convoy of Pigs sweeping across the junction from left to right and out of sight. It is most improbable that anyone fleeing snatch squads moving west down William Street would have run in a straight line into the waiting arms of soldiers at the east end given the myriad escape routes offered by Little Diamond, Abbey Street and the various burnt out buildings leading into Columbcille Court. Taken at its highest, on 31st January 1972 INQ 10 could only have guessed in hindsight that some of the people that his company chased from the area of William Street/Lower Road in fact ended up being arrested by Support Company on Rossville Street.

15.5.6 Rather than joining up with Support Company at junction of William Street/Rossville Street (sic) INQ 10's current recollection was that his company ended up among some buildings but not on open ground (Day 289/27/14 to Day 289/28/1). His 1972 Diary of Operations puts the distance covered by A Company as 100m, which is only as far as the junction of Abbey Street.

15.5.7 INQ 10 at all times expected to go in on foot. This would have been in accordance with the Operation order G95.570 In his 1972 Diary of Operations, under "Crowd control" at C10.8 INQ 10 ordered as follows:

"a. Snatch squads. To op using cover men (armed with SLR) and baton gun men.

b. Movement. In tactical bounds of no more than 20m.

c. Cover. No movement without cover."

15.5.8 He confirmed in unequivocal terms at Day 289/18/6 to Day 289/19/2 that he anticipated that the operation would be conducted on foot:

"MR RAWAT: So, to affect these arrests, you would have had to deploy on foot.

A. Correct. Lightly clad, helmets and batons.

Q. So was consideration ever given to A company deploying in vehicles?

A. Well, you would not be using snatch squads -- it is possible to be using snatch squads and vehicles in tandem, but you would normally use the vehicles to get from A to B quickly then debus and snatch. But, you know, it depends on the situation. What I am trying to say here is simple: you cannot lay down -- well, you can and always attempt to lay down a plan as to what will happen. But all you can do in reality is to make sure that everybody is aware what the task is, the main task, and then you deploy according to the situation.

Q. But your recollection as to the operation -- or A Company's role in the operation on 30th January was that you deployed on foot?

A. That would be my expectation. However, if one of the other companies was in -- not so much in difficulty, but was exceptionally busy and needed additional assistance, we may well use vehicles to get to them.

15.5.9 The junction of Lower Road with William Street is some 300 metres away from the junction of William Street/Rossville Street. Given that INQ 10 had instructed his men to move in "tactical bounds of no more than 20m" it would have involved around 15 bounds with soldiers leapfrogging and providing cover the whole way down William Street to get to the junction of William Street/Rossville Street. The length of time required to undertake such a manoeuvre for all practical purposes excluded A Company from involvement in any arrest operation targeted at the William Street/Rossville Street junction. Rioters would have had adequate time to escape within the time that A Company had made their first few bounds. The simple geography of A Company's position put them out on a limb, incapable of linking with the other companies of 1 Para.

15.5.10 In the event Support Company entered the Bogside mounted in vehicles. They passed the William Street Rossville Street junction and stopped on the waste ground and on Rossville Street. As a result, A Company's advance on foot down William Street was rendered even more detached from Support Company's line of assault. A Company had not been instructed to enter in vehicles to link up with Support Company, and in fact it is submitted that they were not aware that Support Company had mounted their vehicles.

15.5.11 A Company were briefed to use snatch squads to arrest rioters in front of their barrier. They were never intended to be part of any larger manoeuvre.

C Company's planning and movement

15.5.12 Soldier 221A, the Company Commander of C Company does not have a current recollection of any briefings he received prior to 30th January 1972 (B2168.001 paragraph 4). He expected that he would have been given limitations and boundaries prior to the operation otherwise it would have just been "a general scrum" (Day294/185/2).

15.5.13 However Soldier 221A told this Inquiry that the operation planned was no different from normal snatch operations:

"Q. Do you recall whether this was to be an arrest operation of the kind that you had carried out in Belfast, as I understand it, therefore what might be called a snatch operation; no different?

A. No different.

Q. Was there any concept, as you understood it, that companies of the Parachute Battalion would encircle rioters and arrest them in that way?

A. Not encircle them, but possibly two companies working, co-ordinated together, pushing -- I mean, it was never the case to encircle people so that there is nowhere for them to disperse. The whole point about riot control or dispersing a riot situation is that there should be somewhere for the people to disperse to.

Q. That was why, Major, I asked you the question, because in paragraph 19 of your statement you do talk about going into disperse the rioters and arrest them. Would you like to look at that?

A. Yes.

Q. 2168.003, paragraph 19?

A. Yes, I have it here.

Q. "Two platoons went through the barrier on foot. The First Platoon intended to confront the rioters with the rest of the company following in support. The lead platoon chased the rioters west ..." and so on.

Your recollection now anyway is that the intention was to confront the rioters and disperse them by making them run away and catch as many as you could?

A. That is correct.

Q. Could it be that your memory today is entirely faulty and that there was in fact a known plan which you would have known, to encircle the rioters and, as it were, draw them back towards the barricades of the soldiers and arrest them in that way?

A. No.

Q. It is not a lapse of memory, you say that certainly was not the position as far as you were concerned?

A. That is correct". (Day 294/182/4 to 294/183/16)

There was no co-ordinated plan

15.5.14 From all the foregoing, it is clear that there was no prior planning involving a specific shape to the operation, whether designated stop lines or two pronged pincer movement. Wilford's claims in this regard are best case scenario hindsight planning.

15.5.15 Neither of the company commanders who would have constituted the snapping arms of the pincer or the hammer or anvil had any knowledge of prior planning of a pincer. Nor do they recollect such manoeuvres being co-ordinated over the Company net radio on the day. Their tasks as far as they were concerned were to arrest any rioters directly in front of their barriers.

15.6 Lack of control over operations

15.6.1 MacLellan failed to restrain 1 Para and impose his will on soldiers directly under his command. This was due in part to the pressure he was put under by 1 Para and the presence of Ford and his stated wish to see an arrest operation.

15.6.2 Lieutenant Colonel Steele failed to recognise the full scale of the incursion undertaken by 1 Para and failed to ensure that his order to withdraw was complied with.

15.6.3 Colonel Wilford lost control of his companies and failed to regain control.

15.7 Level of control retained by 8 Brigade over arrest operation

15.7.1 The Operation Order for Operation Forecast is unambiguous as to where the authority for the deployment of 1 Para lay on the day. Under "Tasks" it is stated:
"(1) (a) This operation will only be launched, either in whole or in part, on the orders of the Bde Comd." G95.570

15.7.2 It is obvious that in giving his order the Brigadier could not direct every single soldier, nor would he attempt to dictate the deployment and disposition of the individual platoons involved. However the key decision which was required of Brigadier MacLellan was whether he felt the rioting merited a full 3 company launch or a more limited approach.

15.7.3 Furthermore, whatever latitude is given to a subordinate in the implementation of his orders, it is submitted that military practice dictates that a commander never cedes certain portions of his authority. In the ordinary course of army business a commander retains the right to give any of the following orders at any time in the execution of an operation:

(i) to commence the operation (unless a criteria based order has been clearly drafted, specifying exact criteria, which once fulfilled automatically grant authority to commence to the subordinate)
(ii) to postpone the operation, for a set period or indefinitely
(iii) to draft reserves to assist in the operation
(iv) to scale down the force involved in the operation
(v) to vary the objectives of the operation
(vi) to abort the operation, at any time prior to and during the operation

15.7.4 In wartime, the retention of instantaneous tactical and strategic control is essential to the hierarchical functioning of an army. It allows a commander to continuously re-evaluate the overall situation, which a subordinate on the ground cannot do, while also minimising the scope for maverick actions by individuals in the chain of command. It is submitted that in a policing context such as that of 30th January 1972 it was or ought to have been evident to those responsible for planning, that the retention of tactical and strategic control was of even greater importance than in a battlefield situation.

15.7.5 Brigadier MacLellan has not suggested that he was given orders by General Ford or General Tuzo to grant 1 Para any more autonomy than normal and therefore, in theory, he retained full control and responsibility for the arrest operation.

15.7.6 The argument advanced by various military witnesses (MacLellan, Wilford, Steele, Mike Jackson) was that Colonel Wilford was granted extremely wide discretion in the planning and execution of the arrest operation. General Sir Michael Jackson spoke at length on the concept of "mission command". He asserted that the mission to arrest as many hooligans as possible was delegated to 1 Para as a battalion to execute as it saw fit once the order to go had been given.

15.7.7 Whilst it is accepted that Colonel Wilford was the appropriate officer to formulate the details of the plan [albeit, as submitted previously, after consulting local officers from resident battalions] at the point that he submitted his proposed plan to the Brigadier in the form of a request for permission his latitude ended and Brigadier MacLellan's discretion began.

15.7.8 It is submitted that the conduct of the soldiers on the ground does not accord with an understanding congruent with the level of delegation now claimed. The detailed requests by 1 Para outlining the scope and intended target for their operation indicate a level of subordination on the part of Colonel Wilford incompatible with a claim of complete autonomy. Furthermore the restrictions contained within the alleged order from 8 Brigade when given their ordinary meaning strongly contradict any claim to carte blanche.

15.7.9 If Brigadier MacLellan did indeed concede authority to Colonel Wilford in the manner suggested by General Jackson, his actions constituted a dereliction of duty, and an act of negligence and/or recklessness in all the circumstances.

15.8 ROLE AND RESPONSIBILITY OF WILFORD AND LODEN

15.8.1 8th. Brigade had achieved its professed purpose of containing the march by 4.05 pm. There were still some rioters active in the William Street/Rossville Street area but these could have been dispersed without difficulty. Had the arrest operation not been launched or had it been launched in accordance with the terms of either Operation Forecast, or the Order as reportedly given by 8th Brigade at W47 serial 159, which authorised "1 sub unit of 1 Para to do scoop up op through barrier 14. Not to conduct running battle down Rossville St.", then it is probable that the rest of the day would have passed off without further serious incident.

Wilford and Loden were the 2 most senior officers responsible for the command and control of 1 Para on the day.

15.8.2 Wilford General Responsibilities

Wilford as the Commanding Officer ought to have been in a position:

i. To receive and comply with 8th Brigade orders;

ii. To co-ordinate the activities of each of the 3 companies directly under him;

iii. To direct their officers to ensure compliance with his precise instructions;

iv. To maintain an overview of everything that was going on;

v. To ensure that communications with each company was sufficient to enable him to have the information necessary to a detailed understanding of the current deployment and engagements of each company and its sub units;

vi. To redirect the disposition of troops in light of developing events;

vii. To determine whether the situation on the ground required any alteration to the original concept of the plan;

viii. To inform Brigade if the original concept had to be altered;

ix. To keep Brigade informed as to any developments, whether in the execution of the plan as devised or adapted;

x. To comply with the orders of Brigade;

xi. To establish a headquarters that would provide a base for achieving the above objectives;

xii. To avoid becoming personally embroiled in a particular aspect of the operation;

To remain in his command post;

xiii To avoid personal action that would jeopardise his capacity to discharge his overall responsibilities.

xiv To provide leadership through the commissioned officers to ensure that the soldiers on the ground remained disciplined and under control.

15.8.3 Loden's General Responsibilities

i. To receive and comply with the orders of the Commanding Officer;

ii. To inform and instruct his men on the arrest operation;

iii. To co-ordinate the actions of each of the platoons under his command;

iv. To maintain proper communications with each of his platoons;

v. To maintain proper communications with 1Para H.Q.

vi. To inform 1 Para H.Q. of any developments in the deployment or engagements of his men;

vii. To inform 1 Para H.Q. of anything which might have had significance for the overall execution of the plan for the day;

viii. To maintain proper lines of command and control through his commissioned and non-commissioned officers;

ix. To ensure compliance with the concept of the operation;

x. To ensure that any alterations to the original plan were fully understood and complied with;

xi. To ensure that he understood the precise nature and extent of any order he was given;

xii. To ensure that he gave orders in precise and clearly understood terms to those under his command;

xiii. To set clearly defined parameters to the area of discretion to be exercised by each category of men under his command;

xiv. To direct and control fire by his men;

xv. To maintain a command post and position that would best assist in the discharge of his command functions;

xvi. To ensure compliance with his orders; xvii. To ensure that his men and their officers understood and respected the rules of engagement under the Yellow Card;

xviii. To ensure that he was aware of the deployment of his men and the reasons for such deployment;

xix. To ensure that his men were at all times under the effective control of their officers;

xx. To prevent a situation developing, which would result in, each soldier being left to make individual judgments as to a proper response to events.

15.8.4 Support Company in Action

The theoretical role of Colonel Wilford and Major Loden bears little, if any, resemblance to what occurred on the day.

Support Company entered the Bogside at approximately 4.10pm on Sunday the 30th January 1972. It entered contrary to all orders and expectations.

i. It entered without permission from 8th. Brigade, W47 serial159;

ii. It entered in vehicles and not on foot, contrary to Operation Forecast, G95.570 paragraph 9 (f);

iii. No arrest operation was carried out at the junction of William Street/Rossville Street

iv. A running battle was conducted down Rossville Street contrary to 8th Brigade Order, W47 serial 159

v. No order was given as to where any vehicle under the command of Major Loden was to stop

vi. It was left to the discretion of the commander of each vehicle where they might chose to stop and debus, Day 346/40/1 to Day 346/40/22;

vii. As the vehicles stopped, even temporarily, soldiers discharged rubber bullets without the identifying a particular target V48/12.26

viii. No officer expressed any disapproval at the firing of rubber bullets at random, and indeed such action must have been condoned

ix. Shots were fired over the heads of demonstrators, contrary to the Yellow Card, by Lieutenant N and Soldier P

x. Soldiers T and V fired in circumstances which were unauthorised by the Yellow Card

xi. 108 shots were fired by Support Company based upon the individual judgment of the firer rather than under the control or order of a superior officer

xii. Soldiers S and H laid down fire in a particular area contrary to the Yellow Card xiii. Soldiers failed to cease firing when ordered so to do, V3/5.30

xiv. As no officer ordered any individual soldier to fire, no officer can account for any those killed or injured on Bloody Sunday

xv. No contemporaneous explanation supplied by those who fired accounts for 13 deaths and 14 wounded

xvi. To this day there is no explanation as to where the members of Anti-tank Platoon went after they left the low wall at Kells Walk V48/11.38

xvii. There is no satisfactory explanation as to why Colonel Wilford should have left his command post and gone to observe events on the ground as opposed to controlling them from a distance xviii. There is no explanation as to what the officers were doing which prevented them from exercising command and control of their men and the fire in which they were engaged

xix. There is no satisfactory explanation as to the poverty of the communication between Loden and his Platoons, between Loden and 1 Para H.Q., and between 1 Para and 8th Brigade

xx. There is no explanation as to how one soldier could fire 19 shots at 1 target in 1 location and not one other soldier witness or 1 officer comment on this

15.8.5 Wilford's Responsibility on the Day

15.8.5. None of the radio logs records any authorisation for Support Company to enter the Bogside or instruction to any of the resident battalions to carry out any collateral act to assist the entry of Support Company. See 8th Brigade log W47 serial 159, 1 Para log W90 serial 31, or the Porter log W128 serial 370 .The Porter log records that 8th Brigade is informed at 16.13 that Support Company have moved south through the church to the area of William Street, directly south of the church, W129 serial 387.

Major Loden insisted, Day 345/28/1 to Day 345/28/6, that he was ordered to take Support Company through barrier 12 in vehicles. Thus it must be that the order for Support Company to go into the Bogside came from, either directly or indirectly, Colonel Wilford. Colonel Wilford had told the Widgery Tribunal, at B1110.93 paragraph D, that Brigade were perfectly aware that he had 2 companies to go through and that he intended to put them through. This may have been his settled intention but it was contrary to the express provisions of Operation Forecast at G95.570 paragraph 9f which specifically reserved the right to launch the arrest operation "in whole or in part" to 8th Brigade.

15.8.5.2 The primary responsibility of Colonel Wilford for what occurred after Support Company entered the Bogside lies in that he launched an arrest operation that had not been authorised in the terms in which a Company, which had not been authorised to take part, executed it, and in an area that had not been anticipated.

The misinformation furnished to 8th Brigade as to how Support Company had entered William Street through the church contributed to confusion and adversely affected the ability of Brigade to exercise proper control over the whole operation. W129 serial 387.

15.8.5.3 The last minute alteration to his proposed method of entry for Support Company, if Major Loden's evidence is corrected at Day 345/25/1 to Day 345/25/25, meant that Support Company were ill prepared, ill informed as to the situation on the ground and with little opportunity to apprise itself of what, if any, tactics would be appropriate.

Colonel Wilford gave no additional information or orders to the Commanding Officer of Support Company as to:

(i) How he should carry out the arrest operation;

(ii) Where he should be carried out;

(iii) How to co-ordinate his part in the operation with the other companies involved;

(iv) What his precise role was in the scheme of things;

(v) Where the other companies were located;

(vi) How the use of vehicles might be integrated into the plan;

(vii) The nature and the disposition of the crowd, which Support Company had not observed.

He also failed to:

(i) pass on the limitation that no running battles were to be conducted down Rossville Street;

(ii) provide any assistance how in all the circumstances Support Company soldiers could distinguish between those who had been rioting and other members of the crowd.

15.8.5.4 Colonel Wilford's behaviour in abandoning his command post at a crucial moment is inexplicable as he was thereby denying himself the critical input necessary to demonstrate leadership when it was most required. In abandoning his post he effectively abandoned command and control of the operation. His response to questioning on V3/7.10 demonstrates how hopelessly out of touch he was with events on the ground and, if he was not dissembling, how he was struggling for information that it was his duty to be apprised of as a prerequisite to the discharge of his command.

15.8.5.5 His assertion to the Widgery Tribunal that he checked with the men at Kells Walk wall and that they were in "perfect control", see B1110.70 paragraph E, rings rather hollow.

Colonel Wilford's anxiety to carry out an operation was achieved at the absolute failure to calculate the risk to innocent civilians, see B1110.98 paragraphs B to C. This failure infected every decision made in relation to the specifics of the execution of Operation Forecast and contributed with singular significance to the subsequent outcome.

15.8.5.6 Indeed the first omission of the day, the failure to inform Brigade that he had moved troops forward of the central blocking points, contrary to the Brigade Operations Order G95.578 paragraph 7 (e), to the Abbey Taxis building where they would attract the attention of the marchers as they would require to be protected by clearly visible soldiers on the post office flat roof, reflects a failure of understanding of the complexities of the situation that he was dealing with.

15.8.5.7 His failure to inform Brigade that a shot had been fired at his men at a time when he was seeking to put pressure on Brigade to launch an arrest operation into the Bogside cannot be explained away on the basis of lack of appreciation of its potential significance. The knowledge of the presence of armed men, in itself, would have to be weighed by Brigade in making its determination as to whether the arrest operation should proceed.

15.8.5.8 The fact that a shot had been fired at members of Machinegun Platoon would inevitably have lead to Brigade seeking further information as to all the circumstances which surrounded the firing including whether fire had been returned and whether any one had been hit or wounded. Such inquiries would have lead to the revelation of all that occurred in the vicinity of Abbey Taxis. Had such information been made available to 8th Brigade it must surely be problematic as to whether any arrest operation would have been authorised. It is difficult to avoid the conclusion that Colonel Wilford would have been unaware of the implications of the provision of accurate information to Brigade in respect of the "drainpipe shot".

15.8.6 Loden's Responsibility on the Day

15.8.6.1 Prior to entering the Bogside

15.8.6.2 Colonel Loden, the officer commanding Support Company, emphasised 2 important features of his role on the day, namely to maintain firm control over his men and ensure that he was in apposition to provide meaningful leadership by communication with the officers under his command and with Battalion H.Q.

15.8.6.2 The decision to locate Machine-Gun Company in the derelict building formerly occupied by Abbey Taxis was apparently taken in conjunction with Colonel Wilford, whose primary duty it was to inform Brigade of this change to the Brigade Operations Plan. The decision to locate Machine-Gun Platoon in this building had the collateral consequence of the deployment of some members of Mortar Platoon on the flat roof of the Post Office building to the east, P201. This immediately resulted in troops becoming visible and vulnerable to attack given that this disposition was both intrusive into the Bogside and isolated from the protection offered by the resident battalions.

15.8.6.3 At 1550hrs. Colonel Loden claimed that he heard one high velocity shot, fired from the direction of the Rossville Flats, at the Motor Platoon and this shot stuck the drainpipe on the Church, approximately four foot above their heads. A few moments later he heard several shots from the Machine-Gun Platoon and he turned and saw a man fall at the corner of a building on the south of William Street. This man was taken away. He spoke to the Platoon Commander on his forward link and was told that a nail bomber had been shot. See Day 345/40/9 to Day 345/42/12.

15.8.6.4 This account of events was never communicated to either 1 Para H.Q. on the battalion net, nor to Brigade on the Brigade net. There is no record of any such communication on the Porter tape.

The implications for implementation of the Brigade arrest operation were clear:

i. There was at least 1 gunman armed with a high velocity weapon operating from the Rossville Flats;

ii. That gunman was prepared to shoot soldiers who were exposed and vulnerable;

iii. There was a possibility that there could be other gunmen in other locations;

iv. That a gunman was prepared to shoot military personnel in spite of the presence of a large crowd of innocent civilians;

v. That there was at least one nail bomber in William Street aided and abetted by others;

vi. That nail bomber was prepared to throw an anti personnel explosive device in spite of the presence of large numbers of innocent civilians;

vii. That there might be other nail bombers in the Bogside;

viii. That there was a reasonable possibility that at least one person had been shot dead by a soldier or soldiers from Machine-Gun Platoon;

ix. That if one person had been shot dead there was a possibility this would in turn provoke a more violent reaction from paramilitary organisations;

x. That 1 Para would be expecting to become engaged in a gun battle if they entered the Bogside;

xi. That innocent civilian lives would be placed at risk if an arrest operation was launched;

xii. That any proposed arrest operation would have to take account of all of the above matters.

Had Brigade been informed of the information in relation to the incidents on William Street then there must have been the real possibility that the arrest operation would have been launched and certainly not without the closest supervision and direct control of Brigade.

15.8.6.5 That such critical information was with held is inexplicable, except on the basis that I Para was so committed to the launch of the arrest operation that it regarded the risk to life as incidental and, therefore, did not wish any information which might jeopardise that launch to be made available. See Day 345/5320 to Day 345/54/23. Loden could provide no answer as to why he had not informed his own battalion of what he witnessed.

15.8.6.6 After entering the Bogside

The order in which Support Company vehicles entered the Bogside was such as to isolate Mortar Platoon from Composite and Anti-Tank Platoons. This effectively eliminated two thirds of the available troops from having anything other than a peripheral impact on an arrest operation. This order was probably due the hurried alterations to the plan brought about by the unfeasibility of putting large numbers of soldiers over the Church wall, rather than any considered strategic advantage. See Day 345/61/6 to Day345/63/25.

15.8.6.7 It did have the direct consequence that Mortar and Anti-Tank Platoons were attacking down Rossville Street when Lieutenant N had already fired over the heads of persons in the area of Eden Place. The sound of such fire would have led them to believe that if firing was in accordance with the Yellow Card that there were hostile elements engaging the soldiers who had deployed ahead of them. This in turn would have led them to interpret the situation as one in which the use of lethal force was necessary.

Indeed their arrival was so delayed that the arrest operation, in the terms envisaged at their briefings, was effectively lost. The only method available to them to detain those who had by this stage gone beyond the range of capture was to shot them.

15.8.6.8 There were a few stragglers left behind by the dispersal of the main body of the crowd and these are shown on V48/12.40.

15.8.6.9 However the behaviour of Colonel Loden is extraordinary in that he and his radio operators, if their evidence is to be believed, began to carry out arrests once they had debussed. See Day 346/9/7 to Day 346/10/22

This conduct meant that he was out of communication with his units at a time when there was or had been shooting going on and persons had already been killed or wounded, of which he seems to have been totally unaware until much later in the evening. Colonel Loden claims to have regained control quickly, see Day 346/7/1 to Day 346/7/11, however the real question is whether or not he was ever in command and control of his company on that day.

15.8.6.10 At Day 346/43/1 to Day/346/43/15 he stated that his authority was delegated through the platoon commanders, that he communicated with them on the radio and they told him what was going on.

15.8.611 However, in essence this meant that during the 6 to 10 minutes in which 13 people were killed and 14 wounded, in the confined area around Rossville Street, Colonel Loden was not personally aware of the events unfolding before his eyes, but was dependant upon reports from the Platoon Commanders. This in spite of the fact that his command vehicle was positioned in the centre of the area of the alleged engagement, that he can be seen on V48/12.26 occupying the perspex turret, and that directly in front and to the left of him at least 7 persons were killed and 4 wounded.

Thus for whole period of the shooting " well, short moments, 10 or 15 minutes, the platoon commanders are there, that is their job and they are exercising control".

15.8.6.12 There is no evidence from any source, other than Colonel Loden himself, as to what he was actually doing during the shooting. The radio logs and the Porter tape reveal not merely a dearth of reliable information as to what was happening, but an absence of any information. See Day 346/21/15 to Day 346/24/15.

15.8.6.13 His failure to account adequately for his own actions is also extended into an inability to account for the actions of his men. Video 48 at 11.28 shows approximately 18 men from the Anti-Tank Platoon rounding the wall at Kells Walk. These men disappear in the direction of the entrance of Glenfada Park North. Additional footage and photographs show that they do not reappear, their position is taken up by members of Composite Platoon and that Loden's vehicle moves into the gable of block 1.The movement of this body of men occurs directly in front of the command vehicle. Colonel Loden can offer no explanation as to what these men are doing or where they went. See Day 346/37/8 to Day 346/37/16.

15.8.6.14 This movement is totally at odds with the evidence advanced as to the numbers of soldiers who were in Glenfada Park North. It is, therefore, at odds with the accounts furnished by the soldiers as to what happened there. The concept of command and control must surely be predicated upon at least a basic understanding of the deployment of soldiers and the reasons for that deployment. See Day 346/37/17 to day 346/38/4.

15.8.6.15 The only record of action being taken that day by Loden to exercise his authority is recorded on V3/5.30. This shows an interview to camera by Gerald Seymour and in the background Loden can be clearly heard to shout, "Cease fire". See Day 346/55/25/ to Day 346/56/23.

15.8.6.16 His men ignored this order and further shots can be heard. He subsequently repeated the order in fuller terms for the benefit of the camera. The shooting that can be heard on tape was shooting along the eastern pavement of Rossville Street. There does not appear to be any satisfactory explanation in terms of the other evidence for this shooting.

15.8.6.17 Statements taken from the members of Support Company who had fired and the Shot Plot prepared by Colonel Loden later in the day where accepted by him as being as accurate a picture as the honesty of his men and the events of the day would allow. See Day 346/75/23 to Day 346/80/20. The loyalty displayed by Colonel Loden in accepting the versions of events as related by his men far from being commendable was precisely the type of loyalty, which could be exploited to mask the truth of not only what happened but also what Colonel Loden must have known to have happened. The specific reference in the Battalion Log to 2 dead bodies in Chamberlain Street must have come from Loden as he was the only officer in a position to communicate with the Gin Palace. It, therefore, still remains to be explained how such misleading information could have been passed to Battalion and forwarded to Brigade yet neither was informed as to the presence of 3 bodies in a pig beside the command vehicle. See Day 347/20/2 to Day 347/20/17.

15.8.6.18 The aspect of command and control that depended upon the provision and receipt of accurate information was undermined to the point at which it was not merely rendered ineffective but impossible. This failure provided a ready excuse for the excesses that took place. Colonel Loden's claim, like that of Colonel Wiford, that he was firmly in command and control of his men as directed through his Platoon Commanders during the crucial period, is little more than casuistry.

15.8.7 Conclusion

Bloody Sunday was the result of a combination of many complex factors. The personal responsibility of Colonel Wiford and Colonel Loden is direct and significant. Their determination to achieve the launch of an arrest operation was at the expense of:

i. Proper planning;
ii. The provision of current and accurate information to Brigade;
iii. The provision of current and accurate information to the Gin Palace;
iv. The exercise of command and control;
v. The specific orders issued by Brigade;
vi. A controlled arrest operation;
vii. Exercising any measure of restraint upon the soldiers on the ground;
viii. Having any regard to the risk to life of innocent civilians.

This comprehensive disregard for their general and specific responsibilities was the immediate cause of the tragedy of the day. It provided the means. It and many other factors provided the reasons.

APPENDIX I

COMPREHENSIVE NATURE OF PORTER TRANSCRIPT

The Adequacy of Porter Transcript

The key items of documentary evidence in the matters of orders and operational control are the Porter Tape and the 8 Brigade log.

It is submitted that the Porter tape recorded all transmissions broadcast over the Brigade net during the material time of the day.

Between 1531 and 1619 (serials 116 to 171) there are 10 entries in the 8 Brigade log which have no corresponding transmission on the porter transcript. They are serials: 118, 121, 138, 140, 142, 144, 151, 159,163, 167, some of which appear in the table below.

Serial	DTG	To	From	Event	Action
118	1533		RRF	Fire Station. Report of 6 youths wanted in connection with shooting incident. Details later
151	1600		Press	Belfast Telegraph estimate crowd 3000
159	1609		BM	Orders given to 1 PARA at 1607 hrs for 1 sub unit of 1 PARA to do scoop up OP through barrier 14. Not to conduct running battle down Rossville St.
163	1612		FATO C	Prisoner hel went to MAIDSTONE as detailed should have been crumlin road	Check with G3 Int + Osborne booked as MAIDSTONE
167	1615		2RGJ	Paddy Devlin passed through road block towards Derry

From the remaining entries serials 121, 138, 140, 142, and 144 are all sitreps sent to HQNI. They were rear communications which would have been sent via TELEX and would not feature on 8 Brigade Net.

With regard the other non-corresponding entries, press enquiries were normally made over the telephone (151), while helicopter pilots had their own radio frequency (163) [EVIDENCE]. It is likely that the RRF and RGJ communications were given over the telephone from their respective Battalion HQs (118 & 167).
The only outstanding operational communication during this time which is recorded on the Brigade log but does not appear on the Porter tape is serial 159, the alleged order to go in, which was sent over the secure link.

The absence of other entries in the Brigade log from battalion HQs to 8 Brigade demonstrate that (aside from the RUC) MacLellan and Steele had no other source of information for sitreps on crowd movement and rioting. Moreover it reflects the fact that all the units on the ground found it desirable to channel information over the Brigade Net so that any unit involved in the operation on the ground could be apprised of the situation to be ready to deal with unforeseen eventualities.

Consequently, when considered in conjunction with the 8 Brigade log, the Porter transcript provides for all purposes a word for word account of army communications between 1531 (when barriers 12 and 13 were being closed) and 1619 hours (at which time people were running up Westland Street away from 1 Para).

16.1 General Introduction and Summary of Submissions

16.1.1 Damien Donaghy and John Johnston were both shot and wounded in what has been commonly referred to as the 'Laundry waste ground' on William Street. They were the first persons to be shot by the Parachute Regiment on Bloody Sunday, approximately fifteen minutes before Support Company's entry into Rossville Street. It is apparent from the evidence that Damien Donaghy was shot first, followed by Mr Johnston. No other person suffered a gunshot wound in Sector 1.

16.1.2 Two soldiers, Corporal A and Private B admit to opening fire at an alleged nail bomber in the vicinity of the waste ground between the Nook Bar and the Castle Laundry on the southern side of William Street. Corporal A and Private B were part of a group of soldiers of the Machine Gun Platoon who had taken up position in the derelict Abbey Taxis building on the northern side of William Street. This building, with nine windows which face in an easterly direction, can be seen in P201.

16.1.3 Corporal A was positioned behind a first floor window and the trajectories of both his shots can be seen in P1. Private B was positioned on the ground floor. The trajectories of his three shots can be seen in P2 and P3.

16.1.4 The descriptions provided by Corporal A and Private B of their intended targets do not correspond with the physical descriptions of Damien Donaghy and John Johnston, or the clothing which they were wearing on that day.

16.1.5 Soldier A claimed that the alleged nail bomber on whom he opened fire was approximately 5'6" tall, had fair hair and wore a blue cardigan or windcheater[1]. Soldier B told the RMP that the target at which he fired wore a dark coloured windcheater and was of average height. B12.

16.1.6 Damien Donaghy confirmed to the Tribunal when he gave oral evidence that his hair was black, and curly, and that he wore Wrangler jeans and jerkin, and a shirt and round neck jumper Day 070/22/11 to Day 070/23/9. John Johnston was dressed in an overcoat, a tweed jacket, grey trousers, white shirt and tie and a thick woolly cardigan Day 048/154/9 to Day 048/154/11. It would appear therefore, that according to the evidence of the soldiers, neither Damien Donaghy nor John Johnston was shot by a soldier.

16.1.7 Damien Donaghy and John Johnston were then helped from the waste ground to the home of Mrs Brigid "Ma" Shiels at Columbcille Court, where they were treated by Doctors Raymond McClean and Kevin Swords, and Sergeant John Lafferty of the Order of Malta. Father Joe Carolan then transported both to Altnagelvin Hospital separately.

16.1.8 An Official IRA volunteer fired one round from a 303 rifle from the Columbcille Court area in response to the wounding of Mr Donaghy and Mr Johnston at soldiers on the flat roof annexed to the Presbyterian Church. It is submitted that this is in all likelihood the 'drainpipe shot'.

16.1.9 In our submission, the evidence supports the following conclusions:

(i) Both Damien Donaghy and John Johnston were shot by members of the Machine Gun Platoon.

(ii) Damien Donaghy and John Johnston were unarmed.

(iii) They were shot deliberately – not accidentally – and without any justification.

[1] RMP Statement dated 31st January, 1972 B1;

(iv) Damien Donaghy and John Johnston had not handled a nail bomb at any time on Bloody Sunday. In addition, they had not acted in support of any person handling a nail bomb or any other lethal weapon on Bloody Sunday.

(v) Damien Donaghy and John Johnston were not in the vicinity of any civilian bomber when they were shot. Nothing was taking place in the vicinity of the laundry waste ground at the time they were shot which would have led the soldiers in Abbey Taxis to believe that their lives or those of their colleagues were at risk.

(vi) There are no "missing casualties" – Damien Donaghy and John Johnston were the only two persons shot and wounded in Sector 1.

(vii) No one was shot dead in Sector 1.

16.2.1 Damien Donaghy

Damien "Bubbles" Donaghy was fifteen years old on Bloody Sunday. He was the first, and also the youngest person to be shot on Bloody Sunday. His parents were both deceased, and Damien and his brother lived with their grandparents in the Creggan. He was an apprentice engineer, attending the local Government Training Centre. He was also a promising footballer with local club Derry Athletic and had the potential to play at a professional level. Damien had no criminal record or political affiliations. He is now married with four children.

16.2.2 John Johnston

John Johnston was 59 years old. He was married to Margaret. They did not have any children. John had worked in the drapery trade for most of his adult life and in January 1972 was manager of a local drapery store, a position he held until his death in June 1972. He had no criminal record and no political affiliations.

16.2.2.1 Removal to Hospital

16.2.2.2 Father Carolan has given a statement to this Tribunal at H3.1. He also gave a statement to the Widgery Tribunal[2] (but did not give oral evidence) and to the Sunday Times[3]

16.2.2.3 His statement to Eversheds was signed on 30 July, 1999, a very short time before he died after having suffered from a long illness. In our submission, the accounts that he provided in 1972 are much more reliable than that offered to this Inquiry. He told the Treasury Solicitor that he had gone to the Creggan to get his car at the request of Dr McClean, who had advised that Mr Johnston be taken to hospital first:

> "...I proceeded to Columbcille Court down William Street, put Mr Johnston into the car and set off for hospital. Castle Gate was sealed off so I went to the top of Waterloo Street to find Butcher Gate was sealed off.
> I was ordered by a soldier to try the lower gate – Castle Gate. I did so and was forbidden exit even though I told the Army and R.U.C. members there that I was sent down from the upper gate. I told them that I had a man in the car who was dying...I continued protesting vehemently and it was only when I proceeded to remove the barricade myself that they relented and let me through.

[3] H3.12 to H3.18

After taking Johnston to the hospital I returned and took Donaghy to the hospital[4]..." H3.9

16.3 Injuries sustained

16.3.1 Damien Donaghy was wounded on the right thigh. This is apparent from the heavy strapping that is visible around it in P750. The Tribunal will be aware, however, of inaccurate reports from Doctor Fenton (D0740[5] and D0762[6]) which state that Damien Donaghy was wounded on the left thigh. It would appear that the most reliable note of the injury Damien Donaghy sustained is at D0767[7] which notes that he suffered a wound to the right thigh with comminuted fractures. The entrance wound was to the front of the thigh, and a large exit wound measuring three inches was on the postero-lateral aspect of the thigh. No metal fragments were recovered from his wound.

16.3.2 Dr Shepherd and Mr O'Callaghan commented that the track of the wound through the thigh was more likely to be from front to back than reverse, and that no comment could be made in respect of the nature of the projectile. E10.004

16.3.3 John Johnston was wounded on the left shoulder and right hand. He also received a minor wound to his right hand[8] D0808

[4] Damien Donaghy's account of his removal to hospital can be found at AD120.11 paragraphs 14 to 15 and at Day 070/19/21 to Day 070/20/2
[5] Entry on 'Record of Admissions', 10 May, 1972
[6] Letter from Doctor Fenton to Dr Cosgrove, 10 May, 1972
[7] Report prepared for DS D Cudmore, 7 February, 1972
[8] Report of DS Cudmore

Mr Bennett noted that John Johnston suffered gun shot wounds of the right shoulder and lateral aspect of the right thigh. Both wounds were "through and through", although a small piece of metal was taken from the wound in the leg. (D0801)[9] Mr Bennett's remark regarding the wound to John Johnston's right shoulder is inaccurate. This is apparent from P755 and P756.

16.3.4 Two fragments of metal recovered from John Johnston's leg wound were submitted to DIFS for examination by Dr Martin, who concluded that the "copper jacket" was consistent with the base of a 7.62 calibre rifle bullet. (D0804) Dr Shepherd and Mr O'Callaghan comment that Dr Martin does not provide any details as to why he arrived at that conclusion. (E10.005), and their own views are that the multiple injuries sustained by John Johnston indicate that the bullet (or bullets) were "fragmented prior" to striking Mr Johnston. (ibid).

I16.3.5 In May 1972, he was readmitted to hospital, and he died on 16 June, 1972.

16.4 Sequence of Photograph/Video

16.4.1 There are no photographs of Damien Donaghy on the march. The only photographs in which he appears are those taken by Larry Doherty of the Derry Journal as he was treated for his wounds at the home of Brigid Shiels, at 8a Columbcille Court:

i) P751: Damien Donaghy being treated for a gunshot wound to the right leg in Mrs Shiels' flat in Columbcille Court.

ii) P750: shows Damien Donaghy having had his right leg heavily strapped. This would appear to have been taken after P751

[9] Letter from Mr Bennett to the RUC, dated 7 February,1972

16.4.2 As with the case of Damien Donaghy, there are no photographs of John Johnston, with the exception of those taken by Larry Doherty as he received treatment in Mrs Shiels' flat:

i) P755 and P756: Dr Raymond McClean can be seen examining the wound to Mr Johnston's shoulder;

ii) P757: Mr Johnston receiving attention on the floor of the house by Sergeant Johnny Lafferty of the Order of Malta:

16.4.3 John Johnston can also be seen in Video 3 being assisted by Father Joe Carolan to his car as he prepared to take him to Altnagelvin Hospital.[10]

16.5 Civilian evidence

16.5.1 It is clear that Damien Donaghy and John Johnston were shot in the waste ground between the Nook Bar[11] and the Castle Laundry. P199 clearly shows the position of the waste ground. Some witnesses place Damien Donaghy and John Johnston on the waste ground to the east of Abbey Street, sometimes referred to as the 'Grandstand Bar waste ground'. We would adopt Christopher Clarke QC's suggestion that that may be the result of witnesses confusing one waste ground for another Day 011/15/14 to Day 011/15/15.

It is also clear that this confusion has been greatly informed by the presence of a square on the map Q12 at grid reference K09. This building, it has been suggested was an'ice house' [12] used by public houses to store ice in the days prior to refrigeration. Other witnesses have suggested it may have been a previous site of a bookmaker's office.[13]

16.5.2 Whatever it was, it had been demolished by January 1972 but for some reason had been depicted on the map. It is submitted that this confused a significant number of witnesses when they came to be interviewed by the Inquiry. At least six witnesses have placed the shooting of Damien Donaghy and/or John Johnston on the Abbey Street waste ground.[14] It should also be noted that Counsel for a majority of the soldiers has also indicated that the area in which Damien Donaghy is not "seriously contradicted".[15]

16.5.3 The fact that some witnesses have almost certainly identified the wrong waste ground is explicable by the mapping confusion. However, this isolated error does not detract from their evidence, which in many other respects, greatly assist the Tribunal.

DAMIEN DONAGHY

16.5.4 Damien Donaghy provided a short interview to Detective Sergeant Cudmore AD120.17. He also provided a statement to John Doherty, Solicitor's Apprentice AD120.1 in 1972 and interviews to the Sunday Times Insight Team AD120.2 and also Fulvio Grimaldi AD120.26 have been attributed to him, which he does not recollect giving, Day 070/50/4 to Day 070/50/24. He provided a statement to the Inquiry at AD120.9. He did not give evidence to the Widgery Inquiry as he was still in hospital. He gave oral evidence to this Tribunal on Day 70.

> "I did not throw any nail bombs or petrol bombs. Shortly after I went into hospital, my clothes were taken away for forensic examination. Nothing came of this and I was never prosecuted. The clothes were never returned. I view what happened to me as attempted murder. I never saw any gunmen or nail bombers. It was a peaceful march." AD120.8 paragraph 19

16.5.5 He confirmed he attended the march with Alex McGuiness, Sean O'Neill, Liam Doherty, James Shiels and possibly John McGee Day 70/2/6 to Day 70/3/12.

16.5.6 He was standing at the Nook Bar when he first noticed soldiers the Abbey Taxis Building AD120.9 paragraph 5, AD120.16.

16.5.7 He previously provided conflicting evidence in relation to whether or not he threw stones on Bloody Sunday. Upon taking the oath he immediately clarified the position. He confirmed that he was one of a group of boys who threw stones and bottles at soldiers that he could see on the ground floor in the Abbey Taxis building Day 70/1/20 to Day 70/2/1. He was asked during his evidence why he had previously stated on occasion that he had not thrown stones. His reply was as follows:

> "At that time I was a bit afraid in a way in case I would be charged with rioting, but another way I was afraid – I thought it might give the soldiers credibility for shooting me, because I threw stones. Day 070/20/10 to Day 070/20/13.

16.5.8 There were not many marchers left at this stage and he was approximately 20 to 30 feet from the soldiers Day 70/7/11 to Day 70/8/18.

16.5.9 Mutual insults were traded between the soldiers in the Abbey Taxis building and the youths. He was certain that "no petrol bombs or nail bombs were thrown during this period" and that he saw no one with any sort of weapon. As he was about to make his way towards his cousin Catherine Roddy's house at Garvan Place in the Rossville Flats, two rubber bullets[16] were fired and one ricocheted off a wall not far from where he was (See AD120.27).

16.5.10 Intending to pick it up as a souvenir, he took about three steps towards the rubber bullet. He had not got to within 20 or 30 feet of where it ended up when he felt a jab in his right leg. In oral evidence he said that he was just into the waste ground Day 070/14/12 to Day 070/14/16. He fell immediately onto his back. He was unable to hear any shot being fired beforehand. It is Damien Donaghy's recollection when he gave oral evidence that he was in the vicinity of the gable end of the eastern side of the waste ground near the Castle Laundry when he was shot, Day 070/24/20 to Day 070/24/12, Day 070/30/16 to Day 070/32/2.

16.5.11 Whilst on the floor he heard two gunshots AD120.23, AD120.6 paragraph 11, AD120.2. These occurred possibly ten or twenty seconds later Day 070/17/11 to Day 070/17/13. He did not see John Johnston shot Day 070/17/24.

16.5.12 He was then carried to 8A Columbcille Court to Mrs Shiels house. He knows that two of the people who carried him were John McGee and Michael Deakin.

[16] One soldier in the Machine Gun Platoon, INQ 588, admits to firing between 20 to 30 baton rounds from the Abbey Taxis building C588.4 paragraph 16

16.5.13 He was placed on the sofa. Within a short period of time, Sergeant John Lafferty of the Knights of Malta arrived and placed a tourniquet on his leg (P751, P750). Dr McClean arrived later and bandaged him up. Eibhlin Laffery, Jim McDaid, Dr Kevin Swords, Father Carolan and Father George McLaughlin all attended the house as well.

16.5.14 During his oral evidence to the Tribunal Damien Donaghy rejected entirely the allegation of Soldier A:

> "Q. "Two nail bombs were then thrown and they exploded very close to us." Did anything like that happen?
>
> A. That is lies.
>
> Q. Was anything being thrown that might have appeared to be a nail bomb?
>
> A. No.
>
> Q. Were there any explosions or bangs at this stage?
>
> A. The only bangs was the sound of rubber bullets."

16.5.15 Counsel for the Soldiers made clear to Damien Donaghy that he was not suggesting to him that he threw a nail bomb on Bloody Sunday. He explained to him that he would not have been shot unless he, or someone very close to him did something which led two soldiers "almost simultaneously, independently and honestly to believe that you, or whoever it was, was in the process of being about to throw a nail bomb" Day 070/3029/25 to Day 070/30/15.

16.5.16 The witness replied to Mr Glasgow, "You have made your position clear, but you are wrong." Day 070/30/12 to Day 070/3013.

16.5.17 He also made clear to Mr Glasgow that the only person he saw shot in this area was himself Day 070/31/17 to Day 070/32/2.

16.5.18 John Johnston provided a statement to the Treasury Solicitor AJ5.3. He gave oral evidence to Lord Widgery and provided an interview to the Sunday Time Insight Team AJ5.1-2. There is a map attached to the interview that purports to mark the position where he was shot and where he saw Damien Donaghy propped against the eastern gable wall adjoining the Castle Laundry waste ground AJ5.9.

> "I can tell you with all truth, I never heard a shot nor any bomb before I was hit, not a solitary thing did I hear except thr (sic) rubber bullets and the stones. How could anyone pick me as a gunman, there I am walking away with my back to the troops. They were just shooting at anything, like herrings in a barrel." AJ5.2

16.5.19 This view was reiterated in his undated Treasury Solicitor statement:

> "I did not have a weapon of any kind nor did anyone else including the wounded boy, as far as I could see. I cannot see any reason for the troops to assume that any offensive action was being taken against them by a civilian.

> I heard no other shooting and I heard no nail bombs or anything similar." AJ5.3, WT7.77 G

16.5.20 In his interview with the Sunday Times Insight Team given on 22nd February 1972, John Johnston pointed out that he had never been on a march before and because he was worried about the gas and because of his bad chest, he made sure he was towards the end. Possibly, out of fear of prosecution he denied that he had been on the march when asked at the Widgery Tribunal WT7.78 B.

16.5.21 He could see that there was CS gas in the area of lower William Street and therefore decided to cut across to his right to the area of Glenfada Park to see an old man "about 90... He can't get about much and I often go round to make sure his windows are shut tight if there's a lot of CS gas around." AJ5.1, WT7.76 D On instructions, we can confirm that the man's name was Tommy Duddy.

16.5.22 In his statement to the Treasury Solicitor he said:

> "I saw soldiers in a firing position, in a burnt out house almost opposite to this waste ground and north of William Street. As I was crossing this waste ground I turned and looked at the soldiers I heard a crack of a shot. I was hit in the right leg near the hip and then another shot hit me in the left shoulder. At first I thought I was hit by rubber bullets. Another shot that I believe was a ricochet grazed my hand but I have no idea when this happened. Just before I was hit I saw a boy fall near the corner of the waste ground and William Street." AJ5.3

16.5.23 He told the Sunday Times that he went into the open ground (meaning the Castle Laundry waste ground) approximately two thirds of the way across:

> "about level with that old lorry, when there was a big thump on the back of my right leg. I thought, my God I've been whacked by a rubber bullet and went to hobble on, though I couldn't move well. Then a man shouted to me "Christ Mr Johnson (sic), you're shot, you're trousers are soaking in blood." I looked down and so they were, they were light grey and they soaked right through. Some men came to give me a hand and as I was helped away I could see a young lad lying propped up against the wall to my left (this was dogerty, (sic) he had been moved I think). When they got me into Columbcille Court, the shields flats I think, dr mcclean, (sic) discovered I had been hit at least three times; once in the shoulder, another in the left and a graze on my left hand from a ricochet. I'm now told that my big overcoat saved me: what with that, a good jacket and woolly cardigan, the bullet must have been slowed down. It was a grand sunny day, but it was still a bit chilly and I have to look after my dodgy chest." AJ5.1

16.5.24 Mr Johnston in his oral evidence to Lord Widgery said that no one had a weapon of any kind WT7.77 G. He also confirmed that Damien Donaghy was at most about 10 feet from him when he saw him in the waste ground WT7.79 D.

"Mr GIBBENS: I ought to have put to this witness, and I forgot, that before this shooting incident two nail bombs had been thrown.

LORD WIDGERY: I will put it to him. Did you hear any nail bombs just before you were wounded? A. Absolutely no, your Lordship. There was no nail bombs, nothing.

Q. You heard no sound? A. I am positive there was not. There was not a sound. There was not a nail bomb, certainly not."(Emphasis added) WT7.80 C-D 16.5.25 Betty Curran was on the march with her husband William. She saw two soldiers inside the Abbey Taxis building on the ground floor. She could see that a rifle was pointed at the people in William Street AC130.1 paragraph 7.

"... I saw two or three wee lads opposite to where I was standing (i.e. on the north side of William Street). They were throwing a few stones across at the soldiers on the flat roof...

After they had thrown a couple of stones, the lads turned and walked towards us. As they were coming towards us, I heard a shot. Damien "Bubbles" Donaghy was shot. I did not know him at the time, but learned his name later. He was only about 14 or 15 years old. I remember he had a lovely head of curly hair. He was wearing jeans. He had only been dandering across the road. He was facing me when he was shot, walking on my right hand side as I was facing him. He had just about reached the footpath on the side where I was standing. I just saw his body falling. He was only a few feet away from me when he fell. I think he fell face down. I remember that he fell onto a piece of ground which had originally been part of a small porch leading into a derelict house because I remember the black and white tiles on which he fell. It had clearly been someone's hallway. I didn't see where the bullet hit him at the time. I saw it bounce of the tiles though, and I realised that it was not big enough to be a rubber bullet. I heard two shots, one straight after the other, and they were the first two I heard that day. I recognised them as live because I saw one bullet bounce off the black and white tiles and I saw Damien Donaghy fall. I would not have known about the particular type of ammunition otherwise. I heard no further shots after that for 10 or 15 minutes... I did not see Damien Donaghy throw any stones towards the soldiers and, as he came towards me with his fellows, there was nothing in his hands. I remember this quite clearly because he had his hands down by his sides and not in his pockets." AC130.2 paragraphs 10 to 12.

16.5.26 The witness's husband, William Curran, then helped carry Damien towards the Shiels' house. She did not see John Johnston being shot. AC130.2 paragraphs 12 to 13, AC132.3 paragraphs 15 to 18. William Curran, a pacifist, came from a family with strong links to the British Army Day 055/65/3 to Day 055/65/14.

16.5.27 William Curran noticed the soldiers in the area of the GPO office and saw a group of about four or five boys throw stones at them AC132.2 paragraph 8. Damien Donaghy was one of the boys who then crossed William Street towards the witness. Bubbles Donaghy lagged behind. The witness then heard shots. Although he did not see him get shot he then noticed Damien Donaghy on the ground lying on his back AC132.2 paragraphs 11 to 14. In his oral evidence he placed in red the position he believed where Damien Donaghy was shot AC132.17

16.5.28 The witness thought there were two or three high velocity shots. He stood at Damien Donaghy's feet. He glanced around and saw an older man who he now knows to be John Johnston

> "... coming to help Donaghy as well. When John Johnston was about five or six feet away from me, I saw him clutch his shoulder. I cannot remember precisely where I was in the waste ground when he was shot. I believe that he put his left hand to his right shoulder. I did not hear the shot. I think that he was also hit in the leg afterwards and he hopped away down the waste ground. I did not see where he went and I did not see him again." AC132.3 parargaph 15.

16.5.29 In his oral evidence the witness acknowledged that it was assumption on his part that John Johnston was going to help Damien Donaghy Day 055/60/6.

16.5.30 When Mr and Mrs Curran appeared on the Secret History documentary they were equally emphatic the shooting in his area was completely unjustified:

> "BETTY CURRAN TO CAMERA
> There was no nail bombs in that vicinity, none in that vicinity where Damion (sic) Donaghy was shot there was no nail bombs. None at all.
>
> WILLIAM CURRAN TO CAMERA
> Categorically no nail bombs." AC130.9

16.5.31 On Bloody Sunday Patrick O'Carolan AO6.8 was a forty-year-old Executive Officer in HM Customs and Excise AM390.1. In his NICRA statement he said that he was standing the waste ground where Duffy's shop used to be with a former RUC officer, Charles Meehan.

> "Just then a shot rang out from the direction of the rear of Abbey Taxis. A young boy who had been standing at the corner of Sweeny's bar on William St. fell to the ground crying out. I thought he had been hit by a rubber bullet in the leg. A crowd ran to him and shouted that he had been shot by a lead bullet... As I reached Columcille (sic) Court I looked behind and saw an elderly man who was limping and I saw blood coming from his leg. Two men rushed to help him. The Stewards then told everyone to move back towards Glenfada Park... I would emphasise that I did not hear any shots coming from the direction of the Bogside before the first lad fell at William Street." AO6.8

16.5.32 This account is consistent with what he told Eversheds AO6.2 paragraphs 8 to 9 and AO6.3 paragraphs 16 to 18.

16.5.33 He confirmed that Damien Donaghy would have been no more than about ten feet away from him when he fell. He was doing nothing that warranted him being shot Day 060/8/6 to Day 060/8/25. The witness marked the position where he saw him fall at position "C" on AO6.6. He also saw John Johnston come from around the northeast corner of the building that adjoins the waste ground Day 060/13/5 to Day 060/13/13.

16.5.34 Again the witness in his account to this Tribunal emphasised that this was the first shot that he heard fired. In fact he said, "If I had heard shooting before I certainly would not have been waiting around in the area." AO6.2 paragraph 11 In the same vein he continued, "I did not hear or see nail bombs or hear or see any gunmen. I did not see anyone throwing stones." AO6.3 paragraph 18

16.5.35 Charles Meehan, the former RUC officer who is deceased and did not give oral evidence to the Inquiry but he did make a statement in 1972 that significantly corroborates Patrick O'Carolan:

> "I saw two windows on the gable side of the disused building, previously occupied by Abbey Taxis Ltd., which had formerly been blocked up by the Derry Commission, were now lying open. I saw movements inside the shadows of the building and was amazed to see two paratroopers crouching in a sniping position pointing their rifles in the direction of myself and my friends. Their headgear showed them to be paratroopers.
> I said to Pat O'Carolan: "We are in a very exposed and dangerous position if anything like shooting does start." I had hardly finished this sentence when one of the paratroopers in the building lifted his rifle to the shooting position. I pulled Pat O'Carolan into the waste ground on my left and as I did so still looking at the soldier, he fired one shot and hit a youth who had moved into our position. The youth fell and was dragged across the waste ground towards Colmcille (sic) Court. As we ran in that direction a second man was shot in the shoulder as he ran alongside me. He also fell and was assisted out of the line of fire. I must make it absolutely clear that no one, where I was standing, was involved in riotous or disorderly behaviour." AM390.1

16.5.36 The Tribunal is also referred to Charles Meehan's map that he provided to the Sunday Times Insight Team in which the positions where Damien Donaghy and John Johnston fell are marked AM390.3.

16.5.37 John Quigg AQ1 and Day 053 was on the march with Charles Meehan. Whilst he is confused in his Eversheds statement in relation to some matters (such as the age of the man he saw shot in the leg and his position etc AQ1.1 paragraphs 6 to 7) his 1972 account marries well with the general body of evidence. He said that he had been taking shelter from tear gas that was being fired from the Rossville Street – William Street area. AQ1.4

> "I was along with twenty to thirty other fellows. A shot came from the ruins of Richardsons factory in William Street. A chap alongside me fell to the ground. He had been shot just above the knee in the right leg. He was taken into a house in Colmcille Court (sic) by other people. He had been throwing stones towards the ruins of Richard's Factory but he definitely had no weapon"

16.5.38 Eugene Lafferty AL1 did not make a statement in 1972. He gave oral evidence on Day 064

16.5.39 When he was in William Street he heard two shots overhead from the direction of the Presbyterian Church. These were the first shots he heard that day. Two people to his right were hit and fell to the ground. He incorrectly positioned the men actually on the southern side of William Street itself AL1.13, AL1.8 paragraph 9 however he confirmed in his oral evidence that they could in fact have been shot on the waste ground Day 064/81/11 to Day 064/81/22.

16.5.40 The witness recalled that:

> "Bubbles and Mr Johnston were just walking along at the time when they were shot. They did not do anything at all to warrant being shot. I know this for certain because they were so close to me. Bubbles and Mr Johnston were taken away by the Knights of Malta but I did not see where they were taken." AL1.8 paragraph 10

16.5.41 In fact one of the Knights of Malta who was to treat the injured men was Eugene Lafferty's father, Johnny.

16.5.42 Sergeant John Lafferty in his handwritten 1972 statement recorded that some youths in William Street were even trying to catch the rubber bullets being fired. He attended with some women and girls who were overcome with gas and returned to the area he had previously been. He was called to a boy who > "had been hit with lead bullets (sic), Lieut McDaid rushed to attend him when another call came, this time it was a man between 50 and 60 who had got shot. Mrs Shiels who lives near hand called to bring them to her house. Capt Day, Lieut McKinney and Lieut McDaid treated the boy young Donaghy, and Eibhlin Lafferty and myself attended to Mr Johnston." AL2.3

16.5.43 Sergeant Lafferty accompanied both John Johnston and Damien Donaghy to Altnagelvin Hospital in Father Carolan's VW beetle that had been made into makeshift ambulance. On both occasions the Army and RUC stopped them on the way to and from the hospital AL2.3, AL2.4.

16.5.44 Gerry Duddy (brother of Jackie Duddy) was a friend of Damien Donaghy. He did not provide a statement in 1972. He gave evidence on Day 59. He saw approximately six boys on the waste ground to the north of William Street throwing stones and bottles at the soldiers on the roof of the old bakery. He then heard a single shot and saw "Bubbles" yell out that he was shot. The witness assumed, because he saw no blood or obvious injuries, that Damien Donaghy had been hit by a rubber bullet. He saw a number of men help carry him away. As he did so there was a second shot, which hit John Johnston. AD146.1 paragraph 3

16.5.45 The witness positioned Damien Donaghy as being on the southern pavement of William Street as it joins the waste ground of the Castle Laundry AD146.6.

16.5.46 According to Gerry Duddy:

> "Bubbles was doing nothing wrong, nothing to justify him getting shot... I didn't hear any nail bombs in the area before or after Bubbles was shot. If any nail bombs had gone off everyone would have known about it; they would have injured the crowd as well as any soldiers they might have been aimed at. Nail bombs are made with the intention of causing as much damage as possible to the immediate area in which they explode."

AD146.2 paragraph 6

16.5.47 Philip Columba Donaghy AD116 said in his 1972 statement that he retreated up William Street due to the gas. A shot rang out and he saw a youth who was standing near him fell to the ground crying that he had been hit in the leg. He then heard another shot but did not see if that hit anyone. He recalled that the youth was shot in the front of the thigh and the Army were the only ones who could have shot him AD116.9. When the witness came to mark the position of Damien Donaghy on the map attached to his Eversheds statement, he mistakenly marked the waste ground that was further west towards Abbey Street. In any event, the witness was clear that if he was carrying a weapon at the time he, he was sure he would have seen it, as he was so close to him. The witness further confirmed, "I am sure I did not see a weapon" AD116.2 paragraph 7

16.5.48 Patrick McCallion AM74 said that he was on the waste ground to the south side of William Street facing the GPO. He heard about three shots from the north. He heard a cry and someone told him that a young boy had been shot. The witness looked to his left (west) and saw his neighbour Damien Donaghy had been shot. According to Mr McCallion, he was approximately five feet away from him at the time he was shot and was lying on the edge of the waste ground. The witness could not say if Damien Donaghy was throwing stones but he had been himself. He then heard another live shot and heard someone shout that John Johnston had been shot, although he does not remember anything further about this, AM74 paragraphs 11 to 15. The witness confirmed in his oral evidence that he heard no explosions, saw no one with a nail bomb and saw no one with "a pretended nail bomb" Day 071/151/13 to Day 071/151/18.

16.5.49 Billy McCartney AM 87 gave oral evidence on Day 54. He recalled that there were youths throwing stones at the soldiers in the derelict building on William Street. Mr McCartney joined in himself. He said that it was not heavy stone throwing and lasted for about five minutes. The soldiers fired the odd rubber bullet in return. AM87.3 paragraph 9.

16.5.50 There was then a "sudden salvo of rubber bullet fire – perhaps about six shots in total" from the soldiers in the derelict building. This caused the crowd to run back off William Street and into the waste ground areas. The witness reached a point about half way back onto the waste ground, "near the site of the old laundry" AM87.3 paragraph 10, AM87.6. Within a few seconds of that salvo, a live shot rang out. Damien Donaghy fell 10-20 feet in front of him, slightly to his left. In 1972 he described this area as where Duffy's bookmakers shop used to stand AM87.6. This is near the gable wall at the western side of the Castle Laundry waste ground. In the course of his oral evidence, the witness marked this position with a red arrow Day 054/172/8 to Day 054/175/1, AM87.10.

16.5.50 Damien Donaghy had his back to him and was facing the derelict house, possibly at a slight angle. There were other people close to him. The witness surged forward to grab him and pull him backwards into cover.

16.5.51 As the witness and others did so

> "within a few seconds of the first shot, another live shot rang out. That was the shot that hit the elderly man, John Johnston. He was behind me, to his right, when he was shot and I do not think he fell to the floor. He was shot about 15 yards from where Damien Donaghy fell and he was a good way from the soldiers and from the action at the time. He was still upright when I turned to look at him but his arms were around his chest and there was blood on the upper part of his body. Almost immediately, some people closed in on him to help him." AM87.3 paragraphs 10 to 11.

16.5.53 Mr McCartney in the course of his oral evidence marked the position where John Johnston was with a blue arrow on Day 054/174/8 to Day 054/175/10 (AM87.11).

16.5.54 The witness did not see either Damien Donaghy or Mr Johnston throw any stones. He was clear that Damien Donaghy would not have had time to collect a stone after the salvo of rubber bullets which caused everyone to retreat. "He had nothing in his hands, which were by his sides." AM87.4 paragraph 13

19.5.55 In 1972 Padraig O'Mianain was a teacher who attended the march along with Michael Fox AF26 / Day 59 and Patrick O'Carolan Day 059/40/1. When he gave evidence to this Inquiry on Day 59 he was a precise and impressive witness. He was standing in the area of the Castle Laundry watching three or four teenagers throw stones at soldiers positioned on the roof of the GPO. Rubber bullets were fired and others in William Street were picking them up as souvenirs AO56.14 paragraphs 9 to 12. The witness bent down to pick up a rubber bullet and a bullet hit the wall to the west of where he stood AO56.15 paragraph 13.

16.5.56 He then heard a young man who he believed was at the gable wall on the northwest side of the Castle Laundry waste ground. The youth called out that he was hit twice. People moved towards him. When the witness reached him he was still standing up and there was blood, possibly on his right thigh.

The witness helped turn him around and others then assisted in taking him away AO56.15 paragraphs 14 to 16. See map at AO56.19.

16.5.57 Padraig O'Mianain looked over his right shoulder and noticed an older man who looked as if he was on the point of stumbling. The witness placed him in a position somewhat further south into the Castle Laundry waste ground than the youth AO56.19. He accompanied the group carrying him further south towards the houses in Columbcille Court AO56.15 paragraph 17.

16.5.58 The witness was asked whether he saw a nail bomb or a canister of some sort being thrown in the area. He said that he did not and if he had he would have left "double quick." Day 059/46/11 to Day 059/46/13.

16.5.59 Seamus Bradley AB69 gave oral evidence on Day 064. This witness was along with his wife Teresa AB70. After being overcome by gas they took a position at the Castle Laundry waste ground. Like some other witnesses Seamus Bradley describes it in his 1972 statement as "near the gap where Duffy's bookmakers hut used to be." AB69.1

16.5.60 He said that he saw about three soldiers levelling their guns at the crowd beside Ritchie's factory. His wife could not see with the effects of the gas. He grabbed her by the hand and heard bangs. He pushed her into "the opening" at Duffy's and a rubber bullet and a live round went in between the two of them. He looked around and saw a young lad was shot and blood was dripping from his thigh. AB69.1

16.5.61 For Teresa Bradley's accounts see AB70.2 paragraphs 7 to 12 and Day 064/29/14 to Day 064/32/6, AB70.9. Her marked up photograph is at AB70.13.

16.5.62 In his oral evidence the witness marked with a red arrow the position where Damien Donaghy was on a photograph. This is at the northwestern side of the Castle Laundry waste ground AB69.7 Day 064/7/9 to Day 064/7/17.

16.5.63 Mr Bradley put his hanky to the boy's leg and helped Sergeant John Lafferty of the Knights of Malta bring him to Columbcille Court AB69.1. The witness said that he was unaware of any stone throwing in the area at the time the boy was shot although he was concentrating on getting his wife away from the gas and bullets AB69.2 paragraphs 6 to 9. The witness was also unaware of the presence of a gunman in the area of Kells Walk or that his wife claimed to have observed one Day 064/13/14/5 to Day 064/15/14.

16.5.64 Dermot Carlin AC32 and Day 060 saw a youth, who is obviously Damien Donaghy, just south of the middle of the Castle Laundry waste ground "sitting with his legs splayed out in front of him, at approximately the point D" on map at AC32.7. There was another youth on one knee beside him holding him under his shoulders shouting obscenities and for someone to help AC32.2 paragraphs 10 to 13.

16.5.65 Thomas McDaid (AM177 and Day 066) was on the march with his wife Monica (AM170 and Day 065). Thomas McDaid recalls that he and his wife went into the waste ground at the Nook Bar. He was very familiar with the geography of the area, having previously worked at Brewsters Bakery in Little James Street. He recalls that John Johnston was one of the other dozen or so people standing in the waste ground, all of whom were facing north towards the Presbyterian Church. AM177.1 paragraphs 4 to 5. He had heard one rubber bullet fired before hearing a live round Day 066/33/14 to Day 066/33/15. His recollection is that there was nobody milling around the William Street area as the first shot was fired Day 066/34/18 to Day 066/34/25.

16.5.66 Mr McDaid believes that they were standing there for up to 10 or 15 minutes when he heard a live shot which struck a young boy who was standing against the wall at the corner of the Nook Bar. The witness did not actually see the youth being shot, but did see him standing leaning with his shoulder against the corner of the wall when his legs suddenly buckled, causing him to fall to the ground, immediately after the gunshot rang out. The youth was then carried away by four other youths towards Columbcille Court. Two more shots then rang out and Mr Johnston, who was standing facing north, was shot in the leg and arm. At the time Mr Johnston was smoking his pipe, and he was shot "within seconds" of the boy having been shot. AM 177.1 paragraph 6. Mr McDaid had also seen soldiers in the Abbey Taxis building, at the windows close to William Street Day 066/32/17 to Day 066/32/25, but they were facing onto William Street, rather than viewing the waste ground area, Day 066/33/4. His impression was that both were shot either by soldiers on the roof of the GPO, or by soldiers near the Presbyterian Church AM177.2 paragraph 8. It would appear from Mr McDaid's contemporaneous statement at AM177.6 that he did not witness Damien Donaghy being shot, but he confirmed that he did see his leg buckle under him Day 066/38/4 to Day 066/38/6. Mr McDaid's best estimate of the interval between the wounding of Damien Donaghy and the wounding of John Johnston is that it was "seconds rather than minutes" Day 066/41/15 to Day 066/41/16

16.5.67 Monica McDaid is equally clear about the position that she and her husband stopped at in the waste ground. She recalls that there were 14 to 18 people in that area. She witnessed the shooting of Damien Donaghy in the following terms, which are broadly consistent with the account Mr Donaghy himself has given to the Tribunal:

> "To my left and in front was a young boy...He was leaning against the gable of the derelict building next to him. He kept looking out on to William Street by putting his head around the corner of the derelict building[17]. I cannot recall seeing anything in his hand or seeing him throw anything." AM170.2 paragraph 7.

"We had been standing in the waste ground talking for about 5 minutes when I heard the first shot. I think that this was the sound of a rubber bullet. I assumed it came from the derelict houses...because I had seen the soldiers there earlier [the 'derelict houses' marked by Mrs McDaid on her plan at AM170.6 include the Abbey Taxis building] AM170.2 paragraph 9

"After the shot was fired, the young fellow who had been on the waste ground, turned to retrieve the rubber bullet which had been fired, and then ran away from William Street along the gable of the building on the waste ground. A few seconds later I heard a second shot. I mentioned to my husband that it was another rubber bullet but he said "no it was a lead shot". I saw the young lad stumble as his legs buckled underneath him. I cannot remember if he fell to the ground...It felt unreal that he had been shot with a real bullet. I found out the day after that the young lad was Damien Donaghy..." AM170.2 paragraph 10

16.5.67 Mrs McDaid did not see any stones thrown from the waste ground, and did not see any stones thrown by Damien Donaghy Day 065/117/10 to Day 065/117/12. She then heard a further two shots and Mr Johnston, whom she also believes may have been smoking a pipe and was approximately ten feet away, started to sway and then slumped. AM170.2 paragraph 13. 'A very short interval' had elapsed between the wounding of Damien Donaghy and the wounding of Mr Johnston Day 065/127/25 to Day 065/128/1. Mrs McDaid did not see any nail bombs in that area. AM170.2 paragraph 13.

16.5.68 Michael McGuinness was on the march with his brother-in-law, Doctor McClean. He gave a statement to the Tribunal at AM283 and gave oral evidence on Day 64. Mr McGuinness has given evidence which is broadly corroborative of the evidence given by Mr Donaghy:

> "...I heard a rubber bullet being fired. It hit the gable wall marked E on the map[18] on the east side of the waste ground marked D. the sound of the rubber bullet was softer than the gunfire I heard later. I believe the rubber bullet came from a northerly direction. It seemed to hit the wall fairly high up but wasn't aimed downwards. It came from somewhere on the other side of William Street, from the northern side, but I do not know from how far away...People collected rubber bullets at that time and when I saw it I thought it would make a souvenir..." AM283.2 paragraph 8

16.5.69 Mr McGuinness then heard at least two sharp cracks as he bent down to pick up the rubber bullets. He did not see who had fired them. As he heard the shots he looked across the gap and saw a boy, who he now knows to be Damien Donaghy, on the western edge of the waste ground. McGuinness' immediately knew that Mr Donaghy had been shot as he saw him lying back holding his right leg. He told Peter Pringle that he "...may be was nearest to him" but other people had passed him on the way to attend to Mr Donaghy AM283.11. The witness told Mr Lawson QC that he was not aware of anyone else near Damien Donaghy:

> "...my eye was taken by the boy lying there who was Damien Donaghy. I was not in a mood to concentrate on anything else that was going on...all that took my eye was Damien Donaghy and when I went to collect him I was aware that other people came along and picked him up." Day 064/174/6 to Day 064/174/15

16.5.71 There was not a large crowd in the area of the waste ground and he cannot recall if there was stone throwing in the area, but points out that if there had been, he himself would not have been in the area AM283.2 paragraph 11. Mr McGuinness also gave a statement in 1972 to Peter Pringle. He told Pringle that he thought Damien Donaghy had been 'acting the fool' when he had heard him shout that he had been shot, and suspected that he had been throwing stones at the soldiers after they had discharged their baton rounds, but stated that 'there was nothing about him as he fell'. AM 283.11.

16.5.72 Mr McGuinness then recalls John Johnston coming into the waste ground. He believes that Mr Johnston would have been moving in a westerly direction along William Street (although this was merely an assumption, Day 064/148/20 to Day 064/149/4) and entered the waste ground at its north eastern corner. He was holding his shoulder and was very unsteady, leaning against the wall and appearing to be dazed. Mr McGuinness and his friend Charles McGill[19] then carried Mr Johnston in a "chair lift" to Mrs Shiels' house. AM283.3 paragraphs 12 to 13.

16.5.73 Mr McGuinness sums up the mood in Mrs Shiels' house in the following terms:

> "John Johnston was very quiet and I do not remember him saying anything. I don't remember any conversation about how or why the two men had been shot. It had happened in broad daylight, neither was carrying anything and John Johnston was a middle-aged man. It was therefore obvious that both were innocent and there was no need to comment on it..." AM283.3 paragraph 15

[19] Charles McGill's evidence regarding this sector can be found at AM230.2 paragraph 14 to AM230.3 paragraph 16

16.5.74 Derek McFeely was a 17 years old youth in January 1972. It is possible that he is one of the youths referred to by Michael McGuinness and Charles McGill who quickly lifted Damien Donaghy and took him to the safety of Columbcille Court.

16.5.75 He gave a statement at AM217 and gave oral evidence on Day 61. He has agreed that he was at the Laundry waste ground (Day 061/70/5 to Day 061/75/18). He recalls that Damien Donaghy was standing to his right, about four or five feet away Day 061/72/8 to Day 061/72/9. He knew him as "Bubbles". At the time when the witness saw Damien Donaghy, he was unaware of any stone throwing in the area. AM217.1 paragraph 5, but there were a number of youths, possibly on the road in the middle of William Street, and on the footpath, who were jeering and verbally abusing the soldiers Day 061/72/11 to Day 061/73/4. He heard a single shot from the north side of William Street and then saw Damien Donaghy lying on the ground Day 061/75/6 to Day 061/75/9. He had not seen him engaged in any stone throwing at the time when he was shot, nor was he cat calling at the army Day 061/75/23 to Day 061/76/3. The witness did not hear any explosions or other bangs, save for rubber bullets being fired. Day 061/76/18 to Day 061/76/22. Instinctively, the witness ran in a southerly direction towards Columbcille Court and then returned with four of five others and carried him away. He did not see John Johnston[20] get shot, but was, however, aware of one or two more shots in the area where he had been standing with "Bubbles" Donaghy AM217.1 paragraph 5 to AM217.2 paragraph 7.

[20] His NICRA statement at AM217.7 would indicate that in 1972 he was aware that the second shot that he heard did in fact strike a second man. He no longer recall this Day 061/79/11 to Day 061/79/17

16.5.76 Peter Mullan was a 31 years old school teacher. He was a very impressive witness who gave his evidence with candour. He gave a statement to John Barry of the Sunday Times Insight Team at AM450.1 to AM450.4. He has also given written and oral evidence to this Tribunal. It is apparent from Mr Mullan's evidence that he witnessed three important events:

(i) The shooting of Damien Donaghy
(ii) The shooting of John Johnston
(iii) The argument which followed the incident at Columbcille Court involving a civilian gunman

16.5.77 His present recollection is that he was approximately 10 to 12 feet from Damien Donaghy when he was shot. He witnessed Damien Donaghy's right leg give way and states that at the time that he fell, Damien Donaghy clearly had nothing in his hands. Although Mr Mullan did not see Damien Donaghy throwing any stones, his evidence is that there was plenty of rubble and small stones in the immediate area. He is sure however that "there were no petrol bombs, nail bombs or anything of that type on the ground. I was so close to him and had such a clear view that I am certain I would have noticed..." AM450.6 paragraph 8

16.5.78 Mr Mullan also witnessed the immediate aftermath of the shooting of John Johnston. His current recollection is that he had heard a second rifle shot, (AM450.7 paragraph 11, but he accepts that his evidence to John Barry that he did not hear the shot is more accurate Day 152/193/4 to Day 152/193/5) swung around and saw the elderly man (whom he now knows as Mr Johnston) on the ground. He was on the opposite side of the road from where Mr Donaghy had fallen and was about 10 feet or so from the witness. He recollects that he briefly assisted with the carrying of Mr Johnston to Columbcille Court AM450.7 paragraphs 11 to 12; Day 152/194/1 to Day 152/194/5

16.5.79 There is no evidence to suggest that Damien Donaghy and John Johnston, or indeed anyone who was in their immediate vicinity, were engaged in any hostile activity at the time they were shot.

16.5.80 Even Lord Widgery found that John Johnston was a truthful witness and essentially an innocent abroad:

> "Evidence from civilians in the neighbourhood, including Mr Johnson himself, is to the effect that although stones were being thrown no firearms or bombs were being used against the soldiers in the derelict building. Having seen and heard Mr Johnson I have no doubt that he was telling the truth as he saw it. He was obviously an innocent passer-by going about his own business in Londonderry that afternoon and was almost certainly shot by accident. I have not thought it necessary to take a statement from Mr Donaghy, who was injured more seriously and was still in hospital when I finished hearing evidence. I am quite satisfied that had he given evidence it would have been in the same sense as that given by Mr Johnson. "
> Widgery Report p13 paragraph 36

16.5.81 Specifically in relation to whether or not Damien Donaghy or Johnston were in involved in any activity which would could have caused or contributed to them being shot, Lord Widgery said the following:

"Whether or not the circumstances were really such as to warrant firing there is no reason whatever to suppose that either Mr Johnson or Mr Donaghy was in fact trying to light or throw a bomb." (Emphasis Added)

Widgery Report paragraph 39

16.5.82 It is clear from the evidence before the Inquiry that there is an element of confusion in respect of the precise position in the laundry waste ground where Damien Donaghy was shot and fell. Damien Donaghy has given evidence that he was shot at the northeastern side of the waste ground. The preponderance of evidence, however, would suggest that he was closer to the Nook Bar (i.e. the north western) side of the waste ground. There is no doubt however that neither he, John Johnston, nor anyone else in the vicinity was acting in a manner which would have properly warranted the soldiers to open fire.

16.5.82 In our submission, there is no objective or sustainable reason to provide justification for the shots fired by Soldiers A and B.

16.6 Civilian Gunmen and Gunfire

16.6.1 Introduction

16.6.1.1 The Lawton Team have produced a document entitled "Civilian Gunmen Table," attached to the Memorandum from Counsel to the Tribunal dated 22nd July 2002. Section 4 of this table relates to Columbcille Court and Section 16 to William Street. In accordance with the memorandum, both these sections should be considered together as "evidence under both headings relates to the shot(s) at the soldiers at the Presbyterian Church which, according to that evidence, followed the shooting of Damien Donaghy." It is indisputable that there was a high velocity rifle shot fired by OIRA 1 across William Street at the Presbyterian Church. That being so, the only area that remains for consideration is the timing of this shot and whether or not it followed the wounding of Damien Donaghy and John Johnston. This matter is considered below under the section entitled, "The Columbcille Court/ "Drainpipe Shot."

16.6.1.2 However, other evidence suggests that in addition to the undisputed .303 shot, a pistol shot was fired in William Street. Whilst it is for the Tribunal to consider the veracity and / or reliability of such evidence, it is clear that there is no evidence from any soldier on the north side of William Street to the effect that they heard, saw or reacted to a shot fired by a pistol man in William Street. It is our submission, therefore, that were the Tribunal to decide that such a shot was fired, it must also conclude that this shot in no way contributed to or impacted upon the shooting of Donaghy and Johnston or what followed in the Bogside.

16.6.1.3 A further, distinct possibility is that those witnesses who refer to a pistol shot have either mistaken (a) a rubber bullet for a pistol shot (b) one of A and B's shots for a pistol shot or (c) OIRA 1's shot for a pistol shot because of:

i) The echo effect, prevalent in the built-up area of the Bogside
ii) An inability to distinguish between high and low velocity shots
iii) The number of rubber bullets, gas grenades and gas canisters being fired at the relevant time
iv) Confusion resulting from the surrounding commotion and the resultant divided attention

For similar reasons, it is clear that a number of witnesses are referring to the sequence of Soldier A and B firing five shots, injuring Damien Donaghy and John Johnston, and OIRA 1 returning one rifle shot but have failed to hear, refer to or remember all five shots fired by Soldiers A and B.

Mr Barry, at M3.5 paragraph 21, states:

> " . . . I heard a story – I have no independent recollection of the source – that some in the Provisional IRA had made preparations to ambush the Army at the William Street barricade after the march had dispersed but we were never able to get corroboration of that story and in any event no shooting occurred there."

Mr Barry, having reconsidered the notes of his interview with him, now states that source of this information was Mr Ivan Cooper. Day 193/104/25 to Day 193/105/9. The Tribunal is aware, however, that Mr Cooper denies ever having been interviewed by John Barry and rejects the Sunday Times document in its entirety. Day 419/76/17 to Day 419/76/15. Further detail is provided below. Considering this fact and Mr Barry's acknowledgement in his statement that there is no corroboration of the story and that there was no such shooting, it is our submission that the Inquiry disregard this evidence.

16.6.1.5 Vincent Browne

Mr Browne reported in the Sunday Press, on 6th February 1972:

> "After the second burst of army gunfire the Officials took up positions and one shot was fired by one of the men with the short arms at a soldier in William Street but it missed. No other shot was fired then by anybody until the actual murderous assault on the Bogside by the Paratroopers."

Whilst Mr Browne can no longer remember the interviews that took place with the relevant member/s of the Official IRA, this quote appears in the article subsequent to the description of how Damien Donaghy and John Johnston were shot in William Street and, as such, this would appear to be an obvious reference to the shot fired by OIRA 1 from Columbcille Court.

16.6.1.6 Joe Carlin

This witness is purported to have told John Barry from the Sunday Times, during an interview, that he "heard a single high velocity shot just as it went in off William Street . . . It didn't come from the Bog, in front of me. So we proceeded through to the back and hid behind the wall . . . but nothing seemed to be happening. . . . on the corner the Aggro was still going on . . While we were standing there, a small boy by our side was hit."AC150.2 to AC150.3.

16.6.1.7 The witness did not give oral evidence to the Inquiry. The account was put to a Mr John Joseph Carlin who, giving oral evidence on Day 91/192/25 to Day 91/193/18, denied that the notes of the interview were anything to do with him.

16.6.1.8 The relevant sequence described in the note is as follows:

i) The witness describes how the single shot he heard was high velocity and that it came from the direction of Little James Street, not the Bog [Emphasis added], an obvious reference to one of the shots fired by Soldiers A and B from Abbey Taxis. AC150.2

ii) He sees a small boy fall beside him with a wound in his leg, an obvious reference to Damien Donaghy. The young boy was taken to Columbcille Court AC150.3

iii) There was then a shot from the upstairs window of a house, in Columbcille Court, facing the flat roof of the sorting office immediately afterwards. AC150.3

16.6.1.9 Albeit that the witness is confused in referring to one high velocity bullet rather than the five fired by Soldiers A and B, it should be noted that:

i) This witness describes rubber bullets whistling all over the place and the firing of, what could have been, gas canisters in the area at the relevant time. The noise produced disguised the sound of five high velocity bullets being fired so that the witness heard only one. The witness actually states that "people said afterwards that they had been trying to synchronise rubber bangs and rifle shots." AC150.3

ii) The witness acknowledges that "the strange part was that I didn't hear the shot which hit him. I heard rubber bullet noises but no the shot, though it must have been close." AC150.3

iii) The witness himself describes the sequence of events as "The news of the little boy shot and the news of the shot in return." AC150.4

iv) Whilst the assertion by the soldiers' representatives is that this high velocity shot was from a civilian source other than OIRA 1, it is apparent, in our submission, that this witness is describing the shots fired by Soldiers A and B and the return fire by OIRA 1. It should also be noted that it was, of course, impossible to test this information further by examination in oral evidence.

16.6.1.10 Ivan Cooper

In respect of the Sunday Times notes Ivan Cooper has said

> "I have read some typewritten notes which I am informed were prepared by the Sunday Times Insight team. I have never seen them before making this statement. I find this account poisonous and disturbing and I reject it in its entirety. The manner in which it is written smacks of British security intelligence operating; it is for the most part, factually incorrect. There are many examples of factual inaccuracies in the articles. I therefore wish to reject this document in its entirety and will not even begin to give it credibility by addressing it in more detail." KC12.30 paragraph 97

16.6.1.11 Even if the Tribunal was to find that Cooper have an interview with John Barry and in all likelihood made these remarks, we respectfully refer the Tribunal to the following. AM208.10 paragraph 17:

> "Ivan Cooper is a fantastic liar he is the sort of person that I have always wanted to and have tried to avoid. I would take anything he says with a "pinch of salt". The statement that he made to the Sunday Times is a fabrication. I suspect he made the statement to make himself sound like an important politician for the journalists."

In these circumstances it is submitted that this extract from the statement cannot be relied on.

16.6.1.12 Ciaran Donnelly

In his 1972 statement, Mr Donnelly merely describes how a pistol man fired one shot from the crowd and that no fire was returned, the obvious inference being that he saw the man fire the shot in question, M22.1. It becomes clear at Widgery and during his testimony to this Inquiry that Mr Donnelly did not in fact see a man armed with a pistol nor a man fire a pistol as illustrated by the extract below. Mr Donnelly clarified his initial statement at Widgery affirming that he "heard a loud bang which appeared to be a revolver shot." [Emphasis added] M22.5 D-E Yet in his Eversheds statement, Mr Donnelly describes a man firing a shot at a derelict house as follows: "The firearm he was holding was a small handgun or possibly a starting pistol. I remember thinking that this man appeared to be drunk. . . .I can't remember where he was standing when he fired the shot but I do remember that he was aiming toward a bricked up derelict house. This was the only shot I saw fired by a civilian all day." MC22.20 paragraph 4. [

Emphasis added]. It would seem from reading this passage that, contrary to what he said at Widgery, Mr Donnelly did in fact see a man aim a pistol and fire a shot at a derelict house. Mr Donnelly accepts, however, at Day 071/16/10 to Day 071/17/11, that he did not actually see the man holding or firing a pistol:

> Q. This is part of your evidence to Widgery.
> At D you said this:
> "At some point at the time, which was about > 20 minutes before the paras ever appeared on the scene,
> I heard from somewhere nearby one shot, which I assumed > at the time to be fired from a revolver."
> The next question was this:
> "Did you see any weapon in anybody's hand?
> Answer: No, just heard a loud bang which > appeared to be a revolver shot.
> Question: And that was in the crowd?
> Answer: I assumed at first in the crowd, > everyone in the crowd with me assumed it was from the > crowd and most of the people, not wanting to be > connected with the gunman, ran away."
> That evidence appears to suggest that you > heard a shot which you assumed came from the crowd, > rather than see a man actually fire?
> A. Yeah.
> Q. You did see him, did you?
> A. No, I did not see him fire. I heard the shot > and when I went over to the crowd there was a general > melee and people were gathering round this guy and sort > of hustling him away. By that time there was no sign > of the gun, he must have put it back in his pocket or someone took it off him. Then he was hustled away from the crowd. I asked what had happened and they said so and so had fired a shot or something. [Emphasis added]

Mr Donnelly attempts to explain further:

A. He was holding the gun, but I think the gun was in his pocket. His hand was like this, his hand was in his pocket.

Q. You demonstrate with your right hand, your right hand by your trouser pocket --

A. It was a coat pocket.

Q. You remember seeing him holding something?

A. Well, he had his hand in his coat pocket.

Q. Was that after you had heard the noise?

A. Yes. I did not see the gun actually appear

Day 071/71/5 to Day 071/71/14

16.6.1.13 Mr Donnelly's evidence is based upon a great deal of his own supposition, and that of others, as illustrated by the italicised words above. Considering the number of rubber bullets and gas canisters being fired in the vicinity, along with fact that there was no immediate reaction of any sort, Day 071/16/6 to Day 071/16/7, it appears that Mr Donnelly has wrongly associated the sound of a rubber bullets or a gas canister being fired with the noise of a pistol. This incorrect correlation coupled with the unfounded belief that the man was holding a weapon in his pocket cannot be relied upon as proof of a civilian gunman. In all likelihood this man was, rather than being hustled away by the crowd as suggested at Day 071/17/9 to Day 071/17/11, was part of a group of people who, overcome by the effects of gas, were leaving the area.

16.6.1.14 Martin Hegarty

Mr Hegarty describes in his statement how, having reached the junction of Abbey Street and William Street as seen at AH62.7, he heard a high velocity shot which he recognized as being from an army weapon and which the people around him believed to have come from the direction of the soldiers positioned in the old factory on the north side of William Street. AH62.2 paragraphs 8 to 9. It is possible that, not having heard the five shots fired by Soldiers A and B, Mr Hegarty then heard the shot fired by OIRA 1. However, considering the direction from which he heard the shot and that he recognized it as an army weapon, the Tribunal should, in our submission, as he concludes himself, find that what Mr Hegarty heard was the shot which hit the first man, i.e. what he heard was one of the five shots fired by Soldiers A and B which hit Damien Donaghy and John Johnston. The reason that he cannot account for the other four shots is simply because:

i) He cannot remember having heard all five shots particularly without the assistance of a contemporaneous statement

ii) Mr Hegarty concedes in later questioning that he could possibly have confused rubber bullets for high velocity bullets: "Um, no, because I mean -- well, it could have been, it could have been rubber bullets certainly." Day 288/ 51/7 to Day 288/51/8. It is, therefore, plausible to suggest that, vice versa, whilst in William Street, he did not hear the remaining four shots over the copious rubber bullets being fired as well as the 15 CS gas grenades and 65 CS canisters that had been discharged by the army.

16.6.1.15 Derek Humphry

Mr Derek Humphry, a journalist in Derry, spoke to an Official IRA man who claimed to have, in breach of his orders for the day, Day 217/176/24 to Day 217/176/25, fired one pistol shot at soldiers stationed in a derelict building on the north side of William Street near the GPO building in response to the shooting of Damien Donaghy. M43.2 paragraph 10. It is

Mr Humphry's suggestion that it was after this pistol shot was fired that Mr John Johnston was shot, however, we know that, in accordance with the majority of the available evidence, Mr Johnston and Damien Donaghy were shot almost simultaneously. Mr Humphry's evidence is not only inconsistent with the majority of other available civilian evidence, it is internally inconsistent as pointed out by Mr Clarke QC, to the extent that Mr Humphry's is no longer certain whether the information in the article can be relied upon:

> Q. There is a slight difference between what appears in the article, which is a reference to shooting at soldiers on the GPO sorting office roof and what appears in paragraph 10 of your statement, which is shooting at soldiers stationed in a derelict building on the northern side of William Street near the GPO building.
> Are you able to explain what has happened?
>
> A. No, I cannot. I -- with the passage of time I cannot recall why there is a difference there.
>
> Q. Should we assume that what was entered in the article is more likely to be correct?
>
> A. I think so.
>
> Q. Apart from that episode, somebody firing a pistol towards either the GPO sorting office roof or possibly soldiers in a derelict building nearby, did you become aware of any other incident in which fire had been directed at the soldiers other than at the very end of the whole business?
>
> A. The only evidence I picked up was the one shot.
> Day 217/160/20 to Day 217/161/13

It is apparent that what Mr Humphry's is describing is the shot fired by OIRA 1, in response to the shooting of Damien Donaghy and John Johnston, that he is mistaken when he states that this was a pistol shot and that this evidence should be juxtaposed with that outlined in the section on Columbcille Court/ Drainpipe Shot, below.

16.6.1.16 Sheila Ingram

Ms Ingram, in her Eversheds statement, at AI1.2 paragraph 7, states that when she reached a point on William Street opposite the GPO Sorting Office a high velocity shot rang out from the direction of the GPO, as marked by an arrow on the map attached to her statement at AI1.6. Whilst Ms Ingram did not "address her mind at the time to whether the shot was an army shot or a civilian shot," we know that the army did fire 5 high velocity rounds from the direction in which she indicates and at the relevant time. It is clear, therefore, considering that Ms Ingram was not aware of the fact that rubber bullets were being fired at the time or of the noise of a riot, Day 417/71/25 to Day 417/72/4 and admits that her memory is "not great," Day 417/73/19, in regard to some matters, that either:

i) The shot to which Ms Ingram is referring is that fired by OIRA 1 after the five shots fired by Soldiers A and B, which she must not have heard.

ii) Ms Ingram did not hear, because of the noise of riot and rubber bullets, the further four high velocity shots fired by Soldiers A and B from Abbey Taxis resulting in the wounding of Damien Donaghy and John Johnston.

iii) Ms Ingram simply did not recognise the sound of the other four shots as rifle shots

iv) Ms Ingram, without the benefit of having made a statement in 1972 cannot now remember that she heard five rounds coming from the general direction of Abbey Taxis.

16.6.1.17 Philip Jacobson

A memorandum written by this witness, dated 3rd February 1972, ED20.30-31, states that a source informed them that the Official IRA fired a single shot from a .45 pistol at an army sniper on the roof of the post office sorting building on William Street after Damien Donaghy and John Johnston were shot. This sequence of events is correct, however, the reference to a pistol rather than a rifle shot is incorrect as accepted by Mr Peter Pringle who states that they were informed of various accounts ranging from pistol shots from a burnt-out building on the corner of William Street and Rossville Street to shots from a second floor in Columbcille Court from behind some wooden slats and an account of a shot fired actually from the premises in Columbcille Court to which the injured men had been taken. Day 191/9/25 to Day 191/10/21. Mr Pringle clarifies further:

A. The second one had the most corroborative evidence, if that is what you are asking me.

Q. Insofar as the Insight article was concerned?

A. Yes.

Q. Which, you have been good enough to say in your paragraph and an affirmation yesterday, you are satisfied with everything in it and indeed with the conclusions, you stand by those?

A. Yes.

Q. To the best of your knowledge, your conclusion was that the middle of the three ranges of accounts was correct, namely: a shot with a rifle?

A. Correct.

Q. From the second floor of Columbcille Court?

A. Correct.

Q. Probably behind the wooden slats?

A. Correct Day 191/11/6 to Day 191/11/25.

This note is, in effect, a clear reference to the shot fired by OIRA 1 from Columbcille Court after the shooting of Damien Donaghy and John Johnston and cannot be considered a separate incident in any way. It is submitted the Tribunal should hesitate to base a finding of fact on uncorroborated material that was not of sufficient quality to print or publish in 1972.

16.6.1.18 Thomas Mullarkey

Mr Mullarkey is not definitive even in his 1972 statement when he describes hearing about four or five shots followed by "a single shot, loud, a revolver I thought, but I could not place where it came from." AM452.2. This is an obvious reference, in terms of location and timing, to the rifle shot fired by OIRA 1 after Damien Donaghy and John Johnston were shot. Mr Mullarkey, who no longer remembers this shot AM452.6 paragraph 31.5, was obviously mistaken in his belief that it was from a revolver because of:

i) The echo effect prevalent in the built-up area of the Bogside

ii) A possible inability to distinguish between high and low velocity shots

iii) Confusion resulting from the commotion surrounding him and the resultant divided attention

iv) The number of rubber bullets being fired around this time which Mr Mullarkey claims not to have heard Day 69/12/14 to Day 69/12/22

16.6.1.19 Chris Myant

Mr Myant has a memory of a very young girl approaching him to say that she had seen a man fire a pistol in William Street. M91.4 paragraph 13. He has no evidence to corroborate this, he does not know the girl's name, the girl did not make a statement, Mr Myant considered her to be "hysterical," "in a state," that her memory was playing tricks on her, Day 122/177/6 and he felt that the incident she described did not occur on Bloody Sunday, Day 122/177/15 to Day 122/177/16. Mr Myant's view of this incident is as follows:

> A. She came in, she was one, you know, there is a big queue of people. She came in and said, "I want to talk about this, I seen a man fire a handgun in William Street", but she had nothing else, she could not tell me anything else about the incident or anything around it, and she did not want to make a formal statement, she said. So whereas other people were telling me, "I have done this, I have been here, I saw that, this happened", as you can see from my notebook, you know, they are trying to tell you and step by step process of what they had seen. She did not have that kind of information at all.
> So my feeling about her was that, like a lot of people, who were quite hysterical the following day when I went down to Rossville Street itself. People were just standing there in tears and I felt that that was the state that she was in. Day 122/178/8 to Day 122/178/24

Considering this analysis of the situation and that the evidence is otherwise completely untested, we submit that the Tribunal should attach no weight to this evidence.

16.6.1.20 Anna O'Donnell and Grainne O'Donnell nee Lynch

Ms Anna O'Donnell, now deceased, referred, at AO20.1, to a man firing an old rifle from behind the taxi office in William Street hitting nothing. He was advised to put the gun away by bystanders which he did immediately. She did not see him after this. Ms Grainne O'Donnell elaborates on this evidence based on what her Mother told her of the incident, namely "after the person was wounded she saw a gunman come out of the house somewhere in the region of GRJ8/K8/7 carrying an old style gun. He fired a shot into the air. The people around him told him to put the gun away as he would draw army fire." AO30, paragraph 25

16.6.1.21 This is an obvious reference to the shot fired, following the shots fired by Soldiers A and B, by OIRA 1 and its aftermath. Ms A O'Donnell is obviously mistaken when she suggests that the shot was fired from the ground into the air and her account is at odds with the majority of available evidence in this regard. It should also be noted that when she witnesses Damien Donaghy fall, having been shot by either Soldier A or B, she refers, mistakenly, to having heard only one shot rather than five. This evidence is completely untested, except by Ms Grainne O'Donnell to whom her Mother repeated the same mistaken account, and should, in our submission, be disregarded as such albeit significant that Ms Grainne O'Donnell does suggest that her Mother told her that she had seen the gunman in a derelict building. Day 105/140/1to Day 105/140/2.

It is clear, from his accounts at M77.1 paragraph 5, M77.3F-G, M77.7E-F and M77.12 paragraphs 7 to 9, that what Mr Tereshchuck is referring to the shot fired by OIRA 1 and that he has not remembered, or heard, the previous five shots fired by Soldiers A and B because of the confusion emanating from the commotion around him, including being overcome with gas and the resultant divided attention. Day 71/109/1 to Day 71/109/10.

16.6.1.23 Teresa Bradley

According to the witness there was a gunman on the first floor walkway of the western side of the Kells Walk maisonettes towards the northern end.

> "The man was standing completely alone and was pointing a handgun straight in front of him with arm outstretched, and was firing it in the direction he was facing." AB70.2 paragraphs 12 to 13

16.6.1.24 Mrs Bradley said that the man fired several times and the crowd shouted for him to stop. He then disappeared. According to Mrs Bradley, he had been shooting in a northerly direction after the shooting of Damien Donaghy and John Johnston.

16.6.1.25 The witness claimed that she had told the statement taker about the gunman on 4th February 1972. This was a schoolteacher called William Smyth. The witness accepted at Day 064/73/1 to Day 064/73/4 that she possibly did read the 1972 statement through before signing it. Neither did she tell anyone about her unhappiness about that statement except her husband Day 064/73/8 to Day 064/73/11. The witness's husband however said that they had not discussed it. Day 064/14/7. William Smyth gave evidence on Day 083/181/14 to Day 083/182/12. He strongly refuted the suggestion that he had deliberately left out a reference to the gunman in Kells Walk in Teresa Bradley's 1972 statement[21].

16.6.1.26 It the Tribunal accept that this incident occurred, it is clear that it took place prior to the deployment of Support Company Day 064/61/3 to

[21] We refer the Tribunal to the remarks by Chief Superintendent McCullough in relation to the standards of honesty of the schoolteachers in Derry. Day 231/164/15 to Day 231/164/23

Day 064/61/12. It is unclear at what the gunman was firing at but the army did not observe him.

16.6.2 The Columbcille Court/ "Drainpipe Shot"

16.6.2.1 OIRA1 fired a shot from Columbcille Court from a .303 rifle. It is likely to have been the shot that struck the drainpipe at the Presbyterian Church.

16.6.2.2 OIRA1 maintains that this shot was a retaliatory action taken after it became apparent that the Army had shot two civilians, namely Damien Donaghy and John Johnston. OIRA1 was on a balcony in the Columbcille Court flats when he heard three shots AOIRA1.27 paragraph 18. He also heard shouting to the effect that two civilians were had been shot and he formed the impression that soldiers positioned at the Presbyterian Church were responsible. He fired one shot at the Army. AOIRA1.6 paragraphs 16 to 21. He maintained this in the course of oral evidence on Days 395 and Day 396.

16.6.2.3 OIRA2 accompanied OIRA1. His evidence is to similar effect. He said that whilst on the Columbcille Court balcony he heard two or three shots and then heard shouts that two people had been shot by the Army. OIRA1 then fired one shot at "Army sniper in the Presbyterian Church area" AOIRA2.3 paragraphs 8 to 12, AOIRA2.15 paragraphs 9 to 14. He maintained this in the course of oral evidence on Day 392.

16.6.2.4 There was then a heated argument with Sean Keenan - Provisional IRA Explosives Officer, PIRA1 and RM1.

16.6.2.5 There is a large body of evidence to suggest that OIRA1's shot did follow the shootings of Damien Donaghy and John Johnston. This is not intended to be a comprehensive list, but is a selection:

(i) Peter Mullan in our submission was the most compelling, persuasive and clear witness in relation to the sequencing of the shooting of Damien Donaghy and John Johnston and the incident with OIRA1. The witness knew and recognised OIRA1. The events, including the heated argument with others present is set out in considerable and convincing detail in his Sunday Times interview at AM450.1 to AM450.3. His Sunday Times interview is completely consistent with his Eversheds statement AM450.6 paragraphs 8 to 24. .

(ii) Eamon Gallagher gave oral evidence to the Tribunal on Day 66. He also provided a detailed account to the Sunday Times Insight Team. In that account he heard that two men had been shot and saw a crowd carrying two bodies to Colmbcille Court. This must be a reference to Damien Donaghy and John Johnston. He also saw the BBC camera crew that were in the area. A man appeared with a rifle and said "I'm going to get on this roof and shoot,..." because these other people had been shot". There was then a tug of war with the gun AG8.7. This account has clear echoes of the OIRA1 incident and the argument with Sean Keenan, PIRA1 and RM1.

(iii) Anthony Martin gave oral evidence to the Tribunal on Day 176. He was formerly a L/Cpl in the UDR and spent 12 years in the Navy. In his Sunday Times interview to Peter Pringle dated 29th March 1972 he said he was along with Peter Lancaster AL4. When they came out of a friend's flat at Kells Walk he heard two high velocity shots "from the direction of the Richardson's factory or the Presbyterian Church. A few seconds later I distinctly heard the thump of a .303 right beside us on the corner of Columbcille Court was fired – one round. I know the thump of the .303 very well... I want to make the point that it is a racing cert. that the

.303 replied to the first two shots... after the shot had been fired I saw an argument going on between the gunman, who I later learnt was an Official and some Provisionals. The Provos were trying to get the gun from the Official and stop him firing because of the crowd." AM24.3, AM24.11 paragraphs 19 to 20

(iv) None of the civilians who were throwing stones in the area of the waste ground north of William Street at the soldiers in the Abbey Taxis building or on the roof of the GPO refer to a shot passing northwards over or past their position towards the Presbyterian Church

(v) Damien Donaghy was in the area for some time before he was shot. He was involved in stone throwing in the waste ground to the north of William Street. He said that the first shot he heard fired in this area was when he was picking up a rubber bullet and was himself shot in the leg AD120.1. He heard no shooting prior to this.

(vi) Billy McCartney gave oral evidence to the Tribunal on Day 84. He also had been in the area for some time and was involved in some of the stone throwing. The first shot he was aware of was that which struck Damien Donaghy. The second shot he heard struck John Johnston AM87.3 paragraphs 10 to 13.

(vii) When Eugene Lafferty was in William Street the first shots he heard were two SLR rounds that came from the direction of the Presbyterian Church. These shots struck Damien Donaghy and John Johnston AL1.2 paragraphs 7 to 8.

(viii) Father Carolan in his 1972 account was in William Street "a short distance from Rossville Corner". He saw a few young men throwing stones at the army on the roof of the GPO. He then made his way into what must be the Castle laundry waste ground. A crowd was moving through this space and "shots rang out from the direction of the sorting office roof. I ducked at the sound of gunfire then I lifted my head to see about ten yards from me two men being helped, one old, one young." The witness then assisted in helping them to the Shiels' house. H3.8. These appear to be the first shots that he heard in the area.

(ix) Charles Meehan in his 1972 account provides further evidence. He said that along with Pat Carolan he stood in the area for "a while trying to clear our heads and eyes from the effects of gas". He observed the soldiers in the Abbey Taxis building and saw the soldier who shot the youth AM390.1. It is submitted that this is clear evidence in relation to who opened fire first. Pat Carolan's evidence corroborates Mr Meehan. He commented after setting out his recollection of seeing Damien Donaghy shot in his statement to Eversheds "That single shot was the first I heard. If I had heard shooting before I certainly would not have been waiting around in that area" AO6.2 paragraphs 8 to 11. Day 060/9/1 to Day 060/9/4.

(x) Frank Hone made a statement to NICRA but did not give oral evidence to this Inquiry. He said in 1972 that he heard shooting and heard two civilians were shot. He then heard a heavier shot three minutes later, which was close to him in Kells Walk. There is no reference to this in his Eversheds statement AH80.1, AH80.2 paragraphs 23 to 34.

16.7.1 Introduction

16.7.1.2 This section deals, in the main, with the evidence of the soldiers in Machinegun Platoon whose evidence is appraised on an individual basis and collectively. The evidence of those in Wilford's OP in William Street, Harrison's Garage and the Embassy Ballroom is also evaluated in broad terms.

16.7.2. Wilfords Observation Post in William Street

16.7.2.1 The exact whereabouts of the observation post in William Street where Colonel Wilford took up position prior to Support Company's deployment through Barrier 12 is not known. Following an exchange between Colonel Wilford and Mr Clarke QC it seems probable that the observation post was in a three-storey building situated to the north east of the Presbyterian Church from where it was possible to see the march and the vehicles moving into the Bogside. Day 313/1/3 to Day 313/3/25. This building can be seen in P493. What is certain is that it is no distance at all from Abbey Taxis.

16.7.2.2 The occupants of this observation post, at the relevant time, were Colonel Wilford, Captain Mike Jackson, INQ 1152, INQ 1940 and INQ 1171. According to INQ 1940 there was an excellent view of the riot. He describes a scene of screaming, shouting and stone-throwing. C1940.2 paragraphs 8 to 9 and Day 315/104/1 to Day 315/104/24. Captain Jackson was observing for a longer period, yet he made no mention of any nail bombs.

16.7.2.3 Not one of these witnesses claim, in their statements or on Day 313, Day 318, Day 334, Day 315 respectively, to have heard nail bombs explode in William Street as alleged by Soldiers A and B. (INQ 1171 did not give oral evidence). Major Loden, also in the observation post could not offer any plausible explanation for his failure to hear these supposed nail bombs. Day 345/49/2 to Day 345/51/3.

16.7.3.1 The clear view from the Embassy Ballroom can be seen in P233.69A, P233.69, P279, P402, P403, P404, P406, P407, P408 and P409. Not one of those positioned on ECHO OP, except for INQ 877 dealt with below, namely Lieutenant 009, who was in charge of the ECHO OP, INQ 877, INQ 883, WO INQ 1164, INQ 1252, Soldier 108, Captain 021, Lance Bombadier 118, Soldier 123 and Soldier 157, refers to having heard explosions and/or nail bombs or of having seen any nail bombers at the time relevant to the shooting of Damien Donaghy and John Johnston. This is despite the fact that there was a clear view of all of the Bogside from the top of the Embassy Ballroom, C1025.5 paragraph 17. General Ford, Captain INQ 2 and Lieutenant Colonel Ferguson who claim not to have been on the Embassy Ball Room at the relevant time, were within the vicinity of Barrier 14 in William and do not refer to having heard nail bombs at this time.

16.7.3.2 INQ 877, who was not called to give evidence, believes that he heard the sound of explosions coming from the Rossville Flats, C877.2 paragraph 13. INQ 877 is clearly confused in this regard as he remembers radio traffic relating to this issue, none of which appears on the available logs. It is obvious that he has mistaken the sound of rubber bullet guns, CS canisters and/or CS gas grenades, none of which he realised had been fired on the day, for the sound of nail bombs.

16.7.3.3 Soldiers in Harrison's Garage tasked to protect Stevenson's Bakery/Abbey Taxis

INQ 117, INQ 146, INQ 312 and INQ 480 were given the specific task to cover Stevenson's bakery. Yet they did not hear two nail bombs that supposedly exploded on the waste ground nor do they see the consequences of their having done so. They also fail to hear five high velocity shots from the Abbey taxis building. Importantly, and in common with all the other soldiers, they fail to see a man behaving in the manner described by A and B and they fail to see a young boy and an elderly man shot.

16.7.4 Introduction to Machinegun Platoon

16.7.4.1 The only sergeant in the Machine Gun Platoon who was present at Bloody Sunday was Sergeant INQ 441. He was acting Platoon Commander in charge of Machine Gun Platoon because the resident Commander, INQ 1851, was on a course in America Day 303/68/5 to Day 303/68/10. His acting platoon sergeant was Corporal INQ 1686. Day 303/91/9. The platoon consisted, thereafter, of two Corporals, one of whom, Soldier A, fired live rounds on the day, three Lance-Corporals and fourteen Privates one of whom, Soldier B, fired three live rounds on the day. The platoon seems, on the evidence available, to have been divided into two sections. One section was commanded by Corporal A, the other by Corporal INQ 1686 whose second in command was Lance Corporal INQ 275. Soldier 005 and INQ 439 drove the two Machinegun Platoon Pigs. C439.1 paragraph 4.

16.7.4.2 Of the twenty-one members of the platoon who were present on Bloody Sunday only three made statements to the RMP, Soldiers A, B and 005, and only two to the Treasury Solicitor, Soldiers A and B. INQ 441 was the only platoon commander in Support Company not to have made a statement in 1972. Soldiers A and B were the only two members of the Machinegun Platoon to give evidence to Lord Widgery, on Day 12, and only nine members of the platoon gave oral evidence to this Inquiry. We have received no statement from INQ 1523, who could not be traced within the Inquiry's jurisdiction, or INQ 1686 who is deceased.

16.7.4.3 According to the order of the day "an arrest force [was] to be held centrally behind the check-points and launched in a scoop-up operation to arrest as many hooligans and rioters as possible." The Machinegun Platoon was to play an instrumental role in the purported arrest operation by acting as one of the arms in the pincer movement that was to close off the rioters around the junction of Rossville, William and Little James Streets. Day 046/18/1.

16.7.4.4 The reality of what happened on Bloody Sunday bears little resemblance to this order and the debacle that was the Machinegun Platoon's involvement in the day supports the contention that the operation was not planned or controlled in order to minimise to the greatest extent possible the risk of the use of lethal force. The role of the Machinegun Platoon in the day's events highlights:

i) The danger of using troops whose lack of knowledge of the geography of an area contributed to an atmosphere of disorientation and chaos leading to an increased risk of gunfire.

ii) The fact that, once a decision had been made to use 1 Para, they should have been appropriately briefed by 8 Brigade in relation to: the geography of the area; locations from where 1 Para could launch an effective arrest operation; how Derry rioters operated and how the general body of marchers would be likely to behave.

iii) The fact that no arrest operation should have been launched in the circumstances which existed on the day. This is subject to our primary contention that 1 Para in fact went into the Bogside without an Order from 8 Brigade.

16.7.4.5 It was Colonel Wilford's intention that troops would deploy from the area of the Presbyterian Church across the waste-ground and in, a pincer movement, close off any rioters somewhere in the junction of Rossville Street/William Street/Little James' Street. The original plan was for the troops to go through the yard of the Presbyterian Church and over a wall. According to some accounts soldiers were to use a Pig to drive through the wall next to the little building, with a flat roof to the east of the church, in order to get into the waste ground to the south leading onto William Street.

A subsequent plan was devised, when, after a 'recce' on arrival in Derry, it became apparent that it was not feasible to get through the churchyard.

The actual deployment of Machinegun Platoon was achieved by putting some soldiers through a number of buildings on to the first floor of a derelict building commonly known as Abbey Taxis. According to Major Loden's diary of operations, at B2212, at 1540 approximately:

> "In view of the difficulty in approaching the disused building by a concealed route, which involved climbing two by twelve foot walls, I ordered the Machine Gun Platoon to move forward to this building, in anticipation of trouble at William Street on which a NICRA march was now moving. At the same time the Mortar Platoon cuts the wire on top of the wall and the Composite Platoon under my command was given a warning order to deploy 5 or to the open ground south of the Presbyterian Church to arrest rioters."

16.7.4.6 From the evidence of the members of Machinegun Platoon it seems that, in order to gain access to the building, they had to overcome very substantial physical obstructions including, at least, two high walls, one of which was topped with barbed wire. It was from this wall that the radio operator, INQ 455, is claimed to have fallen sustaining injuries that disengaged him from the operation and, as a result, continuing his role as signaller.

16.7.4.7 Soldiers A and B fired two and three rounds, respectively, from Abbey Taxis, however, they fired these live rounds, not at a nail bomber but at two innocent people, Damien Donaghy and John Johnston. As outlined in greater detail below, no member of Machinegun platoon, with the exception of four soldiers whose evidence cannot be relied upon, either saw or heard nail bombs. Only one member of the platoon, other than Soldier A, makes reference to a single shot having been fired towards their position, INQ 153, before shots were fired from within the derelict building. In effect, not one member of Machinegun Platoon corroborates Soldier A's or Soldier B's version of events. See Table 1 at Appendix 1.

16.7.4.8 We will, therefore, ask the Tribunal to conclude that Soldiers A and B lied both at Widgery and to this Inquiry when they maintained that they had seen and fired at a nail bomber. Neither the supposed sighting of a nail bomber nor the fact that live rounds had been fired were reported over the radio despite the fact that it could have had a dramatic influence upon any decision that the company commander had to make in relation to the deployment of other platoons and/or companies, a fact conceded by INQ 441. Day 303/87/4 to Day 303/87/9 and Day 303/100/25 to Day 303/103/2. The reason for this is that there were no nail bombs.

16.7.4.9 It was whilst the Machinegun Platoon was in Abbey Taxis, at approximately 1555 according to Major Loden's diary, B2212, that a single shot is purported to have been fired at a wire cutting party, consisting of members of Mortar Platoon, hitting a drainpipe. Again according to Major Loden's diary:

> "A few moments after this a member of the Machine Gun Platoon observed a man preparing to ignite a nail bomb at the corner of the building on the south side of William Street. The Platoon Commander then gave orders to a corporal and a soldier to open fire as the bomber prepared to throw".

This shot, from Columbcille Court, actually occurred after the shots fired by Soldiers A and B. The timing of this shot is not relevant in any way to the shooting of Damien Donaghy and John Johnston but is, within the context of Sector 1, dealt with further below.

16.7.4.10 There is conflicting evidence as to whether the entire platoon went into Abbey Taxis although it does seem likely that the whole platoon entered the building except for Soldier 005, and presumably INQ 439 although he has no real memory of the day, who remained guarding his Pig and drove it through Barrier 12 into Rossville Street in the convoy of Support Company, the deployment of which is as follows:

"The Mortar Platoon first; followed by my company headquarters and my ACV, escorted by Ferret scout cars, Armoured Command Vehicle; then the two empty vehicles of the Machine Gun Platoon, two 4-tonners of the Composite Platoon, and the two Pigs containing the Anti-Tank Platoon." B2251

16.7.4.11 According to Major Loden this deployment occurred at 1600 hours:

"A warning order was received to be prepared to assault the rioters in William Street through the barrier in Little James Street. Accordingly I ordered the company to return to their vehicles. The Machinegun Platoon were unable to extricate themselves due to the final drop of 25 feet from the first floor of a disused building which had been used to gain covered access to their present position. I ordered the Platoon Commander to remain where he was and informed him that I would bring his vehicles to his position via Little James Street and William Street when the company assaulted through barrier number 12." ED49.11

There is, however, no evidence of this order on the radio which suggests that Major Loden did not in fact make this contact and that this is an attempt to give the impression that he was in control.

16.7.4.12 Major Loden's false assertion is further exposed by Soldier 017 who says in his statement to Eversheds:

> " I have seen a statement from Major Loden which suggests that he ordered me to take two empty Pigs back towards William Street to extricate the Machine Gun Platoon from a derelict house and that I did this. I did not take Pigs to pick up the Machine Gun Platoon. I think it more likely that Major Loden indicated to me that he wanted to get the Machine Gun Platoon extricated using two empty Pigs and that I then found soldiers to carry out this order." B2111.017 paragraph 113

16.7.4.13 The reality of the situation seems to have been that, without informing INQ 441, the vehicles were sent back to collect Machinegun Platoon so that only those who happened upon them by chance were transported down Rossville Street to the area of the Rossville Flats in a vehicle whilst the remainder went on foot. It is not clear whether all members of Machinegun Platoon reached the area of the Rossville Flats but it is clear that those who did arrived there towards the end of Support Company's deployment into Rossville Street.

16.7.5 Individual Members of Machinegun Platoon

Soldier A

16.7.5.1 Soldier A says in his first RMP statement; "About 1530 hours on 30th January 1972 I was with other soldiers who moved from St James Street towards William Street, Londonderry. We moved across rooftops at the west side of the Presbyterian Church" B40.14. The only explanation he can provide for having used the term "rooftops," knowing that he had gone over walls, is that he was perhaps tired or perhaps believed the walls he had gone over in gaining access to the derelict building to have been roofed. Day 297/60/22 to Day 297/60/5 .

16.7.5.2 Soldier B's RMP statement is made ten minutes after Soldier A's, uses exactly the same terminology and also places Soldier B outside the derelict building. Soldier B's RMP statement says:

> "About 1530 hours on 30th January 1972 I moved with other soldiers across rooftops between St James Street and William Street, Londonderry." B21

When this is put to him, Soldier A, again, fails to provide a plausible explanation. Despite Soldier A's denial, it is obvious that Soldiers A and B's RMP statements, and subsequent statements, were made as a result of a co-ordinated effort between them. Day 297/66/3 to Day 297/66/6.[22] For people to get accounts identically right may mean that they are accurate but when they get them identically wrong it gives rise to enquiries.

16.7.5.3 B3, the trajectory map that Soldier A marked as the area from which he fired completely correlates and matches the information in his first RMP statement. Soldier A has indicated that he was on waste ground outside the derelict building. Whilst he rectified this mistake by the time he made his statement to the Treasury Solicitor, at B20.025, he is unable to provide an explanation, other than that he was tired, as to how it came about. Day 297/61/8 to Day 297/62/10. The account provided to Major Loden for inclusion in his list is also patently incorrect although Soldier A can provide no explanation. Day 297/88/1 to Day 297/90/7.

[22] Soldier B concedes that he and Soldier A discussed the shooting incident after the event, Day 311/36/12 to Day 311/36/15 and Soldier A states that they discussed it in the Pig. Day 297/76/4 to Day 297/76/8

16.7.5.4 Further evidence that Soldier A sought to suggest that he was on the waste ground rather than in the derelict building is that, rather than describing his position behind the window, he used the term "low walls:"

> "Two nail bombs were then thrown and they exploded very close to us. We did not sustain any casualties as the majority of the troops were behind low walls." B20.14.

16.7.5.5 Soldier A agrees that there was nothing to prevent him from saying that he actually saw two nail bombs in flight rather than using the above terminology and can provide no explanation as to why he did. Day 297/68/9 to Day 297/68/20.

16.7.5.6 In 1972 he described how he:

> ". . . saw a man in an alleyway directly opposite my position on the other side of William Street. He was about 50 metres away. The man was wearing a blue cardigan or windcheater and was about 5 feet 7 inches tall and had fair hair. He was of average build." B20.14.

16.7.5.7 When asked by Counsel for some of the Families whether to confirm that this is not a description of John Johnston or Damien Donaghy, Soldier A provides no comment other than that this was a description of the man he shot. Day 297/69/5 to Day 297/70/12. He maintains that he shot only one man, that he saw only one man fall and that he saw only one man being taken away. Yet it is clear from the following concessions that Soldier A could not have made a mistake:

i) He was shooting to kill Day 297/70/15 to Day 297/70/17

ii) That he should not have missed his target at a distance of 50 yards Day 297/70/22 to Day 297/71/6

iii) He had 10 years' experience in the Parachute Regiment and had previously been involved in hostile action Day 297/77/18 to Day 297/77/24

16.7.5.8 A soldier with 10 years' experience in the Parachute Regiment would obviously realise the importance of reporting the presence of nail bombs in the area, let alone his having shot a nail bomber, prior to the launching of an operation. To suggest, therefore, that he did not communicate the fact that he had shot dead a "nail bomber" because he assumed that his supposed warning shout would have been sufficient caution to the platoon commander, is completely implausible.[23] Day 297/77/18 to Day 297/77/24. He accepts that he was at fault for this failure at Day 297/79/11 to Day 297/79/12.

16.7.5.9 It is clear that, having immediately embarked upon a course designed to obscure the truth, Soldier A has had real difficulty in recollecting with precision the actual inaccurate account that he had originally supplied. In our submission, the following aspects of Soldier A's evidence undermine his account and only serve to support the suggestion that Soldier A did not shoot a nail bomber but shot, without justification, John Johnston, Damien Donaghy or both:

i) That the map on which he marked his alleged target is incorrect in exactly the same way that Soldier B's is incorrect Day 297/72/1 to Day 297/73/12

ii) Whilst in 1972 he states that the object he saw in his target's hand caught fire like a match, he evidence is now to the effect that it was clearly a very distinctive type of match. Day 297/73/13 to Day 297/73/24

[23] No other member of the platoon refers to having heard a warning shout about nail bombers from Soldier A

iii) The inconsistencies contained in his various statements and evidence to Widgery, outlined in Counsel's Reports Numbers 2 and 3

iv) Soldier A mentioned for the first time in his evidence to this Inquiry, with no plausible explanation, that he heard gunfire before they moved into the derelict building Day 297/112/19 to Day 297/115/14. He accepts, however, that he is possibly wrong about the timing of this incident, Day 297/118/9 in which case it would have provided no reason for him to be in any way 'hyped up.'

v) He cannot account for having missed a target with his first shot Day 297/80/17 to Day 297/80/21.

vi) He cannot account for not having seen John Johnston and Damien Donaghy being removed from the area.

Soldier B

16.7.5.10 Soldier B fired three rounds from the ground floor of the Abbey Taxis building in William Street. He made a statement to the RMP, one to the Treasury Solicitor and gave evidence to Widgery in 1972. He now claims to have no memory of firing on Bloody Sunday. He underwent brain surgery in 1986 after which he suffered some short-term memory loss. However, he states that he is fully recovered so this cannot be relied upon as the reason for his having forgotten such a significant moment. Day 311/1/19 to Day 311/1/4.

16.7.5.11 Soldier B exhibits very defined views on civil rights marches and no go areas. He describes how civil rights marches were used by terrorists as screens for throwing petrol or nail bombs and for sniping at soldiers or police. B43.001. The Inquiry will be aware that no such example has ever been found and Soldier B admits that he had never actually been present at civil rights march before and cannot provide any such example. Day 311/3/12 to Day 311/3/14 and Day 311/3/20 to Day 311/4/10.

16.7.5.12 It "sticks in [his] mind," more so than firing three live rounds incidentally, that Derry was a "no-go area run by terrorists," B43.002 paragraph 5, and that he and his colleagues wished that they could go up to Creggan, recover a lot of IRA ammunition and weapons and effectively stop the no-go area and restore law and order to that part of Derry. Day 311/9/16 to Day 311/10/9. By the end of his oral evidence this desire has changed from being just "back room talk," Day 311/9/16, to talk before moving into the Bogside and a belief, when positioned at the Rossville Flats, that this was what the operation involved. Day 311/92/4 to Day 311/92/14. Indeed, the fact that he did believe the operation to be one to clear the no go areas is confirmed when he states that he imagines that he was disappointed that the Bogside remained, after the operation, a 'no go' area. B43.004 paragraph 19.

16.7.5.13 Soldier B's interpretation of the yellow card is questionable to say the least:

> Q. At the bottom you say:
> "If one is in an area where there is shooting going on or explosions taking place if I see anyone carrying a petrol bomb or a nail bomb or any weapon I would shoot him without warning."
> Was it your understanding at the time you were permitted to do that within the terms of the Yellow Card?
> A. Yes. Day 311/8/10 to Day 311/8/17

16.7.5.14 He also describes, in his 1972 statement, how he cocked his rifle when taking up his position because, since stones were already being thrown, he suspected that explosive missiles may also be thrown shortly. Day 311/32/1 to Day 311/32/6. He does not know why he did this but hazards the guess that he "probably" felt under threat. He also believed that it was permissible even if a group were just throwing stones. Day 311/70/24 to Day 311/71/18.

16.7.5.15 Soldier B now remembers how he, with seven or eight of his colleagues, moved over ruined buildings into a derelict building where, having climbed down a wall to the ground floor, he positioned himself near a wall that had been partly demolished and was more open and exposed than the wall with the windows which appear in the photos. It was during this process that INQ 455 fell and injured himself. B43.002 paragraphs 7 to 9. Soldier B accepts that he may have confused the exposure of the large windows in the Abbey Taxis buildings for a partly demolished wall, Day 311/26/7 to Day 311/26/10.What he is able to remember clearly, however, is that he felt that this was an area in which they could easily get slaughtered by someone planting a bomb by the solid wall. B43.002 paragraph 10.

16.7.5.16 Soldier B, in his first statement to the RMP stated:

> "At about 3.30 I moved with other soldiers across roof tops between St James St and William St. to the West of the Presbyterian Church. We took up position close to William St. on ground where derelict houses have been broken down." B43.009

This implies, in much the same way that Soldier A had suggested in his RMP statement and trajectory photograph, that he was outside the building at the time that he fired. Both Soldiers, coincidentally, amended their evidence when making a statement to the Treasury Solicitor to reflect that they had actually been inside the building when they fired. Day 311/16/21 to Day 311/17/7

Soldier B makes a significant, internally conflicting comment in his Eversheds statement:

> There were people in the area throwing things at us. Stones, petrol bombs and the odd nail bomb, but I have no specific recollection now of nail bombs going off and cannot describe this further." B43.003 paragrah 11.

When asked to account for this he suggests, in our submission absurdly, that he probably thought that the dust he saw rise was a nail bomb. He concedes that he has no specific recollection of other missiles being thrown. Day 311/30/15 to Day 311/31/3.

16.7.5.17 In his 1972 statements, Soldier B was a lot more precise. He described a man to whom he had paid "particular attention"[Emphasis added]:

> I observed a person to whom I paid particular attention. This man was of medium height and wearing a dark coloured windcheater...[24]in the alleyway of William St looking towards our position as if trying to locate the nearest soldier. I then saw him bring his hand his right from behind his back .He had a dark object in his hand ..appeared to fill his hand..other hand he brushed downwards against a wall. He had a lighted flame in his left hand .He was looking down at his hands and started to bring them together. B143.009.

16.7.5.18 Giving evidence to Lord Widgery, Soldier B stated that the man seemed to be communicating with those behind him. B26. Soldier B aimed at the man's chest, and fired three shots. He saw the man fall to the ground and two people came and took him away. The object in his hand presumably rolled away. Soldier B remembers none of this now but accepts that his 1972 statement makes it clear that he did not make a mistake on the day maintaining that he actually shot and hit a man whom he had identified as a nail bomber: Day 311/80/8 to Day 311/80/16:

i) He was familiar with the sound of nail bombs and does not believe that he could have mistaken the sound of a rubber bullet, or the explosion of a gas canister for a nail bomb Day 311/34/1 to Day 311/34/25.

ii) The man chose to light a nail bomb in full view of the soldiers. Day 311/72/8 to Day 311/72/12

iii) There was no impediment that could have led him to make a mistake. That wearing a respirator should not make any difference to his aim as they are taught to fire wearing a respirator. Day 311/73/8 to Day 311/74/4

iv) That he had a good clear unobstructed view of the man he shot so much so that he saw him in the process of lighting a nail bomb, saw that his first shot missed but that the second one hit the man at whom he aimed, that the man fell and that people took him away. Day 311/75/6 to Day 311/75/14

v) That this took place over a period of time during which this individual was drawing attention to himself through his actions Day 311/79/10 to Day 311/79/15

vi) States that he did not shoot Mr Donaghy and Mr Johnston Day 311/76/17 to Day 311/76/20.

vii) That Soldier B was considered to be a "hot shot" and represented his battalion in Bisley. Day 311/89/5 to Day 311/89/11

16.7.5.19 Considering the above, it is clear that Soldier B cannot possibly be considered to have made an error. Nor can he account for the fact that Mr Johnston and Mr Donaghy were shot and removed for the area without his seeing it. All he can rely upon, therefore, is the theory that people who were justifiably shot that day were spirited away so that the bodies were never found. He claims that the nail bomber he shot must be one such 'missing casualty.' Day 311/86/16 to Day 311/86/10. This is a completely implausible suggestion and, in our submission, completely undermines Soldier B version of events in 1972 and his current claim that he cannot remember the events of that day. This, in turn undermines the evidence of Soldier A particularly in view of the fact that Soldier B makes it clear that he and Soldier A discussed the shooting incident after the event, Day 311/36/12 to Day 311/36/15. Soldier B describes how he considered the Widgery Inquiry to be "just a big game" to him. B43.006 paragraph 25. The Tribunal could not be faulted for finding that he has viewed this Inquiry in much the same way.

Sergeant INQ 441

16.7.5.21 INQ 441 was called to give evidence, limited to "briefings and events in/around Abbey Taxis," on Day 303.

16.7.5.22 INQ 441 had been acting platoon commander of Machinegun platoon for the period of just a few weeks before 30th January. Day 303/68/10 to

303/68/12. Prior to this, INQ 441 had been the platoon sergeant of the Anti-tank Platoon, also Support Company. With all the platoon commanders, INQ 441 attended a briefing given by Major Loden on the 29th January 1972. The briefing sticks in INQ 441's mind by reason of the fact that it " was one of the most full and thorough briefings" he had ever been given during which he was shown maps and plans of the area. C441.1 paragraph 5. Despite this vigorous assertion INQ 441 is unable to remember:

i) Having been shown photographs of the area into which he was going.

ii) Having been informed of what to expect would happen in Derry.

iii) What other companies apart from Support Company would be doing.

iv) Having discussed the details of an arrest operation.

Day 303/68/5 to Day 303/69/25 .

As a result of this he claims that he is also unable to remember what information he passed on to his men during his own briefing. Day 303/70/1 to 303/70/14.

16.7.5.23 INQ 441's memory of his position on the day not only varies between that given to Eversheds and that to the Tribunal during oral evidence but is not held by any other member of his platoon. According to his Eversheds statement, at C441.4 paragraph 18, INQ 441 "entered the derelict house" at the middle floor, and, because there were no stairs, it was necessary to scale or jump down the remaining brickwork, one man at a time, by leaning out of the window and dropping to the ground floor, Day 303/80/12 to Day 303/80/19. It is his memory that, with the possible exception of the driver or drivers of the Pigs and possibly a sentry for the Pigs, the rest of Machinegun Platoon also made their way to Abbey Taxis. Day 303/87/9 to Day 303/87/13.

previously of cancer of the spine. She had 14 children aged between 16 and 10 months old. The family lived in the [redacted] area of Creggan but by the time she was released from hospital on 29th May 1972 the family had moved to Creggan Heights. She was to wear a calliper on her left leg until she died in 1988. She had no criminal record or political affiliations.

17.5.1.3 Summary

An event such as a Civil Rights March on a Sunday afternoon would have been an opportunity for her to escape from the full time demands which rearing a family of fourteen children would have entailed. The opportunity to exchange family gossip and neighbourly news would have been shared between her and her sisters who accompanied her on the march:

> "I remember a friend of my mother's called Peggy McLaughin and two of our cousins, May and Rita Nichol, came round to call for my mother. She had not really been out of the house since my father died and Peggy, May and Rita were insistent that she come out and participate in the march. She had certainly never been on any previous marches." AD32.1 paragraph 4

Despite this she would not have been exempt if it were alleged that at some point during the course of the afternoon that she participated or was clarification was, at best, completely confused as illustrated below, Day 303/98/24 to Day 303/99/22:

> Q. Your recollection now, for what it is worth, is that all of the men, apart from A and B, were in an area behind the derelict building?
> A. You said behind the derelict building.
> Q. Yes, behind the derelict building?
> A. No, I have got them looking into the waste ground.
> Q. Looking into the waste ground?
> A. Where the nine windows show, on to the waste ground.
> Q. Where were the men who were outside the building, where were they looking?
> A. They would be looking into the waste ground, as far as I can recall now.
> Q. In other words, what you recollect is that those people had a clear view of the waste ground?
> A. In front of the building, yes.
> Q. And a clear view, therefore, of the rioters who were on the waste ground?
> A. I cannot recall that now.
> Q. But would they have been able physically to see people on the waste ground?
> A. Yes.
> Q. Would people on the waste ground have been physically able to see them?
> A. I cannot recall.

16.7.5.27 This supposed confusion digressed to concession when, having been shown Soldier A's marked up photograph, B20.009, by Counsel for some of the Families, INQ 441stated that he could not recall exactly where his men were and that at the time he made his statement he "was to believe they were in a building . . . having gone along the wall." Day 303/108/7 to Day 303/108/17

16.7.5.28 Finally, the plausibility of INQ 441's suggestions that he was outside the building when Soldiers A and B fired is completely undermined by the fact that he claim "heard the hard extractions whilst we were in the derelict building when Corporal A and Private B fired at nail bombers." [Emphasis added] C441.6 paragraph 29.

> "Hard extractions" are then described as occurring:
> " . . . when a weapon is cocked and the trigger is pulled, but it does not fire properly because two bullets have gone into the breech. One of the bullets is simply expelled from the breech of the rifle rather than being fired from it." C441.6 paragraph 29.

16.7.5.29 Whilst INQ 441 was unable to assist any further as to what this would entail, Counsel for the Inquiry's understanding of the term "hard extraction" was that when two bullets go into the breech, one bullet is fired but the other is not, so that the forward bullet is simply expelled without any firing while the latter is fired and discharged in the normal manner. Day 303/92/2 to Day 303/92/8.

16.7.5.30 It seems that INQ 441, in concocting this version of events, may have been trying to suggest that Soldiers A and B did not fire all the rounds that they claimed, but mistakenly ejected them onto the floor and, having been negligent in not collecting them, were forced to say that they had fired more rounds than they actually did. Day 303/93/25 to Day 303/94/6. The evidence of the more credible witnesses who heard Soldiers A and B fire, summarised below, does not support this scenario.

16.7.5.31 Also, despite having no memory of hearing Soldiers A's and B's shots, INQ 441 claims that he can "distinctly remember hearing that some of my platoon had hard extractions on their rifles earlier in the day." [Emphasis added] C441.6 paragraph 29. What INQ 441 is sure of is that there was nothing to indicate that there had been a hard extraction other than the sound of a round pinging off the floor. Day 303/92/9 to Day 303/92/19.

16.7.5.32 This evidence cannot stand because if he were outside the building as he claims to have been, INQ 441 could not possibly have heard the ping of a round off the floor. Having been challenged on this point, both by counsel to the Inquiry and Counsel for some of the Families, INQ 441's only response was "I cannot recall but that is what I felt when I made my statement." Day 303/93/10. This attempt was frustrated in any event by Counsel for some of the Families in response to whom INQ 441 conceded that, although he could not remember having done so, had this occurred he would have ordered his men to pick up the extracted bullets.

16.7.5.33 It is our submission that this entire, weak concoction was an attempt by INQ 441 to conveniently distance himself from his responsibility in relation to the shots fired by Soldiers A and B which, although he assumes that he did hear them on the day, he claims to be no longer able to remember. Nor can he remember telling them to shoot if they identified a target nor having ordered them to ceasefire. Day 303/83/5 to Day 303/83/15. Yet, although he was not in a position to instruct them and had no knowledge of what they were firing at, being outside the building whilst they were inside, INQ 441 claims, nonsensically in our submission, that he would have told Soldiers A and B to ceasefire even if they had already done so by the time he saw them again. Day 303/85/20 to Day 303/86/7.

16.7.5.34 INQ 441 accepts that it would be highly irregular for one of his soldiers not to have immediately informed him that he had discharged live rounds in the belief that they had seriously injured or killed someone. Day 303/101/19 to Day 303/102/4. Whilst he can no longer remember it, INQ 441 concedes that, because of the dramatic influence upon decisions which the company commander had to make in relation to the deployment of other platoons and/or companies, it was his duty to have reported to Major Loden if members of his platoon had come into contact with persons who were either firing or throwing nail bombs at them particularly if the contact had resulted in a person actually being shot. Day 303/87/4 to Day 303/87/9 and Day 303/100/25 to Day 303/103/2. Indeed, he claims to have radioed the company commander to inform him that he had an injured man, INQ 455, a situation that one would have imagined would have been subsidiary to live rounds being fired and nail bombs thrown. Day 303/82/11 to Day 303/82/14. Major Loden's evidence, on Day 345 is that he was informed by the machine gun platoon commander that the machine-gun platoon had shot and killed a nail-bomber. If this is correct and the evidence of A, B and 441 is incorrect, then the failure to tell Brigade of this significant engagement lies with Major Loden.

16.7.5.35 INQ 441 claims that his assertion on the "World in Action" film in 1972, X117.15, that his platoon had nail bombs thrown at them and that one of his men shot a man in the process of throwing a nail bomb is evidence enough of the veracity of Soldier A and B's claims. This is a ludicrous suggestion put forward by someone who is clutching at straws and who himself admits that he believed the program to have been sanctioned by the Commanding Officer "in order to get the propaganda machine going in our favour before there was too much propaganda against us." C441.7 paragraph 35.

16.7.5.36 Under questioning by Counsel for some of the Families, INQ 441 accepted that Soldiers A and B would have been aware that the Royal Military Police would be interested in whether they had been justified in firing shots and whether they had a specific target. He acknowledges that it would be a natural instinct for anyone, in those circumstances, to compare notes among themselves in order to determine whether:

(a) They fired at two separate targets or at a single target.

(b) The target at which they had fired was wearing the same of different clothing

(c) The target at which they had fired was engaged in the same actions or different actions

In spite of this concurrence, INQ 441 knowingly stops short of accepting that it would be natural to ensure that their stories married. He himself remembers having made a statement about the events of Bloody Sunday to what could have been the Royal Military Police but the statement has not been found. Day 303/95/6 to Day 303/95/20.

16.7.5.37 Although, due to the limitations, it was not open to the parties to question him about it, INQ 441 claims to have broken cover onto the open ground in front of the derelict house with a view to "following up the rear of the march and pick up stragglers" in accordance with his memory of what was the plan for the day. Day 303/81/18. He claims to have chased one such straggler into "a very dark and dingy bookmakers," arrested him and handed him over to a member of Guinness Force. INQ 588 has "no recollection of this at all" and states that his memory is of leaving the derelict building when the crowd had already dispersed. C588.5 paragraph 23.

16.7.5.38 As bookmakers shops do not, open on a Sunday it is possible that the building to which he refers is City Taxis where Patrick O'Donnell was arrested. Alternatively, INQ 441 has invented this incident in order to explain away the fact that he had no idea where the remainder of his platoon was. It does not fit easily with the fact that INQ 441 was an experienced platoon commander, having previously commanded the Anti-tank Platoon.

Rather, it seems convenient that, as with the story about INQ 455, the platoon commander undertook tasks better placed with a subordinate. However, as explained, we were unable to clarify this point any further.

16.7.5.39 INQ 441 claims that he went to Rossville Street on foot, Day 303/90/1 to Day 303/90/14 though he cannot recall whether some of the platoon may have gone down Rossville Street in Pigs. Day 303/87/14 to Day 303/87/22. Again, we are unable to test the veracity of INQ 441's claims that he lent Soldier R, from Mortar Platoon, a pair of long johns that he had in his pig so that he could wear them under his trousers which had been splashed with "with a corrosive or acid" so much so that there were holes and burn marks all around the bottom of his trousers. It is open to us to question, however, the plausibility of a soldier changing his trousers on open ground in a hostile area. Also, INQ 1919, despite having spoken to Soldiers R and T, has no recollection of their being in pain or mentioning that they had acid thrown at them, Day 296/22/10 to Day 296/22/15 and neither does Soldier 005, another member of INQ 441's platoon. For the reasons outlined above we would also suggest that the evidence of INQ 441 is completely unreliable.

16.7.5.40 Finally, it is noteworthy that INQ 441 accepts that, whilst it was possible to obtain private supplies of ammunition, the practice would be "frowned upon by the Platoon Commander." [My emphasis] C441.7 paragraph 39. Where is the reference to how serious an offence this was, how the commanding officers would not stand for it and, that at the mere mention of such a practice, a full investigation would be commenced and suitable punishment meted out in order to ensure that this habit was stamped out? In our submission, this apparent tolerance, laissez-faire attitude from a platoon commander about such a serious matter.

16.7.5.41 INQ 455 has severe memory problems as the result of temporary oxygen starvation to the brain suffered during surgery and as such is of little or no help in relation to the events of the day. He can remember falling from the top of a wall, falling through some barbed wire and falling on his back. C455.1 paragraph 8. Because he has no memory of anything after that until he was in hospital, INQ 455 believes that he was knocked unconscious by the fall. C455.1 paragraph 8 . He is uncertain of the source of the shooting that he can remember having heard, C455.1 paragraph 5, and cannot remember having carried a back pack radio on the day, C455.2 paragraph 11, What is certain is that he is unable to clarify whether, as asserted by INQ441, he fell outside the building.

16.7.5.42 INQ 1805, who was not called to give evidence, believes that INQ 1851 was in command on Bloody Sunday and can no longer recall the details of a briefing or what their mission was to be on that day. C1805.1 paragraphs 4 to 6. He can, however, remember his section of four or five men moving through some derelict buildings and taking up a position in what was possibly a house for some time. C1805.3 paragraph 16. He has no memory of having seen any other soldiers but states that it is possible that INQ 624 or Corporal A was with him. C1805.3 paragraph 20.

16.7.5.43 As INQ 1805's field of vision was very restricted, because of the walls surrounding, the thrust of his evidence is based mainly on what he could hear. He can remember that, at some stage whilst in the derelict building, he heard some shots. He could not, and cannot, distinguish whether the shots were enemy or friendly fire because of the echoes which resonate in a built up location, but he did not have any sense that his section was under fire and there were no rounds striking close by. He also cannot remember hearing any explosions nor a single shot. C1805.3 paragraphs 17 to 18. Although we have not had the opportunity to ask him, it is our submission that this witness, who was able to hear the sound of a crowd at some point, like that at a football match, C1805.3 paragraph 19, would have been able to hear the sound of nail bombs exploding and, as with the gunfire, would have remembered them had they done so.

16.7.5.44 INQ 275 was a Lance Corporal, second-in-command to INQ 1686, deceased, who was the section commander on Bloody Sunday. Day 340/169/20 to Day 340/170/4. He can remember nothing of a briefing, but surmises that approximately six to twelve men were ordered to take up position in the derelict building, Day 340/171/24 to Day 340/172/2, to keep an eye on the crowd and to stand by. Day 340/179/24 to Day 340/180/5.

16.7.5.45 It is INQ 275's recollection that he gained access to the derelict building by going over one wall, moved forward to the right and went in through a door at the ground level. Day 340/171/7 to Day 340/172/6. This runs contrary to the evidence of his colleagues and, for what it is worth, Major Loden's diary at ED39.11:

> The Machinegun Platoon were unable to extricate themselves due to the final drop of 25 feet from the first floor of a disused building which had been used to gain covered access to their present position.

16.7.5.46 As INQ 275's memory relating to his entry to the building and going up stairs to a room on the first floor, C275.3 paragraph 15, is clearly flawed, his evidence in relation to whether INQ 445 fell within the building or outside the building is of little assistance. When he says that INQ 455 fell to the other side of the wall to where he had started to climb, it does seems reasonable, therefore, to presume when his evidence is considered with that of the majority of the platoon that, contrary to the evidence of INQ 441, INQ 455 fell to the floor inside the derelict building. Day 340/173/9 to Day 340/174/3.

16.7.5.47 Similarly, his evidence to the effect that, whilst he was astride the wall he heard two or three rifle shots, should be treated with caution. C275.2 paragraph 11. When questioned by counsel for the Inquiry, INQ 275, unaware at the time that rubber bullets were being fired in the area, admits that he quite possibly mistook these rubber bullets for live gunfire. Day 340/173/1 to Day 340/173/8.

16.7.5.48 Across the road on a patch of waste ground INQ 275 could see a crowd of youths hurling abuse and clearly throwing stones in the direction of his platoon. INQ 275 stresses this point by adding that he did not see the youths throw anything that was obviously not a stone and that he cannot recall hearing the sound of nail bombs or explosions. [Emphasis added] C275.3 paragraphs 16 to 17. INQ 275, it seems in support of his colleagues, is reticent about drawing the definitive conclusion that he would have heard a nail bomb had it exploded outside the derelict building, as illustrated by the flowing exchange:

> Q. In the circumstances that applied on 30th January 1972, when you were in that derelict building, do you think it possible that a nail bomb or nail bombs could have exploded in close proximity to the building without you hearing it?
> A. With the amount of noise that was going on, it could have, not too near.
>
> LORD SAVILLE: What sort of noise do you recall going on at that time.
> A. It is a big mixture that you get at all riots. It is, it is a terrible noise; people screaming, shouting and whatever else goes on, rubber bullet -- bullet guns going off. The thing is, you just cannot sort of stand there and listen to an individual noise.

LORD SAVILLE: That is true, but it might be suggested that if a nail bomb went off in close proximity to you, you would be likely to hear it and remember it.

A. If it was very close, yes.

MR ROXBURGH: Could we look again at photograph P201, please. I know you cannot be sure exactly where you were, let us just assume that you were somewhere around that first floor window in the derelict building, do you think it possible that a nail bomb could have exploded anywhere in the area of that waste ground immediately in front of the window while you were in the building without you hearing it.

A. If it was close enough, um, I would have picked it out.

Q. Would it have been close enough for you to hear if it had exploded in that waste ground, do you think?

A. It all depends on what the size of it was. Nail bombs come in different sizes.

Q. If it had been a normal-sized nail bomb; perhaps you do not know what a normal-sized nail bomb is. Do you think you could have failed to hear it?

A. It is possible. Day 340/180/22 to Day 340/182/6

16.7.5.49 Whilst he earlier stated that he had not known that they had been fired, Day 340/173/1 to Day 340/173/8, INQ 275 is now using the noise of the rubber bullets as a potential reason for his not having heard nail bombs explode. Predictably, accepting that he would have expected a soldier who saw a nail bomber to shout a warning to the platoon, having stated that he cannot remember hearing a warning being shouted, he allows his colleagues an escape route with the qualification "it is possible that I would have forgotten." Day 340/182/7 to Day 340/182/22.

16.7.5.50 INQ 275 cannot remember hearing army fire from the derelict building despite the fact that he was within feet of either Soldier A or B and claims to have learnt that Soldier A had fired only on his return to camp. It is possible, however, as put by counsel to the Inquiry but not accepted by INQ 275, that the gunfire he claims to have heard when astride the wall was actually heard at some other time on the 30th January 1972. Day 340/172/16 to Day 340/172/18.

16.7.5.51 Our submission that it is not plausible and is less than honest for INQ 275 to suggest that he did not hear the shots fired from within the derelict building is exemplified by his incoherent agitated response to Counsel to the Tribunal and Lord Saville, the only explanation for which could be that he saw a soldier fire in circumstances where it was not justified:

> Q. If a number of live rounds were fired from within that building where you were, do you think that is something that you could simply have failed to hear at the time?
> A. With all the mayhem that was going on, um, it is possible, um, that I failed to hear them.
>
> LORD SAVILLE: The Chairman again: I understand you saying that in one sense, but you would have been a very few feet away from an SLR being discharged, and it has quite a report; has it not.
>
> A. It has, but, um, one has to be in a riot situation to understand the sort of noises that are going on and that you are -- in some cases you are looking after, or (a) for your own life. As I said before, you do not stand there listening for individual noises.
> LORD SAVILLE: I follow that entirely, but if one of your colleagues in that building, a few feet away from you, discharged two or three rounds, I am finding it a bit odd, but of course you were there and I was not, you might not have heard it because of the noise of a riot taking place tens of yards away. You see my puzzlement?

A. Yes.

LORD SAVILLE: Because on one view of the evidence, one of these soldiers who says he has fired, who have been probably no further away than you are from me at this moment. I am a bit puzzled that these shots fired from this building were ones that you might not have heard.

A. I, I can only recall that, um, I -- I cannot remember. I cannot recall, um, hearing anybody shooting. I am not saying that nobody --

LORD SAVILLE: I follow that.

A. Yes. Day 340/184/19 to Day 340/185/24

16.7.5.52 It is the recollection of this witness that, having reached the yard of the Presbyterian Church, he heard shots fired in the distance. These were the first shots he heard that day and he is clear that none of the fire was directed at him or his colleagues nor were the shots being fired in his vicinity. C588.2 paragraph 8. It was, in his mind, after this incident that his whole platoon, C558.3 paragraph 11, made their way through what seemed like an assault course of walls and barbed wire into a derelict building. C588.2 paragraph 9. It was as they jumped to ground level, having entered the building at the first floor level, that INQ 455 fell, landing on his back. He seemingly injured himself to such a serious extent that he was lapsing in and out of consciousness.C588.3 paragraph 12. INQ 588 took up a position on the ground floor with Soldier B to his right although he cannot remember having been ordered to do so by INQ 441. C588.4 to C588.5 paragraph 15. He has no recollection of Soldier A being near him during this period nor of witnessing his actions. C588.5 paragraph 20.

16.7.5.53 INQ 588 remembers having seen a mass of people in front of the building at some stage and, just after INQ 455 fell, he believes that they came under stoning from youths in William Street. His memory is of being exposed to the stone-throwing youths who were approximately 40-50 metres away opposite the front of their location. It is his memory that, as "the room we were in was very small (approximately 10" x 10") and with nothing to take cover behind," the platoon had no choice but to face the youths. C588.3 paragraph 13. As no other member of his platoon remembers having been exposed in this way, it is probable that INQ 588 is mistaken in this regard, perhaps confused by the windows which were large and contained no glass.

16.7.5.54 It was during this time that INQ 588 could hear firing in the background that was near to, though not aimed at, his position. He is clear that it sounded like high velocity, 7.62, single rifle shots with no machinegun or small calibre fire. Significantly, it is as he was firing 20-30 baton rounds at the rioters that INQ 588 saw Soldier B also firing with his baton gun. When Soldier B's statement was pointed out to him, INQ 588 presumes that he must be wrong even though his recollection seems clear. C588.4 paragraph 16. We submit that this soldier thinks that he was wrong in the sense that Soldier B must not have fired anything or that Soldier B must have been firing not a baton gun but a rifle.

16.7.5.55 INQ 588 emphatically states that he did not see any nail bombs, any missile being thrown that could be construed as a nail bomb nor a smoking or fizzing missile. He did not see the nail bomber as described by Soldiers A and B and does not recollect having heard any explosions. C588.4 paragraphs 17 to 18. He does not recall anyone shouting, "Nail bombers" or "bombers" nor INQ 441 saying "If you see a target, shoot" or issuing a cease-fire order. He saw no civilian gunman at any time during the day. C588.5 paragraph 24.

16.7.5.56 Whilst INQ 588 is obviously not willing to lie about what he saw from his position in the derelict house he is showing an unwillingness to place his colleagues in a critical light. This is illustrated by his readiness to put forward possible scenarios to explain why his evidence does not corroborate theirs, for example:

i) "It is possible that nail bombs were thrown past me and exploded but, because of the general confusion, background shooting noise, the noise from the baton guns and the noise from the crowd, I did not hear them." C588.4 paragraph 17

ii) In relation to his not having seen Soldier A and B's nail bomber]: "This may be because I was further west along William Street than where Soldiers A and B say they were and my field of view did not extend as far east along William Street as the location of the nail bomber described by them." C588.4 paragraph 18.

iii) In relation to not hearing orders or warning shouts]: "Because of the reasons stated above about the level of noise in our location at that time it is possible that orders were shouted and a soldier from my unit fired in our defence without me hearing it."C588.4 paragraph 19

iv) "My hearing may have been impaired because of a stone hitting me." C588.5 paragraph 21. This is undermined by the fact that INQ 588 has already explained that this incident left him only momentarily stunned and that he resumed his duties after 2-3 seconds when he regained his senses. C588.3 paragraph 13.

v) "I personally did not witness [Soldier A's] actions, nor afterwards hear of anybody talking about it." C588.5 paragraph 20

vi) "I did not mix with the other Platoons and I have no recollection of hearing what had happened from other soldiers." C588.6 paragraph 27.

This attitude is another example of the army's cultural ethos, as described in Section 5.2, prompting a soldier to close ranks against criticism. Whether it is a case of hopefully presuming that his colleagues were honourably justified in firing live rounds, as per Soldier 160's comment at B1956.5 paragraph 31, or whether this soldier actually saw and heard Soldier B fire live rounds but has chosen not to state as much will have to be determined by the Inquiry.

16.7.5.57 INQ 896 expresses a view prevalent amongst members of the Parachute Regiment i.e. "The Royal Artillery were unable to cope with the amount of people expected to attend the march" C896.1 paragraph 5, and, having joined 1 Para as a boy soldier, INQ 896 had more reason than most to be proud of his regiment. This would perhaps explain why he displays a tendency to surmise when he has no actual memory or experience of a particular incident provided it would support the army's actions on the day, for example:

(a) "I do not believe it was possible to obtain private supplies of ammunition. Of course, anything is possible but I do not think it happened." C896.2 paragraph 13

(b) He was not aware of anyone tampering with or altering ammunition and yet can comment that he does not think it was possible to do this without anyone finding out. C896.2 paragraph 14

16.7.5.58 His understanding of the plan for the day was that Machinegun Platoon would move on the right flank with Anti-tank Platoon and Mortar Platoon forming one part of a pincer movement to cut off the rioters and C and D Companies moving along the left arm of the pincer. C896.3 paragraph 20. He remembers having to undergo what seemed like an obstacle course in order to gain entry to a derelict building. He states that "it was as we were going through the building I suddenly heard some shots fired." C896.3 paragraph 22. Although his memory that it was Soldier E who fired these shots is clearly incorrect it is significant that, contrary to the evidence of INQ 441, INQ 896's memory is of actually being in the building on the ground level, Day 341/7/21, and that he first heard "two or three shots" [emphasis added] not one. C896.4 paragraph 24 He did concede that he was not absolutely sure that the individual he saw in a firing position was Soldier E, Day 341/9/1, 16.7.5.59 INQ 896 is eager to state that his impression was that Soldier E could see a target because he had his rifle in a position which suggested as much. Day 341/10/4 His version of what he could see when he looked in the direction in which Soldier E was aiming does not correspond with the bulk of the civilian evidence or indeed soldiers' evidence. Contrary to his claim that he "did not stop to see what [Soldier E] was looking at," C896.4 paragraph 24 INQ 896 claims, in oral evidence, that, 200 metres away, there was a large, congested crowd standing around. Day 341/10/9 to Day 341/11/5. Significantly, he does not refer to having seen anyone with a nail bomb but is reluctant to rule out this possibility altogether responding, when asked whether he had heard a nail bomb or anything like it exploding, "there were a lot of noises and such like, yes, but, um, whether I would have said it was a nail bomb, I do not know." Day 341/11/9

16.7.5.60 By the time INQ 896 left the derelict building and made his way into Rossville Street it is apparent that he was arriving as the events of the day were reaching a conclusion. He is, again, eager to emphasise that he believed some of the shots that he heard to have been fired from the Rossville Flats in his direction, even going as far as to say that he could hear the crack and thump. C896.4 paragraph 28 A final example of INQ 896's loyalty to his regiment is to be found at Day 341/13/20 to Day 341/16/22. INQ 896 maintains that his recollection is that shots were fired from the direction of the Rossville flats at which point fire was returned. Day 341/15/8 to Day 341/15/12. This view cannot be sustained considering the following concessions on his part:

(a) He had very little idea of what was actually happening in the sense of why shots were being fired or who was firing at whom.

(b) That he did not have a clear picture of what was happening

(c) It can be very difficult to tell, in an urban environment, where gunfire is coming from or in what direction a weapon is being fired

(d) That he probably could not really distinguish between enemy fire and return fire

(e) That he is in doubt about having heard the crack and thud sound

(f) That he cannot remember where he was or what he was doing in the ten minutes during which the "return fire" was going on.

(g) That his conclusion that "the return fire sounded as though it was being aimed at dedicated targets" is based solely on the fact that they were single shots,

16.7.5.61 It is because of this unshakeable belief in his regiment that INQ 896 feels able to say "I remember that our reaction to the news was jubilant. We were in a theatre of war and there to do a job. No one had briefed us to kill people, but if our lives were put under threat, then we returned fired. I believe all the soldiers who fired that day had identified targets and returned controlled and disciplined fire." C896.6 paragraph 44.

It reminds us of Soldier 160's comment at B1956.5 paragraph 31:

> "The thought that the Paras must have been shot at developed like osmosis. The virtues of loyalty and honouring the Code were drilled into us in training and we did not question whether the Paras had been fired upon – that's where the loyalty comes in, we all simply assumed that they had been fired at. We knew that the Yellow Card did not permit us to fire at anybody unless we positively identified a gunman. To us, it had to be the case that if the Paras fired they had been fired upon."

16.7.5.62 The thrust of INQ 153's evidence, which was read, is that he heard a shot whilst climbing over a wall, presumably into the derelict building. He believes that the shot came from south of his position but is uncertain as to whether it was high or low velocity, guessing at the latter. C153.1 paragraph 7 to C153.2 paragraph 7. Significantly, INQ 153 does not refer to anything that could be construed as being the shots fired by Soldiers A and B. Indeed the next gunfire to which he refers was "particularly heavy [exchange of] gunfire" whilst he was in the back of a pig presumably around the Rossville Flats although his evidence is not very clear as to the location. C153.2 paragraph 11. He states that he is unable to remember whether he heard any other gunfire between this and the single shot heard earlier.

16.7.5.63 This witness refers to having seen a rioter break away from the crowd to shout abuse at them from the middle of the waste ground beside the derelict building, C153.2 paragraph 8. It is possible that INQ 153's memory is of Damien Donaghy attempting to retrieve the rubber bullet and is, therefore, significant that he makes absolutely no reference to having seen or heard nail bombs being thrown or exploding on Bloody Sunday.

16.7.5.64 INQ 1354's evidence is rather confused but, in light of the fact that he was a "read" witness, we make the following observations.

16.7.5.65 INQ 1354's memory of the briefing was that Mortar Platoon was to proceed down a road in vehicles, Anti-tank were to come, in vehicles, from the left and Machinegun Platoon from the right on foot. C1354.1 paragraph 5. He can remember scaling a wall although has no idea of whether it was part of a house or a building. C1354.2 paragraph 9. He has no memory of either INQ 455 falling off a wall nor of Soldier A and B firing live rounds but believes that, having deployed onto some open ground, he heard the sound of gunfire lasting for one or two minutes. C1354.2 paragraphs 9 to 10. Whilst he is unable to say whether the fire was incoming or outgoing, he is clear that the weapons he hear were "mainly semi-automatic, that is one shot weapons . . . I am certain that there was no automatic fire as automatic weapons produce a long burst of shots and I did not hear anything like that." C1354.2 paragraph 11. Another feature that he is certain of is that he did not hear any explosions amongst the gunfire. INQ 1354 believes that he may have ended up in the area of the Rossville Flats and remembers seeing Colonel Wilford and Soldier 202 walking down the road together at a stage at which "it was all very calm." C1354.3 paragraph 17.

It is significant that, in reference to the Widgery Tribunal, INQ 1354, instead of saying that he was not required to give evidence, sceptically states that he "did not play any part in it" almost as though he were glad not to have been called.

167.5.66 According to the nominal roll, although he makes no reference to it, INQ 1574, who was not called to give evidence, was the platoon's intelligence officer. INQ 1544 repeats the predictable Para rhetoric such as that, despite not having been in Derry before, he knew that there were no go areas in the city where the soldiers and the police tended to leave the civilians alone to get on with it rather than anyone doing anything about the situation and that the Rossville Flats were considered troublesome. C1544.1 to C1544.2 paragraph 7.

16.7.5.67 He is of no assistance in relation to what happened in Sector One, as his memory comes in flashes of specific incidents, the first of which is being in the area of the Rossville Flats guarding the vehicle. C1544.2 paragraph 11. Although he later found out that INQ 455 had been badly hurt having fallen over a wall in attempt to get into a building, C1544.5 paragraph 36, INQ 1544's memory is of INQ 455, carrying his manpack, leaving his location with the other men from his platoon. C1544.3 paragraph 16. Despite a clear memory of watching the Rossville Flats for gun flashes or snipers, C1544.3 paragraph 19, INQ 1544 cannot remember having seen any activity coming from the flats. C1544.3 paragraph 20.

16.7.5.68 INQ 1544 has a recollection of hearing sporadic gunfire, although none in his immediate vicinity. Whilst he cannot place it in sequence, INQ 1544, no stranger to gunfire, did not feel the need to cock his weapon, is clear that it was not automatic fire but single shots, that it did not sound like a gun battle and that he heard no explosions. C1544.3 paragraphs 22 to 23. It seems that INQ 1544 was not alone in feeling that he was not in danger as illustrated by his description of a couple of 'squaddies' standing in the road guarding civilians:

> "They were standing at ease. One was holding his rifle up, pointing towards the sky and the other had the barrel of his gun resting on the toe of his boot and was leaning on the other end." C1544.4 paragraph 29

16.7.5.69 INQ 1544 observes that, "it is strange but almost all of my recollections of that day are of being on my own, but I know I could not have been and I think that might just be my memory playing tricks." C1544.4 paragraph 27. It could also be suggested that the fact that he cannot recollect discussing the day's events or of knowing that two members of his platoon had fired shots is equally strange. It is apparent that INQ 1544 is extremely loyal to the army, asserting that the Paras were the "cream of the British Army as far as the infantry was concerned" C1544.1 paragraph 3 and that all of the guys he was with were excellent, professional soldiers, most of whom went on to join the SAS. C1544.1 paragraph 4. A plausible alternative, therefore, to a genuinely bad memory is that this witness is being deliberately unhelpful in attempt not to betray his friends who acted illegally.

16.7.5.70 This witness commences his statement with typical Parachute Regiment bravado stating that they were being sent to retake the Bogside in order to remedy an unacceptable situation in which the forces of law and order were unable to enter certain places. C624.1 paragraph 4. Although his memory in relation to INQ 1851 being in charge of the platoon and of going up the stairs is defective, considering the bulk of the evidence of Machinegun Platoon, he is clear that the whole platoon, presumably minus Soldier 005 and INQ 439, had to overcome a number of obstacles in order to take up their position. C624.2 paragraph 12.

16.7.5.71 It was as he was tackling one of these obstacles that he says he gave his rifle to a soldier whom he refuses to name but who is clearly, through a process of elimination, Soldier A. Soldier A then, shouting out that there was a gunman and a nail bomber and from a "squatting position on the roof of the outhouse, brought his rifle to his shoulder, looked down the sight and fired . . . one or two shots." C624.3 paragraph 15. INQ 624 presumed that Soldier A, a friend of his C624.1 paragraph 8, believed there to be imminent danger from a target but makes no mention of having seen a gunman or bomber nor of hearing an incoming shot/s or explosions at this.

16.7.5.72 They were then ordered to go further into the Bogside to the area of the Rossville Flats, he can only assume on foot because he cannot remember getting into a vehicle, during which time he could hear a mixture of low and high velocity shots but no explosions. Considering that he volunteers the fact that he cannot recall any shots passing over his head and that the direction of the shooting was unclear because of the reverberation of the sound around the buildings it is more than likely that INQ 624 would have accepted that he may have been mistaken about anything other than army SLR fire. C624.4 paragraphs 22 to 24.

16.7.5.73 INQ 624 presumes that his rifle was sent off to forensics but, as he cannot remember having made a report to anyone to say that his rifle was fired, he believes that it is possible that he accounted for the ammunition that had been fired from his rifle by replacing them with extra rounds given to him by other soldiers, C624.5 paragraph 31 , which were available from the firing ranges. C624.6 paragraph 33.

16.7.5.74 The use of private supplies of ammunition ought to be unusual, rare and significant let alone the use of a rifle by another soldier. It is therefore inconceivable that such an incident as that referred to at C624.3 at paragraphs 14 to 16 and C624.5 paragraph 31 could be due to an erroneous recollection of the events of the day. The general accuracy of INQ 624's other recollections would also tend to confirm that his memory of events is reliable. The most significant part of his evidence is further strengthened and corroborated by the responses of Soldier A when cross-examined on Day 297/135/11 to Day 297/137/4.

16.7.5.75 It is truly significant that Soldier A's immediate response, when asked about the accuracy of this suggestion by INQ 624, is, not that such a thing could not have happened, but "I have no recollection of that." Day

297/135/19. Then, when the matter had been pursued at length, Soldier A further asserted that if a soldier was to lend his rifle to another who discharged it, that there was no necessary duty to report the incident to his Platoon Commander or even the Company Commander. Day 297/136/19 to Day 297/137/4. The correspondence between INQ 624 and the Inquiry may cause the Tribunal to treat this evidence with caution. C624.9 to C624.21. However, whether this is in fact what happened it or not, it does confirm the general attitude amongst the members of Support Company that rules and regulations designed to ensure compliance with proper procedures may in fact be used to mask breaches rather than reveal them and further illustrates the lack of candour from the other members of Machinegun Platoon. It serves to demonstrate the lack of enforcement of adherence to such rules and orders that may have existed to ground personal responsibility on individual soldiers for their actual actions.

16.7.5.76 INQ 439 drove a pig with the registration number 15BK54, C439.1 paragraph 4. His memory of the day is so poor that all he can say for certain is that he heard shooting at some point as he waited in his pig. However, he is not able to be more specific other than to say that:

i) He knew nothing of a shot hitting a drainpipe or of any civilians being hit by fire C439.2 paragraph 10

ii) He did not see any shots fired C439.1 paragraph 8

iii) He cannot say how many were fired or whether they were fired close by C439.2 paragraph 8

iv) He did not know from where the shooting was coming C439.1 paragraph 8

v) It sounded like a high power weapon, not a Kalashnikov C439.2 paragraph 8

vi) He did not hear a Thompson sub machinegun C439.2 paragraph 8

vii) He does not recall any incoming fire C439.1 paragraph 9

16.7.5.77 This is a very confused account upon which, in light of the fact that he was not called to give evidence, we make the following observations.

16.7.5.78 Although Corporal INQ 513 commanded a section of Machinegun Platoon he is not able to recall of whom it was comprised nor can he recollect any briefing in relation to the march. In fact, it is INQ 513's memory that his section were tasked to concentrate on the Rossville Flats from where, they were told, snipers were firing. C513.2 paragraph 6. He then, with his section, debussed through Barrier 14 on foot, past Chamberlain Street, through McCarry's Lane onto the waste ground on Rossville Street whereupon, because some of the crowd were still at the William Street end of Rossville Street, he decided that they should return to the pig. He stayed there until he saw Fr Daly come from Chamberlain Street carrying an injured person. C513.3 to C513.4 paragraphs 11 to 14. This is inconsistent with all of the available evidence in relation to the movements of Machinegun Platoon and it seems that this witness has, over time and having watched television footage of the day, a completely flawed version of his movements and that of his section that day. Whether this is genuine or convenient, in that he is not placed in the position of being asked questions the answers to which would be potentially critical of the actions of this colleagues on the day, is impossible to say without having questioned him. What he is clear about, importantly, is that it was very difficult to tell from where the shots that he heard were coming because the area was very built up producing an echo, C513.2, C513.3 paragraph 7, and that he did not hear or see any nail bombs or blast bombs explode during the day. C513.4 paragraph 13.

16.7.5.79 Like INQ 624, INQ 1553 states that they were told to ignore the fact that the Bogside was a "No-Go Area" and that they should follow the crowd into the Bogside. Other than that, although he has given it some thought and cannot understand why, his orders were very vague. C1553.2 paragraph 5.

16.7.5.80 He remembers that INQ 1851 was in America at a Rangers course, C1553.2 paragraph 7 , that they had to climb over what seemed to be a roof to get into a derelict building and that INQ 455 fell whilst attempting the climb. C155.3 paragraphs 9 to 10. Soldier A was supposed to help INQ 1553, who was in clear view of the rioters below, into the building but, instead, he cocked his rifle and, without shouting a warning, fired one or two shots, the first shots of the day. It was INQ 1553's belief that Soldier A had fired at a nail bomber and can vaguely remember someone saying as much C1553.3 paragraph 11.

16.7.5.81 Shortly after, having reached the inside of the building, INQ 1553 heard someone fire a single shot from the ground floor. C1553.4 paragraph 13. INQ 1553 saw no one with a nail bomb but surmises that one may have hit the outside of the building. It is possible, if not probable, that this witness has mistaken the sound of stones hitting the side of the building and of rubber bullets being fired in the area, including from within the derelict building itself, with the sound of a nail bomb.

16.7.5.82 When in the area of the Rossville Flats guarding the pig containing the bodies, which were just piled on top of each other, see Section 18, INQ 1553 did not see any civilians with weapons, did not particularly feel that he was in danger, heard no explosions and believed that all the gunfire he heard could have been friendly fire. C1553.4 paragraphs 17 to 18. Before their return to Belfast Colonel Wilford congratulated them. C1553.5 paragraph 22.

16.7.5.83 The evidence of this witness reveals the propensity for a soldier's colleagues to immediately assume that when he fired he was justified in so doing irrespective of the fact that they have seen nor heard anything which would have warranted such action. Indeed, the firing by their colleagues immediately increases their own sense of vulnerability and their own necessity to make a similar response.

16.7.5.84 INQ 1917's memory of his platoon having been briefed to act as snatch squads varied during his oral testimony. In response to Counsel to the Tribunal he could remember only a short briefing, involving no examination of maps or photographs or reconnaissance, given on their arrival in Derry on the day of the march, Day 288/50/2 to Day 288/50/12 and Day 288/86/1 to Day 288/86/4, By the end of his testimony, however, in response to Mr Bradley BL, INQ 1917 answered as follows:

> Q. One final question, please: do you recall when it was you were first told that the platoon was going to be involved in an operation in Londonderry?
> A. From memory, it was the day before the operation.
> Day 288/125/7 to Day 288/125/10

16.7.5.85 INQ 1917's next memory is of the entire platoon, C1917.2 paragraph 8, having been ordered into a derelict building which he entered from ground level, Day 288/56/18, climbing to the first floor, Day 288/56/14, from where he could hear the people marching past, quite close to the building. Day 288/58/17 to Day 288/59/2. This former point contradicts a substantial body of evidence to the effect that the platoon entered via the first floor and descended to the ground floor.

16.7.5.84 It was as he was still making his way to the interior of the building, although he was on the first floor having been in the building for only a few seconds, that INQ 1917 claims to have heard shots. Day 288/61/3 to Day 288/61/20. INQ 1917 accepts the possibility, put to him by Counsel to the Tribunal, that this may have been the noise of baton guns being fired, Day 288/62/2 to Day 288/62/5 and that, unable now to say whether it was a gun or a baton gun, that he presumed they were under fire, Day 288/62/10 to Day 288/62/13, although he did not feel that his life was in danger. Day 288/63/1 to Day 288/63/2.

16.7.5.85 Counsel for some of the Families informed him that prior to and in the minutes that followed Machinegun Platoon's entry into the derelict building, between 200 and 250 baton rounds had been discharged from Barrier 14, a total which rose to 324 by the end of the afternoon. Day 288/92/8 to Day 299/92/12, Notwithstanding his earlier concession to Counsel to the Tribunal INQ 1917 refused to acknowledge the possibility that these figures could account for his having misidentified the sound of baton rounds as that of live rounds. This despite the fact that;

(i) The entire situation had made his adrenaline levels go up. Day 288/91/15

(ii) It was his first ever experience, at the age of twenty, of coming under fire. Day 288/93/8

(iii) He did not see the strike of any shots. Day 288/62/24 to Day 288/63/2

(iv) He has no memory of baton rounds having been discharged from he derelict building. Day 288/90/16 to Day 288/90/19

(v) His memory of the order in which events occurred is hazy now due to the passage of time and also due to the fact that things seemed to happen so fast. C1917.2 paragraph 12

(vi) That it was impossible to recollect detail and sequences of events due to the passage of time. [My emphasis] Day 288/85/1 to Day 288/85/4

(vii) He was in a situation with which he was totally unfamiliar and events were happening quite quickly.

In addition, it is significant that INQ 1917 states that he did not hear one high velocity round fired from the direction of the Rossville Flats at 1555 as referred to in Major Loden's diary of operations. Day 288/101/6 to Day 288/101/11.

16.7.5.86 From his position he could see out of the window and said that he saw a group of people, mostly males in their twenties and thirties, running in various directions and throwing objects, some in his direction. He states that he cannot remember specifically what they were throwing but certainly makes no reference to a fizzing object, a match or anything that resembled a nail bomb. He then heard the sound of two explosions, similar to the sound of grenades, which, he claims, he can now identify, from later experience, as being nail bombs. C1917.2 paragraph 12.

16.7.5.87 He conceded to Counsel to the Tribunal that, at the time, he had no idea at all about what had caused these bangs or explosions, Day 288/64/23 to Day 288/65/1 and, in his statement, says, "they were loud bangs which I did not recognise as having been caused by a particular weapon. The noise was similar to the sound of grenades, a low thud. From later experience, I do not think they were grenade but possibly nail bombs." [Emphasis added] C1917.2 paragraph 12.

16.7.5.88 Again, however, although he was unaware that 15 CS gas grenades and 65 CS canisters had been discharged by the Army, Day 288/94/6 to Day

288/94/20, and although he was unfamiliar with the sound of nail bombs at the time, INQ 1917 dismisses the suggestion by Counsel for some of the Families that he may have mistaken the sounds of these weapons for that of nail bombs. He rejects outright the suggestion that he may have attributed what he heard to Soldier A and B's story about having shot a nail bomber. Day 288/95/9 to Day 288/95/19.

16.7.5.89 INQ 1917's next memory is of between two and five shots fired from within the building and of seeing two of the soldiers in his platoon in a firing position pointing their weapons towards the open space where he had previously seen the group of people throwing objects. C1917.2 paragraph 13. He does not recall INQ 441 giving an order to Soldier A and B to fire. Day 288/101/19 to Day 288/101/21. Corporal A subsequently informed him that he and Soldier B had fired at a nail bomber. Day 288/70/4 to Day 288/70/7. However, the two soldiers he saw were at ground level, Day 288/69/5, whereas it is Corporal A's evidence that he fired from the first floor. INQ 1917 conceded that it is possible that Corporal A was in close proximity to him on the first floor Day 288/73/2. Given that INQ1917 was adamant that he had never seen or heard Corporal A firing, it was suggested by Counsel for some of the Families, but not accepted by INQ 1917, that this demonstrated the extreme difficulties in identifying firing on the day. Day 288/97/21 to Day 288/98/3. INQ 1917 then saw a group of people on the waste ground approximately 100 yards from the derelict building, tending to somebody on the ground.C1917.3 paragraph 14.

16.7.5.90 It is INQ1917's memory that he returned on foot with his platoon to their Army vehicles before being driven to a position approximately 100 yards from the Rossville Flats.C1917.3 paragraph 17. On debussing and taking cover behind the vehicle he was conscious of high-velocity sniper fire from the direction of the flats, but did not see any muzzle flashes, anyone firing or any bullets striking their target. C1917.3 paragraph 21. It was his evidence that four or five such shots were fired from the flats over the space of a minute. INQ 1917 was not aware that members of other platoons in the area had opened fire and was therefore willing to acknowledge that he could not be 100% sure that the firing that he heard was not army fire. Day 288/80/2 to Day 288/80/17. With concession and the fact that he remembers having heard an order to ceasefire, C1917.4 paragraph 22, it is our submission that this soldier in actual fact heard was the other members of Support Company firing live rounds. This was at a stage after the three bodies had been moved, in the pig, to the north end of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats, C1917.3 paragraph 21, and is therefore likely to have been the shots fired by Soldiers F and G at the Rossville Flats.

16.7.5.91 Having joined the regiment when he was twenty, C1874.7 paragraph 2, INQ 1874 was 23 years old at the time of Bloody Sunday. C1874.1 paragraph 2. From the outset of his oral testimony, INQ 1874 demonstrated a clear reluctance to give oral evidence or to adopt his Eversheds statement, which he claims not to have recognised, as evidence. Day 298/21/8. It seemed that this witness did not realise the consequence of the statement-taking process, i.e. that the statement would be relied upon evidence by the Tribunal and that he would actually have to give oral evidence. It appears, in our submission, that based on the belief that it was more of a dialogue with two people Day 298/22/3, the witness was prone to exaggeration, presumption in favour of the army or even untruths. Examples of this are illustrated below and include his claim that he saw someone with a rifle, that shots were directed at the derelict building in which he was positioned, some of which went over his head and that there were explosions.

16.7.5.92 INQ 1874 postulates that, although he us unable to remember having attended a briefing or being specifically told about an arrest operation, C1874.1. paragraph 3, the Parachute Regiment would have been sent in to quell trouble when other soldiers there couldn't and that "they wanted us to show a strong presence since they knew the Paras would not take any crap. They sent us in expecting trouble," C1874.1 paragraphs 4 to 5. This attitude, which is common amongst the Parachute Regiment, illustrates the pride they felt in being a part of it and bolsters our argument that this witness makes presumptions in favour of the army.

16.7.5.93 Although he cannot identify specifically which one, it is clear from his description of the building, having to climb over walls to get there, of having been there with the rest of his platoon and of INQ 455 injuring himself falling over a wall that INQ 1874 was in Abbey Taxis on Bloody Sunday and we proceed on that basis. C1874.2 paragraph 11.

16.7.5.94 From his position on the ground floor of the building INQ 1874 saw civilians run out now and again from behind walls and, having seen things thrown and then hearing explosions, assumes, again in favour of the army line, that the people were throwing nail bombs (saying later that he could hear nails hit the walls, C1874.3 paragraph 17) despite the fact that:

(i) He is unable to recall that there was a road between these people and his position or anything else about their location. Day 298/28/12 to Day 298/28/23

(ii) He did not see anyone with what could be described as a fizzing object in their hand Day 298/28/8 to Day 298/28/11

(iii) He only thinks that he is familiar with the sound that nail bombs made Day 298/29/15 to Day 298/29/20

(iv) In his view a nail bomb is not necessarily very loud although he could not give an exact description "after all these years."Day 298/30/ 3 to Day 298/30/8

(v) He did not know that baton rounds were being fired from inside or anywhere near the derelict building although he denies that, had that occurred, there would have been a very loud noise. Day 298/33/12 to Day 298/33/21

(vi) Despite conceding that if a baton round went off at the same time as a rifle shot, it may be hard to distinguish between them he will not accept that may be difficult to distinguish between a baton round and an explosions. Day 298/34/2 to Day 298/34/9

16.7.5.95 INQ 1874's evidence varies throughout his written and oral testimony as to the number of explosions that he heard. Firstly, in response to Counsel to the Tribunal, INQ 1874 states as follows:

> Q. Can you give the Tribunal any idea of the sort of quantity of explosions that you heard during the time that you spent in the derelict building? [Emphasis added]
>
> A. I would class it as sporadic. I mean, a dozen-plus shots as well were fired. [Emphasis added]
>
> Q. Something like a dozen over the total period you were in the building?
> A. Yeah, that is not exact, that is, you know, just a guess. Day 298/30/15 to Day 298/30/23

16.7.5.96 It may be, as he later suggests, that INQ 1874 mistakenly thought that he was being asked about the number of shots which he does put at twelve. Day 298/42/3 to Day 298/42/12. If this is the case, the question arises as to why this witness did not answer the question actually put to him. Then, after having told Counsel for some of the Families that he does not recall twelve explosions, he states that he cannot say how many explosions there were and then that it could have been two, Day 298/42/15 to Day 298/42/25. In his statement INQ 1874 refers to "the first few explosions," [emphasis added]. C1874.3 paragraph 17.

16.7.5.97 INQ 1874 claimed that, at the same time as the explosions, gunfire was directed toward the derelict building consisting of at least twelve, high velocity, single shots that mainly passed overhead, those that were level with them hitting the outside wall of the building. C1874.2 paragraphs 15 to 16 and Day 298/37/22 to Day 298/37/25.

16.7.5.98 Similar to that in relation to the explosions, INQ 1874's evidence regarding these shots reveals a strong degree of uncertainty:

He conceded that it can be difficult to tell from where bullets are coming when in a built – up area but suggests that the Bogside is not a built-up area Day 298/38/2 to Day 298/38/15

(i) He is no longer certain if twelve shots were fired saying it could have been more or less Day 298/38/16 to Day 298/38/21

(ii) He was not aware that substantial amounts of baton rounds and gas cartridges were discharged by the army a very short distance away. Day 298/48/20 to Day 298/48/22

(iii) Despite his suggestion to Eversheds that he was confused as to whether some of the people were holding guns or broomsticks, C1874.3 paragraph 18, INQ 1874 accepts, in response to Counsel to the Tribunal, that he did not see them holding either. Day 298/40/17 to Day 298/40/22. It was presumably as a result of this response that Lord Saville refused to entertain Mr Eilias's request that the restrictions upon this witness be expanded to include questioning on INQ 1874's assertion, at C1874.3 paragraph 25, that he saw someone carrying what looked like a rifle in the Rossville Flats area although "if someone walked through a door with a broom under their arm then it looked something like that." Day 298/40/24 to Day 298/41/10 Incidentally, the witness also claimed to have heard explosions, seen bullets hitting the road as though from the Rossville Flats and of having seen a pig containing what could have been thirteen bodies around this time. C1874.3 paragraphs 22 to C1874.4 paragraph 29.

16.7.5.99 After this the witness heard shots fired from within the building but cannot say how many nor did he see who fired. He did not hear anything being shouted by any other member of his platoon, Day 298/39/24 to Day 298/40/2, nor see anyone fall. What is significant is that INQ 1874 accepts that it was a general attitude amongst the Parachute Regiment that if you saw someone with something that looks like a gun, you would have no alternative but to shoot. C1874.3 paragraph 18, C1874.4 paragraph 25 to 26.

16.7.5.100 INQ 1874's evidence in relation to the degree of danger in which he felt himself to be varies considerably throughout his evidence. What follows is his response to Counsel to the Tribunal in relation to this matter:

Day 298/34/10 to Day 298/35/8:

Q. Did you think you were at risk of being killed or injured by these nail bombs?

A. All the time I was there, yes.

Q. May we look at paragraph 17 on the next page where what is written in your statement is:

"I just tried to take no notice of what was happening -- it is all the same after the first few explosions, unless they are really close, and these were probably too far away to hit us."

Is that right?

A. It is a question that can be taken a few ways, is it not? I mean, I tried to take no notice of it. I was in the thick of a trouble spot and if I started panicking or worrying about what was going to happen, I would not have been able to do my job.

Q. What about the last bit of that sentence:

"These were probably too far away to hit us."

A. Some of them may have been, but others were getting close.

Q. Then you go on:

"If the people throwing the bombs had been close enough for the bombs to have reached us, then we probably would have shot them."

A. That is true.

Whilst in response to Counsel for some of the Families he states as follows:

Q. Did you and your other colleagues feel particularly vulnerable?

A. They may have done.

Q. Did you?

A. I did not -- I felt vulnerable because of what was happening, what I thought or knew to be bombs and bullets flying around.

16.7.5.101 The Tribunal may believe that the time spent on INQ 1874's evidence is of little value considering the contradictions and unsupportable, uncorroborated assertions. Whilst we would also be of the view that this evidence cannot be relied upon, it does, in our submission, serve to illustrate that, despite what they saw on the day or remember of the day, an inherent characteristic of the military evidence is the interpretation or construction of the days events in such a way as to shore up the version of events put out by the army in 1972. In this specific case it is our suggestion that INQ 1874 perhaps feels justified in doing this because he feels that the army is being used as a scapegoat, C1874.6 paragraph 45.

16.7.5.102 INQ 1919 is eager to explain, devoting three paragraphs to the subject, what a thorough brief he and his colleagues would have received in relation to Bloody Sunday. He explains that they received a general briefing on the 29th January 1972 when they were given a broad outline of the area into which they were to be deployed and of what other army units and the police would be doing although they were not informed, at this stage, as to their specific roles. C1919.1 paragraph 9. It was at the briefing, at Company level, on the morning of 30th January 1972 that they informed of the intention to stop a march and at a platoon briefing that they were told they were to act as snatch squads. C1919.2 paragraphs 10 to 11. INQ 1919 accepts, in response to Counsel to the Tribunal, that he cannot remember actually remember any briefing at all and was saying what normal practice would have been. Day 296/1/19 to Day 296/2/24. Here is a witness who is doggedly determined, from the outset, to present the army, or at least his regiment, in a positive light. Contrary to his statement where he asserts, at C1919.1 paragraph 5, that he had no view as to how Derry was being handled before 30th January 1972 by the units stationed there he agreed, during his testimony, that the Paras felt that they controlled Belfast but that in Derry local troops took 'a lot of stick' and could not do much about it. Day 296/47/16 to Day 296/47/20.

16.7.5.103 INQ 1919 definitively states in his statement to Eversheds that, even before gaining access, from above, to the derelict house, he could hear explosions some distance away, C1919.3 paragraph 17, interspersed, he says for the first time in oral evidence, with quite a bit of rifle fire. Day 296/8/20 to Day 296/8/21. He goes on to say that, although it was not obviously part of the plan, they had to enter the derelict building by crossing a flat roof, in all likelihood an upper floor of the derelict building as per the majority of the evidence from this platoon rather than a roof, which drew them to the attention of the crowd. C1919.3 paragraphs 16 to 18.

16.7.5.104 It was as the crowd started pointing and jeering that the platoon radio operator, INQ 455, became entangled in the barbed wire at the top of the wall and fell off taking the wire with him. What is significant about this evidence is that, contrary to that of INQ 441, INQ 1919 states that INQ 455 fell to the ground inside the building and that it was he and INQ 1686, who is deceased and is also known as UNK 194, not INQ 441, spent some time trying to untangle and help INQ 455 who was not seriously injured. Day 296/11/23 to Day 296/12/3.

16.7.5.105 After a few minutes, throughout which the younger elements in the crowd moved towards the derelict building throwing stones and missiles some of which were reaching them, he heard more gunfire. He claims that he also heard a number of bangs and explosions including nail bombs and petrol bombs, although he did not see anyone actually throwing them. There was then a verbal exchange between INQ 441, Corporal A and Private B, during which a nail bomb was mentioned. One shot rang out, and then a further two which he believed to have been fired by Soldiers A, who claimed a hit, and B, both of whom appeared to were aiming towards the same target area. He then saw a youth lying on the ground on William Street around whom a number of people had gathered. He could hear explosions as the shots were fired but at no stage did he see anybody with a nail bomb nor hear any order being given. (It could be suggested that the verbal exchange was a dispute over the fact that there was no justification to fire and that this is why INQ 441 wants to distance himself from the situation by now placing himself outside the building). C1919.3 to C1919.4 paragraphs 21 to 23 and Day 296/17/3 to Day 296/17/5.

16.7.5.106 However, on being questioned by Counsel for some of the Families who pointed out that this series of shots and explosions are not mentioned in Major Loden's diary, INQ 1919 concurs that, after thirty years, it is possible that he may be confusing this episode for shooting that happened at a later stage in the day, that he would cannot now explain how he could distinguish whether an explosion was a nail bomb and that he may have been confused by the media coverage of the event. He accepts that, as he did not see Soldiers A or B, their target or an explosion he may have been influenced by what they told him of the event afterwards and by his belief that soldiers would not discharge live rounds unless there was a good justification for doing so. Day 296/33/23 to Day 296/36/22.

He further concedes:

> Q. And when you heard the sounds of CS gas being discharged by -- or felt the effects of it, as well as hearing the sounds; those are the circumstances when you would have anticipated that perhaps nail bombs and petrol bombs would have been used against the Army; is that correct?
>
> Q. In fact, is that what occurred on this particular occasion, that when the sound of gas was heard and its effects seen, that the people in Machine Gun Platoon basically had expected and anticipated the worst; that you were stuck in an outcrop of a building; it was difficult to move in it and if you were attacked by blast bombs and nail bombs, I am afraid all of your lives would have been in grave jeopardy; is that not the case? Is that not the case? Day 296/41/16 to Day 296/42/4

16.7.5.107 Whilst he cannot remember having heard rubber bullets being fired by members of his platoon INQ 1919 recognises, based on previous experience, that had a rubber bullet been fired from within a derelict building it would have made a bigger bang than one that had just been fired out in the open. In fact, he acknowledges that the sort of bang produced in such circumstances might be confused or mistaken for a nail bomb by a soldier who is unaware of what is happening. Day 296/43/6 to Day 296/43/20. Incidentally, INQ 1919 was aware some people picked up rubber bullets as souvenirs and occasionally sought to entice soldiers into firing them in acts of bravado just as Damien Donaghy had been doing. Day 296/42/22 to Day 296/43/5.

18.7.5.108 Although INQ 1919 believes that, due to INQ 455's fall, the radio suffered some damage, the fact that an ambulance arrived for INQ 455 would suggest that the radio was, in fact, in working order and had been taken over by someone else when INQ 455 had become incapacitated in accordance with standard procedure. Day 296/19/6 to Day 296/19/19. The rest of the platoon got into the Machinegun Platoon Pigs and made their way to the Rossville Flats.

18.7.5.109 The story that particularly sticks in his mind in relation to this time is that Mortar Platoon had been fired upon from the Rossville Flats, Day 296/25/10 to Day 296/25/12 . INQ 1919 did not hear any explosions or gunfire nor see any civilians with guns or explosives whilst at the Rossville Flats. C1919.6 paragraph 35 . He can remember having spoken to Soldiers R and T but has no recollection of their being in pain or mentioning that they had acid thrown at them, Day 296/22/10 to Day 296/22/15. He claims that they mentioned only that there were bodies in the back of the pig that they were guarding. He claims that an ammunition check was carried out on more than one occasion after they left the derelict building. The first of them took place before they pulled out of the Bogside and before he spoke to Soldiers R and T. Day 296/23/4 to Day 296/23/17. This assertion should be reflected upon with caution considering INQ 1919's apparent inability to distinguish between what actually happened on the day and what should have happened according to procedure as illustrated by his concessions, above, in relation to the briefing.

16.7.5.110 This is a perfect example of a soldier whose main purpose in giving evidence, like so many others and not only in 1972 but also in 2000, was to support the version of events put forth by his colleagues or what he presumed would be the army case. Not having deployed with the rest of Machinegun Platoon to the derelict building, Soldier 005 had remained guarding his pig until he got a message that his platoon had been cut off and he needed to go and extract them. He was then ordered to drive the second Machinegun Platoon Pig, i.e. the sixth vehicle in the convoy, into the Bogside on Bloody Sunday. B1374.001 paragraph 15. Before this order he had heard no shots or explosions but, thereafter, claims, in his Eversheds statement, to have:

(i) Heard low velocity incoming fire as he went through the barrier B1374 paragraph 9

(ii) Heard several high velocity shots as his vehicle stopped in Rossville Street

(iii) Heard a bomb go off as he took cover behind his Pig in Rossville Street. B1374.001 paragraph 12

(iv) Seen a man in the act of throwing something, possibly a nail or petrol bomb, from either the ground or first floor of the Rossville Flats. Having seen puffs of smoke and Soldier R firing at him, Soldier 005 believed that acid bombs or something similar was being thrown. B1374.002 paragraph 15

(v) Seen, according to his RMP although he cannot now remember the incident, a man located on the first floor veranda running between blocks one and two of the Rossville Flats fire two shots from a pistol. Soldier R, Soldier 005's friend since they were in junior Para together as kids of fifteen, Day 338/194/13 to Day 338/194/19, returned 2 rounds at the man. B1374.004 paragraphs 31 to 34.

(vi) Heard pistol shots, which he calls "pepperpot shots" and some low velocity fire around the time that Major Loden was shouting to his men, in no uncertain terms, to stop firing. B1374.002 paragraph 16

(vii) Heard low velocity fire coming from the direction of the Rubble Barricade and from the Rossville Flats area into the car park which, judging by the "tap, tap, tap" sound, he presumed to be a pistol B1374.002 paragraphs 16 to 17

16.7.5.111 Soldier 005's oral testimony was consisted of looking at various photographs, documents and maps and, allowing for the confusion arising through memory loss, appearing to help Counsel to the Tribunal to best of his ability. What transpired by the end of his evidence, however, was that Soldier 005 took responsibility for lying to the RMP in 1972 about seeing a man with a pistol. Day 338/165/8. When he made his statement to Eversheds he was maintaining a lie:

> Q. When you got into the witness box today you knew it was wrong and you could not have seen this at all. But the first question you were asked was whether or not this statement was true to the best of your knowledge, and you said it was.
> A. I am trying my best.
>
> Q. But you were not trying your best, were you, because you knew this to be wrong?
>
> A. Well it is wrong, yes.
>
> Q. When you said it was right, you knew it was wrong?
>
> A. Okay, yes.
>
> Q. And that was a lie?
>
> A. Yes, I suppose so.

Q. So you have lied to this Tribunal today?

A. Yes, okay.

Q. You say "yes okay" in that casual way, do you not think it is a significant matter for you to lie to the Tribunal under oath?

A. I am trying my best not to lie. Day 338/178/14 to Day 338/179/7

16.7.5.112 It is, therefore, reasonable to suggest that the Tribunal should accept with caution Soldier 005's internally contradictory evidence to the effect that he was concentrating on driving and not paying attention to what they were saying and that there was a partition between them and he so that he could not hear their conversation. B1374.003 paragraph 22. Also, according to Bernard Feeney, the Knight of Malta, there was no partition between the front and back of Soldier N's pig which, presumably would have been the same as those issued to the Machinegun Platoon:

> "I remember that there was a soldier sitting in the passenger seat of the Saracen (there was no division between the front and back of the vehicle). He was sitting sideways across the seat with his back to the passenger door and his legs stretched out very casually into the back of the Saracen. His legs would have been very close to the head of the middle body." AF 8.5 paragraph 29.

16.8 Conclusions

16.8.1 At, or around, 3.30pm on 30 January 1972, soldiers from the Machinegun Platoon of Support Company, under the command of INQ 441, moved into position in the former Abbey Taxis building on Willliam Street. A number of these soldiers were visible to the marchers and there followed an exchange of insults. This progressed into some minor stone-throwing involving a group of youths. Many of these stones did not reach their intended target.

16.8.1.2 At all material times, the crowd was under the constant observation of soldiers on the Embassy building, the roof of the GPO Sorting Office, soldiers positioned in Harrison's Garage and on the flat roof annexed to the Presbyterian Church. At least one soldier from the Abbey Taxis responded with up to thirty baton rounds.

16.8.1.3 According to their evidence, Soldier B was in a position behind a window on the ground floor of the Abbey Taxis building whilst Soldier A was positioned behind the first floor window. Both Soldiers A and B claim to have fired two and three shots respectively at an alleged nail bomber on the waste ground. Their descriptions of the alleged nail bomber do not match that of Damien Donaghy or John Johnston.

16.8.1.4 Damien Donaghy was shot in the right leg, John Johnston in the left shoulder and right leg. He also received a minor hand injury. There is no objective evidence to support the version of events offered by Soldiers A and B.

16.8.1.5 The evidence clearly and indisputably establishes the following:

(i) Damien Donaghy was shot and wounded by Soldier A or Soldier B who were located in the Abbey Taxis building.

(ii) John Johnston was shot and wounded by Soldier A or Soldier B, or both, who were located in the Abbey Taxis building.

(iii) Neither John Johnston or Damien Donaghy was armed and no action was taken by them which could have justified the use of lethal force by Soldiers A and B.

(iv) No action taken by Damien Donaghy or John Johnston posed a threat, or could have been perceived as posing a threat, to the soldiers in the Abbey Taxis building.

(v) The members of Machinegun Platoon were not attacked by nail bombs or gunfire on taking up their positions in the Abbey Taxis building.

(vi) Soldiers A and B shot two individuals whom they knew to be unarmed

(vii) There were no nail bombers in William Street.

(viii) Neither A nor B believed that there were nail bombers in William Street.

(ix) There was no action by any member of the crowd on the laundry waste ground which either posed a threat, or could have been perceived as posing a threat such as to cause A or B to believe that they were justified in firing shots.

(x) Neither A nor B believed that either Damien Donaghy or John Johnston posed any threat to them to justify their firing.

(xi) Neither A nor B believed that any person in close proximity to Damien Donaghy or John Johnston was acting in such a way as to pose a threat to their lives or that of another.

(xii) OIRA 1 fired a shot at soldiers near the Presbyterian Church after Damien Donaghy and John Johnston were shot.

(xiii) Nobody other than Damien Donaghy and John Johnston were shot in William Street. Rather, these are two injured persons for whom Soldiers A and B have failed to account.

16.8.1.6 Role & Responsibility of Soldiers of 1 Para

Based on the evidence, the role and responsibility of the individual soldiers involve in Sector 1 can be summarised as follows:

16.8.1.7 Corporal A

i) Corporal A fabricated accounts of seeing a man with a nail bomb, hearing nail bomb explosions and civilian gunfire in order to justify his own use and his colleague's use of lethal force.

ii) Corporal A fired at least 2 live rounds, in circumstances which were wholly unjustified, in the direction of the Castle Laundry waste ground where significant numbers of unarmed civilians were gathered.

iii) Corporal A may well have shot Damien Donaghy, John Johnston or both. He did so without any justification.

iv) In order to cover up the attempted murders of Damien Donaghy and John Johnston, Corporal A fabricated accounts of seeing a nail bomber, hearing nail bomb explosions and hearing incoming fire.

v) Corporal A failed to explain how he did not see Damien Donaghy and John Johnston being shot or removed from the area of the Castle Laundry waste ground.

16.8.1.8 Private B

i) Private B fabricated accounts of seeing a man with a nail bomb, hearing nail bomb explosions and civilian gunfire in order to justify his own use and his colleague's use of lethal force.

ii) Private B fired at least 3 live rounds, in circumstances which were wholly unjustified, in the direction of the Castle Laundry waste ground, where significant numbers of unarmed civilians were gathered.

iii) Private B may well have shot Damien Donaghy, John Johnston or both. He did so without any justification.

iv) In order to cover up the attempted murders of Damien Donaghy and John Johnston, Private B fabricated accounts of seeing a nail bomber, hearing incoming fire and hearing nail bomb explosions.

v) Private B failed to explain how he did not see Damien Donaghy and John Johnston being shot or removed from the area of the Castle Laundry waste ground.

i) INQ 441 failed to take any necessary steps to acquire sufficient understanding of the conditions in Derry and in the Bogside in particular, before the launch of the arrest operation.

ii) He failed to take any necessary steps to obtain clear guidance and instructions about: the purpose of the operation to be undertaken by his battalion; his own role and that of his platoon; any restrictions and constraints imposed on the operation, and the geographical limits of their deployment particularly in view of the fact inter alia that they were ordered to a position ahead of the remainder of Support Company.

iii) He failed to give any appropriate briefing to the members of his platoon concerning these matters and did nothing to temper their aggression.

iv) In briefing his platoon INQ 441 failed to disabuse members of his Platoon of the notion that: they were being sent to Derry to break the No-Go areas or that they were being sent to Derry to teach 8 Brigade a lesson.

v) He failed to ensure proper discipline and conduct amongst members of his platoon; ensuring that they did not cock their rifles before it was justifiable to do so and, emphasising that they were not free to respond to any real or perceived threat by firing at civilians rather than disengaging in an orderly fashion.

vi) The consequences of the failures detailed above were that mostly young, relatively inexperienced, overly-aggressive members of his platoon deployed in an unfamiliar, unfriendly environment in a heightened state of tension and under a misapprehension about the nature of the threat facing them.

vii) INQ 441, as Platoon Commander, failed to exercise any supervision, command or control over Machinegun Platoon even when it became apparent that they were shooting unarmed civilians.

viii) While positioned in the Abbey Taxis building, INQ 441 watched as members of his platoon fired live rounds at unarmed civilians in William Street and failed to take any steps to stop them.

ix) Following the shootings, he covered up, and is still attempting to cover up, his and his men's criminal behaviour.

x) As leader of the platoon whose members wounded Damien Donaghy and John Johnston, INQ 441 bears a personal responsibility for their attempted murder or, at least, grievous bodily harm with intent, contrary to Section 18 of the Offences Against the Persons Act 1861.

16.8.1.10 INQ 275

i) INQ 275 did not fire any shots.

ii) INQ 275 was less than forthright and honest with the Inquiry in an attempt to conceal the unjustified shooting of others.

16.8.1.11 INQ 876

i) INQ 876 has invented a false account that shots were fired from the Rossville Flats.

16.8.1.12 INQ 624

i) This subparagraph has been removed by order of the Tribunal.

ii) This witness had a complacent attitude towards the rules and procedures put in place to regulate and account for the firing of live ammunition. He had, at some time, access to ammunition above the amount issued to him.

16.8.1.13 INQ 1544

i) This witness' statement is remarkable more for what he failed to see rather than what he actually saw.

16.8.1.14 INQ 1917

i) INQ 1917 has invented a false account of having heard nail bombs explode in William Street in an attempt to justify the shooting of others.

ii) INQ 1917 has falsely denied witnessing Soldiers A and B shooting unarmed civilians.

16.8.1.15 INQ 1874

i) INQ 1874 has fabricated an account of seeing gunmen in William Street and Rossville Street, of incoming shots and of nail bomb explosions in an attempt to justify the shooting of others.

16.8.1.16 INQ 1919

i) Has invented a false account of having heard explosions, including nail bombs and petrol bombs, in an attempt to justify the shooting of others.

16.8.1.17 Soldier 005

i) Soldier 005 invented false accounts of hearing incoming fire and explosions in order to justify the shooting of others.

ii) He was involved in collusion with Soldier R and/or the RMP and invented an account of a man throwing what looked like a nail/ petrol or acid bomb in order to justify Soldier R's use of lethal force.

iii) Soldier 005 was involved in collusion with Soldier R and/ or the RMP and invented an account of a man armed with a pistol in order to justify Soldier R's use of lethal force.

iv) Soldier 005 provided false evidence to Eversheds in the knowledge that it would be considered by the Inquiry and the Tribunal.

16.8.7.18 Concluding Section

Finally, all of the soldiers of 1 Para identified in this Sector perverted the course of justice, individually and collectively, in relation to the events of Bloody Sunday by concealing the criminal behaviour of their colleagues in Support Company and ensuring that they would evade prosecution for their crimes. Those who gave dishonest evidence on oath also committed perjury.

[1] He does claim to have heard hard extractions – the ping of a bullet off the floor Day 303/92/9 to Day 303/92/19

[2] He could not, and cannot, distinguish whether the shots were enemy or friendly fire but he did not have any sense that his section was under fire. He cannot remember having heard explosions C1805.3 paragraphs 17 to 18

[3] This witness is reticent about drawing the definitive conclusion that he would have heard a nail bomb had it exploded outside the derelict building Day 340/180/22 to Day 340/182/6

[4] INQ 588 saw Soldier B also firing with his baton gun. C588.4 paragraph 16. Because this witness was designated as a "read" witness by the Inquiry, we have not had the opportunity to establish whether he thinks that he was wrong in the sense that Soldier B must not have fired anything or that Soldier B must have been firing not a baton gun but a rifle. We submit that it must be the latter.

[5] His memory that it was Soldier E who fired these shots from ground level, he did concede that he was not absolutely sure Day 341/9/1,

17.1 Introduction and summary of submissions

17.1.1 The first paratroopers to enter the Bogside on Bloody Sunday were the soldiers of Mortar Platoon. Commanded by Lieutenant N, they occupied the first two Armoured Personnel Carriers (Pigs) in the Support Company column that passed through Barrier 12, across William Street and into Rossville Street. Lt. N was in the first pig, which pulled off Rossville Street into Pilot Row before stopping close to Eden Place at the back of the Chamberlain Street houses. The other half of the platoon was in the second pig, commanded by Sergeant O. It stopped momentarily on Rossville Street at the end of Pilot Row to let 5 members of the platoon off there before pulling up into the mouth of the Rossville Flats courtyard between the back of 36 Chamberlain Street and the north gable wall of Block 1.

17.1.2 Their arrival in Rossville Street caused panic among the hundreds of marchers and other civilian bystanders who were still milling around as the march came to an end and the meeting at Free Derry Corner was just getting under way. Including residents, marchers, journalists, photographers, first aid workers, priests and children, they fled in all directions to escape from the soldiers. A handful threw stones but they also dispersed rapidly. The scene was described by Jeffrey Morris of the Daily Mail as follows:

> "The Saracens stopped in Rossville Street. The paratroops were fanning out and running in pairs across the open ground. It was just like watching an old war film, a sort of bayonet charge without bayonets. As the Paratroops caught anyone, they knocked him down with their rifle butts and kicked him. Then, leaving him lying, they ran on." (M57.2 paragraph 5)

17.1.3 As they debussed, soldiers of Mortar Platoon fired rubber bullets indiscriminately into the crowd and within moments of debussing Lt. N had fired the first live shots. In the next 5 minutes or so, 7 members of his platoon, including himself, fired at least 29 live rounds into the Rossville Flats courtyard area, killing Jackie Duddy and seriously wounding Peggy Deery, Michael Bridge and Michael Bradley. Patsy McDaid suffered a wound to his back so severe that it was believed not only by civilians but also by the medical staff at Altnagelvin Hospital to have been caused by a lead bullet. It now appears that he may have been hit by a rubber bullet modified so as to cause maximum injury.

17.1.4 Alana Burke was knocked down by Sergeant O's Pig as it made its way to the mouth of the courtyard. Based on the photographs and oral testimony, it seems likely that the order in which the victims were shot was:

Peggy Deery	Somewhere in the waste ground behind Chamberlain St, possibly between Eden Place and Pilots Row or behind no.36
Jackie Duddy	In the car park perhaps 20 yds. from the alleyway between Blocks 1 & 2.
Michael Bridge	In the carpark between Jackie Duddy and Pig 2
Michael Bradley	Between the low wall at block 2 and Jackie Duddy
Patsy McDaid	Close to the alleyway between Blocks 2 & 3. (Patrick McDaid helped to carry Peggy Deery to 33 Chamberlain Street and was making his way towards the gap between Blocks 2 and 3 when he was shot in the back.)
Pius McCarron	may have suffered his grazing wound in this area as well

17.1.5 Mortar Platoon as a whole claimed to have fired 42 shots. In Sector 2, 7 soldiers claimed to have fired 29 shots into the car park area (the difference being accounted for by the fact that Corporal P and Private U fired 10 shots in Sector 3 and N fired 3 in Eden Place). The soldiers claim to have hit 7 people but there were only 5 known casualties. No soldier claims to have fired at or claims to have seen any other soldier firing at a teenage boy (Jackie Duddy), a middle-aged woman (Peggy Deery), a man walking towards him with his empty hands outstretched (Michael Bridge) or at a man walking from the low wall in front of Block 2 in a similar fashion (Michael Bradley). Soldier 13 fired rubber bullets at the windows but no soldier claims to have fired live rounds at the windows or to have hit anyone inside the flats. None of the descriptions of the circumstances in which shots were fired by soldiers in Sector 2 matches the circumstances in which any of the civilians were actually hit. In other words, on the soldiers' accounts, not one of the casualties was shot by a soldier. For this reason alone, the soldiers' evidence cannot be right. The soldiers have effectively conceded that those in respect of whom we appear were innocent victims. However, they have made the case that there were others who launched shooting and bombing attacks on the soldiers and that when the soldiers fired back in self-defence innocent people must have been killed accidentally. There is no foundation for this case in truth or in fact. Not one soldier was hit or wounded either by gunfire (except one who shot himself in the foot) or nail bombs or petrol bombs. The soldiers' case depends almost entirely on the evidence of the soldiers and that evidence is, in all material respects, false.

17.1.6 On the most controversial issues, there are major inconsistencies and discrepancies between different soldiers who purported to witness the same events and, of course, between the soldiers and the other witnesses, including civilians, priests and journalists. Like the civilians, many of the soldiers either may have been genuinely confused about what was going on at material times or have been simply unable to recall events accurately when they were making contemporaneous statements for the Widgery Inquiry or more recently to Eversheds. This is certainly the most obvious explanation for the conflicting evidence on basic, uncontroversial matters, such as how many soldiers were in each pig and who they were.

17.1.7 However, it does not account for the glaring inaccuracies and inconsistencies that characterised the soldiers' evidence on the central issues, namely who shot whom where and why. The most striking feature of the soldiers' evidence on these issues is the scale of dishonesty, deceit and falsehood exhibited by them both in the immediate aftermath of Bloody Sunday and during the course of the present Inquiry. This applies equally to the soldiers in Sector 2. Some of them have tried to brazen it out by making no concessions and adhering doggedly to their 1972 statements; some have told half-truths and made minor concessions while denying the central allegations; all of them have taken refuge to a greater or lesser degree in a feigned loss of memory. Not one soldier involved in the main events has told the whole truth about what he did or what he witnessed on Bloody Sunday.

17.1.8 In our submission, the material events that occurred in Sector 2 can be summarised as follow:

(i) Alana Burke was knocked down by Sergeant O's pig as it made its way into the Rossville Flats courtyard area.

(ii) When the paratroopers debussed, they immediately set about firing rubber bullets indiscriminately as well as beating and arresting civilians without justification.

(iii) The soldiers were not attacked with nail bombs, petrol bombs, acid bombs or other bombs and, except for 2 pistol shots fired later by a civilian gunman of whom they were unaware, they did not come under gunfire by civilians.

(iv) Lt. N fired the first shots at or above the heads of civilians at the junction of Eden Place and Chamberlain Street.

(v) Whether or not they believed that Lt.N's shots were fired by civilians at them, other members of Mortar Platoon then opened fire on civilians in the courtyard area.

(vi) Peggy Deery was the first to be shot. She could have been shot by one of a number of soldiers including in particular S,V, N or Q.

(vii) Jackie Duddy was then shot as he ran toward the alleyway between Blocks 1 and 2. He was probably shot by Soldier V although he could have been shot by one of a number of soldiers, including in particular R, S, Q and O.

(viii) Michael Bridge was probably shot by Lt. N but could have been shot by one of a number of soldiers. After he saw Jackie Duddy shot, he walked towards the soldier with his arms outstretched and he was shot as he shouted in their direction in protest at the shooting.

(ix) Michael Bradley could have been shot by any one of a number of soldiers. He was shot in similar circumstances to Michael Bridge when he left the cover of the low wall after seeing Jackie Duddy shot.

(x) Patsy McDaid was probably shot with a rubber bullet by Soldier 013 but could have been shot by one of the other soldiers with a baton gun, including in particular Soldiers 112, 019 and 017.

(xi) Some time after the soldiers opened fire and after Jackie Duddy had been shot, OIRA 4 fired two pistol shots from behind the cover of the gable wall at 36 Chamberlain Street at soldiers but the shots went unnoticed, at least by soldiers.

(xii) Mortar Platoon then withdrew to the north gable wall of Block 1.

(xiii) After Jackie Duddy's body had been carried along Chamberlain Street and up Harvey Street, soldiers from C Company made their way into 33 Chamberlain Street and arrested all the male occupants without justification.

(xiv) Soldiers failed to offer or arrange the provision of medical attention for any of those shot.

17.1.9 In our submission, the evidence supports the following conclusions:

(i) All of the deceased and injured in Sector 2 were shot by members of the Mortar Platoon.

(ii) All of the deceased and injured in Sector 2 were unarmed when shot.

(iii) They were shot deliberately - not accidentally - and without any justification.

(iii) None of the deceased or injured had handled a gun or bomb at any time on Bloody Sunday. None of the deceased or injured had acted in support of any person handling or using a gun or bomb at any time on Bloody Sunday.

(iv) None of the deceased or injured was doing anything at the time they were shot which would have led the soldiers responsible for shooting them to believe that they posed a threat of any kind.

(v) None of the deceased or injured was in the vicinity of civilian gunmen or bombers when shot. Nothing was taking place in the vicinity of the deceased or injured at the time they were shot which would have led the soldiers to believe that their lives or those of their colleagues were at risk.

(vi) None of the deceased or injured was shot in crossfire or in the course of a 'gun-battle' with civilian gunmen.

(vii) When the vehicles and soldiers of Support Company appeared in Rossville Street they did not come under fire. Soldiers opened fire without justification and not as a result of being fired upon first.

(viii) There was no 'gun battle' and no 'exchange of fire' as alleged by the soldiers. At some stage after Jackie Duddy was shot, one gunman fired 2 rounds from a .32 automatic pistol from behind the gable wall at 36 Chamberlain Street towards the waste ground but he was not seen by any soldiers, his shots did not elicit any response from soldiers and he did not hit anyone.

(ix) There are no "missing casualties" - all of the persons killed and injured in Sector 2 have been accounted for.

(x) All of the civilians arrested in Sector 2 were arrested unlawfully and without justification.

(xi) Soldiers attacked and beat civilians without justification.

(xii) Soldiers may have fired more rounds than they accounted for.

. 17.1.10 The evidence concerning the arrests in this sector is dealt with in Section 16. In this section, firstly, we provide an overview of the civilian evidence concerning the events of Sector 2. Secondly, dealing with each of our clients individually, we examine the civilian evidence concerning the circumstances of their shooting as well as the medical and forensic evidence relating thereto. Thirdly, we examine the evidence of the soldiers involved in this sector, i.e. those of Mortar Platoon and C Company as well as those soldiers in Observation Posts overlooking the area. Then, we examine the evidence of Para brutality in Sector 2. Finally, on the basis of the evidence, we shall specifically address the Soldiers' case that civilian gunmen and bombers were present in Sector 2 and that those who were hit were spirited away from the scene.

17.2 Overview of Civilian Evidence in Sector 2

17.2.1 The sequence in which the dead and wounded were shot in this sector was Peggy Deery followed by Jackie Duddy. Then Michael Bridge and Michael Bradley and lastly, Patrick McDaid. Peggy Derry was brought into 33 Chamberlain Street before Michael Bridge who was brought into the same house. She was shot before Michael Bridge. Jackie Duddy was certainly shot before Michael Bridge who can be seen remonstrating with the soldiers in P740 after Jackie Duddy has been shot. Michael Bridge and Michael Bradley were shot in consequence of their reaction to Jackie Duddy's death. Patrick McDaid was wounded as he got to the southeast corner of the car park just before the alleyway between blocks 2 and 3 . Alana Burke was also struck by a Pig on the wasteground whilst running towards the Rossville Flats car park.

Arrival of Mortar Platoon

17.2.2 The evidence of civilians confirms that a large number of people ran down both Chamberlain Street and Rossville Street and moved through the Rossville Street Car Park to the alleyways between blocks 1 and 2 and blocks 2 and 3 of the flats. The series of photographs taken by Derrick Tucker in the sequence EP28.1 to EP28.6[1] illustrate the flight of the crowd and the arrival of the Pigs of Mortar Platoon in Rossville Street. Robert White took a series of photographs which run from EP35.19 to EP35.20. These photographs show the movement of the two Pigs of Mortar Platoon along Rossville Street, Lieutenant N's Pig having come to rest on the waste ground. The clock on the Guildhall is clearly visible in these photographs, showing a time of 4.10pm. V48/12.46 and V2/147 shows that Sergeant O's Pig had come to a halt momentarily on Rossville Street and a number of soldiers debus. Lieutenant N's Pig turns left on to the waste ground. Sergeant O's Pig then turns left on to the waste ground, coming to a halt at the mouth of the car park, as seen in P188. During this deployment Alana Burke was struck by a Pig of Mortar Platoon on the waste ground.

[1] The suggested sequence of Derrick Tucker's photographs by Dr. Bell is to be found at E26.4. The sequence is 4, 3a, 3, 2, 1, 4a or 5, 6.This would accord with the recollection of Martin Tucker at Day 098/77/14 to Day 098/84/5, except for photograph 6.

17.2.3 Most Reverend Bishop Edward Daly or Father Daly as he then was, described at H5.16 how he heard the sound of the armoured cars revving up, as he stood in the Rossville Street area. It was mainly a peaceful crowd. He saw Pigs coming down Rossville Street, followed by soldiers on foot. The revving of the engines alarmed him and most people who were there. Most people started moving away slowly at first. As the Pigs gathered speed, most people expected them to stop at the junction of Eden Place. Father Daly recalled that when they did not, everyone sensed something different was happening. At that stage panic set in and people starting running in all directions, including himself. Day 075/13/10 to Day 075/14/20. He confirmed that he ran with the crowd, he thought towards the rear. He then headed towards the car park of Rossville Flats. He confirmed that the scenes depicted at EP28.4A and EP28.5 were the sorts of scenes he remembered. He recalled the crowd beginning to thin out as people made their way towards the alleyways out of the flats. Day 075/13/23 to Day 075/15/5.[2]

[2] See also evidence of William Harley AH36.2 paragraph 8, James Lynch AL24.3 paragraph 13, Robert Gallagher AG26.4 paragraph 21, Mary Bonner, AB38.1 paragraph 7.

17.2.4 William Harley was positioned on the balcony and then at a flat on the top floor of block 2 of Rossville Flats. He saw one army vehicle stopped between block 1 of Rossville Flats and the gable end of Chamberlain Street and another bouncing over the waste ground. AH36.2 paragraph 9. He saw a Pig deliberately knock over a young man AH36.2 paragraph 10.[3]

17.2.5 David Capper was a news reporter for BBC Radio on the 30 January 1972 and was present at the march. He had arrived at the point where he can be seen in EP2.4. His evidence was that he saw a crowd of several hundred beginning to run across the waste ground from the William Street direction. He had already estimated that on the open ground in front of the flats in total there were several thousand people. Behind the crowd he saw a number of APC'S drive up Rossville Street. One vehicle pulled left into where Pilot Row is located and another one stopped not in line with it but further up. As soon as they came to a halt soldiers got out and started firing.

17.2.6 Jeffrey Morris of the Daily Mail described the paratroopers fanning out in pairs across the open ground. It was like watching an old war film, a sort of bayonet charge without bayonets. As the paratroopers caught anyone, they knocked them down with their rifle butts and kicked them. They left them lying they ran on. M57.2 at paragraph 5.

N and INQ 1918. P488 shows Soldier 019 holding a baton gun on the edge of the alleyway. P489 shows Lieutenant N's Pig and INQ 1918 wearing the backpack. It seems likely that this is Lieutenant N's Pig since it does not have the ladder that can be seen in other photographs of Sergeant O's Pig. P595 shows where Lieutenant N's Pig ended up.

17.2.8 Coleman Doyle took a series of photographs from EP24.1 to EP24.7, showing soldiers, having debussed from Lieutenant N's Pig, engaging with civilians on the waste ground. It would appear that the Pig on the right of the photographs is Sergeant O's Pig and at the time of these photographs seemed still to be moving towards the mouth of the courtyard, by reference to the position of the vehicle in relation to the fence posts. At M23.19 paragraphs 7 to 8, Coleman Doyle described the soldiers jumping out of the Saracens and starting to run across the waste ground to the car park of the flats and towards Kells Walk. At Day 072/74/11 to Day 072/74/22, he described how the soldiers fired quite a number of volleys of rubber bullets. It was "the biggest crescendo of baton guns" he had ever heard. They were firing across the waste ground at people. The activity of the paratroopers at this stage of events is considered in further detail at 19.9 of these submissions.[4]

Lieutenant N's shots at Eden Place

17.2.9 At about the time of the events depicted in Coleman Doyle's photographs, EP24.1 to EP24.7, Lieutenant N had debussed from his Pig on the waste ground. He had, on his evidence, immediately become involved with a civilian and "certainly within a minute he had moved towards the alley way which leads off what used to be Eden Place into Chamberlain Street". There he claimed to have seen the crowds surging from the junction with Chamberlain Street and felt he had no alternative to fire warning shots at them.

17.2.10 The photographer Gilles Peress was fired on by a paratrooper who was kneeling at the corner of the buildings at Eden Place. M65.1.1. Given the location it is submitted this could only have been Lieutenant N.

17.2.11 At M65.20 paragraph 9 he said that he advanced further up Chamberlain Street to the place marked C at M65.55. He then peeked around the corner of Chamberlain Street and Eden Place and saw a paratrooper at approximately point D at M65.55. The paratrooper was in a crouched position in full battle dress wearing a helmet with the visor up. He was holding his rifle at his side parallel to his hip. He was looking in the direction of Harvey Street. The soldier made eye contact with Mr. Peress. He stepped out from the cover of the corner and held his cameras up above his head and shouted 'press'. The soldier then fired a shot at him. Day 212/193/22 to Day 212/195/13. The witness then quickly headed for cover further up Chamberlain Street in the direction of the Rossville Flats. He saw where the bullet had impacted. It had hit the ground floor windowsill of the house marked E on M65.55. About four days after Bloody Sunday he went to check out the bullet hole with Peter Pringle of The Sunday Times and it was still there. Day 212/195/14 to Day 212//196/13.

17.2.12 John Mitchel McLaughlin recalled at AM340.3 paragraph 13 fifty or so people who had been at Barrier 14 that had then ran into Chamberlain Street and south down into the courtyard of the Rossville Flats, where they all thought that it would be safer. When they left the Army had not yet come through Barrier 14. As the witness was running south down Chamberlain Street he heard the a live shot. He heard this shot just as he was running past the opening of Eden Place. It was unmistakably a high velocity rifle shot, but he did not see who fired it or in what direction. Day 080/66/24 to Day 080/67/22. He ran past the opening of Eden Place and took cover behind a house at the point which is marked with an A on AM340.11. Day 080/12/23 to Day 080/13/4.

17.2.13 The witness turned round at this point to see who had fired the shot, and he saw a photographer standing about 10 feet from him, immediately to his north at the point marked with a B on AM340.11. This photographer was frozen to the spot and seemed unable to move. Day 080/13/20 to Day 080/14/12. He had his hands high above his head and was looking to the west through the opening at Eden Place. He saw a soldier there. He had only a vague memory of that soldier, but thought he was bare headed. He had no memory of him wearing a gas mask. Day 080/14/13 to Day 080/15/9. The soldier lifted his rifle up to his shoulder and it seemed to the witness that he was aiming at the photographer. He shouted at the photographer to run towards him and just at that moment a shot rang out. Day 080/67/23 to Day 080/68/11. The witness immediately thought the soldier had shot the photographer as he could hardly miss from that range. However, he was not actually looking at the soldier when the shot was fired but it seemed to him that it must have been the same soldier who fired the shot. The soldier shouted no warning. Day 080/15/10 to Day 080/16/1. There were no civilians attacking soldiers in this area. The witness saw a puff of dust and a lump of brickwork fly out of the wall of the house immediately behind him. Half a brick came out of the wall where the bullet struck it. The position where this wall was is marked on the attached map with a C. The brick was one of a row of bricks immediately above a window. The witness was really panicking at this point and started running again south down Chamberlain Street. Day 080/16/2 to Day 080/16/20.

17.2.14 AM 340.11 shows point C to which he referred and is number 13 on the eastern-most side of the street. B is where the witness said that he saw Mr. Peress. A is where he said he was positioned. At AM340.8 paragraph 47 of his statement, Mr. McLaughlin said that after Bloody Sunday he was interviewed by The Sunday Times Insight team and they revisited the spot in Chamberlain Street. He told The Sunday Times Insight team about the shot that had been fired and when they looked where the soldier must have been when he fired and where the bullet struck the wall, they worked out that actually the soldier must have been firing at him. He could only have missed the witness by a matter of inches. With hindsight, the witness thought that the first shot the soldier fired may have been a warning shot. However, he believed that the second shot was a serious effort at blowing his head off. Day 080/70/5 to Day 080/71/7.

17.2.15 Patrick Anthony Clarke[5] described seeing an old man being beaten by soldiers in Eden Place, but says nothing about people advancing to rescue him. AC64.4 paragraph 10. The witness saw a man come out of the shop door that opened on to Eden Place. He was in his late forties or fifties. A soldier then came into Eden Place and grabbed the man, hitting him on the head with a baton and pulling him around the corner. Day 074/82/18 to Day 074/83/1. Almost immediately after the old man had disappeared, a second soldier put his head around the same corner and looked into Chamberlain Street in Patrick Clarke's direction. The soldier fired and obviously could not see what he was firing at. The shots hit no. 13 Chamberlain Street. Day 074/86/3 to Day 074/86/23. At AC64.10 to AC64.14 are a series of photographs taken in 1998, which purport to show the firing experienced by this witness.

17.2.16 Patrick Walsh stated at AW5.2 paragraph 8 that he was positioned at the junction of Eden Place and Chamberlain Street, from where he saw two Pigs arrive at the waste ground. The Pigs came to a stop and he saw two soldiers jump out. They took up positions facing Chamberlain Street.

17.2.17 The witness then recalled a lady opening the front door to her house in Chamberlain Street. As the door was still open, he heard a live shot fired. He witnessed the shot striking the brickwork of the house, just above a window, although he did not realise at the time that this was a live bullet until he saw the damaged brick. He immediately shouted to the lady to go back inside. The witness did not see who fired the shot, but was under the impression that it was fired by one of the two soldiers he had seen in Eden Place. He believed that the shot was aimed at him, one of the men who were lined across the street or a photographer whom the witness had previously seen in Harvey Street. AW5.2 paragraph 9.

Arrests and incidents of brutality on the waste ground

17.2.18 The incidents of brutality and arrest considered in this sector are examined in detail at section 19.9 of these submissions. The events considered therein occurred within a short space of time after the Paratrooper's debussing from Lieutenant N and Sergeant O's Pig. The photographs taken by Jeffrey Morris at P273 and P274 show clearly in the background that the car park is continuing to empty. People are continuing to run to move towards the back of the car park. Soldier S and Soldier V are in all likelihood the soldiers seen in EP24.7, making their way along the wire fence toward the car park of Rossville Flats having assaulted Charles McMonagle, the Knight of Malta. It was within a very short space of time from this point that Jackie Duddy was shot in the car park.

Events in the car park

17.2.19 Gilles Peress went down Chamberlain Street and took a series of photographs beginning at P627 showing Jackie Duddy on the ground in the car park, being tended to by Father Daly and others. The time between the taking of Giles Peres' photograph down Eden Place P274 and the photograph of Father Daly tending to Jackie Duddy was between ninety seconds and three minutes. Day 213/54/5 to Day 213/54/19. The witness was standing near the children's playground and witnessed continuous shooting from two soldiers at the far corner of the high flats and one at the back of 36 Chamberlain Street. M65.2.

17.2.20 The ambulance that picked up the body of Jackie Duddy was called at 4.15pm. It would appear therefore that Jackie Duddy was shot at a very early stage and the events must have occurred within a very few minutes of the arrival of the Paratroopers on the waste ground and at the car park. The ambulance that took both Peggy Derry and Michael Bridge to hospital was called at 4.20pm and arrived on Chamberlain Street at 4.27pm. Patrick McDaid had assisted Peggy Deery into 33 Chamberlain Street and was wounded after Michael Bridge and Michael Bradley.

17.2.21 In addition to the photographic evidence, a large body of civilian evidence indicates that people ran through the car park aiming to exit via the alleyway between blocks 1 and 2 or the alleyway between blocks 2 and 3 of Rossville Flats. People ran from the waste ground into the car park and also down Chamberlain Street into the car park. When the shooting began some people sought shelter at the gable end of Chamberlain Street and behind the low wall in front of block 2 of Rossville Flats. Others continued to try and exit via the gaps between the blocks.

17.2.22 It is clear from Video 48 that the Paratroopers in both Lieutenant N and Sergeant O's Pig began firing baton rounds either just before or as the vehicles came to a halt. Derrick Tucker Senior estimated that it was between thirty seconds to a couple of minutes between the arrival of the Saracens and the soldiers opening fire with live rounds. WT7.14 C. Father Daly had seen one Saracen on the mouth of the car park and perhaps another on the waste ground. Initially the soldiers had clustered around the Saracen at the mouth of the car park or near to the gable end of Chamberlain, but they had subsequently come out into the open. He was of the view that they could not have felt threatened in any way. Day 075/25/5 to Day 075/25/14 and Day 075/91/25 to 075/92/14.

17.2.23 Dolores McFarland watched the march from her mother's flat which was located in Block 3 marked with an X attached to her statement AM8.6. She noticed people run into the Rossville Street car park. She noticed an army vehicle drive into the entrance of the flats car park and also other army vehicles stopping before the entrance to the car park and also on Rossville Street. AM8.1 paragraph 8 to 9. She confirmed that P188 showed the position of the first Saracen. Day 083/83/10 to Day 083/83/15. She saw a soldier run from the Saracen at the end of Chamberlain Street, another at the corner of block 1 of Rossville Flats and another at or about the Saracen. Then she heard the shooting. Day 083/85/22 to Day 083/87/19. None of the soldiers appeared to take cover and they were not being evasive. The shots fired as the soldiers entered the Rossville Flats car park were the first shots she heard fired that day. At the same time as hearing these shots she saw a young lad she now knows to be Jackie Duddy fall.

17.2.24 David Capper described large reports (of firing) going on all around. He would look round from one area to another and hear a bang and a soldier would be putting down a rifle. At WT2.70 D he told the Widgery Inquiry that he had no indication of any firing from any other direction than the places where he saw the Paratroopers. He was very close to the soldiers and believed that he was possibly the person in the photograph EP2.4. He was certainly in the general area where the photograph was taken. At WT 2.70 G he confirmed he was in the area close to the soldiers and there were no indications to him of any shots coming in their direction and there was no ground being kicked up around them. M9.2 paragraph 3. At Day 073/74/8 to Day 073/74/11 he was asked the following:

Q: "You saw nothing and heard nothing which would have justified the Army firing live rounds at the crowd which was dispersing?"

A: "Correct."

17.2.25 He confirmed that his impression was that when the Army debussed there were a lot of rubber bullets fired. Quite soon after that he heard the sound of rifle cracks. The soldiers near to him did not appear to be taking any cover. Day 073/74/17 to Day 073/75/12. The witness was asked did it appear to him that the soldiers were trying to catch up with persons whom they were pursuing and that the persons whom the soldiers were pursuing were in flight. He answered:

"Oh they were in panic, they were running as fast as they could do to get away." Day 073/75/13 to Day 073/75/20.

The witness was shown EP28.5, showing a crowd apparently making its way towards block 2 of Rossville Flats. He confirmed that it was similar to the sight that he saw and said "yes" they were "running away from the soldiers." Day 073/75/13 to Day 073/75/20.

Crowd exiting the car park through the alleyways

17.2.26 A substantial body of photographic and civilian evidence indicates that large numbers of civilians had fled through the car park, through the alleyways between the blocks of the Rossville Flats. As Mortar Platoon opened fire, people were continuing to flee towards the exits. Father Daly for example was originally aiming to exit between blocks 1 and 2 but changed his mind because it seemed to be jammed with people. He described people running in all directions just to escape from the square at the time Jackie Duddy was hit. Day 073/23/6 to Day 073/23/11. Other witnesses described people exiting the car park via the gap between blocks 2 and 3.

Paratroopers opening fire into Rossville Flats car park.

17.2.27 A large body of civilian evidence indicates that soldiers fired into the car park and across the car park at unarmed civilians fleeing towards the exits between the blocks of the flats. In addition there is clear evidence that soldiers fired up in the direction of the flats with no justification for doing so.[6]

[6] See for example the evidence of Antoinette Coyle at AC85.6 paragraphs 22 to 26. No soldier admits firing at this location.

17.2.28 William Harley gave evidence that a pig had stopped between block 1 of Rossville Street and the gable end of Chamberlain Street. One of the soldiers who got out of the pig fired the first shots he saw towards two men one of whom the soldier had attempted to attack on the ground. The men were running towards blocks 1 and 2 of the Rossville Flats. The soldier had cocked his rifle and aimed at the two men. AH36.2 paragraph 12 and Day 077/7/15 to Day 077/8/2. This witness also saw a soldier on the eastern side of the pig, leaning on the bonnet aim his rifle and shot Mickey Bridge. AH36.2 at paragraph 18. There was no threat to the soldiers at the time Michael Bridge was shot Day 077/38/7 to Day 077/38/10.

17.2.29 Michael Bridge saw an army vehicle stopped between block 1 of Rossville Flats and the Chamberlain Street houses with the doors facing towards the car park. He saw a further soldier in the firing position aiming into the car park between the western side of the pig and the NE corner of block 1 of Rossville Flats.

17.2.30 Father Daly's evidence was that the first shot he heard at the car park was the shot that hit Jackie Duddy. Father Daly himself continued running and took shelter behind the low wall in front of block 2 as did a number of other civilians. Following hearing the shot that hit Jackie Duddy, Father Daly described a fusillade of gunfire and he dived behind the wall that runs parallel to block 2 of Rossville Flats. The burst of gunfire which caused terror and panic came from the area of the waste ground. Whether it came from the Pig in the courtyard or further away, he did not know. WT4.7 G, WT4.8 A, Day 075/26/18 to Day 075/26/23. Father Daly described a lull in the firing when he went out to tend to the boy. The gunfire resumed as he tended the boy and the direction of the gunfire was all from the area where the soldiers were. Day 075/30/6 to Day 075/30/10. In 1972 he had described the gunfire as something like thirty to forty feet away. WT4.10 B. There was no gunfire directed towards the Army in the Square and there was no threat posed to the Army at the time they opened fire. Day 075/30/22 to Day 075/31/5.

17.2.31 After the shooting of Jackie Duddy, Father Daly witnessed a soldier at the gable end of block 1 of Rossville Flats going down on one knee, taking deliberate aim and shooting Mickey Bridge. The soldier was a short distance from Mickey Bridge when he shot him. H5.5 at paragraph 21.

17.2.32 Of those who tended to Jackie Duddy, Liam Bradley became aware of the sound of shooting and soldiers taking up positions on the waste ground at Pilot Row and Eden Place. AB61.2 paragraph 10. William McChrystal was aware of Army fire over their heads, and bullets hitting the back wall of the courtyard as they tended to Jackie Duddy. AM460.1. Hugh McMonagle, had run by the body of Jackie Duddy in the car park and like Father Daly, he had ended up behind the low wall in front of block 2. As he lay there he could hear shots which seemed to be hitting block 2, although they may have been ricocheting around the car park. His impression at the time was that they must have been fired by the soldiers at Eden Place. AM369.3 paragraphs 15 to 16. Charles Glenn, the Knight of Malta, was aware of shooting from the nearest Army vehicle as he tended to Jackie Duddy. Day 080/191/20.

17.2.33 Michael Bridge was shot shortly after the photograph in which he appears at P740. The shooting was witnessed by, among others, Father Daly as he tended to Jackie Duddy. Father Daly saw a soldier stepping out from the gable end of block 1 of Rossville Flats, go down on one knee and fire at the boy who he believes was Michael Bridge. Michael Bradley, who is likely to have been shot shortly after Michael Bridge, had run towards the gap between blocks 2 and 3 of Rossville Flats. When he reached the gap he was told that a young boy was dead in the car park. He crouched behind the low wall in front of block 2. When he emerged he was shot. He had seen soldiers jumping out of a Pig and firing. AB66.4 paragraph 15 to AB66.6 paragraph 22.

17.2.34 Patricia Tucker Jarvis was in a flat in block 2 of the Rossville Flats and saw a soldier firing randomly from the passenger side of a Saracen in the car park. Day 122/116/17 to Day 122/117/17. She could not understand why the soldier was shooting.

17.2.35 Brian Ward recalled that he heard the first live shots of the day at the time he was running across the waste ground, towards the entrance of the Rossville Flats car park. The Pigs had pulled up one in front of the other in Rossville Street. Whilst on the waste ground he saw eight to ten soldiers jump out of the back of a Saracen and begin to fan out. Day 085/144 and P188. At this time he heard between six or seven shots. He knew that these shots were live rounds as they had a distinctive crack. He saw the soldiers point their rifles at the crowd but did not see in which direction the soldiers were firing. As he was running across the waste ground he noticed that one of the vehicles did not stop on Rossville Street. The vehicle stopped at the northern entrance to the car park at a point marked "G", marked on the map attached to his statement. AW6.4 paragraph 12 and P188. He had been running in the direction of the wall in front of block 2 of Rossville Flats, when he saw Jackie Duddy hit.

17.2.36 Brian Magee saw Fr. Daly with a Knight of Malta tending to Jackie Duddy's body. The witness was still aware of gunfire coming into the car park as this was happening. AM220.5 paragraphs 23 to 24.

17.2.37 John McIntyre who had ran down Chamberlain Street heard high velocity shots as he ran. AM286.2 paragraphs 12 to 15. His description of the scene as he reached the car park was that it was full of hundreds of people all seeking shelter from the shooting. The shooting was continuous and he thought it was coming from behind him although he was not sure from where or in what direction. There was much screaming and shouting and everyone seemed to be fearful of their lives. AM286.3 paragraph 17. The witness assisted Michael Bradley and described at that time many people trying to get out of the Rossville Flats car park as the intense shooting continued in the car park. AM286.3 paragraph 21.

17.2.38 Lieutenant N claimed to have fired a shot from the rear of Chamberlain Street at a nail bomber in the car park of Rossville Flats. Soldier V claimed to have shot a petrol bomber in the car park of Rossville Flats. There is no civilian evidence to substantiate or justify the shots that these soldiers fired. The killing of Jackie Duddy and the individual woundings of each of the civilians in this sector will be considered in separate submissions on behalf of each.

Shooting towards blocks 1 and 2 of Rossville Flats.

17.2.39 Joseph Eugene McGrory ran across the car park of the courtyard between blocks 1 and 2 of the flats. There was a bottle-neck as so many people were trying to get through there. The shots which had been coming, he believed, from behind him as he ran across the car park continued as he tried to get through the ally way. The witness stated that during the whole of the march he had not seen anyone in the crowd with guns or bombs, nor had he heard guns being fired from the crowd or any explosions. AM268.3 paragraphs 16 to 17.

17.2.40 Hugh O'Donnell Senior described as he ran towards the car park of Rossville Flats, noticing two soldiers who he believed were shooting from the Saracens in the waste ground, towards the alleyway between blocks 1 and 2 of Rossville Flats. AO31.3 paragraph 15.

17.2.41 James Brendan O'Connor described trying to get out of the Rossville Flats car park via the alleyway that runs between blocks 1 and 2, but being forced to keep diving to the ground as shots were being fired towards him. AO10.7 paragraphs 47 to 48.

17.2.42 Soldier R claimed to have fired at a nail bomber in the car park close to block 1 of Rossville Flats. Soldier S discharged twelve shots in the direction of blocks 1 and 2, claiming to be firing at a man with a rifle. These two soldiers are, on their admitted shots, the likely candidates for indiscriminate and unjustified firing in this area of the car park, experienced by civilians.

17.2.43 There is no civilian evidence whatsoever which substantiates the firing of Soldier R towards a nail bomber. There is no civilian evidence whatsoever to substantiate Soldier S's firing in this direction at a man with a rifle.

Shooting towards blocks 2 and 3 of Rossville Flats.

17.2.44 A number of civilians took shelter at the gable end wall of Chamberlain Street. Patrick McDaid described twenty to thirty people around him in that area.[7] Following the shooting of Jackie Duddy, a number of people ran across towards the gap between blocks 2 and 3 of Rossville Flats. Shooting was still going on at this stage. The series of photographs taken by Giles Peress at P796, P797, P798, P800 and P801 show events in this corner of the car park around the time Patrick McDaid was hit.

17.2.45 Patrick Walsh who appears in P796 and P797 recalled shooting going on at the time when P797 was taken. Day 171/29/4 to Day 171/29/9. He described running into Rossville Flats car park as fast as he could. There was a foreign photographer somewhere taking photographs. There were crowds of people running through the car park at the same time as him. He could hear shooting. He remembered thinking that he must aim for an exit, either the alleyway between blocks 1 and 2 or between blocks 2 and 3 of Rossville Flats. He also described the panic in the alleyway between blocks 2 and 3. AW5.2 paragraphs 10 to 12.

17.2.46 Gilles Peress saw no justification for the shots fired by the soldiers in the car park towards the gaps between blocks two and three of the flats.M65.11.

17.2.47 Noel Doherty was running towards the alleyway between blocks 2 and 3 of Rossville flats. He looked around and saw a soldier standing at the north eastern corner of block 1 of Rossville Flats. The soldier was firing shots in the direction of the alleyway running between blocks 2 and 3 of Rossville Flats. The soldier continued to fire on a number of occasions according to this witness. AD91.4 paragraphs 20, 27, 31.

17.2.48 Soldier Q claimed to fire a shot at a nail bomber at the alleyway between blocks 2 and 3 of Rossville Flats, from the northern end of block 1. Sergeant O claimed to have fired three shots at a man with a pistol behind a Cortina car[8], towards the south end of block 3 of Rossville Flats. He also claimed to have fired two shots towards the alleyway between blocks 2 and 3 of Rossville Flats. Soldier R claimed to have fired three shots at a man with a pistol between blocks 2 and 3 of Rossville Flats.

17.2.49 There is no civilian evidence to substantiate Soldier Q's claim of a nail-bomber in the location at which he fired. There is no civilian evidence to substantiate either Soldier R's or Sergeant O's claims of activity of a man with a pistol between blocks 2 and 3 of Rossville Flats.

Civilian evidence of threats to the army.[9]

17.2.50 The overwhelming evidence of civilians suggests that there was no justification for soldiers opening fire in the Rossville Flats car park and that there was no threat to them, which could have or did justify such

[8] Martin Tucker saw soldiers who he believed were responsible for shooting up a brown Ford Cortina parked in the car park of Rossville flats. He considered it bizarre, as there was no one in the car and nothing special about it. There were perhaps half a dozen shots, maybe more and he was certain he did not see a gunman behind it. The witness believed the soldier fired at this car from the side of the Chamberlain Street houses rather than the northern end of block 1 of Rossville Flats. AT17.5 paragraph 29 and Day 098/86/12 to Day 098/86/23. Gerard Colhoun also saw this incident AC70.4 paragraph 12.

action. No petrol bomb or nail bomb was thrown at the army at any time. Almost all of the civilian evidence indicates that the Army were not fired upon, save to the extent acknowledged by OIRA 4. The following examples are illustrations of the civilian evidence from a wide variety of locations around the Rossville Flats and car park.

17.2.51 Father Daly was categorical that there was no justification for soldiers opening fire and that no threat was posed to them.

17.2.52 Gilles Peress heard or saw no nail bombs or petrol bombs or any civilian with a weapon. M65.3 and M65.10.

17.2.53 Fulvio Grimaldi did not hear any nail bombs that day. He claimed to know the sound of nail bombs well at that time. M34.3 paragraph 12.

17.2.54 Patricia Tucker Jarvis, who was in a flat in block 2 of Rossville Flats and had seen a soldier firing randomly, also stated that no one had any guns as far as she could see and she didn't hear any firing from the flats. AJ2.4 paragraph 6. She didn't hear any explosions or see any civilian gunmen nor anything thrown from the windows of the flats. AJ 2.4 paragraph 14.

17.2.55 Martin Tucker did not hear any nail bombs or big explosions that day. He did not hear machine gun fire. He did not see petrol bombs thrown. AT 17.5 paragraph 34, AT17.6 paragraph 39.

17.2.56 Derrick Tucker Junior did not see any missiles or petrol bombs thrown into the courtyard Neither did he see any shots fired from the flats AT15.10 paragraph 25.

17.2.57 Robert Gallagher, from a position on the balcony which ran along the front of block 3 of the Rossville flats, saw no civilians with guns or saw any bombs being thrown or heard any either in the Rossville flats car park. AG26.4 paragraph 20. The witness, in describing the shooting of Jackie Duddy, stated that throughout his observation the shooting had been continuous. There were further bursts of fire as Father Daly tended to the young man and again as he witnessed the shooting Michael Bridge. AG26.4 paragraphs 24 to 26.

17.2.58 Brian Ward witnessed the shooting of Jackie Duddy and Michael Bridge. During the time he was in the car park he did not see any objects being thrown at soldiers and he did not hear any shots, other than those being fired by the soldiers themselves.AW6.6 paragraph 16.

17.2.59 Peter Gallagher did not see any civilians with weapons of any description, during the whole afternoon's events. Neither was he aware of any shots being fired from the Rossville flats or of any acid being thrown from the flats or of any nail bombs or petrol bombs exploding. AG23.5 paragraph 30.

17.2.60 Dolores McFarland did not see any nail bombs or petrol bombs during the day. The only fire she heard was coming from the soldiers at the entrance to the Rossville flats car park. Throughout the time she was looking down into the Rossville flats car park, she did not see anything being thrown out any of the flats or from the roof of the flats. AM8.5 paragraph 22.

17.2.61 Brian Magee stated that apart from the one civilian gunman described at AM220.6 paragraph 27, the only shooting he heard that day was the distinctive sound of army rifles. He saw no other civilians with weapons, either guns or nail bombs, nor did he hear any other explosions that he could associate with nail or blast bombs. AM220.8 paragraph 40.

17.2.62 Hugh Breslin who saw the shooting of Jackie Duddy and who ran across the car park through the gap between Block 1 and 2 of the Flats, did not see any civilian with any weapon nor did he hear any nail bombs exploding. AB77.3 paragraph 13.

17.2.63 Mary Bonner who witnessed the shooting of Jackie Duddy from a flat on the second floor of Block 2 of Rossville Flats, at no time heard or saw petrol or nail bombs or civilians with weapons AB38.5 paragraph 49. She had given evidence to the Widgery Inquiry and at WT.5.41 D rejected the suggestion that there was firing from the flats at soldiers when they arrived.

17.2.64 Bernard Doherty had ran into the car park and stopped at a low wall which ran parallel to the northern side of Block 2 of the flats. From there he witnessed the shooting of Michael Bridge. He then ran towards and through the gap between Blocks 2 and 3 of the flats. He described the shooting a more or less continuous during this time and although he could not be certain about the specific direction from which the shots were being fired he felt that at all times they were being fired from behind him i.e. somewhere to the north.AD54.3 paragraphs 13 to 15. He did not see any civilian with a weapon and he did not see or hear any petrol or nail bombs being thrown in the courtyard of the flats. AD54.5 paragraph 21.

17.2.65 Francis Dunne had witnessed the shooting of Michael Bridge and exited the car park through the gap between block 1 and 2. He noticed a civilian with a weapon at the gable end of Chamberlain Street. This was the only civilian he saw with a weapon that day. Nor did he see or hear any nail bombs or petrol bombs. He was definite that he did not see any acid bombs or missiles thrown when he was in Rossville flats car park. He was there for about three to four minutes and at no stage did he feel threatened by anything being thrown from the flats. Apart from the shooting he experienced as coming from the soldiers there was no shooting coming over his head from behind him.AD173.30 paragraph 37.

17.2.66 Kevin McDaid, at AM167.6 paragraph 30 stated that he saw no-one with guns or nail bombs in the crowd that day.

17.2.67 Brian Johnston did not hear nail bombs at any time. AJ9.3 paragraph 28.

17.2.68 Cathleen O'Donnell did not hear any shots being fired at the soldiers. A023.2 paragraph 12.

17.2.69 Paul McDaid ran across Rossville Flats car park from the end of Chamberlain Street and saw Jackie Duddy on the ground. He saw no armed civilians or anyone throwing anything at soldiers in the car park. Nor did he see anyone throwing bottles from the flats. Day 090/142/11 to Day 090/142/20.

Summary.

17.2.70 It is submitted that the civilian evidence including that of priests and journalists provides overwhelming support for the following propositions:

i) The soldiers in Sector two opened without justification on civilians most of whom were fleeing away from those soldiers.
ii) Those soldiers were not under threat from any source or direction.
iii) They were not fired upon.
iv) The soldiers actions were not prompted by any civilian gunman.
v) They were not faced with petrol bombers.
vi) They were not faced with nail bombers.
vii) They shot unarmed civilians without any justification whatsoever.

17.3 Sequence Of Photographs / Video

17.3.1 The movement of Pigs 1 & 2 into the Bogside and the deployment of Mortar Platoon can be traced in the photographs:
P509 et seq. are stills from the heli-tele film showing the pigs moving across William Street before Pig 1 turned off into Pilots Row and then stopped in Eden Place. .

P592 (taken by Robert White) shows Pig 1 just after it has passed Eden Place.

P593 (also taken by Robert White but apparently from a more southerly position at the alleyway leading from Rossville Street to the North East corner of Glenfada Park North) shows Pig 2 just after five of its occupants (P, R, U, 006 and 017) have apparently debussed.

P517 (taken by Derek Tucker from Block 2) shows Pig 1 turning off Pilots Row towards Eden Place. (The Tribunal's pagination suggests that they consider this photograph to show Pig 2 but this is not correct.)

P514 shows the scene on the waste ground moments after Pig 1 has arrived, with a small group making its way through the gap leading from Eden Place to Chamberlain Street.

P516 (another photograph taken by Derek Tucker) shows Pig 2 just emerging from the North end of Block 1 into the car park.

P793 (taken by Gilles Peress from Chamberlain Street) shows only two people in the roadway leading to Eden Place, not a crowd that had to be dispersed by a warning shot.

P278 shows two soldiers making their way along the back walls of Chamberlain Street after encountering Charles McMonagle (Knight of Malta). Both soldiers are behind what appears to be No. 26 Chamberlain Street. The soldier in front is left-handed and we know that Soldier V was left-handed. it is probably Private S behind him as they make their way to the corner behind 36 Chamberlain Street.

P1015 appears to show INQ1918 (the radio operator) at the Northern corner of Eden Place with Lt N behind him and Soldier 019 approaching them from the opposite direction. Pig 2 is just about visible towards the right hand side of the photograph. It is not clear whether it has yet stopped.

P1016: The crowd is noticeably thinner. Pig 2 may still be in motion because the doors do not appear to be open and there is no sign of any soldiers beside or behind it. The two soldiers seen making their way towards the flats would not appear to be V and S since the soldier in front appears to be right-handed and they do not appear to have reached the wall behind 26 Chamberlain Street, where Charles McMonagle was assaulted.

The photograph shows INQ1918 with Duncan Clarke. Lt. N is now standing at the Northern corner with Soldier 019 occupying the opposite corner.

EP24.1 to EP24.4 show soldiers attacking the stragglers on the waste ground as they run towards the flats. In EP24.2 the front passenger door of Pig 2 is clearly open but there still seems to be no one standing beside or behind the vehicle. Nor has any soldier yet arrived at the North East corner of block 1.

P627 and P628 show Jackie Duddy fatally wounded on the ground and attended by Fr Daly, Liam Bradley and Charles Glenn among others.

P590 shows the gunman seen by Fr Daly at the side wall of 36 Chamberlain Street while two soldiers (possibly V and S) appear to be crouching at the back wall around the corner.

P630 and P285 show Michael Bridge gesticulating toward the soldiers who are seen beside Pig 2 in P285.

P285 shows a virtually empty car park and no sign of Peggy Deery, who is believed to have been shot somewhere between Eden Place and Pilots Row before she was carried around the corner into 33 Chamberlain St. From this photograph and from other evidence it would appear that Peggy Deery was shot before Jackie Duddy. By the time P285 was taken she must already have been carried into 33 Chamberlain Street by Patsy McDaid and others before he (Patsy McDaid) made his way to the Eastern side of the carpark and then towards the alley between Blocks 2 and 3 where he was shot in the back, apparently with a rubber bullet, P796 - P801 show civilians including Patsy McDaid, Paddy Walsh and Paddy Doherty making their way in a southerly direction to the alleyway between Blocks 2 and 3. Patsy McDaid was shot about this time in this area.

P524: By the time this photograph was taken, the Pigs had been pulled back to the North end of Block 1 and Lt Col Wilford is apparently making his way across open ground from William Street towards them. About this time, Lt. N was ordered by Major Loden to pick up the bodies from the Rubble Barricade. These bodies were loaded into his pig and driven to Altnagelvin Hospital under the command of Sergeant O.

17.4.1.1 Alana Burke was 18 when she was knocked down by Sergeant O's Humber pig which was driven by INQ1579 on Bloody Sunday. She was single and lived with her widowed mother in the Bishop Street area of Derry. She was the eldest of 10 children and worked as an accounts clerk for Desmond Motors. She had no criminal record or political affiliations.

17.4.1.2 Relevant Photographs

P744	On stretcher at Joseph Place
P745	As above
P746	South of Block 2	Father Bradley, Noel McLoone

17.4.1.3 Summary

Alana joined the march at the Granstand bar in William Street. She positioned herself around the front of the march and was present during the early confrontation between the soldiers and the marchers when they reached Barrier 14. Like many others her clothing was heavily soaked by the water cannon which had been brought forward to disperse the crowd. Overcome by the effects of CS gas she was attended to by the Knights of Malta and then made her way into Chamberlain Street eventually ending up on the waste ground at Eden Place. After a short conversation she decided to make her way home southwards along Rossville Street. Alana made her way through an opening in the wire fence which traverses where the Rossville Street waste ground meets the Rossville Flats car park. Alana briefly engaged spoke to Frankie Campbell, a local youth club leader who alerted her to the fact that "Saracens" were heading towards her position. Alana began to run but was hindered somewhat by the saturated condition of her clothing. At some point she was assisted by an acquaintance Lorney McMonagle who attempted to pull her to safety. In the panic he somehow released his grip and Alana was struck by an APC in or about the vicinity of grid reference M14 AB101.5.

17.4.1.4 Alana recalled in her 1972 statement dated 23rd February 1972 made to Mr Leonard of the Treasury Solicitors Department witnessed by Father Patrick Grant of St Columb's College:

> "A Saracen came up behind me and struck me with a thud, which I can still remember vividly on the right side of my back and legs. What exactly happened next is somewhat confused in my mind, but I remember moments later lying against a low wall behind the shops at the far end of the car park." (emphasis added) AB101.6

17.4.1.5 The experience outlined in this account is repeated at AB101.2 paragraphs 6 to 7 of her Eversheds statement. The Tribunal will be aware from the heli-tele footage that a number of military vehicles accelerated in a southerly direction along Rossville Street.

17.4.1.6 Some impression of the actual impact of these vehicles on the ground at the material time is to be gained from the description contained in The Sunday Times Working Papers at S227:

> "The noise was appalling as the pigs revving flat out, produced a siren scream that the inhabitants of the Bogside have come to know. People watching the convoy were struck by its speed. The lead pig turned hard left off Rossville Street and bumped over the waste ground to halt in a wide puddle where Eden Place and Pilot Row used to be. Sergeant O's pig drove deeper down Rossville Street then also swung left to halt mid-way across the entrance to the flats car park."

17.4.1.7 The account then goes on to offer the following insight into the real consequences of embarking upon this manoeuvre:

> "There is a dispute about how many people were standing in waste ground as the pigs halted – from fewer than 500 to more than 1,000. The best estimate from pictures is about 300-400. What is quite clear from the witnesses we have talked to is that the bulk of these were innocent bystanders – marchers, sightseers, locals, and Press and TV men. And they were joined by rioters who had fled up Chamberlain Street and through Eden Place." S228

> "People frantically dodged out of the pigs' way. At least one man was knocked flying, though he does not seem to have been badly hurt. But Alana Burke, an 18-year old clerk was not so lucky: as she began to run up from the waste ground to the car park the second pig hit her hard from behind. She ended up in hospital." S229

17.4.1.8 Evidence at hearing clearly demonstrated that driving in a manner which exposed innocent pedestrians to the risk of serious injury was an inherent feature of a well-establish military tactic in dealing with crowd control. The Tribunal is referred to the following exchanged between Counsel and Soldier 006:

"Q. You stated at paragraph 18 of your statement to Eversheds that your policy was to drive through rioters as often gunmen were behind them?

A. That is right.

Q. Is that correct?

A. That is correct.

FS 1.1106

Q. What you have told Eversheds is that you would drive straight into a group of people where you knew there were gunmen?

A. We might not have known there were gunmen there, but there could have been.

Q. Why would you take a risk such as that if you genuinely believed that you were driving straight into where gunmen were?

A. That is what we were trained to do.

Q. Were you not endangering your own life or your colleagues' by doing that?

A. Well, hopefully doing that, it would actually unnerve the gunmen rather than being stood in front of rioters.

Q. Presumably, if there were gunmen there, they would see your vehicles coming and they would be ready to shoot you the minute you got out of your vehicle; would that not be the logic of what you are telling us?

A. It could do, although otherwise it could, if you were too close, they might get out of the area.

Q. Is it not a fact and is it not the correct position that you did not expect gunmen there, you simply drove through the rioters to disperse the crowd?

A. Well, that is not up to me sat in the back, is it, that is up to the commander in the front.

Q. You do not make these decisions, but you have given evidence in your statement as to what your platoon did, so that is why I am asking you these questions.

A. Yes, that was our standard --

Q. Again, I have to suggest to you that you did not differentiate, at that stage, between rioters and a crowd of people fleeing from the advance of the Army?

A. Yes, I do not think we arrested any women.

Q. Sorry, I did not say "women", I said "people." You did not distinguish at all between rioters and this crowd, is that not the correct position?

A. No, not really.

Q. "Not really," you mean: that is possible?

A. It could have been" Day 334/47/13 to Day 334/49/6

17.4.1.9 This description of events is confirmed by the recollection of Antoinette Coyle AC85 who at the time was a seventeen year old member of the Knights of Malta. She described the incident in the following way:

> "We began walking south along the waste ground of Eden Place and Pilot Row towards the Rossville Flats. The next thing I remember was seeing a large crowd of people running south down Rossville Street. The crowd seemed to be spreading all over from behind us. There were also two Saracens which seemed to be travelling at great speed. People were jumping out of the way to avoid being knocked over. I told the young man to stay clam and stay with us, but as soon as he saw the commotion he ran away. Sophie (Marley) and I began to run with the crowd and I remember the Saracens overtaking us on our right. I was very scared. I was amazed that nobody was knocked down by the Saracens. I thought that the Saracens were heading towards Free Derry Corner and would continue south down Rossville Street. However, suddenly the Saracens veered left off Rossville Street and moved onto the waste ground of Pilot Row and Eden Place. I have no idea how many people were running into Rossville Flats car park but there seemed to be hundreds..." AC85.13 paragraph 18

17.4.1.10 In addition, Fulvio Grimaldi who was on the Rossville Street waste ground said:

"I heard engines roaring and saw two or three Saracens move south down Rossville Street at a speed I had never seen before (and I must have seen hundred of Saracens elsewhere before that day). It was an incredible speed." M34.55 paragraph 17

It is accepted, even by Counsel for the Soldiers, that Alana was struck by the APC, which at the material time was driven by INQ 1579.

17.4.1.11 The impression created by the above descriptions is not surprisingly differently represented by the driver of the pig which struck Alana Burke:

"When we drove through the people we were trundling along; we could not go overly fast as although the vehicle was not quite as slow as a tank; it was an old army vehicle." C1579.3 paragraph 18

INQ 1579 went on to record that as he drove into the car park of the Rossville Flats a man stood spread-eagled in front of him baiting him to strike him with the vehicle. As soon as he saw him he immediately "banged" on his brakes but the momentum carried the vehicle forward and the front of the vehicle "tapped him causing him to fall down. We hit him at a very low speed. He simply rolled over, got up and ran off. There were no visible wounds or signs of a limp. I cannot recall what he looked like or what he was wearing" C1579.3 paragraph 20

17.4.1.12 The witness said that this incident happened at the very edge of the car park. INQ 1579 went on to deny having struck Alana Burke and offered the following explanation for this confident assertion:

"I have been asked whether or not I recall knocking down a young lady on the way across the waste ground. I have no recollection of this incident and am certain that if I had have hit someone I would have felt the impact. For example, if you went over a curb you would bounce." C1579.3 paragraph 20

17.4.1.13 This explanation highlights the policy of denial which all military witnesses adopt when coping with allegations relating directly to them. It will be recalled that notwithstanding that he had already struck both a soldier at Barrier 12 and a male, Thomas Harkin, in the vicinity of the car park, the witness was at all time aware of these events even though he had not felt the impact. As with the "unknown" soldier who shot Peggy Deery, an admission does not sit easily with a shared perception of military masculinity and professional restraint.

It has to be recalled however that during the course of his evidence INQ 1579 made it clear that exclusive responsibility for the management and conduct of his driving was not entirely his. He conceded that the manner of his driving was at all time dictated by the instructions he received Day 336/182/9 to Day 336/183/3.

17.4.1.14 Although this witness had no experience in crowd control manoeuvres which involved driving directly at, or through people, who were rioting Day 336/181/18 to Day 336/182/8, other evidence clearly showed that this was a well used and widely acknowledged method of crowd control by at least one other member of the Mortar Platoon:

> "Our policy was to drive straight through rioters, as often gunmen were behind them. We would therefore drive into the area where the gunmen were." Eversheds statement of Soldier 006 (emphasis added) B1377.005

Key Witnesses

17.4.2.1 A number of people provide evidence to the effect that they recall someone being knocked down during the arrival of the Mortar Platoon APCs.

> Roisin Stewart records in her Eversheds statement a girl in a dark crombie knee length overcoat with light brown hair who may have been hit by a "Saracen" in the vicinity of Eden Place. Her friend who was with her, Willie Meenan prevented the witness from attending to the girl and urged her to keep running in a southerly direction as he believed her to be dead AS34.3 paragraph 15.

17.4.2.2 Joseph Ernest Moore recalled seeing a person being hit by a moving "Saracen" somewhere between Eden Place and Pilot Row. He was unable to provide specific details about location, description or gender AM 413.3 paragraph 14. However in a statement supplied by him on 1st February 1972 seems to suggest that he saw two people being struck by a "Saracen":

> "As I ran with the crowd I observed a person going up in the air where the Saracen struck him. I saw a second person being hit with the Saracen. As I got to the tunnel it was jammed with people. People were shouting and squealing to get through. I couldn't get through." AM413.14

17.4.2.3 William O'Connell a former Mayor of the City said:

> "The other Saracen drove further south up Rossville Street and cut across the waste ground south of Pilot Row, heading towards the car park of the Rossville Flats. This Saracen stopped at approximately the point marked G on the attached map (Grid Reference L13) (AO7.12) and, as it screeched to a halt, it hit a civilian who sort of "bounced" off the front of the vehicle and was thrown to the far (north eastern side) of the Saracen. I cant describe the person I saw hit by the Saracen at the time. However, the Saracen seemed to hit this person "straight on". I didn't know whether it was a man or a woman, nor did I see what happened to them after they had been hit. I have found out later that it was Alana Burke". AO7.3 paragraph 17

17.4.2.5 Frankie Campbell stated as follows:

> "I then saw a Saracen deliberately run into Alana Burke. She was standing near to me in the Rossville Flats car park at the position where I have marked "F" (Grid Reference K/L15). The front side of the Saracen hit her and knocked her to the side. I don't remember any other details of how she was hit, only being aware that she had been and being horrified. I grabbed her and put my arms around her and pulled her over to a wall where I have marked "G" (Grid Reference L17) on the map." AC137.7 paragraph 10

A number of witnesses recall seeing Alana in Joseph Place. Most of them confirm that the injuries complained of by her had been caused when she was struck by an APC.

17.4.2.6 Sean Canney gave oral evidence to the Tribunal on Day 093. He had entered one of the flats at the north east end of Joseph Place. He recalled that there were six or seven people in the flat, one of whom was Alana Burke, whom he knew. She appeared to have a serious back injury and he was advised by one of the others that she had been knocked over by an APC AC24.9 paragraph 51

17.4.2.7 Antoinette Coyle referred to above of the Knights of Malta gave oral evidence to the Tribunal on Day 095. She recorded at AC85.1; AC85.25; AC85.8 paragraph 33 that she attended upon Alana who at the time was lying on the living room floor in a maisonette in Joseph Place. She was told that she had been crushed by a "Saracen" against a wall and that she could not feel anything from the waist down. The witness then left to get an ambulance.

17.4.2.8 Paul James McLaughlin AM350.7 paragraphs 39 to 40 a fellow Knights of Malta Volunteer gave oral evidence to the Inquiry on Day 176. This witness provided evidence to the effect that he had been advised that a young girl was being detained in the first house in Joseph Place as a result of being struck by a Saracen. He went to that location for the purposes of providing First Aid and discovered the patient to be Alana whom he knew through the activities of Irish dancing.

The witness confirmed that Alana complained that she had no feeling below her waist and was unable to move her legs. He rendered some precautionary treatment and then made arrangements for her to be removed by way of ambulance to Altnagelvin hospital.

17.4.2.9 Alana Burke herself gave evidence on Day 076 in a manner consistent with the details of her Eversheds statement. The experience produced a series of high emotional moments as she recalled the events of that day. The Chairman intervened to offer a degree of respite Day 076/89/6. Everyone including Counsel for the Soldiers accepted that Alana was struck by an APC, which was driven by Soldier INQ 1579. It acknowledged that whilst some confusion may exist in respect of the precise location at which the incident occurred, this confusion is undoubtedly linked to the pandemonium of hundreds of people fleeing for safety. In support of this proposition we rely on photographs P516, P517, and EP 24.1, EP 24.2, EP 24.3, EP 24.4, EP 24.5, EP 28.5, P485, which in our respectful submission speak for themselves.

17.4.2.10 Support for this proposition may be inferred from the following exchange from between the witness and Counsel for the Soldiers in the course of her oral evidence:

"Q. I am not challenging, you understand, Miss Burke, that you were run down or that it was in that area which is very much an open area, is it not?

17.4.2.11 As with many of the witnesses who gave evidence the trauma of this event undoubtedly had an adverse effect upon her ability to recall with total accuracy all aspects of her experience on Bloody Sunday. While the precise details of the impact remain hazy, the allegation itself was not only immediate but remains constant.

17.4.2.12 It is common case that Alana was struck by an APC and this proposition has never been challenged by representatives acting for or on behalf of INQ 1579 and indeed has remained the position which has been adopted by Counsel to the Inquiry Day 017/86/10.

17.4.3.1 Alana Burke was admitted to hospital suffering from shock and temporary paralysis from the waist down. She subsequently suffered severe pain on the right side of her back radiating down towards the right S.I. joint. In addition, she continued to suffer a lack of sensation below the right knee D0950. She was X-rayed at Altnagelvin and there was a suggested injury to the lumbar spine. E10.006 She had injuries to her pelvis and right leg. AB101.2 paragraph 11. She was discharged within several days and attended Altnagelvin as an outpatient for several months thereafter D0950, D0951, D0952. The consequences of these injuries in later life were traumatic and are set out in his statement to the Inquiry AB101.2 paragraph 11.

17.4.4 Removal to Hospital

17.4.4.1 She was brought through by other civilians the Rossville Flats car park and taken to the [redacted] house (Number 12 Joseph Place) the second maisonette of the northern block of Joseph Place AB101.16. The evidence of Eamon Melaugh who believed that she was taken to the second maisonette AM397.6 to AM397.7 corroborates this. Alana disputed the evidence of Michael Bradley that she was taken to the same house as him (i.e. Number 13 Joseph Place) Day 076/87/16 to Day 076/88/1.

17.4.4.2 Paul McLaughlin AM350.14 paragraphs 25 to 27 and Antoinette Coyle AC85.1, AC85.8 paragraph 33 of the Knights of Malta, there treated her.

1 Some time after 4.51pm Alana Burke was placed in an ambulance VRM 7689 EZ which was parked in Rossville Street near the entrance to the Rossville Flats. Also placed in the same ambulance were Barney McGuigan and Kevin McElhinney. The ambulance was manned by John Rafferty (driver) and Samuel Hughes (attendant). It arrived in Altnagelvin Hospital at 5.15pm. ED39.6; D500.26, D500.27; D94

17.4.5 Conclusions

17.4.5.1 The following is respectfully submitted on behalf of Alana Burke:

i) The hostility of the driver responsible for colliding with and injuring Alana Burke demonstrates a total disregard for human life and her safety;

ii) Alana Burke was injured because INQ 1579 drove at a speed which was inappropriate for the prevailing conditions and circumstances at the time;

iii) If, as suggested by INQ1579, that he had driven the vehicle in the manner outlined whilst acting under the instructions of Sergeant O, then the responsibility for the injuries sustained by Alana Burke must be shared between these individuals (Day 336/182/9 to Day 336/183/3);

iv) The aggressive nature of the arrest tactics which were employed by 1Para, namely the use of armoured vehicles, indicates a strategy which contained a clearly defined risk to all persons lawfully congregating within the perceived catchment area;

v) The policy of driving heavy armoured vehicles at or through large numbers of unarmed civilians demonstrates a reckless disregard for their safety and welfare (Day 336/163/15 to Day 336/163/21);

vi) That INQ 1579 knows perfectly well he knocked down a female when he drove the Mortar Platoon pig on Bloody Sunday;

vii) That INQ 1579 has covered up this fact in his evidence to the Tribunal; viii) That INQ 1579 deliberately lied on oath to the Tribunal about the circumstances in which he injured Alana Burke.

17.5 Margaret "Peggy" Deery

17.5.1 Personal Details and Background

17.5.1.1 Margaret "Peggy" Deery (nee McIntyre) was 38 when she was shot on Bloody Sunday. She was a widow whose husband died three months previously of cancer of the spine. She had 14 children aged between 16 and 10 months old. The family lived in the Swilly Gardens area of Creggan but by the time she was released from hospital on 29th May 1972 the family had moved to Creggan Heights. She was to wear a calliper on her left leg until she died in 1988. She had no criminal record or political affiliations.

17.5.1.3 Summary

An event such as a Civil Rights March on a Sunday afternoon would have been an opportunity for her to escape from the full time demands which rearing a family of fourteen children would have entailed. The opportunity to exchange family gossip and neighbourly news would have been shared between her and her sisters who accompanied her on the march:

> "I remember a friend of my mother's called Peggy McLaughin and two of our cousins, May and Rita Nichol, came round to call for my mother. She had not really been out of the house since my father died and Peggy, May and Rita were insistent that she come out and participate in the march. She had certainly never been on any previous marches." AD32.1 paragraph 4

Despite this she would not have been exempt if it were alleged that at some point during the course of the afternoon that she participated or was present in a riot then proof of such an allegation would have attracted a mandatory period of imprisonment.

17.5.1.4 Anthony McCallion recalled seeing Peggy in or about the junction of Chamberlain Street and Harvey Street. He remembered saying to her "Don't head up there, they're rioting." She just smiled and walked on north up Chamberlain Street. A short time later he could hear the sound of shooting coming from the direction of the junction between William Street and Rossville Street. AM65.2 paragraphs 8 to 10

17.5.1.5 Location

No less that fourteen witnesses including Peggy and her son Tony refer to the location at which she was allegedly present when she was shot. Five of the witnesses identify the location at grid reference M16 on map Q8 i.e. at the west of Numbers 34 to 36 Chamberlain Street at the waste ground. Of these five, three gave evidence before the current Tribunal. They are Patrick Doherty AD96.2 paragraph 10, Neil McLaughlin AM347.3 paragraph 16 and Patrick Moore AM17.4 paragraph 20.

Three witnesses place Peggy at a location slightly south of the gable of 36 Chamberlain Street / Rossville Street car park. They are Pascal Keys AK36.1, George Nelis AN9.3 paragraphs 16 to 20,Gerry McBride AM46.4 paragraphs 11 to 12.

A fourth witness, Peter Gallagher AG23.11 paragraphs 15 to 18 placed Peggy in grid reference L15.

17.5.1.6 Peggy herself believed that she was shot in the vicinity of Pilot Row AD33. James McDermott AM184, Brian Magee AM220.4 paragraphs 7 to 20 and Leo Deehan AD178.5 to AD178.7, support this opinion. The final witness, Mr Tony Deery confirms the same location in a statement provided by him to the Tribunal albeit upon the basis of what he was told by his mother while she was alive AD35.2 paragraph 12.

17.5.1.7 Location Table

Approximate Location where shot	Leo Deehan	Tony Deery	Patrick Doherty	James Duddy	Helen Gallagher	Peter Gallagher	Pascal Keys	Gerry McBride	James McDermott	Brian Magee	Neil McLaughlin	George Neils	Patrick Moore	Peggy Deery
Grid Reference M16 (Vicinity of southern gable end 36 Chamberlain Street)			✓	✓	✓						✓[10]		✓
Grid Reference M15 (Rear of houses Chamberlain Street / Pilot Row)	✓	✓							✓	✓				✓
Grid Reference L15 (Rossville Flats car park)							✓	✓				✓
Other						✓

The apparent diversity of opinion and recollection in respect of the location at which Peggy Deery was shot, is understandably if not partially explained by the widespread panic and confusion, which existed at the time. It will be observed, that the various locations at which Peggy was allegedly shot generally comply with the route, which would have been taken by those who carried her to Mrs Nelis' home at 33 Chamberlain [10] However Neil McLaughlin's contemporary account indicates that Peggy Deery was shot at the rear of the houses at Chamberlain Street / Pilot Row AM347.13.

Street. It is clear from the various descriptions provided by a number of witnesses that Peggy was carried in a disorganised, almost haphazard manner by a variety of people stopping to assist at various points along the route. Again, this development probably has more to do with the widespread panic, which existed among the crowd who for the most part were generally preoccupied with their own safety. It is to be regretted that no attempt was made by the RUC to investigate the shooting of Peggy Deery or to record with any accuracy the precise location where she was shot. It would appear from all documents supplied, that at the material time the RUC were only concerned with whether Peggy had participated in an illegal march. Indeed the investigating officer smugly commented on her explanation for her movements that day as being inconsistent with an innocent bystander ED62.1.

17.5.1.8 It is useful to recall how the RUC officer records the incident in which she is shot:

> "There were hundreds of people in this area running to get away from the Army who had driven into the back of the flats in Saracens. A man had fallen on top of me and he got up and ran around the corner. Whilst I was on the ground I was able to see the Army men in front of me and I saw and heard them shooting. I attempted to get up but I slipped and cut my head and nose. I then saw a soldier in front of me and he appeared to be taking aim at me and I then felt a blow to my left thigh. I called to a man to help me which he did and he took me to a house in Chamberlain Street." ED62.2 to ED63.3

17.5.1.9 The account is remarkable more for what it does not contain rather than for what it does. No attempt has been made to record the identity or description of the soldier concerned, the spatial relationship of the victim to the firer, the absence or presence of any obstruction, the length of time that she continued to observe his presence, whether it was he who fired the shot, what he did afterwards and whether any words were exchanged. The routine questions which would be made in the course of a proper investigation into what on the available evidence, was a clear case of attempted murder.

17.5.1.10 This is all the more so given that the victim was a 38 year old widowed mother of fourteen children, who on instructions had never been arrested or interviewed by the RUC before.

Detective Sergeant Cudmore appears to record in the second paragraph of his report that Peggy indicated on a map the approximate position where she was shot ED62.1. Unfortunately this document has never been provided. This seems hardly surprising given the manner in which the investigation in this shooting was conducted.

17.5.1.11 Approximately twelve witnesses have provided evidence to the Tribunal in respect of having assisted in her transportation to 33 Chamberlain Street or observing it as it took place. These included Frank Carlin AC32.2 paragraph 9, Francis Duddy AD144.3 paragraph 14, Elizabeth Gallagher AG11, Pascal Keys AK36, Patrick "Patsy" McDaid AM172.3 paragraph 10, James McDermott AM184, Brian Magee AM220.4 paragraphs 7 to 20, Mary Moore AM414.3 paragraph 16, Margaret Neils AM 11.3 paragraph 15, Hugh Sheerin AS10, Anna Nelis of whom it will be recalled also gave evidence to the effect that when soldiers entered 33 Chamberlain Street one of them appeared to look at her injuries and then stated "Let the whore bleed to death" AN8.2 paragraphs 8 to 12, AN8. paragraph 21.

It will be recalled that Matt Campbell when providing his statement corroborates the above remark with by attributing the following to one of the soldiers, namely "Let the bastards or whores bleed to death", AC140.1.

It also appears that she was seen by Martin McGuinness as he ran through the Rossville Flats car park KM3.2 paragraph 7, KM3.124 and Day 390/78/24 to Day 290/81/6.

17.5.1.13 Timing

As indicated at the outset, Peggy Deery was almost certainly the first person to be shot after troops entered Rossville Street. There is a certain amount of evidence which enables the Tribunal to confidently arrive at this conclusion. Patrick McDaid in his contemporaneous statement to the RUC provided with the following account

> "I was walking up Chamberlain Street whenever crowds started to run past me going towards the Rossville high flats because somebody had shouted 'the Army's coming'. I ran along with this crowd to the top of Chamberlain Street where I slowed down. Two or three youths then appeared from the direction of the Rossville flats and to my right. They were carrying a woman who I now know to be a Mrs Deery and I saw that she had been shot in the leg. I went over and helped them to carry Mrs Deery into a house in Chamberlain Street where I tied a piece of scarf around her leg to stop it bleeding. I went outside and started to shout for first aid or an ambulance. I then heard shooting going on in the area and I saw a young fellow fall and I believe his name was Duddy. He fell in the square of the flats but I did not see who had shot him." AM172.21

17.5.1.14 It should be pointed out that Mr McDaid's Treasury Solicitor statement, the Sunday Times interview, his oral evidence to Lord Widgery and his evidence to this Tribunal in this regard has remained constant.

In addition to the above there is also the contemporaneous account as provided by Billy Gillespe, though some of its contents were disputed, in which he appeared to confirm (to the Sunday Times) that Peggy had been carried to 33 Chamberlain Street before Jackie Duddy or Michael Bridge were shot AG34.17.

17.5.1.15 At least one witness, Peter Gallagher, appears to suggest a different sequence of events. He recorded in his Eversheds statement at AG23.10 paragraph 13 that he had a distinct recollection of seeing Father Daly giving Jackie Duddy the last rites. He appears to have observed this scene from the shelter of the south gable end wall of Chamberlain Street. He could hear continuous shooting although none of it was automatic fire. He was conscious that an attractive dark haired woman approximately 25 years of age had been pushed out into the clearing beyond the gable end. The woman then suddenly fell to the ground and he realised that she had been shot. He went on to describe how he assisted in dragging her back towards the cover of the wall. She had an extensive gunshot wound to the back of her thigh. He also recalled that she was unarmed and wearing fish net stockings AG23.10 paragraphs 13 to 18.

17.5.1.16 In both his 1972 and Eversheds statements he has Michael Bridge being shot and taken to 33 Chamberlain Street after assisting with Peggy Deery. In relation to the sequence of events this account is largely corroborated by the contemporaneous account supplied by Mr Gallagher at the time. While the details may be different, the witness' broad recollection of event is consistent AG23.7.

Which Soldier Shot Peggy Deery?

17.5.1.17 One of the few recorded descriptions from Peggy Deery of the soldier who actually fired the shot is contained in the interview notes of Philip Jacobson of the Sunday Times Insight Team:

> "I looked over towards Rossville Street and there were the big Pigs coming in and one headed over towards where we were. Then I saw a soldier with the red Para hat come up from the Pig that was near us and he took aim, I thought at me or the man standing next to me (she does not know who he was). I shouted to this chap 'for God's sake watch out, that one's going to shoot' and as I moved towards the man for protection like I felt this big thump in my leg, in the thigh really. It is funny, I never heard the bang. The soldier was not more than 25 yards. I could recognise him clearly if I saw him again. He was about your height, five-foot ten, fatter than you, with a round fat face and a little dark of complexion, although he also had that black stuff streaked over his face." AD33.1

17.5.1.18 The victim's daughter, Helen Mahon, records the following in her Eversheds statement:

> "My mother talked about Bloody Sunday a lot afterwards. She said she would never forget the face of the soldier. After he had shot her he had cocked his gun and she had said she was a widow with fourteen wee ones. He had then put his head down and walked away. She said that he had red hair. She said that he had shot her at close range." AD32.3 paragraph 20

17.5.1.19 Peggy's son Owen Deery records in his statement to the Inquiry:

> "My mother always said that she would be able to immediately recognise the soldier who fired the shot by his red hair." AD34.2 paragraph 17

17.5.1.20 Tony Deery related what he mother told him in his Eversheds statement:

> "My mother talked quite often about the soldier who had shot her. He was tall, with red hair. She did not bear a grudge against him although she could not understand why he had shot her as she had been dong nothing wrong." AD35.1 paragraph 8

17.5.1.21 Leo Deehan AD178.5 did not give oral evidence to the Tribunal. Beyond expressing the belief that the soldier who fired the shot was an officer he unfortunately omitted to provide any further details.

Peggy Deery could have been shot by any one of a number of members of the Mortar Platoon including soldiers S, V, N or Q. However Lieutenant N and Private S to a greater extent must be regarded as real contenders for having shot her.

17.5.1.22 As has been pointed out in Section 15.2.8 of our submissions Lieutenant N claimed that he fired 1 round at a nail bomber in the car park striking him in the right thigh. As the Tribunal is aware, Peggy was shot in the left thigh but more likely in a position to the west of the houses of Chamberlain Street on the Rossville Street waste ground at a very early stage in the events, probably when Lieutenant N was still at Eden Place or at his APC with a prisoner. The Tribunal knows that Michael Bridge was shot in the car park and like Peggy was shot in the left thigh, which corresponds with Lieutenant N's account except for the fact that Michael Bridge was unarmed and not a nail bomber.

17.5.1.23 Private S on the other hand worked his way southwards along the wall at the back of Chamberlain Street. He admitted firing 12 rounds in the Sector 2 area from the rear of 34 Chamberlain Street, which is not far at all from where a number of witnesses set out in this section have positioned Peggy Deery as falling. Indeed Peggy herself said she was shot in the area of Pilot Row. Private S' justification for firing those rounds however was wholly unbelievable and all of those rounds, in our respectful submission remain unaccounted for. Our submissions in respect of Private S are set out in detail at Section 15.2.8.3.

17.5.1.24 It is a matter of regret that none of the Mortar Platoon soldiers has had the moral courage to either admit to or identify any colleague firing at or hitting any target resembling Peggy Deery. In fact none of the official bibliographies of the Parachute Regiment when detailing or outlining any of the events of this day make any reference to the fact that they shot a woman on Bloody Sunday. It therefore appears that whoever shot Peggy Deery is enjoying the benefit of a Regimental cover-up or that the fact that she was wounded has yet to be brought to their attention.

Rossville Street waste ground / Car park

17.5.2.1 Neil McLaughlin AM347 provided an interview to the Sunday Times Insight Team in 1972. He gave oral evidence to the Tribunal on Day 91. Whilst he had no memory of providing that interview he accepted in oral evidence that he might well have done as a large amount of detail corresponded with his recollection when he made his Eversheds statement and that the detail in the Sunday Times account could have come from him Day 91/41/21 to Day 91/42/10. For example, the witness agreed that he could have seen Peggy Deery shot but did not now recall it as he marked in his Eversheds map that he first saw Peggy at AM347.6. Similarly, he accepted that he could have helped Peggy Deery to 33 Chamberlain Street even though his current recollection was that he only witnessed this happen Day 91/44/5 to Day 91/46/4:

This is what he appears to have told the Sunday Times:

> "The first person to fall was a Knights of Malta (sic) man. Neil does not know who is he was shot (sic). He merely fell. He was a few paces to Neil's right, and he fell by the back wall of the C St row --- in other words the crowd running forward had just cleared the gable end. Almost immediately, a girl two paces to his right fell. Neil couldn't remember much about her appearance except she was wearing black stockings. Neil was sure she had been shot." AM347.13

17.5.2.2 The witness went on to relate how he saw a crowd around a body in the car park. He did not actually see this person being shot. He then saw Michael Bridges (sic) shot AM347.13. The account continues:

"But at some stage he and four others went to Mrs Deery – the woman in black tights – and lifted her. Her whole leg was "sagging" in her tights, he said, and when they lifted the leg, the knee bent the wrong way. The five of them carried her to the end of C St. at which point other people took over." AM347.13

If it is accepted that this is an accurate account of what the witness was telling the Sunday Times Insight Team in 1972 then it is strong evidence that Peggy Deery was in fact shot at the west side of the houses at Chamberlain Street near the Knight of Malta, Charles McMonagle, who is shown in photograph EP33/5. It provides further weight for the proposition that she was shot by a member of the Mortar Platoon before Jackie Duddy and Michael Bridge.

17.5.2.3 Brian McGee AM220 gave oral evidence to the Tribunal on Day 89. Counsel to the Tribunal commended him on his statement saying that it was "admirably clear" Day 89/165/22. He was 16 on Bloody Sunday. He was standing at the south gable end of the houses on the west side of Chamberlain Street. There were about 20 to 30 people present. He saw an APC parked near the flats and then he remembers hearing the first shots. In his Eversheds statement he recorded that he saw a youngish woman aged 18-20 carried by two men. A Paratrooper at position "E" to the east and possibly to the front of the APC moved to position "H" and tried to interfere with the men carrying the woman. The soldier, who was wearing a gas mask, then had his attention diverted and went elsewhere AM20.4 paragraph 19. If one goes to the witness' map at AM220.17 it is apparent that this Paratrooper moved from the area of the pig in photograph P518 towards the rear of the houses in Chamberlain Street from where Peggy Deery was being carried.

17.5.2.4 She was then carried around the gable end. She had a three-quarter length coat and wore either a short skirt or a skirt that had ridden up her legs. She wore knee length boots with dark tights. The witness thought that her right leg was bleeding heavily AM220.4 paragraph 17.

17.5.2.5 The witness now knows this woman was Peggy Deery and he said that he might have assisted the men for a few steps AM220.4 paragraph 20. It is submitted that this witness' evidence is also useful in terms of sequencing as after seeing this incident he then saw Jackie Duddy's body in the car park, then seeing Michael Bridge and then OIRA 4 AM220.5 paragraphs 22 to 27. It is further submitted that Mr McGee's evidence assists in demonstrating that Peggy Deery was shot somewhere at the rear of the houses in Chamberlain Street on the waste ground and was carried from this area along the back of those houses. It is also clear that this also attracted the attention of one of the Mortar Platoon soldiers at Sergeant O's pig yet none of these soldiers admit to seeing a woman suffering from a gunshot wound at all.

17.5.2.6 Brian McGee in our submission was a particularly clear and truthful witness whose honesty nor reliability was challenged by Counsel for the Soldiers. In particular they did not challenge his assertion that the soldier who was present at Sergeant O's pig moved towards as if to interfere with Peggy Deery and the two men who were carrying her.

17.5.2.7 Pascal Keys AK36 provided a one-page statement in 1972. He said that the Army had shot indiscriminately into the garage space at the back of the flats. He saw Peggy fall as he ran towards the garages. He helped carry her along with two other men into 33 Chamberlain Street. He then left to try and get an ambulance AK36.1.

17.5.2.8 Gerry McBride AM46 gave oral evidence to the Tribunal on Day 079. He provided a statement to NICRA in 1972,which we submit is a more accurate account certainly in terms of sequence than that given to Eversheds. In 1972 the witness said that he saw a soldier at the end of the flats hitting a civilian with something. He then saw a girl crawling. He grabbed and tried to lift her. The girl said that her leg was broken. When he was helped by "a couple of fellas" he was able to see that there was a hole right through her leg. Mr McBride helped carry her into the house in Chamberlain Street AM46.8. In his Eversheds statement the witness confirmed that where he saw Peggy Deery was at the rear of Chamberlain Street approximately three houses up from the bottom Day 079/76/1 to Day 079/76/3.

17.5.2.9 The sequence in his 1972 statement continues that he then saw a body in the car park who must be Jackie Duddy and then saw Michael Bridge shot. The sequence in his Eversheds statement is that he first saw Jackie Duddy along with Father Daly in the car park before seeing Peggy Deery. His sequence in that account continues with him witnessing Michael Bridge being shot before managing to get Peggy Deery to 33 Chamberlain Street.

17.5.2.10 Patrick McDaid AM172 who was also wounded on Bloody Sunday provided a large number of statements and interviews. These are dated 4th February 1972; 7th February 1972; 27th February 1972; 7th March 1972 and also one statement which is undated. He also gave oral evidence to Lord Widgery and this Tribunal on Day 092. What he says in respect of Peggy Deery has always remained constant. As Mr McDaid reached the southern end of Chamberlain Street (grid reference M16) with the car park in front of him he saw three or four men carrying a woman. Mr McDaid assisted in bring Peggy into 33 Chamberlain Street where he applied a tartan scarf to her leg in an effort to stop the bleeding. He then went out along with the woman of the house (Mrs Nelis) to try and get either First Aid or an ambulance and then saw someone shot in the car park Day 092/107/4 to Day 092/109/6, AM172.2 paragraph 10, AM172.12, AM172.14, AM172.17, AM172.21, AM172.27, WT7.83 A-B.

17.5.2.11 Elizabeth Gallagher AG 11.1 provided a one page handwritten statement in 1972. She was a 37 year old housewife who assisted in bringing Peggy Deery into 33 Chamberlain Street. She also secured the assistance of the chemist Otto Schlindwein who told her to try and get an ambulance otherwise Peggy would bleed to death. When she went outside and told a Corporal he told her "Let the fucking whore bleed to death. Its good enough for her."

17.5.2.12 Frank Carlin AC33 was running south down Chamberlain Street where he saw three men carrying a woman away from the area of the Rossville Flats car park. He saw this group before he reached the car park. He could see that she had a very bad wound to her thigh and though there was a lot of blood she was still conscious AC33.2 paragraph 9. The witness Patrick Pearse Moore at AM417.4 paragraph 20 gave strikingly similar evidence.

17.5.2.13 Francis Duddy AD 144 was running south down Chamberlain Street and saw a woman who he later learned was Peggy Deery being carried into a house. He recalled that Peggy wore a headscarf and black tights. He also recalled the wound on her leg AD144.11 paragraph 14. After witnessing this he saw Jackie Duddy's body in the car park and Michael Bridge actually being shot AD144.12 paragraph 16.

17.5.2.14 Fulvio Grimaldi M34 gave evidence to the Tribunal on Day 131. After taking photographs of Jackie Duddy's body being attended to by Father Daly and others he returned to the relative safety of the Chamberlain Street southern gable wall:

> "... a woman was carried past me into Chamberlain Street, in the same direction that Jack Duddy has been carried. The woman had blood dripping from her. She was taken into the first house on the east side of Chamberlain Street. I later learned that the woman was Mrs Deery." M34.60 paragraph 46

17.5.2.15 Fulvio then witnessed Michael Bridge being shot in the car park. He followed Michael Bridge who was also carried into the same house as Peggy Deery:

> "In the living room, I saw Mrs Deery again. She had a terrible wound in her leg. There was a huge lump of flesh hanging down, which people were trying to put back in place. Meanwhile, several other people were helping Mr Bridge who had been placed in the courtyard at the back of the house. Michael Bridge proved to be a very brave man." M34.61 paragraph 50

17.5.2.16 The witness took photographs P748 and P749 of Mrs Deery on the sofa. These are the only photographs that we have of Peggy on Bloody Sunday.

Susan North M35 gave oral evidence to the Tribunal on Day 130. She provides essentially corroborative evidence of the above in respect of Peggy Deery at M35.5 paragraphs 25 to 29. The Tribunal has a copy of her sound recording made on Bloody Sunday. The witness confirmed that page 23 to 27 of the Grimaldi / North transcript tape relates to events taking place inside 33 Chamberlain Street A9/34.0 to 35.0, E3.0052 to E3.0056, M35.13 paragraphs 80 to 83.

17.5.2.17 33 Chamberlain Street

Anna Nelis AN8.1 gave oral evidence to the Tribunal on Day 103. She was at home with her mother and sister Margaret at 33 Chamberlain Street. She recalled that three or four men called out from Chamberlain Street asking if they could bring an injured woman into the house. Peggy Deery was laid down on the settee near the window. In her contemporary account the witness said that Peggy's leg was badly mutilated AN8.9. She went outside and secured the help of Otto Schlindwein. She then went out and phoned an ambulance from the Donaghue house at 2 High Street AN8.9, AN8.3 paragraph 14. When she returned the Knights of Malta were present with Peggy who was still bleeding profusely AN8.9. Michael Bridge had also been brought into the house while the witness was out. When a "Saracen" arrived outside her door she went out to the soldiers and explained the situation to them. She asked for their assistance and told them Peggy needed "urgent medical aid". The witness continued:

" "Let her bleed to death"... The soldiers came in. There was two of them. They came into my kitchen. They looked at the injured woman and said "Let the whore bleed to death". They then went into the yard to look at the injured man. I didn't hear what they said. They left my house. I went out with them and remained in the street. A girl, a member of the Knights of Malta, Alice Long came running and screaming across the courtyard of the high flats. She shouted at the soldiers to get an ambulance for her. The soldiers started to shout back "Let them f... well die". and used more abusive language"" AN8.9

17.5.2.18 After Peggy and Michael Bridge were taken away the men who were present in the house were arrested. Anna Nelis also complained about this incident to the RUC at Victoria AN8.13.
The witness confirmed in the course of her oral evidence to Counsel that none of the soldiers in Chamberlain Street offered medical assistance either in the form of the provision of a field medical pack or by way of offering to treat anyone in the house Day 103/25/7 to Day 103/25/13.

17.5.2.19 Margaret Nelis AN11 also gave oral evidence to the Tribunal on Day 103. She ran towards her house and heard shots "from all directions" AN11.10. She was at the door of her house at 33 Chamberlain Street when men came over and carrying a woman and asked her whether they could come in. A lot of other people also came into the house. In her Eversheds statement, Mrs Nelis recalls that most of the people in the house were in their thirties and older AN11.3 paragraph 14. Michael Bridge was also brought into the house at a later stage. This witness did not see Peggy's injury but recalls that people were saying that she was badly hurt and that she had been shot AN11.3 paragraph 15.

In her RUC statement of complaint the witness said that some of the soldiers assisted in moving the two wounded persons out of the house before all the male occupants were arrested AN11.10.

17.5.2.20 George Nelis AN9.1 also gave oral evidence to the Tribunal on Day 103. This witness came out of Chamberlain Street and into the Rossville Flats Courtyard. He noticed a body on the ground of a young boy aged fourteen or fifteen who was lying on his front. The position of the boy is marked on the map at AN9.20. Someone present remarked that the boy was dead. The witness did not know who this man was, nor has he found out since who the boy was Day 103/87/16 to Day 103/88/16. It should be pointed out that this was not mentioned in any of Mr Nelis' contemporary accounts at AN9.9 and AN9.21.

About fifteen to twenty feet southwards he came upon Peggy Deery. He thought that she was wounded in her right thigh:

> "I can vividly remember the blood pumping out of the wound very quickly, almost like water from a hosepipe. It was when I saw that, that it really came home to me that the situation was very serious and very dangerous" AN9.3 paragraph 17

He went to his mother's house at 33 Chamberlain Street and very soon thereafter two men arrived with Peggy Deery. This witness also refers to two soldiers being present in the house shortly after making comments about the two wounded persons in the house such as "let them bleed to death" and "they deserve it" AN9.3 paragraph 23, Day 103/92/16. The witness was later arrested and taken to Fort George with the other males in the house. He later made a complaint to the RUC, which can be found at AN9.21.

17.5.2.21 Otto Schlindwein AS.2 gave evidence to the Tribunal on Day 104. Mr Schlindwein was a chemist who ran a pharmacy in Creggan. He saw a body in the Rossville Flats car park. He said that he could "quite believe" it was Jackie Duddy AS2.6 paragraphs 11 to 12. Before the witness could run into the courtyard, a woman who he later learned was Anna Nelis outside 33 Chamberlain Street grabbed him and asked him to help Peggy Deery. When the witness entered her house he recognised Peggy Deery on the sofa and saw that she had:

"... a very bad bullet wound in her thigh and was bleeding profusely. I could see immediately that she had been shot, and from the way in which she was losing blood I feared for her life. I bound up her leg wound with a blanket and then told Mrs Nelis that Mrs Deery needed an ambulance as a matter of urgency." AS2.6 paragraph 15

Once Peggy Deery was placed in the ambulance the witness was arrested and later rifle butted by a soldier with a Scottish accent AS2.7 paragraph 21, Day 104/167/6.

17.5.2.22 Charles McMonagle AM367 gave oral evidence to the Tribunal on Day 102. He was a Volunteer in the Knights of Malta and was assaulted in the Rossville Flats waste ground. He walked south down Chamberlain Street during a lull in the shooting. He was then called into 33 Chamberlain Street and was asked to treat Peggy Deery whom he did not know at the time. Someone had already placed a towel over her wound. He bandaged Peggy's leg up as best he could but there was little he could do for her AM367.4 paragraph 25. The witness recollected that a number of persons were insistent in the house that there was a problem with Peggy's blood type if she needed a transfusion and that was something that he alerted the ambulance men to when they arrived Day 102/126/12 to Day 102/126/22.

17.5.2.23 Majella Doherty AD 182 gave oral evidence to the Tribunal on Day 184. She was also a Volunteer in the Knights of Malta and was dragged into 33 Chamberlain Street. She recalled that there was another First Aider present, who must be Charles McMonagle, though she is unclear whether he was there before or after she arrived. The witness is incorrect in her recollection that the wound was on Peggy's right leg but she recalls accurately the serious nature of her injury:

"To be truthful, the entire back of her leg was blown away. It was not a pretty sight and it might be because it was so shocking that I can't remember much else about the scene. Peggy Deery was a widow woman with about 14 children. I remember when I was attending to her she was much more worried about her children than she was about herself." AD182.5 paragraphs 13 to 15.

The witness goes on to relate how despite their best efforts, the Knights of Malta were unable to stop the bleeding and how she never thought she would "see such devastation to a human limb as the back of her leg" AD182.6 paragraph 17.

17.5.3.2 Mrs Deery underwent surgery on the evening of 30th January 1972. A medical report dated 21st February 1972 by Consultant Nephrologist Dr Mary McGeown of Belfast City Hospital recorded:

"I am informed there is no sign of healing of the shattered femur, and that the wound is grossly infected. As there is evidence of severe damage to the sciatic nerve it is thought that the leg may later have to be amputated." D1079

17.5.4 Removal to Hospital

17.5.4.1 After being medically treated by a local pharmacist Otto Schlindwein and Knights of Malta Charles McMonagle and Majella Cassidy (nee Coyle) at 33 Chamberlain Street she was taken out of the Nelis house shortly after 4.27pm and placed in an ambulance VRM 4491WZ along with Michael Bridge. The ambulance was manned by John Holmes (driver) and William Grey (attendant). It arrived at Altnagelvin Hospital at 4.50pm. ED48.8-9; D500.26, D500.27; D1037

17.5.5 Conclusions

17.5.5.1 We submit the following on behalf of the Family of Peggy Deery:

i. Given the evidence of the location, timing and firing of his SLR from the rear of the houses in Chamberlain Street, Private S, it is submitted is a prime contender for firing the bullet that struck Peggy Deery.

ii. Given the evidence of the location and firing of his SLR from the rear of the houses in Chamberlain Street, Lieutenant N, it is submitted is also a strong candidate for firing the bullet that struck Peggy Deery.

iii. Peggy Deery was not engaged in any unlawful activity when wounded apart from trying to move away from the Paratroopers who had debussed on the Rossville Street waste ground.

iv. There was no activity around her or in her vicinity which could provide any justification for her wounding.

v. She was wounded by a member of Mortar Platoon who has covered up his involvement in her attempted murder and provided a false account of his activities on Bloody Sunday in Sector 2 both in 1972 and to this Inquiry.

vi. The Mortar Platoon soldiers know that one of them wounded Peggy Deery and have engaged in a conspiracy of silence in respect of her wounding. That conspiracy of silence began in January 1972 and continues to the present day.

vii. The conduct of members of C Company 1 Para at 33 Chamberlain Street when presented with a seriously wounded woman was appallingly callous and should be condemned.

17.6.1 Personal Details and Background.

17.6.1.1 Jackie Duddy was 17 at the time of Bloody Sunday. At the time he was working as a weaver in a shirt factory. At the time of his death he had applied to join the Merchant Navy. His family believe he only sneaked out to go because so many others were going and he went for the fun of it. It was a big day out. He had no criminal record. He was a highly talented young boxer. He had won a number of titles and trophies at boxing and had fought in England. His family often wondered if he would have reached the Olympics or European Games, or what sort of career he would have had before he died. Like all the families the Duddy's were utterly devastated by his death.

17.6.2 Civilian evidence on the shooting of Jackie Duddy

17.6.2.1 Introduction

Jackie Duddy was shot as he was running in the car park of the Rossville Flats car park. He was running away from the direction of the soldiers who had de-bussed on the waste ground from Lieutenant N's Pig and Sergeant O's Pig at the mouth of the car park. He was shot from behind in the right upper shoulder and fell face down on to the car park. It is likely that he was shot between 4.10 pm and 4.15 pm when an ambulance was called at Altnagalvin Hospital. Jackie Duddy was carried by the group who had attended him including Father Daly across the Flats car park and up Chamberlain Street. He was taken from Waterloo Street by ambulance after 4.21 pm to Altnagalvin Hospital.

The shooting of Jackie Duddy

17.6.2.4 The Most Reverend Bishop Edward Daly, or Father Daly as he then was, having witnessed events at Barrier 14 moved down Rossville Street. At H5.16 in his statement to the Widgery Tribunal he stated that the first intimation he had that there would be any further trouble came when he heard two or three rifle shots that came from the direction of William Street. At this time he was in Rossville Street about midway along Kells Walk. Perhaps ten minutes after the first two or three shots rang out, he heard the sound of the engines of the Saracen armoured cars revving up. There was hardly any stoning or aggro at this time. The odd gas canister was being fired. The people in the Rossville Street area were mainly a peaceful crowd and standing around chatting like himself, prior to going home. He then headed, at the back of the crowd, down Rossville Street and towards the car park of the flats. At WT4.6 C he described running towards the courtyard of the flats. This took him more or less across the waste ground. He remembered looking back at one point. As they ran most of the crowd were looking back. The army came further than Eden Place which was unusual. Day 075/13/23 to Day 075/14/10. He thought he was towards the rear of the crowd. Day 075/14/18 to Day 075/14/23. He confirmed that EP28.4A was the sort of scene he remembered. Day 075/14/24 to Day 075/15/5. Also EP28.5. The crowd began to thin out as people made their way towards the alleyways leading out of the flats.

17.6.2.5 At WT4.6 D he described seeing a young boy running beside him. He gave very much the same description in his statement at H5.3 paragraph 15 and Day 075/18/10 to Day 075/18/20. He was about sixteen or seventeen. He believed he was running towards the rear of the crowd and he overtook him. The boy laughed at him, as he believed he was amused to see him running. Father Daly recognised him. He had seen him boxing once before in a youth club, but he could not have named him at that time. Father Daly overtook him at this point. The boy was running and looking back as he was himself and he thought everybody was. The young boy was about a few feet behind him and there was a shot, and simultaneously the boy gasped or grunted. He looked round and the boy just fell. This was the first shot he heard since the shots in Rossville Street. Day 075/22/6 to Day 075/22/10. At WT4.7 A Father Daly pointed out that the boy fell on the cross section of one of the car park space lines-he thought about the third or fourth one in. He was aware of a Saracen behind them and soldiers in the waste ground. Day 075/23/16 to Day 075/24/16. He not aware of rubber bullets being fired when Jack Duddy was shot. Day 075/24/20 to Day 075/25/4. At the time of the shooting people were interested in getting clear. At that time he did not see any form of hostile action against the army. Day 075/25/5 to 075/25/14

17.6.2.6 Father Daly had described in 1972 an incident where a man or a woman was struck by a Saracen. In his evidence to the current Inquiry, he was able to recall that it was somewhere round the back of the houses in Chamberlain Street but he could no longer recall if this was before or after Jackie Duddy was shot. Day 075/17/2 to Day 075/17/14.

17.6.2.7 At WT4.7 D, he confirmed that the boy was not carrying anything that he saw in his hand. He confirmed to Lord Widgery that he heard a shot at the time the boy was hit and he was convinced that shot came from behind somewhere from the area of the waste ground. The boy fell on his face. Father Daly ran on. He thought the shot was a bit sharp for that of a rubber bullet gun, but he could not take it in at all, that he had been hit by a live bullet. He ran on still looking back. He then heard a fusillade of gunfire and he dived. He tried to get cover behind a little wall.WT4.7 G and WT4.8 A.

17.6.2.8 He was referring to the wall that runs parallel to block 2 and confirmed it to have been the wall in P795. Day 075/27/7 to Day 075/27/9. He recalled a burst of gunfire which really caused terror and panic. The burst came from the area of the waste ground. Whether it came from the Saracen near the courtyard or further he did not know. Day 075/26/18 to Day

075/26/23. He remembered initially aiming for the gap between Blocks 1 and 2 but because of the number of people there ended up at the low wall marked on H5.74 At WT4.9 B and H5.4 paragraph 19 he described lying on the ground: "that is at the edge of Block 2 wall". This point was marked by the witness at H5.75. After a time he looked back over his shoulder and he saw the young boy that he had passed lying out in the car park. He was lying at this time on his back with his head towards the witness. He remembered distinctly that the boy fell on his face but when he saw him he appeared to have been turned over possibly by Mr.Barber who reached him first. He saw him on his back.

17.6.2.9 There was a lull in the firing at this time and he decided he should go out and attend the boy. He took a handkerchief from his pocket. He was not aware of any other bodies in the immediate area. He took a handkerchief from his pocket and waved it for a little time and then he got up to a crouched position and he went out to the boy and first of all knelt beside him. He had his handkerchief in his hand. There was blood oozing from his shirt, roughly he thought it was either just to the side inside the arm either on the right- or left-hand side. Then a young boy from the Knights of Malta who was Charles Glenn suddenly appeared on the other side of this boy. He tried to deal with this wound to staunch the flow of blood. He felt he should administer the last rites to the boy and he administered the last rites of his church to him. H5.4 paragraph 19.

17.6.2.10 There was gunfire which started at this point and both of them lay down flat beside the boy. His recollection of the direction of the gunfire was that it all came from the area in which the soldiers were. Day 075/30/6 to Day 075/30/10. In 1972 he had described the gunfire as something like 30-40 feet away and was very close to them. WT4.10 B. He was not conscious of any gunfire directed towards the army in the square of Rossville Flats and there was no gunfire. There was no threat posed to the army at the time they opened fire and he did not think there was any justification for it. Day 075/30/22 to Day 075/31/5.

17.6.2.11 It is not wholly clear from the accounts of civilian witnesses whether Jackie Duddy came into the car park from Rossville Street or from Chamberlain Street. At WT4.6 E, Father Daly stated that he himself overtook Jackie Duddy who was running and looking back: "As I was myself ... As we came in here", which is presumably into the mouth of the car park, "... he was running, he was a little bit behind me", Father Daly having come from the Kells Walk direction. However at this Inquiry he could not say where the boy had come from. Day 075/18/10 to Day 075/18/20. His brother Gerry Duddy AD146.3 paragraph 10 saw him crossing Rossville Street and walking in a south easterly direction then across the waste ground towards the Rossville flats a few minutes before he himself heard shooting and began to run south down Rossville street. Brian Johnston placed him running from the waste ground by Pilot Row into the Rossville Street Courtyard. Isobel Duffy at AD158.2 paragraph 12 stated that she saw him running in from "the entrance to the car park of Rossville Flats" and had stated in at WT5.7 B that it was from the direction of the Saracens. A number of witnesses placed him running from Chamberlain Street. Hugh Breslin believed that he must have come from Chamberlain Street. "From the direction he was lying it was the only direction he could have come from." Day 082/124/14 to Day 082/124/19. Mary Bonner at Day 082/52/17 to Day 082/52/22 said that she did not actually see him come out of Chamberlain Street but assumed he came from that area. She was one of a number of witnesses who expressed a belief that he must have come from Rossville Street or Chamberlain Street.[11]

17.6.2.12 There can be no doubt that Jackie Duddy was running in roughly the same direction as Father Daly across the courtyard of the car park initially at least towards the gap between Block 1 and 2 or possibly towards the low wall in front of Block 2 where Father Daly ended up. The understandable difficulty for witnesses given the pace of events and the undoubted fact of people running to both exits was shown by Patrick McDaid who thought Jackie Duddy had come from the western gable end of Chamberlain Street but accepted he could have come from the waste ground east of Rossville Street and was "running out that direction from around that side." Day 093/110/12 to Day 093/110/23.

17.6.2.13 Liam Bradley whose statement appears at AB61.1 is the man in the cap in the photograph EP26/12. As described in AB61.2 paragraphs 6 to 7 he ran down Chamberlain Street into the car park of the Rossville Flats and the first thing he saw was a boy lying in the car park. He was pretty much in the middle of the car park. He thought he must have been hit by a rubber bullet. He was not aware of any shooting at the time. If there was any, he thought he would have assumed it was rubber bullets. At AB61.2 paragraph 8 he stated that his immediate thought was to try and get across the car park and out through the alleyway between Blocks 1 or 2 of the Rossville flats. He ran in that direction directly towards where the boy lay. He was lying face down on his own with his head pointing south towards Block 2. He went towards him and turned him over and that was when he recognised him as Jackie Duddy. He knew Jackie because they were both amateur boxers. They used to train together. He was a dedicated young man who never took a drink. He was wearing a normal coat and trousers. The only distinctive thing he was wearing was a Pioneer pin on his coat. The pin was from the Total Abstinence Association and means that the wearer does not drink alcohol.

17.6.2.14 At AB61.2 paragraph 9 he described turning over Jackie Duddy and realising that he had been shot through the chest and that he was dead. He knelt down beside him and said the act of contrition in his ear. He was with him for a minute or two on his own. Father Daly arrived and started praying with him. Then Charles Glenn of the Knights of Malta arrived. At AB61.2 paragraph 16 the witness identified himself as the person wearing the cap and carrying Jackie Duddy in the photographs starting at

EP25.6. It was as he was bent over Jackie Duddy praying in his ear that he first became aware of the sound of shooting and of soldiers taking up positions on the waste ground at Pilot Row and Eden Place. He realised live ammunition was being fired. AB61.2 paragraph 10.

17.6.2.15 William McChrystal now deceased, made a statement in 1972 which can be found at AM460.1 He described coming into the courtyard of the flats and seeing Father Daly kneeling over the body of a fallen youth. He saw another man assisting and went to their aid. As he was kneeling the army fired over their heads and the bullets hit the back wall of the courtyard. When he arrived at the youth's side there was no evidence of any weapon, gun, nail-bomb or stone. They carried the youth up either Harvey Street to Waterloo Street. They laid him on an eiderdown supplied by Mrs. McCloskey. He was dead at this time. His name was Jackie Duddy.

17.6.2.16 Charles Glenn was the Knight of Malta who tended to Jackie Duddy. He made a NICRA statement at AG43.10 and his more recent statement is at AG43.1. At AG43.3 paragraph 21, Charles Glenn described a paratrooper jumping out of a vehicle and assaulting an old man. At AG43.3 paragraph 23 he stated that immediately after this (assault on the old man) he heard a shot being fired from what he thought was an SLR. He thought it was fired from the vicinity of Eden Place but he was not in the best position to confirm this. He did not see shots striking the ground at Pilot Row aimed at the soldiers. He then heard people calling to him. He was not sure whether this was before or after he got up from the ground. Once they saw him looking around the area, a group of people beckoned him over and he gathered that someone was down. He probably ran across the waste ground in a southwesterly direction to reach the group. He recalled passing a soldier standing by the north stairwell of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats, but he could not recall any other people in that area.

Kevin Leonard AL7.5 paragraph 10,

17.6.2.17 He thought that there were about three or four people kneeling or crouching beside the body of a young man. AG43.4 paragraph 26. He noticed that the casualty was lying on his back unconscious and had lost a lot of blood. He searched for the entry wound and saw that he had been shot in the left collarbone. He propped up the body on several occasions to try and find out if he could find the exit wound, which he found in the middle of his back. On examination he concluded that the wound was fatal and there was nothing he could do for him. He covered the wound with a bandage although by this stage the wound was not even bleeding. He thought that the youth had already died by the time he arrived at the scene, however he was not suitably qualified to make this assessment. He confirmed the body would have been turned more than once whilst he was there. Day 080/188/15 to Day 080/188/17. The people surrounding the man's body included Father Daly and people who he now knows as Liam Bradley, Hugh McMonagle and another person whom he did not know. He did not know but subsequently discovered that the boy was Jack Duddy. Day 080/192/2 to Day 080/192/9. He remembered the soldiers pointing their rifles and an impression of shots being fired at different elevations. Day 080/192/10 to Day 080/192/12. He remembered a number of army vehicles which had entered the area together .He recalled two volleys of shots from around the nearest armoured vehicle and that the weapons were pointed in the direction of the flat courtyard. Day 080/191/20 to Day 080/192/9.

17.6.2.18 Hugh McMonagle whose statement to the Inquiry appears at AM369.2 also gave oral evidence on day 100. The witness described running in the direction of Rossville Flats as the army came in. He saw Lieutenant N's Pig pull onto the waste ground and saw a number of army vehicles driving south down Rossville Street. He was running along a narrow path which was parallel to the back gardens of houses in Chamberlain Street. He did not look behind him. As he was running he heard live fire. There were no soldiers or vehicles in front of him. As he continued he went through a gap in the wire fence and ran into the car park. As he ran he saw a body in the car park which he later knew to be Jackie Duddy. The witness ran on and got behind the low wall in front of Block 2. As he lay there he could hear shots which seemed to be hitting Block 2 although it may have been that they were ricocheting round the car park. His impression at the time was that they must have been fired from the soldiers in the Pig at Eden Place. AM369.3 paragraphs 15 to 16. From his position he did not see any bottles or other items being thrown from the top of the flats. AM369.3 paragraph 18. He saw a priest around the body and he went over. He recognised the priest as Father Daly and saw Charlie Glenn, who was a Knight of Malta. He then witnessed events surrounding the shooting of Michael Bridge and accompanied him to 33 Chamberlain Street. When he emerged he turned left towards the car park and saw Father Daly with the group coming towards him. He joined the group at the end of Chamberlain Street and helped carry Jackie Duddy north up Chamberlain Street.

17.6.2.19 William Barber, now deceased, was interviewed by the Sunday Times in 1972 which can be found at AB9.1. At AB9.2 he recalled reaching the Chamberlain Street gable and was running. He described it as "confusing" but he was running and there was a young lad beside him running on his left. He just fell as in a "dead man's fall". He just toppled forward. He thought the lad must have been hit by a rubber bullet on the back of the head. He seemed to hit his face on the ground. When Mr. Barber looked down he saw a trickle of blood on the ground presumably from the front of his face. He thought it must be from where the lad had hit his nose. Mr. Barber and another boy picked him up to try to drag him along. He was awfully heavy so they turned him over. Blood gushed from his nose and mouth. They dropped him and his head hit the ground. Mr. Barber recalled thinking he must get the boy medical assistance. Father Daly came back from the flats towards them. The witness shouted up to two women in the flats and he also went towards the Chamberlain Street entrance. When he got back a bloke with a cloth cap was there tending to the boy and Father Daly was trying to clear everyone away to give the boy the last rites. Mr. Barber knew they were being fired at. He didn't think he heard a shot but heard people shout: "They're firing at us".

17.6.2.20 A clear body of evidence suggests that Jackie Duddy fell forward, after being shot, on to his face. The evidence of Father Daly, the witness Kevin McDaid at AM167.3 paragraph 13, William Terence McClements at AM108.2 paragraph 9, James McKinney at Day 081/99/18 to Day 081/100/4 and Martin Tucker at Day 098/89/12 to Day 098/89/15 confirm a picture consistent with the injuries found on the body of Jackie Duddy as having fallen forward on to his face. It is clear that the injuries visible in EP25.7 would be consistent with a forward fall.

17.6.2.21 In summary the following submissions arise out of the above evidence:

(i) Jackie Duddy was unarmed when he was shot.
(ii) He had nothing in his hands.
(iii) There was no object near him when he fell and no weapon or missile of any kind around him.
(iv) He was running away from the soldiers at the waste ground and the mouth of the car park.
(v) He was shot from behind by one of those soldiers as he fled.
(vi) No-one around Jackie Duddy was engaged in any threatening activity towards the soldiers.
(vii) The soldiers continued to fire into the car park as Jackie Duddy was being tended to by Father Daly and others.
(viii) There was no gunfire, nail bombs or any threat directed towards the soldiers from the car park.
(ix) There was no activity which could justify the shooting of Jackie Duddy.
(x) Jackie Duddy was murdered in the Rossville Flats car park by a soldier.

Movement of Jackie Duddy from the car park.

17.6.2.22 William Barber stated that Father Daly and he thought also himself had handkerchiefs out as they carried the body towards the Saracen and the nearest soldiers. The soldiers shot at them. Mr. Barber said a few choice words and they veered towards and down Chamberlain Street. Once they got round the corner of Harvey Street in what must have been Waterloo Street they laid the boy down there and Mr. Barber put his jacket under him. Other people put coats around him.

17.6.2.23 Father Daly described the discussion and decision to move Jackie Duddy to Harvey Street or Waterloo Street so as to have a better chance of getting an ambulance. H5.5 paragraph 23. After the interlude involving the gunman they got up on their knees and he waved a white handkerchief. There was a burst of gunfire and their group lay down again. Eventually the group got up and the body was carried up Chamberlain Street, right into Harvey Street and then into Waterloo Street where Mr Barber took off his coat and Jack Duddy's body was laid down on it. He appeared to be dead at that time. H5.6 paragraph 25.The position is marked as the letter J on H5.25.

17.6.2.24 The photographs P631 and P634 show Jackie Duddy being carried to Waterloo Street. At the corner of Chamberlain and Harvey Street the party met Mr Bierman and Mr Cave of the BBC and a patrol of soldiers and can be seen on the video footage at V1/0.5.13 to 0.5.24. A lady who lived in the vicinity, Mrs. McCloskey, called an ambulance. Father Daly waited for the ambulance.

17.6.2.25 Charles Glenn at AG43.4 paragraph 31 described moving cautiously with the young man's body in a northeast direction towards Chamberlain Street and then up to the junction of Harvey Street. He was concentrating on keeping the dressing in place. Liam Bradley recalled a being part of the group which carried Jackie Duddy out of the car park and north up Chamberlain Street. AB61.6 paragraph 12.

17.6.2.26 Hugh McMonagle identified himself in Video footage. V1/05.13 to 0.5.24. and AM369.5 paragraph 28. As they carried the body up Chamberlain Street he could hear shooting which he thought was coming from the North of Chamberlain Street and over their heads. He thought the shots were in front of him and definitely being fired in the street because of the echo on houses on either side of the street. The group carried Jackie Duddy up Harvey Street and laid him down on the ground. Mr. McMonagle went to find an ambulance and saw a policeman, an army officer and four soldiers on the wall at the side of Castle gate. He did not know which regiment they were from but he shouted to them to "get a fucking ambulance, as a wee boy has been shot." As he shouted the Officer, wearing kid gloves, began to slow handclap. Mr. McMonagle went to another Barrier across Waterloo Street and shouted at the soldiers there to get an ambulance. The soldier spoke into a radio and appeared to him to be pretending he knew nothing about what had happened. He grabbed across the barbed wire at the soldier and was struck by other soldiers with the muzzles of their rifles. He did not recall how long he was there but when he turned round everybody and Jackie Duddy's body had gone. The witness went down Harvey Street and was chased by soldiers who ran up from the Chamberlain Street end. AM369.6 paragraphs 30 to 32.

17.6.2.27 [This paragraph has been withdrawn at the request of Madden & Finucane on the grounds of duplication with paragraph 17.6.2.23. Paragraph number 17.6.2.27 is accordingly not used.]

Activity around Jackie Duddy

17.6.2.28 It is submitted that the civilian evidence establishes overwhelmingly that no person near Jackie Duddy was doing anything or carrying any item which could have justified shooting in his direction. Father Daly was clear that he saw no nail bombs explode at any time during the afternoon. H5.3 paragraph 12 and Day 075/57/19 to Day 075/58/3. Nor did he witness any hostile action either stone throwing or shooting against the army prior to them opening fire. He was clear that people were merely running for safety. Day 075/25/5 to Day 075/25/14. The first shot heard by Father Daly in this area was the shot which killed Jackie Duddy. H5.3 paragraph 12. As he was administering the last rites to Jackie Duddy the gunfire began again and heavy firing continued after the shooting of Michael Bridge and as they carried the body of Jackie Duddy across the car park. H5.6 paragraph 25. Father Daly was not aware of any gunfire directed towards the army from the car park or the flats. H5.4 paragraph 18. It is clear on our submission that not only was Jackie Duddy running away from the soldiers with his back towards them and was at all times a target moving away there is no civilian evidence whatsoever of anyone else around or near Jackie Duddy stopping to confront the soldiers or indeed of anyone stopped and confronting the army or having anything in their hand.

17.6.2.29 It should be noted that on Day 095/146/22 to Day 095/147/5 Mr. Glasgow QC when questioning the witness John McCrudden, who had acknowledged that he may have been mistaken in his suggestion that Jackie Duddy was a boy who may have had a bottle in his hand, stated the following: "...I think it is right you should know that neither I nor any of my colleagues has ever suggested that Jackie Duddy had a bottle".

17.6.2.30 Christy Lavery, at AL5.2 paragraph 9 stated that he was running into the Rossville Flats car park and came abreast of a young man whom he now knows to have been Jackie Duddy, whom at the time he did not know. Jackie Duddy was a few yards west and to the right perhaps one pace in front of the witness. The witness did not hear a shot, but saw a gush of blood coming out of the left-hand side of Jackie Duddy's chest. Day 085/72/7 to Day 085/72/14. He saw him crumple and fall to the ground landing on his face, with his head pointing towards the alleyway between Blocks 1 and 2 and his feet towards the waste ground. His arms were spread out at right angles to his body and he could see that he had a stone in his right hand. AL5.2 paragraphs 10 to 12 The witness described at AL5 paragraphs 11 to 12 how he called a Knight of Malta to help tend to Duddy, but he described this man as being a different Knight of Malta than the one shown in photograph at AL5.6. He also did not remember Jackie Duddy being attended to by Father Daly. When questioned by Mr. Lawson at Day 085/85/7 to Day 085/85/10 as to whether he was having difficulty recalling what he saw that day he answered that his recollection of the facts might be different now than to what he recalled then. He gave evidence at Day 085/72/15 to Day 085/72/19 and he described the size of the stone at as "pretty small about tennis ball size." When questioned further about the matter by Mr Lawson at Day 085/85/11 to Day 085/85/25 he indicated that it might have been smaller maybe a golf ball size or a large marble size. Even if this evidence were correct it is clear that at the time Jackie Duddy was shot he presented no threat to the soldiers whatsoever.

17.6.2.31 The witness Brian Johnston described taking Jackie Duddy by the right shoulder and raised his shoulder about two feet off the ground. He saw a huge amount of blood coming from the chest area and there appeared to be an open wound. The witness saw Duddy's right hand opening and inside there was a pebble the size of a bead. Day 084/108/14 to Day 084/108/19. He had thought about this since and believed the pebble had been scooped up into Duddy's hand as he fell. The witness did not believe he saw his left-hand which as it would have been under his body as he lifted him.

17.6.2.32 A large number of witnesses confirmed that Jackie Duddy had nothing in his hands when he was shot. Father Daly at H5.19 paragraph 14 lines 8-10, William McChrystal at AM460.1, Kathleen O'Donnell at AO23.3 paragraph 14, Brian Ward at AW6 paragraph 13, Kevin Leonard at AL.1 paragraph 13, Patrick Doherty at AD96.1 paragraph 16 and Isabel Duffy at AD158 paragraph 15 all confirmed that Jackie Duddy had nothing in his hands when he was shot.[12] Neither was anything found around his body .The evidence of Christy Lavery and Brian Johnston has be placed alongside this evidence and it is submitted that the overwhelming weight of the evidence is that Jackie Duddy had nothing in his hands when he was shot.

Direction of Jackie Duddy across the car park

17.6.2.33 As well as Father Daly a large number of witnesses placed Jackie Duddy at the time of the shooting running southwards in the car park of the Rossville Flats and running away from soldiers in the direction of the gap between Blocks 1 and 2 of the flats. The witness Joseph Eugene McGrory at AM268.2 paragraph 10 placed Jackie Duddy as running in the same direction as himself towards the gap between Block 1 and 2, as did Peter Gallagher at AG23.2 paragraph 11, Bernard Joseph Gilmore at AG38.4 paragraph 20, Martin Tucker at AT17 paragraph 21, Kevin McDaid at AM167.3 paragraph 14.[13] The evidence of Alexander McLaughlin at AM317 paragraph 12 and James McGeehan AM227 paragraphs 10 to 11 would appear to support this proposition. Mary Bonner at AB38.2 paragraphs 12 to 14 and Brian Ward at AW6.1 paragraph 13 placed Jackie Duddy running near or along-side Father Daly as he ran towards the low wall in front of Block 2.

Other civilian witnesses in the car park.[14]

17.6.2.34 Patrick Doherty at AD96.3 paragraph 16 stated that Jackie Duddy at the time he was shot was standing shouting at soldiers and was not running away. It can be noted that at Day 085/12/2 to Day 085/12/6 Counsel to the Inquiry asked what was Jackie Duddy doing at that point. The witness answered: "They were just standing, they were standing sideways facing the soldiers, shouting at them getting ready to run". In examination at Day 085/27/18 to Day 085/27/24 Mr Finnegan QC suggested to the witness that when he eventually got a clear sight of Jackie Duddy lying on his back it was that that led him to the conclusion that he must have been standing facing the soldiers when he was shot. The witness was asked could he have been mistaken about that, his answer was: "might have been it has been a long time ago". It is suggested that in regard to the witness Patrick Doherty the overwhelming body of evidence suggests that Jackie Duddy was running away from the soldiers and was not facing them when he was shot.

[12] See also Charles Glenn AG43.1 paragraph 33
[13] See also Patrick Harkin AH29.1 paragraph 13
[14] James McKinney at AM303 and Day 81/97/14 to Day 81/102/22 gave evidence which closely described the shooting of Jackie Duddy but his location of his fall was clearly wrong .The witness was not inflexible on this point at Day 81/102/14 to Day 81/102/21. The witness James Christopher McKnight also clearly described the shooting of Jackie Duddy but located the postion of his body wrongly. The scene in P360 brought back a recollection, Day 401/142/12 to Day 401/142/23. At AM312.17 he located two soldiers firing one at the south west gable end of Chamberlain Street below no. 36 and one south of Chamberlain Street in the car park.

17.6.2.35 Paul McDaid at AM173 paragraph 9 described running south down Chamberlain Street. He headed for the gaps between Blocks 1 and 2. As he did so he became aware of Jackie Duddy to his right running in the same direction as himself. There was nothing in his hands. Suddenly Jackie who was wearing a red polo neck jersey pitched forward and fell on his mouth and nose arms outstretched. He thought he had tripped and could not recall hearing shots.

17.6.2.36 Brian Ward at AW6 paragraphs 13 to 15 described running towards the wall in front of Block 2 of the Flats alongside him to his left. He noticed a lot of other young fellows running in the same direction at the same time. He heard a shot and noticed a young fellow to his left hit. He believed Jackie Duddy had been running to his left and Father Daly was between them although slightly behind them. He knew the boy was seriously injured because he fell and made no effort to break his fall. He had nothing in his hands.

17.6.2.37 Brian Johnston at AJ9.5 paragraphs 18 to 23 was running into the courtyard of Rossville Flats heading towards the alleyway between Blocks 2 and 3. He heard gunfire from behind him. There was a short volley of shots. He thought he heard two or three shots before he saw, out of the corner of his eye, a lad fall face forward to the ground. The lad who he now knows was Jackie Duddy had been running at the tail end of a small group. He had become isolated and fallen a little behind. The witness remembered seeing the black gaberdine of the priest flapping as he was running a couple of yards ahead of the lad. He now knows the priest to be Father Daly. He knew the shots were high velocity rounds from their high pitched distinctive crack. They were the first shots he heard that day. He then went over to tend to him.

17.6.2.38 Peter Gallagher whose statement appeared at AG23.3, was one of the rioters at Barrier 14. He ran into Chamberlain Street and into the courtyard of the Rossville flats towards the exit between Blocks 1 and 2. He said that he heard a high velocity shot and saw Duddy about twenty feet away from him fall at a point D at AG23.8. He says that everyone had been running behind Duddy and then stopped and ran back to the gable end wall on the western side of Chamberlain Street, that is below number 36. He saw Father Daly give Jack Duddy the last rites. There was continuous firing from all around him.

17.6.2.39 James Donal Deeny ran south across the car park to the point marked, but did not remember aiming for anywhere in particular. Day 086/138/1 to Day 086/138/25.

17.6.2.40 A boy, who he now knows to be Jackie Duddy, was running slightly in front of him and to his right. Jackie Duddy wore dark lightly clad clothing and was in the same bunch of people as the witness. He was about a yard or two away from him and they were both facing south. He thought that they may have both ran past a soldier as they ran through the car park from the entranceway. The witness then saw Duddy shot almost in front of him. He fell over immediately on to his face and his head was pointing to Block 2 and his feet to the entrance of the car park. Day 086/87/1 to Day 086/87/20. He stopped up short; as if he had not he would have tripped over him. The witness does not recall hearing the shot that hit Duddy. He stopped and looked at him for 5 or 10 seconds. There was blood was coming out of his chest area. The witness cannot recall hearing any shots before Duddy was shot. There was what seemed to be a lull between Duddy being shot and the people in the car park starting to flee. The witness knew that Jackie Duddy was dead or about to die. Day 086/142/6 to Day 086/142/9. In AD26.4 paragraph 16 he stated that Bridge made a run for the soldier who he thought had probably shot Jackie Duddy at point G on the attached plan, AD26.9 Day 086/87/21 to Day 086/87/25. This was the northeastern corner of Block 1 of the Rossville flats.

17.6.2.41 Sean Eugene O'Neill whose statement appears at AO65.1 is not being called to give oral evidence to the Inquiry. It is submitted that the Inquiry ought to treat the evidence of this witness with the utmost caution. If his evidence of events in Sector 2 as a whole and later events at the Rubble Barricade is taken as a whole we would adopt the observation of Christopher Clarke QC on Day 24 of his opening statement concerning this witness's "fleetness of foot". His ability to have witnessed almost all the major incidents in these areas is remarkable and highly improbable. His description of Jackie Duddy as a regular rioter is utterly false. It is not borne out by the personal background information, or the weight of the civilian evidence.

17.6.2.42 Noel Doherty at AD91.3 paragraph 18 described turning in the run to the direction of the alleyway between Blocks 1 and 2 of the Rossville Flats. However, he could see that this exit was congested. The witness estimated that about 150 people were trying to get into that alleyway and the entrance door into Block 1 of the Rossville flats. He decided to head for the alleyway between Blocks 2 and 3 of the flats as this did not seem to be as congested. At AD91.3 paragraph 20 he referred to beginning to run.

17.6.2.43 However, at this point he saw a soldier standing on the corner of Block 1 of the Rossville flats at the point marked 4 on the attached map at AD91.8. This soldier was leaning against Block 1 but did not seem to me to be taking shelter. He was holding up his rifle just under his armpit and aiming through his sights. The soldier was firing shots in a diagonal line in the direction of the alleyway running between Blocks 2 and 3. He saw his rifle jerk up but did not see any smoke or flashes coming from the rifle. He then heard about five or six shots go past him. He carried on running in the direction of the alleyway between Blocks 2 and 3 of the Rossville flats, glancing over his shoulder as he ran. He could just about see Army vehicles towards the Rossville Street end of the courtyard in the approximate positions marked 5 and 6 at AD91.8. He could not recall how many or what type of vehicles they were. As he was running to make his escape, he noticed a young man had fallen to the right of him. Although he did not know who he was at the time, he now believed that this young man was Jackie Duddy. At the time he thought he had tripped, as he had fallen in the middle of the courtyard. He did not realise that he had been shot. He did not stop but carried on running, trying to keep his body as low as possible. When he got to the low wall (about three feet or so high), which was a few feet north of Block 2 of the Rossville flats, he jumped over and got down behind it.

Witnesses present in the Rossville flats who saw the shooting.

17.6.2.44 Mary Bonner gave evidence to the Widgery Inquiry at WT5.38. She lived at 34 Garvan Place on the second floor of Block 2 of the Rossville flats and was viewing events from the veranda looking out onto the car park towards Chamberlain Street. At AB38.1 paragraph 7 she stated that her first recollection was seeing a crowd of screaming people running down Chamberlain Street towards the car park. She believed that there were also people running down Rossville Street but she was really concentrating on Chamberlain Street. She could hear a lot of banging which sounded like rubber bullets and also the helicopter overhead. Day 082/47/1 to Day 082/47/5. Almost at the same time as the crowd were running into the car park two Saracen armoured cars arrived in the car park. They had been travelling at speed and she could hear the sound of their engines. The noise of their engines made her focus on the Saracens. She was not exactly sure where they came from.

17.6.2.45 She first saw them as they arrived in the car park. One Saracen, which was possibly the first to arrive, pulled up at the side of the stairs at the northern gable end of Block 1. Its back door was open facing the car park. The other seemed to be more or less behind it, but she could not be specific other than it was on the waste ground. She could not describe the position of this one in detail and was unsure which way it was pointing. Day 082/49/22 to Day 082/50/8. The witness saw two soldiers jump out of the back of the first Saracen, the one parked just by Block 1. One soldier knelt on one knee holding his rifle in an aiming position, the other jumped out from behind him and seemed to fire his gun immediately. He didn't seem to aim it but fired it from waist height. They did not move from those positions and stayed close to the back door of the Saracen. Day 082/51/1 to Day 082/52/4. As she looked down the car park had virtually cleared but there were still some people running towards the low wall, which runs parallel to Block 2 and just in front of the rear entrances to the shops. Many people were lying or hiding behind that low wall, but the witness could not give precise numbers. There were still a few people running for cover.

17.6.2.46 She saw a young man, who she now knows to have been Jackie Duddy, running possibly from the direction of Chamberlain Street. The witness believed he was the last person running for cover and she assumed that he was running from the direction of Chamberlain Street. He was making towards the low wall. Day 082/52/5 to Day 082/53/14. She could see Father Daly run past him. She did not know where Father Daly came from. The witness saw Jackie Duddy turn his face slightly to the left as if he was looking behind or to the side of him. She heard a bang and he went down face first on to the car park. Day 082/53/21 to Day 082/54/1. He fell approximately at the end of the middle set of white car parking lines. AB38.6. Jackie Duddy was heading for the low wall and running more or less straight towards her. Father Daly and a couple of other people who had been with him ran behind the wall. She could not tell where the shot that hit Jackie Duddy came from but connected it in her mind with the soldier that she saw shoot his gun when he got out of the back of the Saracen. The two events were instantaneous. Day 082/54/9 to Day 082/54/14.

17.6.2.47 She shouted down to the people hiding behind the low wall "that young fella's been hit by a rubber bullet", which was what she thought at the time. Father Daly crawled out towards Jackie Duddy who was lying face down. He knelt on Jackie Duddy's right (to the left as she looked) and turned him face up. Day 082/55/1 to Day 082/55/10. She could see that Jackie Duddy had blood on his shirt and could see that he tried to lift his head. As Father Daly was cradling Jackie Duddy's head she then heard two shots and Jackie Duddy seemed to jerk and then was still. The witness did not know where those shots came from or whether they hit. They sounded the same as the first shot that she had heard. She could not see any other civilians in the car park, her attention was focused on Jackie Duddy and Father Daly. She then witnessed the shooting of Michael Bridge.

17.6.2.48 She placed Jackie Duddy as falling approximately at the southern end of the middle set of white car parking lines the spot having been marked at AB38.6. It is a little further over to the east from the place at which the photographs show Jackie Duddy to have fallen.

17.6.2.49 Isabel Duffy gave evidence to the Widgery Inquiry at WT5.53 D and to this Inquiry at AD158. At AD158.2 paragraph 12 she stated that whilst at her brothers flat, which was two to three doors into Block 2 from Block 1, she looked down into the car park and saw a young boy running in from the entrance. The boy seemed to be running towards the Bog entrance as it was known, which was the alleyway between Blocks 1 and 2. She recognised him as Jackie Duddy but did not know him personally. The witness was a member of the amateur boxing Board of Control at the time and knew him to be a young boxer. The witness focused in on him and he seemed to me to be at the tail end of the people who had run down William Street towards the Rossville flats. The witness could not recall seeing anyone else around. AD158.2 paragraphs 11 to 13.

17.6.2.50 At about the same time, she noticed two soldiers, both on one knee, by the northern gable end of block 1 of the Rossville flats. The position is marked as "3" on AD158.7. She could not recall whether or not they were wearing any masks or visors or of any sort. Both were kneeling fairly close to the wall. The soldiers were holding their rifles against their waists. She could not recall whether either of the soldiers had their right or left-hand on the trigger. The witness could recall that whichever hand was not on the trigger was being used to support the barrel of the rifle and that hand was steadied by the soldier leaning his elbow on the knee that was not in contact with the ground. As she looked back and forth from Jackie Duddy to the soldiers a shot rang out, she believed from the two soldiers she was looking at. At the time she thought it was a rubber bullet as it was too early in the troubles for her to distinguish between various types of bullet. AD158.3 paragraphs 14 to 15. Her account of 23 February 1972 at AD158.8, has her coming out of her brother's flat and seeing one of the soldiers get down on his knee and point a rifle, having jumped out of the Saracen, and fire two shots, the second of which she believed killed Jack Duddy. This account was consistent with her evidence to Widgery at WT5.53 C-D.

17.6.2.51 Jackie Duddy continued to run. He had reached as far as the about the third garage away from the southern end of Block 2 when a second shot rang out and he pitched forward, his arms outstretched and his hands open and he fell on his face. He fell in the position marked 5 on AD158.7 and his head was nearest to her with his feet towards the entrance to the car park. His legs were splayed out. He was not carrying anything in his hands or in his arms when he fell. After he fell the witness could see blood spreading down his back, from the top of his back towards his hips. At the time she did not see anybody else in the car park or around Jackie Duddy. To her the car park seemed to be empty. There could have been people sheltering close against the wall in front of Block 2 but she would not have been able to see them from where she was standing. AD158.3 paragraphs 15 to 16.

17.6.2.52 Cathleen O'Donnell was 16 or 17 at the time and lived with her family at 57 Donagh Place on the eighth floor of Block 3. At AO23 paragraph 8 she described attempting to get to her flat after going on the march. On the top walkway of Block 2 she was stopped by a man who was lying down on his tummy and overlooking the car park. She could still hear shooting but did not know where it was coming from. He shouted at her to lie down 'they are shooting they can see you'. She went straight down on to her hands and knees and began to crawl along the top balcony of Block 2 on her mouth and nose. Day 082/101/19 to Day 082/102/4. She was terrified because she could hear shooting and did not know where it was coming from or what the people shooting were aiming at.

17.6.2.53 Whilst the witness was crawling along she was looking out to her left across the Rossville flats car park. She had a clear view from the balcony. There were railings that went from the floor of the balcony to approximately chest height and she could put her feet through the gaps and she could see through them clearly. As she was looking through the railings and crawling along she saw some soldiers running across the waste ground behind the Chamberlain Street houses but did not pay much attention to these soldiers. She also saw one Saracen which had stopped near Pilot's Row on the waste ground. Day 082/102/7 to Day 082/102/25. She could see some people running into the car park from Chamberlain Street. She agreed that what she saw gave the appearance of people trying to get away through the alleyway between Blocks 1 and 2 and Blocks 2 and 3. Day 082/103/23 to Day 082/104/4.

17.6.2.54 Two soldiers caught her attention. She did not know where they came from, whether they ran across the waste ground or whether they came from the Saracen, but she did not see them come out of the Saracen. They were standing at points 1 and 2 marked on the map at AO23.11. Points 1 and 2 are on the northeast corner of Block 1 of the Rossville flats. A black soldier was holding a large gun from his waist and was shooting it around the car park at waist height and up in the air. We know there was no black soldier in Mortar Platoon but the witness believed that he appeared to be aiming his rifle at nothing in particular. He appeared to be aiming at nothing in particular. He was shouting - she could hear the echo of his voice. The soldier kneeling was shooting from his shoulder, again in no particular direction, just all around the car park. AO23.2 paragraph 11, Day 082/105/9 to Day 082/106/7.

17.6.2.55 At that time there were not many crowds in the car park. There were some people running, trying to hide. People were disappearing as the soldiers were shooting. Her attention was focused on the two soldiers, as she did not know what they were shooting for and did not hear anything being shot at them. AO23.2 paragraph 12.

17.6.2.56 The witness then noticed a young boy run across the car park from the point marked 3 on AO23.11 and at the points marked 3 on photographs AO23.9 and AO23.10. At AO23.3 paragraph 14 she described the boy running across the car park in front of the garages underneath Block 1, side along to her. He was the only person there at the time and she was unsure where he came from. She believed he was running towards the gap between Blocks 1 and 2 of the flats. He looked happy. He had long dark hair and was wearing a dark coat with big lapels. He had nothing in his hands. She remembered at one stage he looked around and then ran on. The witness did not believe that he saw the soldiers and people were shouting at him to lie down. Suddenly she saw his arms go up above his head in a "v" shape and he fell flat to the ground. She did not remember if he fell on to his back or his tummy. At that time it did not register with her that he had been shot. The witness then saw blood running out from underneath him and she knew then that he had been shot. He was shot at the point marked 4 on AO23.11. She connected the shooting to the two soldiers she had seen at the northeast corner of Block 1. Day 082/110/13 to Day 082/110/25. When her father threw her into the flat there was still shooting going on. AO23.3 paragraph 17. The last thing she remembered is seeing the young lad on the ground with lots of blood everywhere and a man with no hair near him with a white flag. This was Father Daly. She later learned the boy was Jackie Duddy. AO23.3 paragraphs 15 to 16.

17.6.2.57 The late Derrick Tucker, who lived at 31 Garvan Place in Block 2 of Rossville flats, had served three years in the Royal Navy and thirteen years in the Royal Air Force. On the day itself he saw from the veranda outside his flat people in Rossville Street and Chamberlain Street suddenly start to run and saw the approach of the convoy of armoured vehicles. WT7.9 A-B. The scene is as depicted in his photograph at EP28.5. Two Saracens turned into the car park of the Flats from Rossville Street. In doing so they drove through the crowd and the first Saracen knocked down one man, sending him spinning away. The Saracens stopped and soldiers deployed from the back of them. Immediately the Saracens stopped the soldiers got out. One soldier ran to the front nearside wheel and took up a firing position. Another ran to the backs of the Chamberlain Street houses and started pushing people with his rifle held in a port position. AT16.1. He described at WT7.14 B how another soldier from the leading Saracen took up a firing position on the offside of the vehicle. This soldier raised his rifle and started firing towards the landings of the flats. The witness estimated that there was thirty seconds to a couple of minutes between the soldiers getting out of the Saracens and their commencing fire. WT7.14 C. Up to that point the only firing he had heard was of gas canisters and rubber bullets at the junction of William Street and Rossville Street. The soldier at the nearside front wheel of the Saracen started firing and he saw a man fall to the ground. That man turned out to be Jackie Duddy. WT7.9 C. He described himself as being 30 yards at least from Jackie Duddy. WT7.14. He saw Father Daly going to his assistance. WT7.14 D.

17.6.2.58 On the evidence of the soldiers, the person who would appear to have been in that position was Sergeant O. The witness described two further shootings in the car park. At no time did he see any of the above mentioned men with weapons of any sort in their hands. WT7.14 C.

17.6.2.59 Martin Tucker, the elder of the two sons of Derrick Tucker Senior who were present in 31 Garvan Place that day, stated at AT17.3 paragraph 17 that two Saracens stopped just in front of garages at the point marked D on the map attached to his statement at AT17.16. It was positioned about a third to a half of the way down Block 1 and to the east of block 1, slightly further down than the photograph of the Pig number 2 would appear to suggest. At AT17.3 paragraph 17 the witness stated that two soldiers got out of the back of one of the vehicles, which was very unusual. The two soldiers came round to the front of the vehicle fairly quickly. Other soldiers may have got out but he only saw those two clearly.

17.6.2.60 At that time, the rest of the crowd was generally scattering and getting out of the way. Some people were heading for the stairway at the north end of Block 1. Most were going for the alleyways between Blocks 1 and 2 and Blocks 2 and 3. The two soldiers were wearing khaki uniforms and helmets. The witness did not notice anything distincti ve about them as they moved to the front of the vehicle. One stood by the offside door (i.e. the passenger door Day 098/87/16 to Day 098/87/19) at the front of the vehicle. He was not sure if the other one went round to the other side of the vehicle, but his recollection was that they were both quite close together. He had an image of the one that moved closest to Block 1 leaning on the front of the Saracen and he did not see them taking cover in any way.

17.6.2.61 Within seconds, one or both opened fire. They were high velocity shots and were the first shots he had heard that day. The witness recalled that both soldiers were shooting but he could not be 100 per cent certain. He stated that one of them definitely was. People were still running away and the crowd were starting to thin. He saw the soldier who was by the offside door, aiming his rifle from the shoulder. Day 098/88/10 to Day 098/88/15.

17.6.2.62 He then heard a crack and saw a man, who he now knows to have been Jackie Duddy, fall at the point marked E on the map AT17.16 attached. At first he could not really believe he had been shot and was trying to make sense of it. However, from the reaction of the people around him, the witness then knew that he had been shot. He had been running side on to the soldier when he was shot. The witness confirmed that he was neither directly facing the soldier or had his back directly to the soldier. Day 098/89/21 to Day 098/90/8. He seemed to be running for the exit between Blocks 1 and 2. AT17.4 paragraph 21. At the time he was shot there would have been about half a dozen or so people closest to him who perhaps realised what had happened. Day 098/92/6 to Day 098/92/11. The next thing the witness saw was his parish priest, Father Daly, as he was then, by the side of Jackie Duddy. A small crowd of maybe half a dozen had gathered around them. And when they later started taking Jackie Duddy out of the car park, he recognised one of those people as Willie Barber. Day 098/92/21 to Day 098/92/24.

17.6.2.63 The witness then described the shooting of Michael Bridge In those first few minutes when Jackie Duddy and Mickey Bridge were shot, he recalls there were maybe half a dozen or ten shots. He thought all these shots were from the two soldiers he had seen. The witness described the interval between the shooting of Jackie Duddy and Mickey Bridge as "a few minutes at most." Day 098/135/20 to Day 098/136/15.

17.6.2.64 Derrik Tucker Junior was aged 12 at the time of Bloody Sunday. He recalled large numbers of people trying to out of the Courtyard from the alleyway between Blocks 2 and 3 but also recalled there were more people concentrated around the exit between Blocks 1 and 2. AT15.3 paragraph 16. At AT15.3 paragraph 18, he described about five or six Saracens, one of which turned eastwards off Rossville Street and came on to the waste ground. The witness recognised this as the scene in EP28.4A. Day 099/5/20 to Day 099/6/2 When the Saracens came in there were hundreds, possibly thousands of people in the area of waste ground around Eden Place and Pilot's Row. AT15.3 paragraph 19.

17.6.2.65 The Saracen which had come onto the waste ground looped behind an abandoned van and then disappeared out of view. He recalled another Saracen that stopped at the gable end of Block 1 of the flats. From where he sat he could just see the bonnet of the vehicle. He identified the front of this vehicle as visible in EP28. 5 at Day 099/7/13 to Day 099/7/25. He saw a Saracen parked at about the point B marked on AT15.21 which is clearly some distance further into the car park than any other witness civilian or military has placed a military vehicle. He accepted at Day 099/10/1 to Day 099/11/2 that this was possibly the same vehicle as had appeared at the gable end of Block 1. He further accepted it was the Saracen which appears in P188 which we know to be Sgt O's Pig. Day 099/13/3 to Day 099/13/7.

17.6.2.66 At AT15.3 paragraphs 21 to 22 he described how he also saw a soldier get out from the rear of the Saracen that he marked with the letter B. He took up a position some four to five feet from the Saracen. He did not take cover. He immediately started shooting in the direction of Blocks 1 and 2, where people at the alleyway were trying to get out of the courtyard. The witness was unable to remember how many shots were fired and did not know whether anyone was hit as a result. Large numbers of people were able to escape through the alleyways between Blocks 1 and 2 and Blocks 2 and 3. As the crowds cleared he saw a group of people by a body lying on the ground. He marked the approximate position of the body with the letter C on AT15.21. He could see that Father Daly, who was a parish priest, was one of the group around the body, but he did not recognise anyone else. The soldiers were still in the courtyard at the time. The witness was shown EP28.5 and it was his view that the person he saw fall must have been in that photograph rather than come into the car park later. Later he heard that the boy whom he had seen on the ground was Jackie Duddy. He then went on to describe the shooting of Mickey Bridge. He thought that it was something in the order of 20 minutes between the Saracens entering the courtyard and the shooting of Mickey Bridge. Day 099/15/17 to Day 099/15/23.

17.6.2.67 Betty Dunleavey at AD169.2 paragraph 8 described a soldier kneeling down on one knee at the point marked C on the attached map at AD169.4. She could not remember anything distinctive about his uniform although she could tell he was a soldier. He had a helmet on and was holding a rifle in his hands. She saw him shoot a boy, whose position was marked D on AD169.4. She did not know from where the boy appeared, although she believed he was running towards the entrance to the Rossville flats' car park. The witness now knows this boy to have been Jackie Duddy.

17.6.2.68 The soldier kneeling at point C was kneeling just to the west of No. 34 Chamberlain Street and the boy at point D was about a third of the way down Block 1 and about ten yards or so out to the east. At AD169.4 paragraph 9, she stated that the soldier must have had him right in his sights as he shot him. She could only see the top half of the boy's body from her position on the balcony. His body jumped when he was shot and he twirled around as he fell. She saw the body fall out of her line of sight, although she did not see it hit the ground. This was the first shot that she heard in the car park that day. She had heard earlier shots coming from the Rossville Street side of Block 1, although they did not seem to be of high velocity, unlike the shot fired at Jackie Duddy.

17.6.2.69 Dolores MacFarland watched events from her mother's flat on the second floor in Block 3 looking over the car park towards Block 1 and Rossville Street. She described at AM8.2 paragraph 8 the arrival of a Saracen at the entrance to the car park. She thought the two soldiers she saw first got out of this vehicle were the ones who opened fire from positions marked A and B on AM8.6 She accepted at Day 083/112/7 to Day 083/112/18 that she did not actually see these soldiers fire. One was positioned closer to the north east corner of Block 1 and the other closer to the rear of the houses in Chamberlain Street. These soldiers were not being evasive and none of the soldiers appeared to take cover. AM8.2 paragraph 9. At this time there were a couple of hundred people in the car park most of whom were fleeing and who were trying to get through the alleyway between Blocks 1 and 2, into the doorway to the stairwell at the northern entrance of Block 1 or through the alleyway between Blocks 1 and 2. AM8.2 paragraph 10. The shots from these soldiers was the first live fire she heard that day. At the same time as she heard the shots she saw a young lad she now knows to be Jackie Duddy fall to the ground. She thought initially he might have tripped. She saw Father Daly tending to him and a number of others gathered round him. AM8.2 paragraphs 11 to 12. She then witnessed the shooting of Michael Bridge and saw Jackie Duddy being carried towards and up Chamberlain Street. AM8.3 paragraphs 14 to 15.

Civilian evidence concerning firing by soldiers.

17.6.2.70 The witness Martin Tucker at AT17.4 paragraphs 24 to 27 suggested that the soldier or soldiers who shot Jackie Duddy and indeed Michael Bridge were on the western side of the pig parked at the mouth of the car park. The witness Mary Bonner in her statement at AB38.1 paragraph 15 and who gave evidence on Day 82 also believed that Jackie Duddy was shot by a soldier on the west side of a pig. Kevin McDaid believed it was a small soldier or a soldier crouched down on the passenger side of the Saracen parked with its front into the car park between the end wall of Chamberlain Street and Block 1 of the flats. AM167.3 paragraph 14 and Day 100/82/5 to Day 100/83/9. Cathleen O'Donnell whose statement appears at AO23.6 paragraph 11 and AO23.7 paragraph 14, who also gave evidence on Day 82 indicated that she saw a black soldier with long legs at Block 1 shooting at waist height whom she connected to the shooting. Isabel Duffy described at AD158.2 paragraph 14 evidence of a soldier firing from the north shooting Jackie Duddy in a position firing from north of Block 1. Noel Doherty also described at AD91.4 paragraphs 20 to 28 a soldier firing from the north of Block 1 shooting Jackie Duddy. The witness James Donal Deeney who gave evidence at Day 086/87/21 to Day 086/87/25 saw Michael Bridge make a run for the soldier who he thought had probably shot Duddy at a point north east corner of block 1. James McKinney whose statement appears at AM303 and who gave evidence at Day 081/99/2 to Day 081/100/18 indicated that he saw a soldier firing from the back of a pig at Eden Place. His impression was that the person fell forwards when he was shot as if about to hit the deck and he thought he was wearing a red jumper. The witness Betty Dunleavy whose statement appears at AD169.2 gave evidence on Day 83/130/4 to Day 083/131/3 that Jackie Duddy was shot by a soldier at the back of Chamberlain Street houses just to the west of 34 Chamberlain Street.

17.6.2.71 There is clearly a wide variety of civilian evidence as to the location of shooters and provenance of the shots into the car park of the flats. This is not altogether surprising given the circumstances of the day. The witnesses were watching events unfold at a very fast pace in an extremely short period of time. The variety of locations from which the shooting of Jackie Duddy inevitably affected the quality of the identification of individual soldiers. A number of the witnesses were of course either fleeing themselves under fire or sheltering from shooting from the soldiers at the mouth of the car park and on the waste ground. What there is absolutely no doubt about is that the civilian evidence establishes clearly that the shot which killed Jackie Duddy came from a limited number of soldiers firing into the car park. The soldiers who admitted firing into the car park positioned themselves in the general area from which the civilian witnesses say the firing came.

Conclusion

17.6.2.72 The essential consensus of the civilian evidence is that Jackie Duddy was shot running away from the soldiers positioned at the mouth of the car park and on the waste ground. He was not armed or engaged in any offensive activity towards the soldiers. He was running for shelter along with others towards the gap between Blocks 1 and 2 of the Rossville Flats when he was fired upon from the rear. It is clear that no activity around Jackie Duddy justified his shooting. It is further clear that no activity in the car park or the flats justified his shooting. The unjustified shooting continued as he was being tended to by a priest, a first-aider and civilians. Jackie Duddy was murdered by a soldier of Mortar Platoon.

17.6.3.1 The post mortem examination was carried out by Dr Carson at 4.00 pm. (E2.68) The report of Doctor Shepherd and Mr O'Callaghan appears at E2.31.32 with the accompanying diagram at E2.74. Photographs taken in the mortuary are in Bundle P2 at Tab 1 (P29 to P40) inclusive.

17.6.3.2 In summary, Jackie Duddy was struck by a single bullet which entered the outer side of the right shoulder. It passed through the right side of the chest, damaged the right lung, spine, major blood vessels and the left lung and then exited through the upper left side of the chest. The diagram at E2.74 is slightly misleading in that it indicates the entry wound on the front view of the body whereas it would appear from photographs P34 and P36 that the bullet entered slightly behind the midline, i.e. closer to the back of the shoulder than the front. He also suffered other minor injuries consistent with falling to the ground.

17.6.3.3 Assuming the Normal Anatomical Position, the initial track passed from right to left and there was probably a slight angle backward. After deflection by the scapula, the track passed forwards into the chest where it was again deflected, this time by the spine, before exiting.

17.6.3.4 As Dr. Shepherd and Mr O'Callaghan point out, great care must be exercised in interpreting the track angles in this injury since the mobility of the shoulder may allow for many different positions of the chest and body with the arm in the same position. However, the medical evidence is consistent with the civilian evidence that Jackie Duddy was shot by a soldier to his right as he ran towards the gap between Blocks 1 and 2, perhaps turning to look over his right shoulder at the soldiers as he did so. His injuries do not correspond with any of the accounts of the soldiers who admit firing into the Rossville Flats courtyard or indeed of any other soldier who witnessed the events.

17.6.4 Forensic Evidence

17.6.4.1 Swabs were taken from Jackie Duddy's hands and clothes for the purpose of forensic examination. Summarised in Table 2 of Dr Lloyd's report at E1.30 are the totals of the numbers of particles recorded by Dr Martin from the hands and surfaces of the outer garments of all the deceased together with the conclusions of his reports. In Jackie Duddy's case, the results were negative. There was, therefore, no forensic evidence supporting any suggestion that he was engaged in any unlawful activity about the time he was shot.

17.7 Patrick McDaid – Personal Details and Background

17.7.1 Patrick McDaid was 24 years old at the time of Bloody Sunday. He was a single man from the Creggan area of Derry and was employed as a Plumber by the Londonderry Development Commission. He attended civil rights marches regularly and joined the march on 30 January at Bishop's Field.

17.7.3 Civilian Evidence

17.7.3.1 Patrick McDaid was the fourth person known to have been wounded in the car park of the Rossville flats. In his statement at AM172.1 he described helping others carry Peggy Deery to the house at the corner of Chamberlain Street which was number 33. It would appear that he was the last person wounded in this sector. He also appears to have seen the shooting of Jackie Duddy. Day 092/109/7 to Day 092/109/17 and Day 092/110/8 to Day 092/110/11.

17.7.3.2 At AM172.2 paragraph 11 he described coming out of the house, and looking around. He could only see a few people standing around in Chamberlain Street and he could not see any help. He stood at the southern end of Chamberlain Street, where it led into the Rossville Flats car park. He was going to run across the car park, to the entrance between blocks 1 and 2. As he looked around he could see people standing about alongside the western gable end wall of Chamberlain Street. He then described the shooting of a young man who must have been Jackie Duddy.

17.7.3.3 At AM172.2 paragraph 12 he described standing at a point at the very south of Chamberlain Street. There were about 20 or 30 people around him although he did not specifically remember any of them. All he could recall is that everyone wanted to get out of that area. He and some other people moved to his left, that is eastwards to the far eastern corner of the car park. At this point there was a corner, formed by the junction of the eastern end of Chamberlain Street and a high wall to the car park side of block 3 of the Rossville Flats. There was nothing going on in that corner of the car park and he never really noticed anything else happening around him.

17.7.3.4 The solid concrete wall on the car park side of block 3 was too high for them to get up. He realised that if they wanted to get out of the car park, they would have to run across it to the gap between blocks 2 and 3. Three or four other people around him ran across the car park and made it to the gap between blocks 2 and 3. He decided that he was not going to stay where he was because it would have been very easy for them to get caught by the Army although he had not seen any soldier at this stage. He therefore got down on his hands and knees ready to creep or crawl across the car park. However he then changed his mind as he thought that a running target would be more difficult to hit. Therefore, before he had moved from his position he stood up again and got ready to run.

17.7.3.5 He could still hear shots as this was going on, but he could not recall where they were coming from. He had just started to run out from the wall and had got about two yards when another man also decided to make a run for it and he ran past his left-hand side. The other man was carrying a camera by its strap in his right hand, which, as he ran, he dropped. Patrick McDaid could not believe that the man stopped and turned to pick it up before carrying on heading for the gap between blocks 2 and 3. Seeing the man do this made Patrick McDaid again stop and hesitate before running out. The man with the camera was likely to have been Giles Peres.

17.7.3.6 From his position Patrick McDaid could see the people who had run across to the gap between blocks 2 and 3. The people were yelling to come on and make a run for it. He did not recognise or know any of the people who had run across. He just wanted to get out. He therefore ran out from his position and headed for the gap between blocks 2 and 3. As he ran he had nothing in his hands. The approximate position of his run is marked by a dotted line on the map at AM172.26.

17.7.3.7 He saw a low wall in front of him which looked as if it might provide him with cover. As he was running he saw the wall and bent down to dive over the wall. He landed on the ground the other side of the wall. He did not realise then but later discovered that the wall had steps around it and the ground on which he had landed was lower than the level of the car park he had run along. As he hit the ground, someone else landed behind him, slightly to his left-hand side. This person said to Patrick McDaid "I think you are shot in the back." Patrick McDaid said no they have missed. He did not feel as though he had been shot. The man then put his hands on his back and showed him his blood on his hand. He panicked. Fear went through him. He did not know how badly he was hit, particularly because the wound was on his back and he could not see it. He believed he was hit at the exact time when he bent from upright position to dive over the wall.

17.7.3.8 He indicated that he believed he was able to identify himself in EP25.7 as the person lying prone on the ground on the right hand side in the group of people shown. He also believed from what he was told later that the man behind him was Patrick Walsh. Day 092/117/1 to Day 092/117/24. He wanted to change direction and run for the gap between blocks 1 and 2 of the Rossville Flats. However, the man with him held him back and said 'no'. He did not even look at the man with him, as he was slightly behind him. The man then sort of pushed him from behind or half ran with him through the gap between blocks 2 and 3. He could not really remember how he got through the gap between blocks 2 and 3 because the only thing that was going through his mind at this stage was wondering how badly he had been hit.

17.7.3.9 The man pushed him into the first house of the northern block of Joseph Place. It can be noted that at AM172.5 paragraph 26, Patrick McDaid referred to his previous statement of 7th February 1972, in which he indicated that he was carried to the second or third house in the northern block of Joseph Place. He stated that that could have been the position but he believed it was the first. Patrick McDaid confirmed that he appeared being treated in P760, P761 and P762.

17.7.3.10 John Joseph Tyre whose statement is at AT20.3 described running across the corner of the car park against the high wall after having seen Peggy

Deery and Michael Bridge. He did not see any Saracens or soldiers. There were about six fellas huddled on their knees in the corner (at point Z attachment 2) at AT20.6 on the north-east corner of the car park. They were all down on their hunkers watching out over the car park. The wall behind them was about ten feet high. He crouched with his shoulder against the wall. He could hear shooting which he thought was coming towards the Rossville Flats. It was the same cracks he had heard before. He could not hear any other noise. He did not see any missiles being thrown from the flats.

17.7.3.11 One or two fellows decided they would crawl along the side of the wall towards the gap between blocks 2 and 3. He did not know their names. They crawled on their hands and knees and were sometimes down flat. After they were out of sight another fella and himself set off to crawl towards the gap. He thought he had been crouching at the wall for some minutes. He did not know the lad in front of him but he would now guess it was Patrick McDaid. Day 093/163/18 to Day 093/163/22.

17.7.3.12 The boy crawled along on his hands and knees and the witness did the same. They crawled very close to the wall about a foot apart. If they heard a succession of cracks then the boy in front would lie down flat. He was wearing dark clothes, a dark jacket like a suit jacket and trousers. He had black hair, around collar length. He was a bit older than the witness, about eighteen or nineteen. They sometimes would have crawled on their hands and knees and sometimes would have tried to run a bit on their hunkers. Day 093/163/23 to Day 093/164/5. They got to the top of the couple of steps near to the children's play area leading down to the gap. The boy in front came up a bit on his hunkers to get down the steps. Suddenly he fell straight down with his head forward. His body was on the steps. The front part of him may have been just passed the steps.

17.7.3.13 The witness agreed that Mr. McDaid's own description to the Inquiry of taking a dive over either the steps or the wall near to the steps, in such a way that the bullet caught him as he was in the course of diving, could accord with his own recollection. Day 093/165/14 to Day 093/165/21. He saw a small hole in his mid-back slightly to the right of centre. It was a small clean hole about three quarters of a centimetre in diameter. There was no blood. He could now see two or three older men in a doorway in the Rossville flats shouting at them to come on. He wanted to get past the boy so he crawled around him and crawled quickly through the gap. When he got to the gap he stood up. It is submitted that the location of the wound and the sequence and position of events described by him suggests that what Mr Tyre was referring to is the incident in which Patrick McDaid was wounded.

17.7.3.14 Billy Gillespie at AG33.2 paragraphs 9 to 10 described being behind a low wall in front of block 3 of the Rossville Flats. He described a line of people waiting for the right opportunity to get away. Patsy McDaid was in front of him. Patsy McDaid got up and ran towards the gap between blocks 2 and 3. There was still shooting coming down from the Bog towards Free Derry Corner and in the waste ground to the east of Rossville Street. Patsy McDaid had not moved far from behind the wall when he was shot in the back. The witness marked the spot on AG33.13. The witness stated that he and people behind him lifted Patsy McDaid and ran with him towards the gap. They stuffed some pads down his back. They carried him down the steps, which were just before the gaps between blocks 2 and 3, that is the set of steps in front of block two bays in from the east. Day 084/157/17 to Day 084/157/22. At the gap some people took him out and helped him away.

17.7.3.15 Patrick Walsh recognised himself as the person in P796 and P797. Day 171/27/8 to Day 171/27/25. He recalled hearing shooting going on at the time when P797 would have been taken, where he is shown with his hand on Patrick McDaid's shoulder. He could not say where the shooting was coming from. Day 171/29/4 to Day171/29/9. The witness had described, in an interview with the Sunday Times in 1972 which can be found at AW5.35, a youth cannoning into him as he ran. They both fell and the youth told him he had been shot. The witness saw the wound in his back.

He decided the youth needed attention and he could see the back doors to Joseph Place were open and people were crouching there. He ran across the alleyway behind Joseph Place and another man helped him get the boy into the second house. The witness confirmed that he had forgotten this incident but was reminded of it by his wife and he did remember it Day 171/33/25 to Day 171/34/5. It seems that the evidence of Soldier 134 at B1831.004 paragraph 21, Day 363/54/20 to 363/57/12 and Day 363/89/1 to Day 363/89/24. confirms a man being assisted by another into a house in Joseph Place.

17.7.3.16 Joseph Nicholas identified himself as the figure in EP25.8 immediately behind the prone figure of Patrick McDaid with Patrick Walsh and possibly one of the figures in EP25.7. Day 078/18/8 to Day 078/18/8 and Day 078/19/9 to Day 078/18/20. He was able to recall an interview with the Sunday Times in 1972 at AN17.2 but not the contents of the interview. In that interview he named Patrick McDaid as a person who was hit as he made a run towards stairs and in the direction of the alleyway behind Joseph Place. Day 078/40/3 to Day 078/41/4.

17.7.3.17 Patrick McDaid was carried to a house in Joseph Place. This scene was witnessed by Thomas Dawe. Day 094/128/16 to Day 094/129/3. James Anthony Norris was a Knight of Malta who attended the march in that capacity. In a written statement in 1972 at AN20.21 he recalled treating, amongst others, a man with a back wound in a house in Joseph Place. The wound was likened to a bullet track along his back. He and Mr Mcloone another Knight of Malta applied a gun-shot pack to the man's back and sent him to hospital. Noel Christopher McLoone recalled in his statement to this Inquiry treating a man for a back wound in what he now knew to have been 12 Joseph Place. AM359.22 paragraphs 23 to 24. Although he had thought it was an elderly man called Johnson the witness confirmed in oral evidence that he had recently found out the man's name was Mr.McDaid. Day 175/152/4 to Day 175/152/22. He further confirmed looking at P761 that the wound he saw was similar to the wound seen in the photograph of Patrick McDaid and that it might be the person he treated but could not tell from the photograph. Day 175/153/14 to Day 175/153/23. The description of the wound, the location of treatment and the accompanying evidence of Mr.Norris would point clearly to the conclusion that both these men treated Patrick McDaid in Joseph Place.

17.7.3.18 Charles Downey whose statement appears at AD133 and who gave evidence at Day 91, recalled helping Patrick McDaid into the house in Joseph Place face down, because he had been shot in the back, but did not recognise him in any of the photographs shown to him namely P760 and P762. He did not recognise the type of wound shown in P760 but the witness did not think that it was possible he saw someone other than Patrick McDaid on the occasion in question with the sort of wound seen in P760. Day 091/110/13 to Day 091/112/9.

17.7.3.19 Eamon Melaugh described at AM397.6 paragraphs 53 to 58 going to the first maisonette at Joseph Place and seeing a boy with a wound between his shoulder blades. He took two photographs P610 and P611.

17.7.4 Injuries sustained.

17.7.4.1 His wound was described in the relevant medical report of Mr.H.M Bennett FRCS which is at ED28.3 as a glancing wound which had been fired while the patient was ducking down and did not indicate a direct hit from behind. The same medical report said that the wound was noted to be full of carbon particles which could indicate a fairly close range discharge. Mr Bennett found the wound to be full of what he described as carbon particles which he considered would indicate a fairly close range discharge. Mr Bennett, of course, was dealing with what appeared then as a suggested glancing gun-shot wound. He was therefore explaining the particles in that context. This is considered further below in the findings of Dr Shepherd and Mr O'Callaghan. Patrick McDaid indicated to the Widgery Inquiry that he spent twelve days in hospital.

17.7.5 Removal to hospital.

17.7.5.1 Patrick McDaid was taken to Altnagelvin hospital in ambulance no.2 registration no.5986 UZ manned by Mr.Harry Wray and John Gilchrist which had arrived near the entrance to Rossville Flats at 4.28 pm. It arrived at hospital at 4.45 pm.

17.7.6 Forensic and expert evidence.

17.7.6.1 The opinion of Dr. Shepherd and Mr.O'Callaghan is to be found at E10.7, E18.6.1 and E20.1. In EIO.7 they refer to the findings of Mr. Malhorta, Consultant Surgeon and Mr.Bennett. Mr McDaid sustained a ragged three-inch by two inch lacerated injury over the left scapula. Mr.Malhorta did not find a true entrance or exit wound. He recorded the finding of black edges on the wound and a lot of carbon particles. In a discharge report of 11 February 1972 it is suggested that it was possibly a glancing wound with the tearing of the skin and superficial tissues.

17.7.6.2 After examining photographs of the wound they concluded at E18.6.1 that even with the photographs:

"A fresh interpretation of the injury remains difficult mainly due to the overall lack of reliable information. However, the appearance of the injury suggests it may have been caused by a thin 'disc' or sliver of material moving rapidly, which has sliced through the skin of the back from a generally right to left direction leaving a flap of tissue at the upper margin. It does not have the appearance of a typical bullet wound."

17.7.6.3 At E20.1 Mr O'Callaghan and Dr Shepherd conclude that Patrick McDaid was not struck by a bullet. Objects that could cause such a slicing wound as that suffered by Mr. McDaid would include an old penny, other metal discs, the top or bottom plates of a "U2" type battery. The black particles around the wound might be explained by the disc being contaminated by either the contents of the battery or by soiling of a penny if it were placed against the charge in the baton round gun. They accept other possibilities may exist. The essential matter is that in 1972 the doctors were proceeding on the basis that they were dealing with a gun-shot wound and Mr.Bennett sought to explain the back particles in that context. It was in that context that he was able to suggest a fairly close range discharge. It is submitted that the findings of Mr. O ' Callaghan and Dr. Shepherd now invalidate any such suggestion. It is submitted that there is no basis for suggesting a fairly close range discharge. In the context of the evidence regarding rubber bullet discharge on the day Patrick McDaid was not shot at close range but by a soldier towards or in the mouth of the car park. The shot was by means of a doctored rubber bullet.

17.7.6.4 At Day 229/61/3 to Day 229/61/9 Dr. Shepherd stated that they were confident the wound was not caused by a lead bullet. A doctored rubber bullet had to be the "highest possibility" given the documentation supplied to him. He referred to this documentation in E20.1 which indicated that doctored rubber bullets were used. Day 229/62/11 to Day 229/62/17. Dr Shepherd specifically rejected the suggestion from Peter Clarke QC on behalf of a number of the soldiers that nuts and bolts from nail bombs could be candidates for the injury because of the slicing action causing the wound. Day 229/74/3 to Day 229/74/11. Further in the context of the suggestion of nail bombs whilst accepting the possibility of a slicing action from the bottom of a tin can lid he could find nothing of the appearance of explosives injuries, including nail bombs, in the injury to the back of Patrick McDaid. Day 229/74/11 to Day 229/75/5.

17.7.6.5 A contemporary police report from Superintendent Finn indicated the following:

> "He does not appear to have been guilty of any illegal conduct at the time he was shot. Fortunately he is still alive." OS1.838

17.7.6.6 The identity of the soldier who fired a rubber bullet and struck Patrick McDaid is limited to a number of candidates. Of the four baton round gunners in the two Pigs on the waste ground and at the courtyard of the flats, Soldier 017 gave evidence that he debussed in Rossville Street and remained there during the engagement. Soldier 019 debussed and accompanied Lieutenant N. He would therefore have taken some time to reach the mouth of the car park. He was asked could he have fired rubber bullets across the car park when he debussed, towards the flats. He replied no, he did think he would have done. Day 343/174/8 to Day 343/174/19.

17.7.6.7 Soldier 112 placed himself at the northeast corner of block 1 of Rossville Flats and from there he could see a group of civilians in the alley way between blocks 1 and 2. He claimed to have fired some baton rounds in the direction of stone throwers and some further rounds in the direction of the alleyway as they retreated. He estimated about six baton rounds were fired in all. Day 320/106/14 to Day 320/107/5. Soldier 112 was asked had he fired his rubber bullet gun from the direction of the northeast corner of block1, to the gap between blocks 2 and 3. He did not recall, but doubted that he would have at that distance. Day 320/143/1 to Day 320/143/6. He denied that he had any knowledge of soldiers modifying baton rounds. Day 320/143/1 to Day 320/143/25. He had been using a baton gun for most of his time in the Army, which was a total of six years from 1970 onwards and had never heard of baton rounds being modified. Day 320/144/1 to Day 320/144/13. He further denied shooting Patrick McDaid with a modified rubber bullet, nor did he recollect seeing anyone firing baton rounds across the courtyard in that direction. Day 320/144/14 to Day 320/144/23.

17.7.6.8 It is most probable that the projectile was fired from the weapon carried and used by Soldier 013. Soldier 013 in his statement at B148.003 paragraph 15 described being positioned on Rossville Flats car park and concentrating on dealing with rioters, who were screaming and shouting.[15] He described himself as quite aggressive at that age, "...I gave a few of them a doing over....I think that is why I was given the job of firing the baton rounds, to keep the rioters away. I was probably over aggressive as a soldier. The Para's ethos is that if someone is going to be violent towards you, you attack them. I always used aggression and it worked. It is the best form of defence. I felt that the aggression was justified given what I faced as I got out of the Pig". B1408.003 paragraph 15.

17.7.6.9 Soldier 013 then described chasing a lad up the stairway, which he thought, was at the northern end of block 1. He chased him up the stairway and fired a baton round up the stairs. He also fired a number of baton rounds at the windows of Rossville Flats, as there were also "...good firing positions" there. He wanted to keep people away from the windows to prevent them shooting at soldiers. He could not now recall which windows he fired at. B1408.003 paragraph 16.

17.7.6.10 He described at this point, using the walls of the Rossville Flats and Sergeant O's Pig as cover. "...I kept firing my baton round to keep people away and all the time I was expecting to be shot". B1408.004 paragraph 17. He did not remember seeing anyone hit or anyone being shot in the car park, although he saw people falling over in the crowd. He was concentrating on looking for firing positions and gunmen. He did not use his rifle at all. "...my role was to use the baton gun". B1408.004 paragraph 18.

i. Given the evidence of the location, timing and firing of a baton gun in the car park, it is submitted that Soldier 013 is a prime contender for firing the baton round which struck Patrick McDaid.

[15] He thought he might be the soldier in the middle of the three soldiers in the photograph B1408:021, which shows the arrest of William John Dillon.

ii. Patrick McDaid was not engaged in any activity when wounded apart from trying to move through the Courtyard of the Rossville Flats towards the gap between blocks 2 and 3.

iii. There was no activity around him or in his vicinity which could provide any justification for his wounding.

iv. He was wounded by a member of Mortar Platoon.

v. It is overwhelmingly likely that he was wounded by a projectile fired from a rubber bullet gun.

vi. Such a wounding was the result of a deliberate and malicious act in doctoring the projectile from a rubber bullet gun.

vii. Soldier 013 shot Patrick McDaid with a doctored rubber bullet.

17.8. Soldiers' Evidence

17.8.1 Introduction

This section deals with the evidence of the soldiers in (i) Mortar Platoon, (ii) C Company and (iii) the Observation Posts overlooking the sector. In each sub-section, we first provide an overview of the soldiers' accounts and then examine the salient features of the most relevant soldiers in each category.

17.8.2 Mortar Platoon

17.8.2.1. The first 2 Pigs in the Support Company convoy that passed through Barrier 12 were occupied by soldiers from the Mortar Platoon under the command of Lt. N. Lt. N says that there were 18 in his platoon. He had briefed them on the Saturday evening that they were to engage in an arrest operation in the event that the march became violent. They drove in their pigs from Palace Barracks, Holywood to Derry on Sunday morning and went via their forming-up place to the Presbyterian Church. Apparently the original plan was for Mortar Platoon to gain access to William Street by driving through a brick wall beside the church but this plan was abandoned when it was realised there was a drop on the other side of the wall. The revised plan was to access William Street by driving through Barrier 12.

17.8.2.2. The Platoon was divided into two sections. The distribution is not entirely free from doubt but it would appear to have been as follows. Lt. N commanded the section in Pig 1 comprising himself, Private S (the driver), Lance Corporal V, Private Q, Private O19, Corporal 162, Private 112 and INQ1918 (the radio operator). This is 8 in total and there are Eversheds statements from each of these soldiers. The second section was commanded by Sergeant O and comprised himself, Corporal P, Lance Corporal 768, Private R, Private T (deceased), Private U, Private 006, Private O17, Private 13 and Private INQ1579. This makes 10 in total.

17.8.2.3 The doubt arises from the conflicting testimony of the soldiers in this platoon and the fact that the normal practice was to divide the Platoon evenly so that there were nine in each Pig. According to Sergeant O, the platoon was reasonably fluid in movement as between the two Pigs but there were certainly 9 men in each Pig (B575.111 paragraph 24). During his oral testimony he said that there would not be 10 in one Pig and 8 in the other (Day 335/21/16 to Day 335/21/19). He is probably wrong about this. The doubts relate mainly to Soldiers 112, 017 and 768.

17.8.2.4 Soldier 112 believes that he was in Sergeant O's Pig (B1732.1 paragraph 4 and Day 320/96/9 to Day 320/96/18 and Day 320/123/7 to Day 320/123/24). He has a recollection of an altercation that took place between someone in the Pig ahead of him and someone at the Barrier which would mean that he was in the second (O's) Pig (Day 320/96/19 to Day 320/96/23). Some of the soldiers he remembers being in his Pig were certainly in O's Pig but others were in N's Pig. One of those in N's Pig, Soldier Q, remembers being paired with 112 but 112 says he was not paired with anybody (Day 320/87/3 to Day 320/87/9). He specifically remembers that when he got out of the vehicle he had his back to the flats and there were crowds of people running across the waste ground in his direction. But he also said that his vehicle swung round to the left to get on the waste ground, i.e. facing north on his attached map (B1732.4 paragraph 17). He marked a point on the attached map around Pilots Row where he believes he debussed and this point is between the points were the two Pigs stopped.

17.8.2.5 If he was in Sergeant O's Pig there would have been more soldiers (perhaps 11) in Sergeants O's Pig than in Lt. N's Pig. However, the Pigs could hold 10 in the back, according to 112 (Day 320/124/10 to Day 320/124/14). There were four soldiers with baton guns in the Platoon and it would have been expected that there would have been two in each Pig and indeed the video shows two puffs of smoke appearing almost simultaneously at the back of Lt.N's Pig when it comes to rest in the waste ground suggesting that there were two soldiers with baton guns in that Pig. The only other soldier with a baton gun who was definitely in Lt. N's Pig was Soldier 019. Soldier 017, who had a baton gun, was adamant that he was in Pig 1 and that Corporal P was with him but Corporal P was equally adamant that they were both in Pig 2. Bearing in mind O17's deployment after debussing, the likelihood is that they were both in O's Pig. Soldier 013 was definitely in O's Pig so, if 112 had also been in O's Pig, that would have made three baton gunners in O's Pig and only one in N's Pig. Bearing in mind 112's own uncertainty on this issue it seems likely, on balance, that he was in Lt. N's Pig and deployed immediately with Soldier Q to the north gable wall of Block 1 close to Sergeant O's Pig.

17.8.2.6 Sergeant O believed that INQ768 was in his Pig. (B575.111 paragraph 24) INQ 768 believed that he drove that Pig (C768.2 paragraph 15) but it is clear from other evidence that he did not, although he may have driven it to the Morgue. He was still certain that he was in Sergeant O's Pig. (Day 323/128/14 to Day 323/128/20) He made the point that there would not have been an uneven distribution of manpower in each vehicle, which of course points to there being 9 in each, but he also said that normally there would be one Corporal and one Lance Corporal in each vehicle and he could not remember any other Lance Corporal in his vehicle. There were were 2 Lance Corporals in Mortar Platoon, namely INQ768 and Lance Corporal V. V was clearly in Lt. N's Pig so, if the normal practice was followed, INQ 768 would have been in Sergeant O's vehicle.

17.8.2.7 On balance, therefore, it would appear that there were 10 soldiers in Sergeant O's vehicle and 8 in Lt. N's Pig, made up as suggested above.

17.8.2.8 Table 1 at Appendix 1 shows the occupants of each pig with their designated roles and their movements after debussing, as far as we can tell from their own evidence.

17.8.2.9 The Army logs and Mr Porter's transcripts record that 1 Para were not to conduct "running battles" up Rossville Street, yet the convoy passed through the junction of William Street/Little James Street and up Rossville Street as far as the Rossville Flats. Lt N said that the hooligans had retreated before the arrival of the convoy and his Pig simply followed them onto the waste ground. The effect was that, once the lead Pig went into and along Rossville Street, the rest of the convoy followed. Both Major Loden and Lt N claimed to be responsible for this decision.

17.8.2.10 Major Loden stopped his armoured command vehicle in the middle of Rossville Street in a completely exposed position, exercising no apparent control over the operation. The rest of the convoy stopped behind him.

17.8.2.11 When he eventually debussed at the far side of the waste ground, Lt. N made his way to the buildings at the back of Chamberlain Street and the corner of Eden Place. Almost immediately, he fired what were the first shots in the area, which either triggered or gave the green light for the rest of the Army firing.

17.8.2.12 The accounts given by the soldiers as to how, where and when they fired their shots is summarised in a table appended to Inquiry Counsel Report No. 1. It is unwise to place reliance on any of these accounts but, for what they are worth, they are in brief as follows: Lt. N fired 3 warning shots, as he described them, at a crowd at or near the junction of Eden Place and Chamberlain Street, then he made his way behind the back of the houses at Chamberlain Street and fired 1 shot at a nail bomber in the car park, hitting him in the right thigh. This may have been Michael Bridge, but Peggy Deery was shot in the thigh behind Chamberlain St. Corporal V made his way from Pig 1 towards the flats and somewhere south of the wire fence fired 1 shot which probably hit Jackie Duddy. Private R was dropped off from Pig 2 on Rossville Street and as he ran past the north end of Block 1 he claims to have seen a nail bomber in the car park beside the east wall of Block 1 and shot him either from the north east corner of Block 1 or from the back of Pig 2 or from somewhere in between, depending on which of his three different versions is believed. Private R fired another 3 shots at a man with a pistol between Blocks 2 and 3. Sergeant O fired 3 shots from the passenger side of Pig 1 at a man behind a Cortina, 3 shots at a man at the southern end of the balcony in Block 3 and another 2 shots at a man with an M1 carbine on the ground between Blocks 2 and 3. Private S in the meantime was firing 12 rounds at a man or men with a rifle in front of the alleyway between Blocks 1 and 2. Private Q fired 1 shot at a gunman in the corner between Blocks 2 and 3. Private T fired 2 shots at an acid bomber on a balcony in Block 1.

17.8.2.13 This makes a total of 7 soldiers firing 29 shots into the courtyard and surrounding flats. In view of the availability of private supplies of ammunition and the shortcomings of the accounting process, it is impossible to say whether these were the only shots fired by these or other soldiers in this area.

17.8.2.14 The enigma of INQ 2003 seems to be resolved. In a statement to UTV, he claimed to have fired the first fatal shots and his account tallies with the shooting of Jackie Duddy. He claimed in the programme to have travelled in Pig 2 but he is not referred to by any of the other soldiers in Pig 2. His name does not appear in the nominal roll. He originally denied being in Derry on Bloody Sunday and he has now reverted to this position. He testified to the Tribunal that he has had a drink problem and was not there.

17.8.2.15 Table 2 at Appendix 2 shows the soldiers who fired and their claims as to where they fired from, what and where they fired at, the number of shots they fired, by whom they were seen to fire, whether they struck their targets and the most likely victims.

17.8.2.16 Table 3 Appendix 3 shows the accounts of the soldiers as to when they first heard shots.

17.8.2.18 Table 5 Appendix 5 represents an attempt to provide a quick-reference tool which allows ready comparison of the accounts given by all the soldiers in Mortar Platoon about certain material matters, such as whether they saw any civilians with weapons or heard any nail bombs. It will be remembered that, in Counsel Report No.2, Jacob Grierson prepared a comprehensive table identifying the apparent discrepancies and inconsistencies between the different statements made by each soldier and in Counsel Report No.3 there is an attempt to compare the accounts offered by the different soldiers.

17.8.2.19 Map Q7 is the chart showing the trajectory of shots fired by all the soldiers in Mortar Platoon and indeed by the other platoons. It should be noted that the trajectories shown in this map are different from those shown in the marked-up photographs in the cases of V, R and S. The soldiers suggested that the marked-up photographs are more accurate. This is particularly significant in the case of V since his marked-up photograph would suggest that he fired at a target in line with the point where Jackie Duddy fell. It is possible that Jackie Duddy was hit by another soldier's shots such as one of the 12 shots fired by Soldier S from behind 36 Chamberlain Street to the alleyway between Blocks 1 and 2 although this also is based on the assumption that this soldier did fire all his shots in that direction. The attached Sector 2 Plan 1 and Sector 2 Photograph 1 of the car park show the approximate location where each of the deceased and wounded fell as well as the trajectories of the shots fired into the car park area by the soldiers, as specified by them in their marked-up trajectory photographs.

17.8.3. Individual Soldiers of Mortar Platoon

Lieutenant N's Pig

17.8.3.1 Lt N's role in the events of Bloody Sunday is crucial. His conduct at two key stages in the operation, namely crossing William Street and firing the first shots, is sufficient in itself to suggest that, at the very least, his judgment and composure were suspect.

17.8.3.2 On top of this, Michael Starke has given evidence (M73.10) suggesting that Lt N may have been suffering from a psychiatric disorder (post traumatic stress disorder) at the time of Bloody Sunday. Mr Starke was a journalist with the Aldershot News in January 1972 and shortly after that with The Soldier. In the course of his work, he paid a visit to 1 Para on a weekend in December 1971 and was invited to go on patrol with Lt N. He refers to two incidents from that weekend that stick in his mind.

17.8.3.3 The first was when N, "in an apparent frenzy", ordered the driver of his pig to follow a Mercedes car and ram it. Mr Starke says that even the driver questioned whether Lt N really wanted him to do this but there was "no reasoning with him", he was "in a fury". Mr Starke viewed this as a "manic action" on Lt N's par (M73.11 paragraphs 8 to 9)). Later that evening, Mr Starke saw Lt N drinking alone and engaging in what he regarded as a "manic ritual" that involved setting fire to liqueurs before extinguishing the flame and then drinking them. In an article he wrote in the Irish News in 1997, Mr Starke described Lt N (without name) as "a troubled young officer" (M73.17) Mr Starke discussed the matter with a Consultant Psychiatrist and expresses the view that some of the Paras were suffering post traumatic stress disorder on Bloody Sunday (ibid).

17.8.3.4 RSM INQ 2037 (C2037.4paragraph 16) also says that he saw N sheltering in Soldier OO5's Pig after the event because he was scared and apparently upset. During his oral testimony, RSM INQ2037 said he got the impression that Lt. N was in a state of shock (Day 321/220/4 to Day 321/220/6). He asked Lt. N what he was doing in Soldier 005's Pig and he "just sat there looking forward" (Day 321/158/15 to Day 321/158/25). He didn't find out why Lt. N was in the Pig but he "realised someone had ordered him to stay in there out of the way" (Day 321/157/14 to Day 321/157/24)

17.8.3.5. In these circumstances we applied to see Lt. N's full service record and any psychiatric records that may exist. However, this application was refused despite the availability of material suggesting that he may have been unfit to be entrusted with the responsibility of leading the entire company into the Bogside. The Regimental Sergeant Major said at one point that he thought Lt. N was a reasonable young officer and he had never any occasion to think otherwise (Day 321/222/20 to Day 321/222/22). It was pointed out to him that he had said in his statement, in reference to disparaging remarks made about Lt. N in the Praxis programmes, that he agreed with the comment that Lt. N was not a good officer and that he agreed generally with the comments made about him in the Praxis programmes (C2037.7 paragraph 41) His reply to this was that after the incident in Londonderry, he could hardly say he was a good officer (Day 321/223/4 to Day 321/223/5)

17.8.3.6 Lt. N was just 23 years of age on Bloody Sunday, with just over two years in the Army (Day 323/41/5 to Day 323/41/12) but as commander of the first two Pigs through Barrier 12 he was effectively given the responsibility of leading the entire convoy. Yet, according to his evidence:

(i) He had not seen the written Operation Order (322/146/24 to Day 322/147/2).

(ii) He was not given any guidance or restrictions at any briefing by Major Loden or Col. Wilford of the Operation – specifically, he was not told that he was not to conduct any running battles down Rossville Street or even that he was not to go down Rossville Street, or that he should stop at the junction of William Street/Rossville Street (ibid). He was just told to go off and make the maximum number of arrests. (Day 322/147/3 to Day 322/150/1)

(iii) He did not know where the crowd was going to lead him; the entire convoy had to follow wherever he took them; it was really "the blind leading the blind" to wherever the crowd took him up Rossville Street; and he was going to have to end up in the middle of the crowd if he was going to carry out any number of arrests (Day 322/150/2 to Day 322/150/24)

(iv) Many of the people in that crowd were simply people who had been on the waste ground, rather than rioting at Barrier 12 (Day 322/41/8 to Day 322/41/18) and he had no way of knowing which were rioters and which were innocent stragglers (Day 322/151/15 to Day 322/152/7).

(v) He was not aware of any pincer movement or "cork in the bottle" strategy (Day 322/151/9 to Day 322/151/11). He had no recollection of it being explained that the IRA had never used a Civil Rights march to attack the Army or that the IRA had given an undertaking that they would not attack soldiers in or around the march (Day 323/41/15 to Day 323/41/21).

(vi) He regarded the operation as simply "a frontal assault on the crowd, a snatch, get in wherever you could and simply grab as many as you could." (Day 322/124/2 to Day 322/124/5)

(vii) He was not aware that the flats were monitored from Observation Posts (Day 323/42/12 to Day 323/42/16)

(viii) No one told him that the risk of being shot at was so minimal that, according to the Brigade Major, the last thing on anybody's mind at the Brigade Order Group conference was shooting. (Day 323/43/3 to Day 323/43/14)

(ix) It would be a fair inference that his men were not told that the IRA had never used a Civil Rights march as cover to attack the Army and that the IRA had given an undertaking to the Army that they would not attack soldiers in or around the march. (Day 323/43/15 to Day 323/43/17)

where he would effectively determine the eventual deployment of the Paratroopers; failed (either deliberately or inadvertently) to relay to him the restrictions imposed by the Brigade Commander not to conduct running battles down Rossville Street; failed (either deliberately or inadvertently) to give him any instructions, guidance or restrictions other than the order to make "the maximum number of arrests"; and failed (either deliberately or inadvertently) to give either him or his men accurate information about the likelihood of being shot at. Indeed, he was told that Rossville Flats was "a particularly dangerous spot" (B438.38 paragraph 14.2) even though, in the 3 months before Bloody Sunday, according to Brigadier MacLellan, there were only 3 occasions when the flats were used by snipers. (B1225)

17.8.3.8 Lt. N was at the Presbyterian Church before being deployed in the Bogside. In his Eversheds statement, he claimed to have heard the "drain pipe shot". He formed the view that it had probably been fired from Rossville Flats because he heard the crack "coming from just above and behind my head" and the guttering that was struck was "behind me and below that level" so that the bullet must have been travelling in a downwards direction. The line of sight, he said, ended at the high-rise flats (B438.4 paragraph 22). When questioned by Counsel to the Tribunal, he accepted that the guttering must have been above him so that any deduction he made on that basis could not be right. (Day 322/22/22 to Day 322/23/4) He still adhered to the claim that he had heard the crack of the bullet. However, Soldier 112 gave a very different account of this incident, saying that Lt. N had come up onto the roof, inquiring about the noise and asking whether any of the soldiers there had fired. Lt N denied this (Day 322/139/3 to Day 322/139/11) but conceded that the shot probably did not come from Rossville Flats (Day 322/139/21 to Day 322/140/3). Whether or not Soldier 112 was correct, it is clear that, despite seeking to suggest to this Tribunal that the shot had come from Rossville Flats, he did not know where the shot came from since this is what he said in terms in 1972 (B397 paragraph 4).

17.8.3.9 Sergeant O said that, when they were in the APC but before moving through the Barrier, he was either ordered or permitted by Lt N to cock his weapon. (B575.110 paragraph 23) Lt. N denied giving that order or permission (Day 322/145/12 to Day 322/145/19). He said that there was no reason at that stage to consider that they would need to use their rifles, there was no reason to give any such instruction or permission and it would have been completely wrong to do that (Day 322/141/19 to Day 322/141/22). It would have amounted to "an escalation of the situation" (Day 322/143/18 to Day 322/143/25) and the possibility that would flow from that kind of order was that the soldiers were "one step nearer to firing their rifles" (Day 322/145/6 to Day 322/145/11)

17.8.3.10 As N moved through the barrier, the crowd turned and ran and he ordered his driver to follow them (B438.7 paragraph 34 and see also the statement of the driver Private S at B724.18 paragraph 3).

17.8.3.11 The vehicle was parked with the rear exposed to the Rossville Flats so that when the rear doors were opened they were more or less in full view of the flats. It was not in his mind that his men may have been fired on from the flats. (Day 322/154/25 to Day 322/155/2) He could not therefore have had any expectation of coming under any IRA attack, despite his suggestion that he believed the Rossville Flats to be a particularly dangerous spot.

17.8.3.12 When he debussed he "immediately" became involved with a civilian who, he claimed, attacked him (Day 322/49/8 to Day 322/49/19) but "certainly within a minute" he had moved towards the alleyway which leads off what used to be Eden Place into Chamberlain Street. (Day 322/43/24 to Day 322/44/3). There he claimed to have seen the crowds surging from the junction with Chamberlain Street and felt he had no alternative but to fire warning shots at them. He remembers being nervous but he claims that he did not panic or overreact to the situation (Day 322/61/11 to Day 322/61/17). Although he accepted that he fired 3 shots, he claimed in his Eversheds statement that he only remembered firing 1 shot at this stage. (B438.9 paragraph 39). Counsel to the Inquiry mentioned during a question that Lt. N's present recollection was of firing only 1 shot. (Day 322/61/18 to Day 322/61/21) Lt N himself repeated during questioning by Mr Morgan that his "mental picture now is still 1 shot" (Day 323/46/12 to Day 323/46/18). However, in between these occasions, he said: "my recollection is my point of aim was roughly the same for all 3 shots (Day 322/63/6 to Day 322/63/7) and "I have a very clear memory of firing all 3 shots at the same point of aim" (Day 322/65/5 to Day 322/65/11).

17.8.3.13 Whether or not he was truthful in his recollection of the number of shots he fired, he has consistently stated that, apart from the drainpipe shot some time earlier at the Presbyterian Church, the shots he fired himself at this stage were the first shots he heard on Bloody Sunday. He said this at the Widgery Inquiry (B433) when events would have been fresh in his mind and he repeated it in response to questions from Counsel to this Inquiry (Day 322/88/2 to Day 322/88/10) and from Counsel for Madden & Finucane (Day 322/167/18 to Day 322/167/21).

17.8.3.14 It is of enormous significance that this is the information that was provided to General Ford. Following the opening meeting of the Army's Widgery Tribunal Team on 2nd February 1972, General Ford spoke to Major General INQ2144, the Director of Personal Services and told him:

> " The opening shots had quite definitely come from the IRA who had fired twice when 1 Para were crossing the barricade, but it would probably be established that an officer of 1 Para had subsequently fired a burst of warning shots into a brick wall immediately before the main battle began" (emphasis added, G114B.743.5 paragraph 12)"

17.8.3.15 It is unclear where General Ford got the notion the IRA fired twice while 1 Para were crossing the barricade. However, the point is that he must have been told by information coming up the chain of command that Lt N had fired the first shots in the Bogside. Lt N agreed that this was "very probably" a reference to him and that this report "would have gone up through the chain of command", starting with him (Day 322/173/5 to Day 322/173/25). He accepted that Major Loden would have passed on that information and "presumably" did not say anything that caused General Ford to take a different view (Day 322/174/4 to Day 322/174/9). Quite clearly, the briefing given to General Ford represented the considered assessment of Col. Wilford and Major Loden, after taking into account all the evidence available to them from other soldiers and what they had witnessed themselves, of the order of events and, in particular, the order of shooting. They had introduced the suggestion that there had been a "battle" but not that the battle had been precipitated by civilian gunfire. Also of enormous significance is the fact that, no doubt because they realised its implications, this understanding of the overall picture did not appear in the statements of General Ford, Col Wilford, Major Loden, Lt. N or any other soldier. If Col Wilford or Major Loden had been anxious to prepare an accurate report of the sequence of events, they ought to have recorded that the first shots had been fired by a paratrooper. Instead, the press statements were to the effect that civilian gunmen had fired on the paratroopers first. The world was being told that the first shots in the Bogside were fired by the IRA while General Ford was privately telling Major General 2144 that the first shots were in fact fired by an officer of 1 Para.

17.8.3.16 It appears to have been general knowledge among soldiers, including those who were not even present, that it was Lt. N's shots that set off a chain reaction among the other soldiers. (See, e.g., the Praxis interview of INQ1413. (O18/3))

17.8.3.17 The circumstances in which Lt. N fired his shots are in dispute. Gilles Peress, a French photographer, was one of the last people to run down Chamberlain Street. He paused at the corner of Eden Place and Chamberlain Street, on the north side, and took photograph P274. This shows two civilians in the street and what appears to be a puff of smoke from a rubber bullet gun at the point where Soldier O19, who had a rubber bullet gun, would have been standing. After he had taken this photograph, he crossed the street, raised his camera and shouted "Press". However, a soldier at the corner where Lt. N was present fired at him from the hip in a kneeling position. (M65.1.1 paragraph 4 and M65.20 paragraph 9) Lt. N agreed that he fired from a kneeling position but denied that he fired from the hip at a lone individual or what appeared to be a photographer trying to cross the street. (Day 322/77/20 to Day 322/77/21)

17.2.3.18 However, he also denied firing "about head height" (Day 322/164/10 to Day 322/164/13) although this was exactly what he had said twice to the Widgery Tribunal (B420 F and B421 A), He said he had no idea why he had said this. "All my shots were above head height there", he said (Day 322/165/4 to Day 322/165/5) even though, as pointed out earlier, he had said that he did not even recollect firing the second and third shots.

17.8.3.19 He did not see the danger inherent in firing at a house in Chamberlain St and, specifically, it did not occur to him that anyone might have been living in the house (Day 322/163/2 to Day 322/163/10).

17.8.3.20 With regard to the question whether he should have been firing warning shots at all, he argued that to do so was simply "outside the scope of the Yellow Card", not contrary to it. (Day 322/127/12 to Day 322/127/20). One of the general rules set out in the Yellow Card is: "Always first try to handle the situation by other means than by opening fire. If you have to fire: (a) fire only aimed shots, (b) do not fire more rounds than are absolutely necessary to achieve your aim". (ED71.1 paragraph 3). Lt. N was in breach of the Yellow Card by not choosing means other than opening fire, such as instructing Soldier 019 to fire rubber bullets if necessary. He was also in breach in that he did not fire aimed shots and he fired more rounds than were necessary. Lt. N's response to this was that he fired aimed shots at the wall above the crowd. (Day 322/159/20 to Day 322/159/21). Having initially said that he did not rely on anything in the Yellow Card to justify what he did (Day 322/157/21 to Day 322/157/23) he claimed he could rely on paragraph 12. This provides that "if there is no other way to protect yourself or those whom it is your duty to protect from the danger of being killed or seriously injured he could fire after due warning" (ED71.2) even though he accepted this was a reference to firing at people, not walls. (Day 322/162/17 to Day 322/162/21).

17.8.3.21 Lt. N. said that firing aimed shots was "not really acceptable conduct". (B438.2 paragraph 10, and Day 322/127/21 to Day 322/127/23) He had been taught in basic training that warning shots were not to be used (Day 322/127/25 to Day 322/128/4) Lt. N had fired warning shots before but he could recall no "fuss" about it. (Day 322/3/22 to Day 322/4/11). He had reported the previous incident to his company commander but he had not been reprimanded or censured or warned about his future behaviour. (Day 322/129/7 to Day 322/129/14) Despite this, he rejected the suggestion that experience alone would have allowed him to believe that he could behave in a way that was unacceptable and contrary to his training but get away with it. (Day 322/129/22 to Day 322/130/1) When asked about the fatal shootings for which the Parachute Regiment had been responsible during the same period as the previous incident, i.e. August 1971, he claimed to have no recollection of them. He certainly had no recollection of paratroopers being disciplined or even reprimanded for those shootings.

17.8.3.22 Lt. N is no longer sure that the person he shot on the grounds that he was about to throw a nail bomb did in fact have a nail bomb. (B438.11 paragraph 43 and Day 322/92/18 to Day 322/92/22). He said that he first experienced this doubt several years after the event when learning that the forensic evidence was flawed (Day 323/6/15 to Day 323/6/21) Apart from the fact that the forensic evidence was known at the time to be flawed in many respects, there never was any forensic evidence in relation to the wounded, such as Michael Bridge.

17.8.3.23 When explaining why he believed that the youth in question was about to throw a nail bomb, he said that "there must have been something in the demeanour of the youth which made me think he was about to throw a nail bomb, to make me react in the way I did" (Day 323/7/18 to Day 323/7/20) If, as he claimed at the Widgery Tribunal, he had seen a smoking nail bomb in the hand of his target, this would have been a perfectly legitimate reason for believing that the man had a nail bomb. He expressed no doubt about seeing a smoking nail bomb in 1972 either to the RMP (B374) or to the Widgery Tribunal. (B422) However, in his Eversheds statement, he was at pains to point out that he only saw the person in question "for a split second" and that he "may" have seen smoke or it might have been something else". (B438.11 paragraph 43).

17.8.3.24 When asked what happened to the "nail bomb" after the target was hit in the leg, Lt. N said that he was still holding it, "it went with him". (Day 322/93/21 to Day 322/93/24) In other words, the target was clutching his injured leg with a nail bomb in his hand, according to Lt N. Nor did Lt N or any other soldier take any steps to arrest this man even though he was disabled and "there were no other visible threats after he had been shot."(Day 322/94/10 to Day 322/94/20)

17.8.3.25 Lt. N now recognises the possibility that the person he shot did not in fact have a nail bomb in his hand. (Day 323/77/12 to Day 323/77/17) This, of course, is because he knows perfectly well that the person he shot did not have a nail bomb or any other object in his hand.

17.8.3.26 The likelihood is that Lt N shot Michael Bridge as Mr Bridge was gesticulating in a virtually deserted courtyard in such a way as to make it clear that he had nothing in his hands and presented no threat to the soldiers. He was shot in full view of a number of soldiers. It is because he was shot when he presented no threat that Lt N now denies shooting him. Not one of the other soldiers is prepared to admit seeing the event. Lt N could not explain why "no one in the Mortar Platoon, either in 1972 or subsequently, has said either that he shot [Michael Bridge] or that he saw anybody else [shoot] him, when he appears to have been shot in daylight in a square which was empty around him", as Christopher Clarke QC put it. (Day 322/100/4 to Day 322/100/10) So anxious was Lt. N to distance himself from this shooting that he also distanced himself from the event about which Mr Bridge was protesting, namely the shooting of Jackie Duddy. (Day 323/17/4 to Day 323/17/22) Nor did he admit to seeing any of his Platoon shooting anyone, even though 6 of his soldiers fired 28 other shots into the courtyard area. (ibid). It is also possible that he shot Peggy Deery since she was also shot in the thigh roughly in the area of Lt N.'s target. However, she was probably the first person to be shot in this sector and this probably happened when Lt N was still engaged either at Eden Place or in the vicinity of his APC.

17.8.3.27 When asked whether he exercised any kind of restraint or discipline or control of any kind over the actions of his soldiers once he had debussed, his reply was that he was "extremely preoccupied" (Day 323/19/8 to Day 323/19/18)

17.8.3.28 In his Eversheds statement, Lt. N claimed that he first became aware that there had been shooting (other than his own shots) when he heard the cease- fire order given by Major Loden. (B438.12 paragraph 48) However, he also said he became aware that there had been shooting before that, specifically when he spoke to two of his soldiers who said that they had engaged two gunmen. (Day 323/30/4 to Day 323/30/8). Lt. N was then involved in removing the bodies from the Rubble Barricade. He did not suggest in either of his two RMP statements (B385 and B394) that either he or his men had been fired upon during this operation or at this time but in his statement to the Treasury Solicitors (B401 paragraph 21) he said that, during the 15 minutes or so from the time when he had collected the bodies until the Pig left with them, there were several shots which appeared to be fired at the Pigs standing outside the flats and to come from "somewhere further down Rossville Street South". His account was further embellished by the time he got to the Widgery Tribunal, when he told the Tribunal that several shots were fired "in our direction" either "from the top of the flats" or from a direction that he indicated on the model. (B426 A-C)

17.8.3.29 He never searched the bodies or the barricade (Day 323/38/19 to Day 323/38/23), so he clearly did not expect to find any evidence of civilian firing from that point. Indeed he saw "absolutely no evidence of any civilian firing or nail bombing or petrol bombing or anything of that kind" apart from his own target in the courtyard. (Day 323/39/3 to Day 323/39/6).

17.8.3.30 That, however, did not prevent him from appearing on the "This Week" television programme telling what he admitted was a series of lies to the effect that he had himself seen a civilian with a gun firing at the soldiers (Day 323/24/9 to Day 323/26/4; the transcript of the broadcast is at B405). When asked why he told this lie several times in this interview, he said "this would be an example of what we call spin" (Day 323/26/5 to Day 323/26/11). Surprisingly, he did not mention in this interview that he had himself shot what he claimed to have been a nail bomber. During the same interview, another officer said in a cavalier way that it was "unfortunate that there are some 3000 other people milling around the area, some of whom may have got caught up in it, but the Army engaged gunmen and killed them". It is suggested that this reflected Lt N's own attitude. Having led his own platoon into the middle of a crowd, he proceeded to shoot recklessly at or above the heads of civilians in Chamberlain Street, he shot Michael Bridge simply because he was shouting at the troops, he did nothing to restrain the shooting by members of the Platoon and since then he has tried to cover up his criminal behaviour by inventing accounts of nail bombers and gunmen while pretending not to have been aware of anything else going on in front of his eyes.

17.8.3.31 Lt N said that over the years he developed doubts regarding his actions on Bloody Sunday although he says that the only doubt he had was whether his target was throwing a nail bomb. (Day 323/5/22 to Day 323/6/6) He denied that he was wracked with guilt for what he did. (Day 323/22/22 to Day 323/22/23) In our submission, the extent of his wrongdoing is such that he ought to be.

Soldier S

17.8.3.32 Private S was the driver of Pig 1. After he debussed he worked his way forward along the wall at the back of Chamberlain Street. From a position behind number 34 Chamberlain Street, he claimed that he fired 4 bursts of 3 shots each at a rifleman in front of the alleyway between Blocks 1 and 2. He said he hit the person or persons on 2 occasions. He said in his first RMP statement that nail bombs and acid bombs were thrown from the top of the flats on the men from his unit. He said in his second RMP statement that he saw 5 nail bombs thrown from the balcony but in his SA statement he said this was not true - he did not see any nail-bombers. He said in his second RMP statement that he saw a gunman in the ground floor window near the south-east corner of Block 1 and that O fired at him. O did not say that he fired in this direction and this suggestion did not feature in S's SA statement.

17.8.3.33 In his Eversheds statement, Private S said that he had forgotten most of what happened on Bloody Sunday (B724.1 paragraph 7). He did not remember making any of the RMP or SA statements attributed to him but he invited the Tribunal to accept the accuracy of those statements by saying: "It is obvious that I recalled events in far greater detail in 1972 and where there is detail in my evidence from that point in time which I no longer recall now then I must defer to those statements" (B724.3 paragraph 21).

17.8.3.34 Shortly after he began giving oral testimony, Soldier S said that he wished to "make a little bit of a statement" about the statements he made in 1972. He pointed out that he was 18 years of age on Bloody Sunday and there were "definitely inaccuracies in those statements and I am not proud of that fact and I am conceding to the fact that those statements are inaccurate" (Day 331/61/6 to Day 331/61/11) He said the statements were made quite late at night to RMP's, which can be "quite a frightening affair in itself". He regretted the fact that he had signed "a statement in 1972 that is basically inaccurate; it is not wholly inaccurate, there are bits in there that have been added by the RMP's that are not wholly accurate." (emphasis added, Day 331/61/12 to Day 331/62/2) .

17.8.3.35 When questioned by our Counsel, S said that at the time he made the statements he believed them to be accurate and correct in every material respect. (Day 332/14/7 to Day 332/14/10) When pressed as to how he could now know that they were inaccurate, he said that he knew he could "not have been facing some of those directions or some of the other things that had been put in there". (Day 332/14/18 to Day 332/14/20). He said that "obviously at the time you are going to subject yourself to the, shall we say, the commands of the imposing RMPs" (Day 332/14/23 to Day 332/14/25). When asked if the RMPs' put things into his statement which were wrong he said: "I would agree with that". (Day 332/15/19 to Day 332/15/21). In other words, within the space of a few sentences, Soldier S said the RMP's put things into his statement which were wrong after he had said that at the time he believed the statements to be accurate in every respect.

17.8.3.36 It was a feature of his evidence that he repeatedly shifted his position on this issue. Having told the Tribunal that details were "added by the RMPs that are not wholly accurate" and the RMPs "put things into [his] statement which were wrong", he also said that he did not remember them putting words into his statements or that anything that appears in those statements came from the RMP's as opposed to himself (Day 332/19/2 to Day 332/19/3). In fact he said that he did not remember making the statements at all or anything about the way in which they were taken. (Day 332/16/12 to Day 332/16/18) This did not stop him saying that the statements were "inaccurate in the respect that they do not accurately reflect probably what I actually quoted to the RMPs on the day" (Day 332/19/18 to Day 332/19/20).

17.8.3.37 This is dealt with further in relation to specific "inaccuracies" in his 1972 statements. However, the general point is that it is impossible to know whether the reason for the "inaccuracies" is that Soldier S volunteered a false account or that he simply agreed to sign a false account provided for him by the RMP's. In either case, Soldier S was dishonest in signing statements that he knew to be false. In the latter case, the consequences are that none of the RMP statements made by other soldiers can be regarded as reliable since, if the RMP statement-takers were prepared to encourage one soldier to sign a false account, it is likely that they did the same with the other soldiers.

17.8.3.38 In either event, he knew when he signed his Eversheds statement that his 1972 statements were false but, as appears above, he invited the Tribunal to accept that what he had said in the statements was the truth and should be relied upon since his present recollection of events was so poor. When it was put to him that he was thereby lying to the Tribunal, he replied: "by implication, I suppose I was". (Day 332/87/15)

17.8.3.39 For these reasons alone, the Tribunal cannot attach any weight to his evidence, except insofar as it consists of admissions against interest, such as the admissions that his RMP statements were false, either at the instigation of the RMP or otherwise.

17.8.3.40 His claim to have very little recollection of events should be regarded as no more than a screen intended to protect his testimony from detailed scrutiny. If he genuinely had no recollection of the events, he would not have been able to say that particular parts of his 1972 accounts were wrong. Likewise, he would not have been able to say that his 1972 account of the circumstances surrounding his own shots was right. Yet this is exactly what he did. He was at pains to stress that, in respect of his own involvement, the 1972 statements were correct. He said:

> "This is a truthful statement, definitely. Um, I have no doubt that this part of the statement has not been added to or enhanced in anyway, it is definitely what I saw; it is definitely what happened to me; my experience on the day; .... . that part that describes my engagement with a gunman is correct and truthful" (Day 331/70/7 to Day 331/70/15)

17.8.3.41 He was asked questions about this as follows:

"Q. But you are able to recall, on this occasion, the number of rounds you fired and the rounds being fired at you and hitting the men you fired at?

A. Yes.

Q. That much is clear, in your mind, in your mind's eye?

A. Yes." (Day 332/84/10 to Day 332/84/15)

17.8.3.42 However, what he had said in his Eversheds statement was:

> "I was then engaged in exchanges of fire with a gunman or gunmen. My only recollection now is that the exchange was over quickly, I do not recall how many rounds I fired, or were fired at me or whether or not I hit any of the men who were firing at me." (B724.3 paragraph 15)

17.8.3.43 When this contradiction was put to him, he said the Eversheds statement was true and that what he had meant when he said that it was clear in his mind's eye was that he recalled it from his statement. (Day 332/85/13 to Day 332/85/24)

17.8.3.44 Soldier S is sure that his 1972 accounts are wrong for the simple reason that he remembers these events very well but he is not prepared to admit that he was personally at fault. Bloody Sunday, according to his recollection, was the only occasion when he fired a shot during his service in Northern Ireland. (Day 332/84/7 to Day 332/84/9) On that occasion, he fired 12 and in circumstances so discreditable that he was obliged to invent an account in order to conceal the truth of his actions. That account will now be examined.

17.8.3.45 Soldier S said in his first RMP statement that the rioters at the junction of Rossville Street and William Street numbered about 2000 (B724.12) but he was not making any distinction between rioters and marchers (Day 332/21/13 to Day 332/21/15). He said in his SA statement that "as soon as the vehicle stopped we debussed, we came under fire" (B724.19) but he had not suggested that in either of his RMP statements. He now accepts that this suggestion was "not to be taken too literally". (Day 331/82/1 to Day 331/82/17) However, this was conceded only after it had been pointed out to him that his first reference to civilian firing in his RMP statement was the firing that he said occurred when he had been in his position at the back of 34 Chamberlain Street for about 5 minutes. (B724.13).

17.8.3.46 Indeed, according to that statement, he had cocked his rifle "from taking up [his] position", i.e. behind 34 Chamberlain Street (B724.12) so that, according to the statement, he had his rifle cocked and ready to fire before he himself heard any firing. Lt. N, for one, did not claim that he came under fire either as soon as he debussed or at any time prior to the recovery of the bodies from the rubble barricade. The photographs, in particular P1015 and others in that sequence, make it clear that the soldiers in those photographs, viz. N, 019 and 1918, were not behaving as if they were under fire.

17.8.3.47 In his first statement he claimed that nail bombs and acid bombs were thrown from the top of the flats onto the men from his unit who were making arrests. (B724.12, B724.13) In his second RMP statement, he repeated this and said that about 5 nail bombs were thrown altogether. (B724.16) In his SA statement, he said that "this is not really correct" (B724.19) and he told this Tribunal that he did not see any nail bombs or acid bombs.

17.8.3.48 When he was asked how he knows he didn't, he said "it was probably put to me" (Day 332/37/14 to Day 332/37/17). When asked if the RMP were actually putting in things that he knew to be wrong, he said "that may well have been the case" although he did not have a recollection of it, "that is the nature of the way they did things" (Day 332/39/3 to Day 332/39/18). When asked whether they said "look, Soldier S, you saw nail bombs and acid bombs did you not, just put it in your statement; it that what happened?", he said "probably" (Day 332/40/5 to Day 332/40/8). When asked if it was because he was only 18 at the time that he allowed himself to sign the statement when he knew he had not actually seen nail bombs or acid bombs, he said "I would say that that is a fair assumption" (Day 322/40/9 to Day 332/40/12).

17.8.3.49 With regard to his own shooting, he suggested that on each of the 4 occasions that he fired, the gunman appeared from the midst of a crowd when a gap in the crowd opened up. Following each of the 4 episodes of firing, the crowd closed in front of the gunman. It was pointed out to him that in photographs P1015 and P1016 it is apparent that the crowd in the Rossville Flats courtyard thinned rapidly as soldiers approached. He accepted that the crowd were dispersing in all directions. (Day 332/43/11 to Day 332/43/16) However he was not prepared to accept that the crowd must have virtually disappeared by the time he reached the back of 34 Chamberlain Street.

17.8.3.50 As he was taken through his account, he took issue with a number of indisputable propositions such as that, on his account, he was pointing his rifle at the crowd (Day 332/47/14 to Day 332/47/16) and that the crowd must have heard the "gunman" in their midst firing towards him". (Day 332/48/2 to Day 332/48/5)

17.8.3.51 When asked why, when the crowd had been running so quickly to get away from soldiers whenever they debussed, they would have hung around after he had started firing in their direction, he simply said: "I am sorry, I cannot help you there, I am sorry." (Day 332/51/5 to Day 332/51/10).

17.8.3.52 He was asked this:

> "Q Instead of running away from the firing, they run between the two gunmen, or they move between the two gunmen, that is the civilian gunmen and yourself?
> A. Yes, yes.
> Q. Is that not ridiculous?

A. Yes, it seems so, yes, I agree". (Day 322/49/15 to Day 322/49/20) 17.8.3.53 This ridiculous scenario occurred 4 times in all over a space of approximately 2 minutes, according to Solider S, during which time the gunman or gunmen fired 13 shots at him and he fired 12 shots in return.

17.8.3.54 Soldier S believes that generally speaking he would expect to hit a target with a single shot at 50 yards, the approximate distance between him and the target on this occasion. (Day 332/6/5 to Day 332/6/10) Yet he claims to have succeeded in hitting his target only twice, possibly even only once. (Day 332/6/20 to Day/332/7/3)

17.8.3.55 INQ 444 was a member of C Company who saw a paratrooper on the waste ground firing between 10 and 20 shots towards Blocks 2 and 3 at an angle of 30 to 40 degrees with the rifle "under his arm at a position between his shoulder and his waist". INQ 444 thought that this soldier had "lost the plot." (C444.5 paragraph 34). Soldier S was the only person in the waste ground area who fired more than 10 shots and it is submitted that he was probably the soldier seen by INQ444.

17.8.3.56 It is further submitted, for a number of reasons, that he may have been the soldier who shot Peggy Deery. Peggy Deery was probably the first to be shot after Support Company entered the Bogside. Although it is not entirely clear where she was shot, it appears to have been somewhere behind 34 or 36 Chamberlain Street. Soldier S arrived in the first Pig. When he debussed he headed straight for the wall behind Chamberlain Street and was almost certainly one of the two soldiers seen in photographs P1016 and P278 making their way along the back wall towards Rossville Flats. Charles McMonagle, the First Aid officer seen lying on the ground in P278, gave evidence that one of the 2 soldiers seen with him in this photograph had jumped out of what would have been S's Pig and fired immediately from the hip towards the courtyard of the Rossville Flats.

17.8.3.57 Clearly, it is impossible to say whether S did shoot Peggy Deery or indeed anyone else but he fired 12 shots that are completely unaccounted for in the sense that his own account of how they were fired is as ludicrous as Soldier H's and has to be rejected out of hand.

17.8.3.58 In his first Eversheds statement, Soldier 013 said that one of his colleagues, whom he was not then prepared to name, had said he had seen a civilian gunman and had "dropped him". According to 013, "the colleague was tense and shaking when he was telling me. It was very hard to shoot a moving target". (B1408.4 paragraph 19)

17.8.3.59 In a supplementary statement, he said that the soldier in question was Private S. (B1408.26 paragraph 3). Soldier S did not say that any of his targets were moving. Indeed, they appear to have been stationary when he fired. 013 did not give oral testimony. If his evidence was meant to suggest that S told him that he had shot someone who was moving (which is the apparent meaning of his statement) this confirms that at least one of his targets was someone other than the gunman or gunmen he claimed to see in the alleyway between Blocks 1 and 2.

17.8.3.60 The evidence would suggest that Peggy Deery was stationary when she was shot and that neither Michael Bridge nor Michael Bradley was doing anything more than standing or walking towards the soldiers. The person who is most likely to have fitted the description of a "moving" target was Jackie Duddy.

17.8.3.61 Nor can Soldier S's account be reconciled with the accounts of other soldiers. In particular, Lt N (P20), Soldier R (P24) and Soldier V (P28) marked the trajectories of their shots on photographs, marking the position of their target and their own position when they fired. If Soldier S was standing behind 34 Chamberlain Street, he could not have failed to see the targets of each of these soldiers but he has never claimed to have seen any of them. The accounts of these soldiers were explored with him but he was unable to explain this. (Day 332/58/24 to Day 332/64/25)

17.8.3.62 In his first RMP statement, S made no reference to seeing any other soldier firing but in his second statement he said he saw a gunman firing from a ground floor window about three windows in from the southern corner of Block 1. He said this gunman fired six shots at his platoon and he saw O fire back. (B74.16). (Incidentally, this was one of the supporting statements made on 4th February 1972.) These shots were in addition to the 13 fired by the gunman or gunmen at whom S himself fired, which makes a total of 19 shots fired from this corner, none of which struck a soldier. When he made his SA statement, he said that he could not see O's target and that this target was in the south-east corner of the car park. (B724.20 paragraph 10)

17.8.3.63 In other words, the gunman in the ground floor window near the gap between blocks 1 and 2 no longer existed; O had not fired in that direction; and he saw O fire in a different direction at a different target in a different corner of the carpark. He accepted that this was one of the "inaccuracies" in his 1972 statements.(Day 332/69/11 to Day 332/69/25) It is submitted that he invented the story in the second RMP statement about seeing the gunman in order to support Sergeant O but, unfortunately for him, the details he gave were inconsistent with the details that had already been given by Sergeant O.

17.8.3.64 When asked by the Chairman how he knew that his second RMP statement was inaccurate in this respect when he did not remember the incident, he replied: "Because it was probably inserted there for me, probably." When asked if this was done by the RMP who took the statement he said "Probably, yes, Sir" and he "went along with it". (Day 332/72/16 to Day 332/72/25)

17.8.3.65 With regard to other shooting, S said he was not conscious of anyone firing a pistol in his vicinity (Day 331/93/16 to Day 331/93/20) so none of his firing could have been in response to the 2 shots fired by OIRA 4 from behind the gable wall of 36 Chamberlain Street. Nor did S hear any automatic fire at any stage. (Day 332/82/2 to Day 332/82/6 and B724 D)

17.8.3.66 Soldier S said that he served with the Army in the Middle East after Bloody Sunday. He was involved in firing thousands of rounds and admitted that he had killed "lots of people" (Day 332/88/9 to Day 332/88/24). It is submitted that, notwithstanding his frequent expressions of sympathy, Soldier S had no compunction about shooting people and that, bearing in mind both his apparent location and the number of shots fired by him, he is one of the prime suspects for shooting Peggy Deery. He may very well have shot Jackie Duddy too.

Soldier V

17.8.3.67 In summary, Lance Corporal V accompanied Private S and, in his RMP statement, he said that he fired only one round, at a person in the Rossville Flats courtyard after that person had thrown a bottle with a fuse in it. When he was interviewed by Mr Heritage of the Treasury Solicitors he said that he could not see anything in the man's hand when he fired at him. This led to the well-known exchange with Lt Col Overbury and the intervention of Messrs Stocker and Gibbens. The statement was clearly tantamount to an admission of murder but his evidence was altered in his SA statement in that he then said he fired instantaneously at a time when he believed the man still had the petrol bomb.

17.8.3.68 The clear inference is that Lt. Col Overbury, Major Bailey or someone else advised V to change his story. Although Counsel for the Widgery Inquiry was aware of the contents of V's original RMP statement, V was not challenged about this at the Inquiry.

17.8.3.69 Lance Corporal V claimed that he no longer remembers the events in any detail. He also said that he has no recollection of any of the interviews with the RMP, Mr Heritage or anyone else prior to the Widgery Tribunal. There are numerous inconsistencies in his accounts, including whether and when he heard explosions or gunfire and what type; when he cocked his rifle; whether he saw petrol bombs; whether he saw the petrol bomb leave the hand of the person he shot before he fired and the reason for the discrepancy between the trajectory map and Loden Shot List on the one hand and the marked-up photograph on the other in respect of his own position when he fired and the position of his target. No other soldier admits to having seen V firing.

17.8.3.70 Lance Corporal V and Private S were probably the first to fire into the courtyard. According to the account apparently given by V to Major Loden and then given by him to the SIB investigator later that night, his target was hit at more or less the same spot where Jackie Duddy fell. V also said that the person he hit was attended by a group of civilians including a priest. Both these factors point to the conclusion that Jackie Duddy was shot by Lance Corporal V.

17.8.3.71 Soldier V claimed not to remember the events of Bloody Sunday in any detail. (B821.3 paragraph 2) He remembered the drainpipe shot although he never mentioned this in 1972. His next memory, he said, was of debussing from the back of the Pig and breaking the ice on top of a frozen puddle. He was annoyed at having stepped in a puddle (B821.3 paragraph 2.1). It says a lot that he remembered this but claimed to have only the most limited recollection of shooting a person dead. When asked during his oral testimony if he was seriously suggesting to the Tribunal that he remembered trivial details such as stepping into a puddle but did not remember major details such as seeing a person throwing a petrol bomb at S and S shooting him, perhaps dead, he replied: "That is correct" (Day 333/106/16 to Day 333/106/21)

17.8.3.72 He also remembers, as he got out of the Pig, noticing a person in uniform and wearing a respirator. He said:

> "My immediate thought was that the guys here were extremely well organised. I had never before or since seen civilians with respirators and uniforms. Because of this I ran at the man and pinned him against the wall with my rifle". (B821.3 paragraph 2.3)

17.8.3.73 This contention positively drips with dishonesty. The person to whom he was referring, Charles McMonagle, was carrying a First Aid bag and, as the photographs of him show, he was quite obviously a First Aider. However, Lance Corporal V was seeking to justify his assault on him by suggesting that he believed him to be a member of an organisation of rioters or possibly terrorists who dressed in uniforms like regular soldiers.

17.8.3.75 In his Eversheds statement, V said his next memory was of hearing a burst of machine gun fire and seeing bullets hit a wall between him and the soldier in front of him. He said it was definitely machinegun fire and because it hit the wall on his left he believed it came from the area of the Rossville Flats. He said it was enemy fire directed at him personally (B821.38 paragraph 2.4.). This was completely at odds with the account given by him in his SA statement where he said that as he was running forward behind S he heard the firing of single shots and saw the spurt of bullets hitting the ground. (B821.12). In other words, the single shots in 1972 became automatic fire in 2000 and bullet strikes to the ground on his right in 1972 became bullets strikes to the wall on his left in 2000.

17.8.3.76 There were also discrepancies about whether and when he heard explosions and when he cocked his rifle. In his RMP statement, the order in which events occurred was that he debussed, then heard the sound of shots, then cocked his weapon and then heard two explosions. (B821.8) In his SA statement he said that just before he debussed he heard the sounds of two explosions, he then cocked his rifle as soon as he debussed and as he was running forward he heard the shots. (B821.12) When asked to explain why he changed the order, he said he had no recollection of making the statement but he accepted that it read as if he had cocked his weapon before he had heard any shots. (Day 333/104/12 to Day 333/104/16). If this was right, he prepared to fire before he had heard anybody firing at him.

17.8.3.77 In his RMP statement, he said "rioters also threw petrol and acid bombs." (B821.8) When he came to make his SA statement, he said that "no petrol bombs were being thrown." (B821.13) When asked why he said this in his RMP statement when it wasn't true, he replied: "I have no idea" (333/108).

17.8.3.78 He also claimed in his oral testimony to the Widgery Tribunal that as he was running along the back wall of Chamberlain Street there were approximately 100 people near the end of the Chamberlain Street wall throwing stones and bricks. (B821.19 to B821.20) However, it is quite apparent from P1015 and 1016, the photographs showing V and S making their way along the back wall towards Rossville Flats, that the crowd was running away, not throwing stones or even facing V.

17.8.3.79 In his RMP statement, he said that firing was taking place at him "from several positions with several different types of weapons." (B821.8) However, he told Lord Widgery that what he heard was high velocity rifle fire coming from the alleyway between Blocks 1 and 2. (B821.19 D-F.) In other words, within the space of a few weeks, he had changed his story from "coming under fire from several positions, form several different types of weapons" to coming under fire from one kind of weapon from one position (Day 333/113/13 to Day 333/113/24).

17.8.3.80 Of course, in none of the photographs do any of the soldiers look as if they are under fire and, as suggested in the civilian evidence, they clearly were not.

17.8.3.81 In his RMP statement, V indicated 5 distinct stages in the incident in which he said he shot a petrol bomber. First, he saw him draw back his right arm. Secondly, he saw him throw a bottle with a fuse attached to it. Thirdly, after the bottle must have been in the air for several seconds, he saw the bottle hit the ground but not exploding. Fourthly, the petrol bomber moved from the crowd. Fifthly, V fired. (B821.8).

17.8.3.82 Even on his own account, therefore, V shot at this alleged petrol bomber after he had thrown his "petrol bomb" and after he had ceased to be a threat. This was pointed out by Counsel to the Inquiry during his oral testimony when V claimed that he shot the petrol bomber because he was "endangering S's life" and it was necessary to shoot him. His only explanation was that it all happened in a flash, (Day 333/66/3 to Day 333/69/2) "in a fraction of a second" (Day 333/128/8 to Day 333/128/12).

17.8.3.83 That was not the account he gave to the RMP or to Mr Heritage when he was interviewed on 5th March 1972. On that occasion, he described the episode in terms which indicated that it was even more protracted than appeared from his RMP statement. After he saw the fuse coming out in mid-air and the bottle landing without exploding, he "kept an eye on the man who had thrown it, as he moved back in the crowd. As soon as the movement of the crowd gave him a clear sight of the man he shot at him" (B821.2) That was the same sequence of events as set out in the RMP statement but in even more clearly separated stages. Mr Heritage asked him if he could see anything in the man's hand. He replied "no, Sir, I can't honestly say that I did".

17.8.3.84 As appears from Mr Heritage's note, Major Bailey intervened and said he wished to discuss the position with Col. Overbury before they proceeded.

Although this must have been a unique experience for Lance Corporal V, he claimed to have no recollection whatsoever of this interview (Day 333/71/24 to Day 333/72/2). He also claimed to have no recollection whatsoever of the meeting that must then have followed between himself and either Col Overbury or Major Bailey or both. (Day 333/131/1 to Day 333/132/19) It will be remembered that Col Overbury claimed to have no recollection of this meeting either. (Day 243/145/14) No one admits having any recollection that this meeting even occurred (when it must have done) or what advice V was given (when he must have been given some).

17.8.3.85 Nor does anyone admit to remembering how V's SA statement came to be made. Contrary to the practice evident from the other written SA statements, this statement did not bear the signature of either the statement-maker or the statement-taker and it was not dated. It is not even known whether it was prepared following a further interview with a member of the Treasury Solicitor's staff or simply presented to the Treasury Solicitor. We do know that Mr Heritage had no further part in the process and did not re-interview this soldier.

17.8.3.86 The advice that V received had a dramatic impact on V's memory of the circumstances in which he shot the "petrol bomber", as appears from his SA statement. In that statement, V gave a completely different account in which he said that "all these events took place almost instantaneously" and he claimed that it was only after he shot the man that he "then realised that he had thrown the bomb before I had shot him." (B821.13) This was the account that was repeated under oath to Lord Widgery. (B821.29).

17.8.3.87 The most striking feature of his Widgery testimony is that, although Senior Counsel to the Tribunal and Senior Counsel for the Army were both involved in the "negotiations" following the admission to Mr Heritage and both were therefore aware of the previous, strikingly inconsistent statements, neither they nor their Juniors (nor indeed Lord Widgery himself) raised this. This could not have been an oversight. The only possible explanation is that Counsel for the Widgery Tribunal and Counsel for the Army agreed in advance that no reference would be made to the account given by V to the RMP and to Mr Heritage.

17.8.3.88 When Soldier V gave his account at the Widgery Tribunal, Mr Underhill asked him: "Did all that happen in a very short space of time?" and V duly provided the necessary answer: "A fraction of a second, Sir". (B821.21 B). He told Mr McSparran that he could not see that the petrol bomb had been thrown before he fired at the bomber. (B821.29 A) When tested about the sequence of events, he gave an account that was so contradictory as to be incoherent and it attracted the intervention of Lord Widgery. Within the space of a few seconds, he said that he saw the fuse burning but did not see it alight and that it was impracticable to shout a warning when he saw the fuse burning on the ground because the bomber still had the bomb in his hand. (ibid) He also told Lord Widgery that the fuse would have been in the bottle when it hit the ground (B821.30 A) although he had told Mr Heritage that it had come out when it was in the air.

17.8.3.89 What is clear is that Lance Corporal V shot the person he intended to shoot (Day 333/146/17 to Day 333/146/22) and that when he shot he was intending to kill that person (Day 333/74/19 to Day 333/74/21). The person he shot was attended by a group of civilians, including a priest (Widgery Transcript at B821.30 G and Day 333/147/5 to Day 334/147/13). Apart from this group, who he said all had white handkerchiefs, V did not remember any other people still in the courtyard of the flats. (Widgery Transcript at B821.22 A) He believed there was no one else lying on the ground in the area (Day 333/148/6 to Day 333/148/11).

17.8.3.90 The scene depicted by Lance Corporal V is, therefore, exactly the same scene described by civilians and depicted in the photographs (starting at EP25.6) of Jackie Duddy being attended by a small group of civilians, including Father Daly, in a courtyard that is otherwise virtually deserted. Soldier V denied the person he shot was the person shown in these photographs, because he did not fit the description of the person he shot at.

(Day 333/150/1 to Day 333/150/3) He insisted that the person he shot was wearing a white shirt and that he shot him in the stomach. No one in the courtyard area was shot in the stomach and it is submitted that Soldier V invented the suggestion that he shot his victim in the stomach and that he had a white shirt in order to distance himself from the shooting of Jackie Duddy.

17.8.3.91 In his list of engagements (B2283.20), Major Loden noted at No. 2: "one petrol bomber at GR 43281679 shot from GR 43291683 apparently killed (car park)" This is clearly a reference to Lance Corporal V's single admitted shot. As appears from the map (OS1.807) on which we have drawn the shots listed by Major Loden, the position of No.2's target matches the position of V's target as depicted in the map attached to his own RMP statement. (B790) The position of the target in each case is close to the position where Jackie Duddy fell.

17.8.3.92 However, when V came to mark up the trajectory photograph (P28), the location of his target had shifted dramatically so that it was now behind the back wall of 36 Chamberlain Street. However, even this shows V firing towards the spot were Jackie Duddy fell, as can be demonstrated if the line representing the trajectory is simply extended to the point where he can be seen in the photographs to have been lying. (P28).

17.8.3.93 Incidentally, as he accepted himself, Soldier V also moved his own position from behind 36 Chamberlain Street to a position close to the fence (Day 333/164/1 to Day 333/164/20). He said he cannot remember why he did that. (Day 333/165/11 to Day 333/165/12).

17.8.3.94 For completion, it should be noted that no one admitted to seeing V firing and V did not admit to seeing the other soldiers firing, except S. Although he was apparently in more or less the same position as S, he did not claim to see the gunman or gunmen allegedly seen by S on four different occasions. He did not mention anything about seeing S firing or seeing S's targets in his first statement. In his SA statement, he said he saw S returning fire in the direction of the gap between Blocks 1 and 2 but all he saw was "flashes coming from that direction". He did not hear shots or see a gunman. (B821.13 and at Widgery, B821.21).

17.8.3.95 It is in these circumstances that we respectfully submit that the evidence supports the propositions that:

(i) Soldier V is a dishonest and unreliable witness who fabricated his description of the person he shot, the way in which he shot him and the reasons for which he shot him.

(ii) The person he shot was Jackie Duddy.

(iii) He intended to kill that person.

(iv) There was no justification for shooting Jackie Duddy.

(v) Lance Corporal V therefore murdered Jackie Duddy.

Private Q

17.8.3.96 In summary, Private Q deployed to the east corner of the northern end of Block 1. He claimed to have seen a person throw a nail bomb from the junction of Blocks 2 and 3 to within 10 yards of Pig 2, i.e. a distance of 60 –70 yards, where it exploded. He fired one round and hit him in the chest.

17.8.3.97 In his Eversheds statement, he said he could hear the crack and thump of incoming fire over his head. (B657.3 paragraph 18) During his oral testimony to this Tribunal, he said that when he referred to the "crack and thump" of incoming fire he meant high velocity fire. (Day 339/18/13 to Day 339/18/16) However, at the Widgery Tribunal, he emphatically said on more than one occasion that the firing he heard was not high velocity but low velocity. (B636, B642E and B650)

17.8.3.98 He told this Tribunal that apart from that firing, he was not aware of any other fire during the course of the day. (Day 339/20/21 to Day 339/20/24) However, he had said in his Eversheds statement that before he shot the nail bomber he heard "a mixture of high and low velocity incoming fire." (B657.5 paragraph 29) When it was put to him that that could not be right in the light of what he had told the Tribunal, he said he was "just confused." (Day 339/21/2 to Day 339/21/9)

17.8.3.99 He told this Tribunal that when he talked about incoming fire he meant that fire was being directed towards him and towards the other soldiers that were there. However, he had told the Widgery Tribunal that he did not know from which direction the shots had come or where they landed, (B657.27 F) Nevertheless, he insisted that rounds were being fired at him and at the soldiers near him. (Day 339/72/7 to Day 339/72/9) He said he was sure about this and he was on oath. What he had said on oath to Lord Widgery was: "I never heard any shots fired at me at all". He was then asked: "Throughout the whole of the period you were concerned with the operation, you were not conscious of being fired on at any time?" He answered: "No". (B657.35 B).

17.8.3.100 When these passages were put to him he then said he was "talking in a personal context," meaning that he was only talking in those passages about shots being fired at him personally and that what he had meant was that there were shots fired at "other soldiers near [him]". (Day 339/74/3 to Day 339/74/8) He was then shown the next page of the Widgery Transcript, where he was asked the following:

"Q. During the whole of the period you were there, there were a number of other men who were in that vehicle also operating about that area?

A. Yes.

Q. You were not conscious of any firing directed at you or them during that period?

A. No, Sir" (B657.36 A – B)

17.8.3.101 He accepted that he was there talking not just about himself but the men with him and when asked for an explanation he said he could not give one. (Day 339/74/25 to Day 339/75/4) He accepted that the impression given in his testimony to Widgery was that he came under no incoming fire. When asked why he gave that impression if it was not true, he replied: "It was not an intentional lie". Eventually, he accepted that the accounts given to Lord Widgery and this Tribunal are "completely opposite". (Day 339/77/2 to Day 339/77/3)

17.8.3.102 In his RMP statement, he said: "As I got out of the vehicle there were stones and bottles being thrown towards our position from where Chamberlain Street runs into the forecourt of the flats". (B657.20) When it was pointed out to him that the vehicle from which he debussed was N's Pig, not O's, and that it had stopped near Eden Place, he accepted that it would not have been possible for him to come under any kind of stone or bottle attack in the way that he described in his statement. (Day 339/67/8 to Day 339/67/17) His explanation was that it was a confusing time. He said he remembered being confused when he made his statement but in his next answer he did not remember being confused when he made that statement. (Day 339/68/3 to Day 339/68/11) He said that by the time he got to the north gable wall of Block 1 he was not being stoned at all (Day 339/69/11 to Day 339/69/14), which corresponded with his statement to Eversheds. (B657.38 paragraph 19) It was then put to him that if he was not being stoned when he got out of his vehicle and if he was not being stoned when he reached the north end of Block 1 it is likely that he was not being stoned at all but he still insisted that he was being stoned by people in the car park.

17.8.3.103 Before taking up position at the east corner of the north gable wall of Block 1 he had gone to the west corner. He did not see anyone fire from the rubble barricade or from anywhere else in Rossville Street towards the Army or throw anything (apart from "rocks"). He claimed not to have seen any soldier fire towards the barricade. (Day 339/29/4 to Day 339/29/8)

17.8.3.104 When questioned by Christopher Clarke QC about the account given by him to the RMP concerning the nail bombs, he accepted that the impression was given that several nail bombs were being thrown so as to land close to the soldiers and that the soldiers were in effect under a nail bomb attack. (Day 339/38/6 to Day 339/38/22) Despite the obvious impression given in that statement that there was more than one nail bomber, Soldier Q refused to accept this. (Day 339/39/4 to Day 339/39/25). However, he accepted that in his account to Lord Widgery he had talked about 4 or 5 nail bombs being thrown. (B636) When asked if he was exaggerating the number of bombs he saw thrown, he said "not intentionally". (Day 339/41/13 to Day 339/41/15)

17.8.3.105 In his Eversheds statement he said that he saw a man throw a nail bomb and it landed in the car park "in among the people" and "it exploded" (B657.4 paragraph 20). In his testimony to this Tribunal he said the noise it made was a very audible crump which must have been heard by the civilians in the carpark and the soldiers who were in or around the Pig that was at the entrance to the carpark. (Day 339/32/1 to Day 339/32/13) He did not see any nails come out of the bomb. (Day 339/32/20 to Day 339/32/24) In other words, it was a nail bomb with no nails. Nor did he see any of the nail bombs smoking or fizzing. He accepted that, according to his RMP statement, the nail bomb must have been thrown about 60 or 70 yards, i.e. about twice the length of the chamber in the Methodist Central Hall. (Day 339/84/10 to Day 339/84/21)

17.8.3.106 There are a number of problems with Soldier Q's account of the nail bombing. First, his own accounts of the number of nail bombs thrown and the number of nail bombers have been at variance with each other. Secondly, the distance which he says the nail bomb was thrown is unlikely, to say the least. Thirdly, although at least one of these nail bombs landed and exploded amongst a group of civilians, no one was injured. Fourthly, the nail bomb that did explode had no nails and none of the nail bombs he saw fizzed or smoked. Fifthly, not one member of his own Platoon and not one of those members of C Company who made their way to the end of Chamberlain Street (towards which Q said in his Widgery evidence one of the bombs had been thrown: B657.18) heard or saw a nail bomb explode in the courtyard. Q's account is patently an invention.

17.8.3.107 Soldier Q did not accept that he was necessarily the person seen at P285 standing at the east corner of the north gable wall of Block 1. However, he agreed that that was certainly where he was standing at the material times (Day 339/82/11 to Day 339/82/19) and it is submitted that it is almost certainly Q seen in the photograph. In other words, he must have seen Jackie Duddy lying on the ground surrounded by a small group of civilians, including a priest, and he must have seen Michael Bridge being shot as he gesticulated towards the soldiers. He had no explanation as to how he could have missed seeing that event occur in an otherwise empty carpark. (Day 339/50/11 to Day 339/50/20)

17.8.3.108 At one stage, INQ 2003, who had a drink problem, tried to suggest that he was Soldier Q and that he had shot Jack Duddy. He told the Tribunal that he pretended to be Q because he understood from soldiers who were there that it was Soldier Q who had shot Jackie Duddy. He said that he did not know who told him that but when asked whether it was Q he said "maybe, yes." (Day 339/53/7 to Day 339/53/23)

17.8.3.109 Without prejudice to our submission that Jackie Duddy was probably shot by Soldier V, it is also possible that he was shot by Soldier Q. We say this for five reasons. First, he was in a position (the east corner of the north gable wall of Block 1) where he could have shot him, although if he did go first to the west corner and stayed there for any length of time he may have arrived at the east corner after Jackie Duddy was shot. Secondly, the suggested trajectory of his shot (from the north-west corner of the courtyard to the south- east corner) is consistent with hitting Jackie Duddy at the point where he fell. Thirdly, his account of the circumstances in which he fired is clearly fabricated so that he must have fired in circumstances and with an effect to which he is not prepared to admit. Fourthly, INQ 2003 was certainly in a position to know from the talk among the men directly involved in Sector 2 who had done what and it does seem logical that if he was trying to pass himself off as the person who shot Jackie Duddy he would have used the cypher of the soldier he understood to have been responsible for that. It would, however, be unwise to place any reliance on 2003's understanding. Fifthly, Q was very confident that he hit his target and he believed that he killed the person he was aiming at. (Day 339/59/22 to Day 339/60/6) 17.8.3.110 With regard to the question whether he saw acid bombs, he told Eversheds that he did not see acid bombs being thrown and he did not see them land. (B657.5 paragraph 30). He had told Lord Widgery that he saw bottles being thrown from the flats, he saw them landing and he saw liquid that he thought was acid coming out of the bottles. (B657.28 F) Nor had he suggested in his RMP statement that he had seen Soldier T with acid on his trousers, as he claimed, (Day 339/80/16 to Day 339/80/18) even though he was discussing acid bombs in that statement.

17.8.3.111 Finally, no other soldier admits to seeing Q fire his shot and Q does not admit to seeing anyone else fire.

INQ1918

17.8.3.112 Private INQ 1918 was Lt N's radio operator in Pig 1. He fired no shots. He did not make an RMP statement but did sign an arrest form in which he claimed that he had arrested Duncan Clarke. He said in the RMP statement form supporting the arrest that he saw the person he now knows to be Duncan Clarke throwing stones at Security Forces. (C1918.9)

17.8.3.113 In his Eversheds statement, INQ 1918 said that he heard incoming fire from behind him and to his left, which would have been from the direction of the William Street/Rossville Street junction.(C1918.2 paragraph 8) He provided a diagram illustrating this. (C1918.5) No one else has suggested that civilians or indeed soldiers were firing from this location. He also claimed to recall hearing a Thompson sub-machine gun at some stage but cannot recall nail bombs and saw no one with weapons. (C1918.3 paragraph 14) In answer to Counsel to the Inquiry, it was "perfectly possible" that he may have imported into his recollection of Bloody Sunday a recollection from another day and that the recollection of a Thompson sub-machine gun could well come from another occasion. (Day 342/101/9 to Day 342/101/11)

17.8.3.114 INQ1918 said that the shots that he heard from behind him were high velocity rounds. He heard "a couple of shots"- it was not an SLR. (C1918.2 paragraph 8). Fire was returned, he said, but he did not know who returned the fire. He only heard SLR's firing. He did not see anyone fire shots and he does not know if it was anyone near him who was returning fire. "SLR fire sends out shock waves and echoes and it is very difficult to tell where it is coming from", he said. (C1918.2 paragraph 9) It should also be remembered that he was wearing headphones and a respirator. (Day 342/102/11 to Day 342/102/13)

17.8.3.115 INQ1918 claimed to have no recollection of seeing or hearing N fire 3 shots even though, as the Chairman pointed out, he was in very close proximity to him at the time. (Day 342/114/12 to Day 342/114/19) It is simply impossible to accept that INQ1918 would not have heard or been aware of his Platoon Commander firing 3 shots within a matter of feet from him. This is yet another witness who preferred to feign memory loss rather than deal with difficult questions about the shots fired by other soldiers.

17.8.3.116 He was supposed to stay close to his Platoon Commander so that he could transmit and receive messages on the radio on his behalf. He accepted that it was possible that he accompanied Lt N when he returned to the wall at the back of Chamberlain Street after depositing the prisoner in the back of the Pig (Day 342/118/2 to Day 342/118/8) but he claimed to have no recollection of what Lt. N did and specifically no recollection of him firing at a man he said was a nail bomber. (Day 342/118/9 to Day 342/118/12)

17.8.3.117 INQ1918 did not recall sending or receiving any transmissions over the radio. (C1918.3 paragraph 16 and Day 342/119/10 to Day 342/119/17)

17.8.3.118 His memory of the day was so poor, he said, that he had "no memory of the whole thing", no memory of discussing it with anyone, no memory of being told that a young man called Jackie Duddy had been shot dead in the courtyard, no memory of being told that other persons had been wounded and not even any idea when he first learned that civilians had been killed and wounded on Bloody Sunday. (Day 342/120/17 to Day 342/120/25)

17.8.3.119 With regard to his own conduct, he said that he would not have snatched the prisoner himself because one cannot do snatch squad duties whilst carrying a radio, so that someone else must have snatched the prisoner and handed him to him. (C1918.4 paragraph 20) When asked to explain how he could have come to make a statement in which he said he was part of a snatch squad and arrested someone for throwing stones, he said he could not remember how "that gentleman turned up and was given to me or what happened to him afterwards". (Day 342/96/4 to Day 342/96/11) Even on his own account, therefore, it is likely that INQ1918 had not seen Duncan Clarke throwing stones and had not arrested him but had simply received him from another soldier, so that his statement to the RMP was false.

17.8.3.120 Fortunately, we have the independent evidence of the photographs (especially P273) and of Jeffrey Morris, who was working for the Daily Mail. In the statement made by Mr Morris in1972, he said that the soldier with the respirator in P273 (i.e. 1918) was one of 2 paratroopers who forced him against a wall with a rifle across his neck and kicked him on the thigh. (M57.2 paragraph 5). He then saw INQ1918 hit Duncan Clarke on the head with his rifle butt.

17.8.3.121 Corporal 162 deployed in the Eden Place/Chamberlain St area, according to his RMP statement, but then ran along the wall at the back of Chamberlain Street where he met O, took a prisoner from him and returned to his Pig. He fired no shots.

17.8.3.122 In his Eversheds statement, he claimed to have heard automatic fire as he got out of his Pig. His explanation of this is tentative and confusing. He said he heard what he "believed" to be automatic fire. Reference to his belief was not meant to imply a degree of doubt, he said. (Day 323/212/7 to Day 323/212/25). In his Eversheds statement he explained that the fire came "from my right in front of the Pig" (B1962.3 paragraph 17) which would suggest a location towards Eden Place/Chamberlain Street but he said later in the same paragraph that it came from Rossville Flats or Rossville Street area (i.e. directly behind the Pig) and repeated this in his oral testimony. (Day 323/217/19 to Day 323/218/6)

17.8.3.123 In the same paragraph, he said "I do not know who fired, from where or who they were firing at", which is also difficult to reconcile with the suggestion that it came from Rossville Flats or anywhere in particular. When it was suggested to him that he had really no idea where this alleged automatic fire was coming from, he said "No, absolutely, although it was on my right" (Day 323/221/8 to Day 323/221/9). He also said in his Eversheds statement (B1962.3 paragraph 17) that the firing was not an immediate threat to him, which suggests that it was not incoming fire, but that it made him "go to the left hand side of the vehicle, i.e. close to the wall at the back of the terraced houses". The left hand side of the vehicle was facing towards Rossville Street, away from the walls at the back of the houses.

17.8.3.124 However, Corporal 162's claim to have heard automatic fire is undermined principally by the fact that he made no reference in his RMP statement to hearing such fire or indeed any fire at all. If he had heard any civilian gunfire, this is exactly the kind of detail that would have been welcomed by the RMP. He could not explain why he made no reference in his 1972 statement to hearing any gunfire. (Day 323/213/1 to Day 323/213/21)

17.8.3.125 Corporal 162 deployed initially to Eden Place but he claimed not to have witnessed Lt. N's shooting. Indeed, he even claimed that he did not even know that Lt N had fired at all until he was told by counsel during his oral Testimony. (Day 323/218/13 to Day 323/218/15 and Day 323/225/17 to Day 323/226/3)

17.8.3.126 The only offensive action on the part of civilians referred to in his RMP statement was that of a man throwing a metal stake at him (an incident he no longer remembers) and people throwing stones and bottles. Incidentally, he said that he ran towards the alleyway which runs between Eden Place and Chamberlain Street to "try to arrest these people who were throwing stones and bottles in Rossville Flats forecourt" (B1962.7), which is of course in a different direction. He now accepts that he did not in fact see people throwing stones and bottles and that by the time he had got out of his vehicle people were running away. (Day 323/186/6 to Day 323/186/11) When asked why, if he had not seen people throwing stones and bottles, he signed a statement to this effect, he said that came from Military Police, not him. (Day 323/187/3 to Day 323/187/7) In other words, he signed a statement that, in this respect at least, was false.

17.8.3.127 It is submitted that the rest of his evidence to this Tribunal is false insofar as he claims to have heard civilian gunfire or to have been unaware of the shooting by other soldiers. He said that, apart from the automatic fire, "there was certainly no other specific shots which made me look up or look in any particular direction. I never saw any particular individual shooting and neither did I see anyone shooting at me." (B1962.3 paragraph 19) This is a soldier who made his way towards Sergeant O's

Pig at a sufficiently early stage, according to his account, to be able to take custody of the civilian (William Doherty) arrested by Sergeant O, who claims not to have started firing before this point.

17.8.3.128 Mr Doherty would appear to have been put into Lt. N's Pig by Corporal 162. It is therefore probably Corporal 162 who struck him in the face with the butt of his rifle, as described by Mr Doherty (AD113.1 paragraph 5).

17.8.3.129 Corporal 162 admitted that he had spoken to Neil Davies of Praxis (B1962.6 paragraph 35 and Day 323/199/13 to Day 323/200/1). He recognised the transcripts at O23.1 et seq and O24.1 et seq as reflecting conversations he had on two occasions with Mr Davis (Day 323/203/3 to Day 323/211/17). The one thing he apparently did not want to talk about was Bloody Sunday because "that was something in my past and that is the end of it" (Day 323/232/16 to Day 323/232/24). He denied that Attachment 5 to his statement (B1962.12 to B1962.15) was a transcript of any discussion he had with Neil Davies. (B1962.6 paragraph 36) In this attachment, the soldier talked about having almost a free hand, laughing at the "Yellow Card System", getting away with murder, using dirty tactics, ruling by fear and things getting out of hand. With regard to Bloody Sunday, the soldier suggested that Lt. N's "warning shot" set everybody off and "the lads starting firing", "some of those guys even fired from the hip".

17.8.3.130 Whether or not the soldier giving that interview was Corporal 162, he was certainly a member of Mortar Platoon and, it is submitted, the real reason why 162 claims not to have seen anything is because what he saw and witnessed is reflected in the contents of Attachment 5.

17.8.3.131 Soldier 019 was one of the two soldiers in Pig 1 with a baton gun. He has identified himself in P1016 as the soldier at the corner opposite Lt. N. He said in his RMP statement that he heard 3-5 shots from Rossville Flats before N fired. He also saw someone cutting Private T's denims off after he was hit with an acid bomb. He did not make any arrests or see any arrests. He said he fired no live rounds. Although he denied it, he is undoubtedly the subject of Praxis interviews transcribed at O.27, O.28 and O.29 in which, among other things, he discussed the "dirty tactics" and "set-up situations" in which they engaged and in which he said that on Bloody Sunday Lt. N fired first.

17.8.3.132 We say that Soldier 019 is the source of the comments recorded in these transcripts for the following reasons. First, one of the producers of the Praxis programme has already testified under oath that 019 was the source for one of the interviews and the other two are clearly interviews with the same person. Secondly, his own counsel had previously told the Tribunal that he was the source for some of the transcript and he admitted that he had given his counsel instructions to that effect. Thirdly, he, and only he, fits the profile of the interviewee. It could not be anyone else. Fourthly, the interview was conducted by a former paratrooper who actually served with 019 in Mortar Platoon so that he could hardly be fooled by an impostor pretending to be 019 in the sense of claiming the role, responsibilities and experiences of 019 on the day. We shall deal with each of these in turn.

17.8.3.133 The transcripts in question were prepared for the purposes of a documentary made by John Goddard, Tony Stark and Neil Davies for Praxis Films, who were commissioned by Channel 4 for the purpose. In his Eversheds statement (M86.11 paragraphs 35 to 36), Mr Goddard said that he recalled the name of the interviewee recorded in transcript O.27 but he was unable to identify him because he was given an undertaking of confidentiality. When Mr Goddard came to give his oral testimony, he was informed by Counsel to the Tribunal that 019 had released him from any obligation of confidentiality and he was asked to confirm whether he was the person to whom the transcript at O.27 related. After a short discussion about the fact that 019 shared the same Christian name as

Corporal 162, he confirmed that it was 019. (Day 233/134/15 to Day 233/134/25)

17.8.3.134 During the testimony of Mr Goddard, his own senior counsel, when invited to confirm his instructions in this matter, said:

> ".. .. Soldier 019 believes that [O27.1] must represent part of the conversation he had, but may I say he has considerable reservations about the way it is recorded and the language which he is supposed to have used". (Day 233/119/9 to Day 233/119/13)

The interviewee in O.27 is clearly the same as the interviewee in O.28 and O.29. This is clear because the details given of the role and experience of the interviewee in the three transcripts correspond, not to mention the repetition of certain points and even terminology. We refer to the three transcripts for the full terms and effects thereof. By way of example, the interviewee in O.27 says that he was armed with a baton gun; he did not fire himself; he did not see a target; he was with the Platoon Commander; the Platoon Commander fired first; the empty cases passed over his (the interviewee's) head; the world collapsed around them; and lots of careers were ruined that day. The interviewee in O.28 said that he did not fire a bullet; he did not see any targets; he was with the Platoon Commander; he was right by the Platoon Commander; the Platoon Commander fired first; the cartridges whistled past his head; and careers were ruined. The interviewee in O.29 said that he did not fire himself; he did not see any targets; he was right by N; N started firing first; the cases were flying right by his head; the world collapsed around them; and lots of careers were ruined that day.

17.8.3.135 Apart from the details of 019's own experience on Bloody Sunday, details of the general conduct of paratroopers in Northern Ireland appear in O.28 and O.29. A number of them correspond, for example about the "set-up" situations and private supplies of ammunition.

17.8.3.136 The interviewee in these transcripts was a member of Mortar Platoon, he was in Lt. N's Pig, he was armed only with a baton gun, he was beside Lt.

N when Lt. N fired at the junction of Eden Place/Chamberlain Street and he had a recollection of seeing Soldier T having his denims cut off. These details are extensive, specific and unique to Soldier 019.

17.8.3.137 The interviews were conducted by Neil Davies, a former member of the Mortar Platoon who served with 019 in Aden. (Day 343/94/6 to Day 343/94/17) Mr Davies was the main contact with the paratroopers interviewed for the programme and he interviewed many of them himself. It can be assumed that he was familiar not only with 019's role on Bloody Sunday but also with the role of others in the same Platoon. It is inconceivable that he could have been fooled by an impostor.

17.8.3.138 Despite having all these matters put to him, 019 persisted in denying that he was the source of any of the material in the transcripts.

17.8.3.139 We repeat the requests made at the conclusion of his oral testimony that the Tribunal should consider referring this matter to the DPP with a view to prosecuting this witness for perjury. He is clearly not the only soldier who committed perjury either at the Widgery Tribunal or at this Tribunal. However, he was perhaps the most blatant offender.

17.8.3.140 Among the most relevant facts and contentions advanced by Soldier 019 in the course of these interviews are the following:

(i) You have got to be a "psycho" to get into the Paras. They use maximum violence in minimum time. They are "like Tyson in the ring – dominate, sort out, people then behave themselves, unpredictable, kick shit out of 'em."

(ii) The Paratroopers engaged in dirty tactics and had contempt for the Yellow Card.

(iii) The Paratroopers engaged in "set-up situations", including planting firearms or explosives to procure wrongful arrests and convictions, murdering civilians and fabricating evidence to cover up such unlawful activity.

(iv) They all carried extra, private supplies of ammunition and ignored the rules about ammunition.

(v) On Bloody Sunday, Lt. N fired first, "he had lost it", the shooting then started.

(vi) There was a "cover up" after Bloody Sunday.

17.8.3.141 By virtue of 019's refusal to admit that he gave these interviews, the Tribunal was unable to explore them further and was therefore seriously impeded in its search for the truth about Bloody Sunday.

17.8.3.142 Bearing the contents of his Praxis interview in mind, the Tribunal can safely disregard the account given by 019 to the RMP in 1972 insofar as he suggested he heard civilian gunfire from Rossville Flats and that he heard these shots before Lt N fired.

17.8.3.143 With regard to his claim that the crowd started to advance on himself and Lt. N throwing perhaps dozens of bottles, photographs P272 and P273 reveal no evidence of the bottles that 019 says were landing near him and breaking. (Day 343/170/10 to Day 343/171/14)

17.8.3.144 The Tribunal can also reject his evidence that he does not remember firing any rubber bullets and was not even aware of the practice of modifying rubber bullets (Day 343/173/7 to Day 343/174/12). Soldier 019 might have been one of the two soldiers who attacked Jeffrey Morris. As one of only four members of Mortar Platoon with a baton gun and as the person who took William Doherty into custody, he may also have been the soldier who fired his baton gun at point blank range and hit Mr Doherty when Mr Doherty was sitting in the Pig. (AD.113.3) He may also have fired a rubber bullet into Duncan Clarke's face when he was in the back of the same Pig. (AC61.1) One of these incidents was witnessed by Captain 200, the Composite Platoon Commander, who said that he saw a soldier fire a rubber bullet into the back of an APC at point blank range when the APC was parked at the northern end of Block 1. (B1980)

17.8.3.145 Finally, he may have been the soldier who fired the rubber bullet which apparently caused the wound suffered by Patsy McDaid, although we consider that Soldier 13 is the most likely candidate for that.

17.8.3.146 Soldier 112 was armed with a baton gun and fired a number of baton rounds. He said it was only after he had arrested a person and taken him to his Pig that he heard gunfire, including Thompson submachine gun fire. Eamon McAteer was the person said to have been arrested by him but Eamon McAteer was not arrested in Rossville Street. Soldier 112 was one of those who collected the bodies from the rubble barricade.

17.8.3.147 Soldier 112 claimed to have witnessed the drainpipe shot. He recollected that Lt. N climbed up the ladder to his position and asked if anyone had fired a shot. (B1732.3 paragraph 12) When his attention was drawn to Lt. N's claim that his (Lt.N's) immediate reaction was that the crack was an incoming high velocity shot, he said "what I do remember is him waving a rifle and asking did we fire one of these" (Day 320/125/18 to Day 320/125/25), which, if true, tends to undermine Lt N's account.

17.8.3.148 He said that when he fired at those who were rioting in the waste ground after he debussed, he fired "at the group generally as opposed to individual rioters". He was not aiming at anyone in particular. (Day 320/132/19 to Day 320/132/21) He initially accepted that that was not within the rules but when it was pointed out to him that he was then acting outside the rules he said it was within the rules. (Day 320/133/1 to Day 320/133/9)

17.8.3.149 At Fort George, 112 made a statement to the effect that he had seen Eamon McAteer throw stones in Rossville Street and that he had arrested him. (ARR30.3) When it was put to him that he had made that statement when, in fact, he had not seen Mr McAteer throwing stones there at all because he was not in Rossville Street, Soldier 112 replied "that is possible" (Day 320/133/19 to Day 320/133/24). It is submitted that Solider 112 knew perfectly well that he had not seen or arrested Eamon McAteer since Eamon McAteer was, as we know, arrested at the gable end of Glenfada Park North and 112 does not recall going "anywhere near the area of Glenfada Park North". (Day 320/102/5 to Day 320/102/8) Mr McAteer's account of the circumstances in which he was identified by 112 at Fort George should be preferred. (B1732.14) Soldier 112's account of this matter is a complete fabrication, made in circumstances where he would have expected Eamon McAteer to be prosecuted for riotous behaviour and given the mandatory six months prison sentence.

17.8.3.150 Soldier 112 claimed to have heard a mixture of high and low velocity firing. When challenged about this he accepted that, because there were so many thumps and bangs and explosions going on of different kinds, including baton guns, it is possible that what he thought may have been low velocity firing may not have been. (Day 320/135/17 to Day 320/136/1) He could not say whether the high velocity firing was all SLR fire. (Day 320/134/22 to Day 320/134/24)

17.8.3.151 Despite his location at the east corner of the north gable wall of Block 1 and the fact that he was looking into the courtyard, he did not see any soldiers opening fire. (Day 320/136/2 to Day 320/136/19) He did see soldiers in firing positions but he said he could not recognise them, even though he was within a few yards of Sergeant O and must have been standing right beside Q when he fired from the same corner.

17.8.3.152 He claimed to be concentrating most of his attention on the alleyway between Blocks 1 and 2 (Day 320/137/12 to Day 320/137/25) but he did not see anyone firing a gun or carrying a gun in that alley (Day 320/141/15 to Day 320/141/19), which undermines S's account of seeing as many as 4 different gunmen who fired about 13 shots at him from that location.

17.8.3.153 Soldier 112 did not see any gunmen anywhere in the courtyard, or in the block of flats or on the balconies. He denied seeing any civilians lying on the ground in the courtyard. (Day 320/142/13 to Day 320/142/19) Nor did he see any nail bombers or anybody of that kind (Day 320/138/9 to Day 320/138/16), which undermines the evidence of all those soldiers who claimed to have shot at gunmen and nail bombers there.

17.8.3.154 Although he was one of only 4 soldiers with baton guns in the courtyard area, he denied that he fired across the courtyard and did not see anyone else firing baton rounds across it to the location where Patsy McDaid was hit. (Day 320/144/14 to Day 320/144/23) Soldier 112 used a baton gun most of the time during his service in Northern Ireland from 1970 until Bloody Sunday but he said that he had never even heard tell of baton rounds being modified by the insertion of batteries or in any other way. (Day 320/143/7 to Day 320/144/13).

17.8.3.155 In his Eversheds statement, he described seeing the hand of a person holding a gun appear from a second floor window of Block 1 but he conceded during his oral testimony that it is possible he did not in fact see that. (Day 320/116/4 to Day 320/116/11) He said that maybe his memory was playing tricks with him but he denied inventing the account, which in our submission he clearly did. (Day 320/145/5 to Day 320/145/16).

17.8.3.156 He was challenged about gunfire that he claimed in his Eversheds statement to have heard which he had not claimed in his 1972 statement to have heard. It was suggested to him that as time has gone by he could have remembered hearing and seeing more than he actually did hear and see, to which he replied: "I could have imagined it". (Day 320/145/17 to Day 320/146/7)

17.8.3.157 As far as the suggestion in his RMP statement (B1730) that he had heard a Thompson sub-machine gun is concerned, he said it was possible that this was put in at the suggestion or prompting of someone in the RMP. (Day 320/149/21 to Day 320/150/2)

17.8.3.158 Soldier 112 was involved in removing the bodies from the rubble barricade. He said that he had no recollection of feeling under threat as he did that and no concerns about being fired upon (Day 320/146/23 to Day 320/147/3), which tends to confirm that there was no firing going on at that stage. He said he did not search either the bodies or the barricade for weapons or nail bombs because he did not expect to see any. (Day 320/147/4 to Day 320/147/10)

17.8.3.159 He did not expect to see any, it is submitted, because he knew perfectly well that there were no civilians either in the courtyard or in Rossville Street throwing bombs or firing weapons at soldiers.

Sergeant O's Pig

17.8.3.160 Sergeant O was in charge of Pig 2. He made three RMP statements. In the first, he said that there were 9 members of his section in the Pig, 7 with SLR's and 2 with anti-riot guns. When he got out of the Pig he arrested William Doherty. He did not hear the sounds of any shots until after this arrest was made. He claims he came under fire from about 4 or 5 weapons of mixed calibre.

17.8.3.161 According to his account, he fired 3 shots at and hit a man with a pistol behind a Cortina close to the junction of Blocks 2 and 3; he fired 2 (sic) shots at a man with an M1 carbine on the first floor veranda between Blocks 2 and 3 and hit him in the head; and he fired 2 shots at a third gunman on the ground floor between Blocks 2 and 3 who was carrying an M1 carbine. He said that troops were stoned, bottled and petrol bombed.

17.8.3.162 In his second RMP statement made two days later, presumably when he realised he had fired 8 shots instead of 7, he said that he had fired an additional shot at the gunman on the first floor balcony in Block 3. In his third RMP statement on the 15th February, he added that he had ordered T to shoot an acid bomber if he threw another acid bomb from the second floor balcony of Block 1. He didn't see T shoot but heard him fire 2 shots.

17.8.3.163 Sergeant O was a Scottish Protestant. He agreed that Scotland has the same sort of problems with religious bigotry and sectarian hatred as Northern Ireland, albeit on a smaller scale and that there would be Scottish Protestants who would have sympathies with Ulster loyalists (Day 335/140/3 to Day 335/140/12). However he said that he "would not know whether a lot of Scottish Protestants have a deep antagonism towards Irish Catholics or whether a lot of soldiers are drawn from areas, such as the housing estates of Glasgow, where that kind of problem exists" (Day 335/140/16 to Day 335/140/25). He said: "there is no reason to talk to the soldiers about what their attitude is about, what their bigotry is and so on". (Day 335/141/12 to Day 335/141/15) When it was suggested to him that soldiers would not leave their attitudes at home when they joined the Army, he said: "I never seen any traces of bigotry within any Platoon I have commanded .. .. I have never come across it" (Day 335/141/16 to Day 335/141/24)

17.8.3.164 He denied that there was even a perception in 1972 that the Paras had a strong Scottish/Protestant element. (Day 335/142/3 to Day 335/142/8). However, that was the evidence of the Parachute Regiment's own Regimental Sergeant Major, INQ2037, who said: "There have been lots of comments that the Army was anti-Catholic. This was not the case. The press made a big thing about the fact that there was a high percentage of Scots in the Paras and most of them were Protestants. We did not hate Catholics". (C2037.6 paragraph 31).

17.8.3.165 When this was put to Sergeant O he said he was not aware of such a perception. He didn't even know there was a high percentage of Scottish Protestants in the Parachute Regiment because he had no idea what religion people were. They never talked about politics. They did talk about football but he said he would not know who the Rangers supporters were or, if there were any, the Celtic supporters (Day 335/143/13 to Day 335/143/23). INQ 2003 said that Sergeant O was a "real true blue Loyalist" and used to sing the Sash on occasions. When Sergeant O was reminded that 5 of the 7 or 8 NCO's in the Sergeants' Mess during the Thames TV interview were Scottish, he said "maybe you just hit us on a bad night" (Day 335/145/8 to Day 335/145/11).

17.8.3.166 Sergeant O denied that he was a sectarian, anti-Irish racist. However, during an interview with the Praxis producers, he said: "I do not particularly like the Irish race because of what they have done to themselves" (B575.62). He said that was not an expression of racism, that was "because what the Irish race are doing to themselves. Not every member of the Irish drop into that category". (Day 335/148/10 to Day 335/148/14).

17.8.3.167 Referring to the use of the term "Fenian" as a term of anti-Catholic abuse, he said that none of his soldiers would say that sort of thing. (Day 335/145/18 to Day 335/146/4) However, Dr McDermott gave evidence about how his children had been playing in Springham Street near the Paras' forming-up point at Clarence Avenue and soldiers had chased them inside, calling them "Fenian fuckers" (AM5.1 paragraph 3). Sergeant O had himself dealt with at least one complaint made by a local resident about the presence of the Paras in that area so he may very well have been in charge of these soldiers in the absence of officers on a reconnaissance mission.

17.8.3.168 Sergeant O objected to the No Go area in Derry (Day 335/154/12 to Day 335/154/13) and he described how "generally, the men's view seemed to be that this [going to Derry on Bloody Sunday] was a chance to sort out the Londonderry hooligans, who we had all seen on TV." (B571.108 paragraph 12) It is submitted that Sergeant O and others in the Parachute Regiment were of the view that Catholic civilians could be shot with impunity. He claimed that he was not even aware that, in one incident alone in August 1971, 5 Catholic civilians, including a priest, had been shot dead by members of the Parachute Regiment. (Day 335/157/8 to Day 335/157/13).

17.8.3.169 Sergeant O claimed to have heard the drainpipe shot and told Lord Widgery that it came from inside the Bogside (B472 E) but he had no idea where the shot had come from. (Day 336/1/9 to Day 336/1/10). He even told the Praxis interviewers that it "could have been the British Army." (B575.70)

17.8.3.170 He suggested in his RMP statement that there were about 2000 people rioting at the junction of Rossville Street and William Street (B575.137 and Day 336/5/2 to Day 336/5/9). That was clearly a gross exaggeration and during his oral testimony he said that the bulk of the crowd was between the rubble barricade and Free Derry Corner. (Day 335/25/12 to Day 335/25/14) The explanation was that Sergeant O did not see any distinction between rioters and marchers, as he admitted himself, although he suggested that this was only until he moved forward and realised where he was. (Day 336/5/14 to Day 336/5/17)

17.8.3.171 Sergeant O cocked his rifle in the Pig before going through Barrier 12 and believes the rest of the men followed suit. (B757.110 paragraph 23) This was in breach of the Yellow Card (ED.71.1), which provides at paragraph 4 that "unless you are about to open fire no live round is to be carried in the breech". Company Commanders and above may order weapons to be cocked as appropriate. Even if Lt. N authorised this (and he denies this), he was not O's Company Commander. There is no suggestion that Major Loden ordered or authorised soldiers to cock their weapons.

17.8.3.172 Sergeant O was unaware of the instruction not to conduct running battles down Rossville Street and claimed not to be aware of any danger in becoming involved in driving through a crowd and jumping out with cocked weapons in the midst of the crowd. (Day 336/9/15 to Day 336/9/24) Incidentally, he admitted that it was possible that Alana Burke was knocked over by his Pig and he may not have seen it. (Day 335/27/17 to Day 335/27/23)

17.8.3.173 He claimed that they managed to separate a section of about 200 people between the two Pigs (B575.137, B575.112 paragraph 31, and Day 335/31/17 to Day 335/31/24) but he later admitted that he had no idea of the size of the crowd between his own Pig and Lt. N's Pig. (Day 336/13/22 to Day 336/14/5)

17.8.3.174 When he got out of the Pig he was carrying his SLR, not a baton, but he told the Praxis interviewers that all he had was a baton and was totally unarmed (B575.2). When it was suggested that he had told a deliberate lie, he said: "I do not know how it came up in the concept it did honestly .. ... what I said was wrong, there is no doubt about it .. ... It was not meant as a lie .. .. it was statements I made and it turned out they were wrong." (Day 336/15/21 to Day 336/16/24) When it was suggested that he had been trying to give the interviewers a false impression, he said: "I do not know what I was trying to do quite honestly".

17.8.3.175 He also told the Praxis interviewers that the Paras did not carry masks "because they did not believe in them". (B575.3) However, as appears from a number of photographs, the Paras did carry gas masks and did wear them, including Sergeant O himself (B575.111 paragraph 26, and Day 336/17/22 to Day 336/117/24). His explanation for this lie was: "We did not carry gas masks on us, on our actual bodies, the gas masks were in the Pigs". (Day 336/18/8 to Day 336/18/9) He denied that he was trying to give the interviewer the impression that he was not wearing a gas mask (Day 336/18/22 to Day 336/18/24).

17.8.3.176 Shortly after he got out of his Pig, Sergeant O set upon William Doherty, a 56 year old bystander who was trying to make his way to safety. By his own admission, Sergeant O hit Mr Doherty on the head with his rifle by using the rifle as if it were a baton with such severity that the plastic stock of the rifle shattered. (Day 335/34/1 to Day 335/34/13) He accepted that the wound on Mr Doherty's head as seen in photograph ARR16.1 was the result of him hitting Mr Doherty. (Day 335/34/14 to Day 335/34/24) It is clear from the civilian evidence that, as soon as he debussed, Sergeant O

"immediately turned his rifle upside down and started using it like a baseball bat, clubbing people who were running past" (AM152.2 paragraph 9 per John McCrudden) and that when he grabbed Mr Doherty he beat him repeatedly with the rifle. (per William Barber AB9.2, Charles Glenn AG43.3 paragraph 21 and Patrick McCrudden AM153.12)

17.8.3.177 With regard to the first shots that Sergeant O claimed to hear, he claimed to see bullet strikes on the wall at the back of 36 Chamberlain Street and also on the ground between the wall and the Pig. Unfortunately for him, he gave different accounts on different occasions of when and in what circumstances these occurred (Day 335/50/2 to Day 335/53, Day 336/21/24 to Day 336/23/21 and Day 336/138/4 to Day 336/138/22). If these bullet strikes had really occurred it would have been difficult to remember such details as the order in which they occurred. Sergeant O's problem was that they did not occur at all but he was inventing detail to give a convincing account and then could not remember the details he had invented.

17.8.3.178 He told the Tribunal that he was next to the front left wheel of the Pig when the firing started (Day 336/23/23 to Day 336/24/5) but said in his RMP statement that when the firing started he was positioned at the rear of the vehicle (B575.138). When this was pointed out to him, he said: "The Humber is not exactly, you know, one hundred yards long, it is a very small vehicle, you have – 4 or 5 yards covers it, I was in that area. I could not give you the exact position obviously" (Day 336/24/6 to Day 336/24/14). However, he had tried to give the exact position and the reason he told the RMP that he was at the back of the vehicle was presumably to explain why he was not hit by the burst of firing from 4 or 5 different weapons. The third account was given in his oral testimony to Lord Widgery, when he said that he was "moving back to the vehicle" when he came under fire (B475 E)

17.8.3.179 It is submitted that he gave three different accounts of when he came under fire because he never came under fire at all and therefore had to invent a recollection of where he was when this happened. If he had really come under such heavy fire, one of the things he would have remembered would have been where he was at the time it started and, in particular, whether he was out in open wasteground without cover or at the front of his vehicle facing what he claims to have been was the source of the firing or under cover at the back of his vehicle.

17.8.3.180 With regard to the "4 or 5 weapons" and the "mixture of high velocity and low velocity fire", (Day 335/47/2 to Day 335/47/14) this account was of course fictitious and he could not always remember the details he had invented. He told the Tribunal that he was not aware of any automatic fire (Day 335/48/2 to Day 335/48/10) but when asked by the Praxis interviewers whether he had any idea what sort of weapons might have been responsible for the 10 round burst that he claimed to have heard, he said "automatic, that is all I will say". (B575.74). When this discrepancy was put to him, he said that "it was wrong" and he could not remember saying that to them (Day 335/49/17 to Day 335/49/24). This was a recurring problem for Sergeant O.

17.8.3.181 When the firing started, Sergeant O did not even take simple precautions such as taking cover behind the Pig. (Day 336/24/15 to Day 336/24/25) or putting his helmet on - he was bare-headed throughout the shooting which he characterised as "the heaviest I have heard in Northern Ireland". (B575.74)

17.8.3.182 With regard to his first target, it was put to him that, contrary to the location suggested in his trajectory photographs (P21), the Cortina car behind which he claimed to have seen a pistol man was, according to the grid reference (43291678) given by him in his RMP statement (B575.138), in line with the gap between Blocks 2 and 3. That was also the location suggested by Mr Martin Tucker (AT17.5 paragraph 29), who saw soldiers shooting at a car there in a bizarre fashion.

17.8.3.183 Sergeant O accepted that he was firing in this direction and that he was therefore firing in the direction of people who were trying to exit the courtyard (Day 336/28/9 to Day 336/28/15). He said he was firing like that because someone was firing at him and he was trying to save his life even though he accepted that he could have saved his life by simply stepping behind the Pig. (Day 336/28/16 to Day 336/28/22) At one stage he suggested he was not conscious of civilians being in the area, then he accepted that he was perfectly well aware of them. (Day 336/29/1 to Day 336/29/10) When it was put to him that he was firing without regard for the welfare of civilians, he said: "that never entered my mind". (Day 336/29/15 to Day 336/29/25) When asked if he made any judgement about whether or not civilians might be endangered by his firing, he said "I did not think about that at the time". (Day 336/30/4 to Day 336/30/8) Put another way, he was shooting with impunity.

17.8.3.184 Nor did he see it as part of his responsibility to monitor the firing by other soldiers, especially more junior soldiers in his Platoon who were nearby. (Day 336/31/18 to Day 336/31/21)

17.8.3.185 Soldier T said he was about 3 feet behind O at this stage looking in the same direction in which Sergeant O was firing but he said he could not see what he was firing at. (B736 and B745 B-F)

17.8.3.186 Sergeant O's account of the reactions of the alleged pistol man behind the car is also difficult to accept at face value. He says that the gunman did not take cover or duck behind a wall or do anything else to avoid being shot when Sergeant O "returned" fire. The "gunman" stood there exposed and firing his handgun until he was shot (Day 336/36/10 to Day 336/36/20).

17.8.3.187 Sergeant O had difficulty with the location of his second "target". In his RMP statement, he had suggested the gunman was on the walkway between Blocks 1 and 2 (B441). He repeated this in his RMP statement (B575.141) and in his Treasury Solicitor's statement (B575.147 paragraphs 12 to 13). Also, when he gave his evidence to Lord Widgery, he specified that the second gunman was on the lowest of the two adjoining catwalks in between Blocks 2 and 3 (B478 D). However, as appears in P292, this walkway was completely enclosed. When this was put to him, he said: "Looking at this I was obviously mistaken in where I thought the gunman was, I think the gunman was on the balcony, on the corner" (Day 336/43/20 to Day 336/43/22).

17.8.3.188 He clearly realised this problem before he made his Eversheds statement because there, for the first time, he suggested that the gunman was on the balcony at the southern end of Block 3 (B575.115 paragraph 49). He recognised the difference himself (Day 336/39/3 to Day 336/39/9). When it was first put to him that when he had made his first RMP statement he was clearly talking about the walkway between the two blocks, his reply had been: "I can see how that can be misinterpreted there, yes". (Day 336/37/23 to Day 336/38/1)

17.8.3.189 It was clear that he altered his account for the purposes of the Eversheds statement after he had seen photographs of the walkway and balcony. In his statement, he referred to the description in the first RMP statement of the gunman on the veranda between Blocks 2 and 3 and went on: "Having now looked carefully at a photograph of the Rossville Flats, I have identified that the veranda or balcony was actually towards the south end of Block 3 of the Rossville Flats, not on the walkway between Blocks 2 and 3". (B575.123 paragraph 93) However, that alteration was not enough to remedy the problem for O.

17.8.3.190 As appears from P280, below the "balustrade" there are individual railings between which are gaps, so that it is perfectly possible to see right down to the floor of the balcony. In other words, people moving along the balcony were visible down to their feet, so that the picture painted by Sergeant O of heads bobbing up and down above the balustrade level (with their bodies otherwise hidden behind some kind of solid screen) did not correspond with reality and must have been invented. When this was put to sergeant

O, he adhered to his account and said : "All I could see of them was parts of their heads above the balcony rail; that is the impression I still have in my mind". (Day 336/44/25 to Day 336/45/3)

17.8.3.191 During these incidents, Sergeant O claimed that his section was under "constant small arms fire from several positions in the Rossville Flats area". (B441) During his testimony he said that between 60 and 120 rounds could have been fired at him. (Day 336/47/8 to Day 336/47/11) We know that no soldiers were hit by any gunfire but, in addition, Sergeant O and at least two other soldiers were beside the Pig during this period and even the Pig does not appear to have been hit. Certainly Sergeant O never suggested that it was and there does not appear to have been any damage to the Pig. The windscreen, headlamps, tyres and radiator were all exposed to any incoming gunfire but they remained intact.

17.8.3.192 During this period, O claims to have seen Private S's gunman in the gap between Blocks 1 and 2 and said that there were civilians near the gunman. His attitude towards the safety of civilians is reflected in the exchange between himself and Counsel for the Inquiry, as follows:

"Q. You did not consider retreating to the safety of the pig so as to avoid the risk (a) of either of you being shot and (b) any civilians being shot?
A. You do not retreat, Sir
Q. What, never?
A. There is no reason for it. We had targets and we went for them.
Q. Whatever the risk to civilians?
A. We had targets and we went for the targets.
Q. Regardless of the risk to civilians?
A. We had targets and we went for the targets, that is all I can say." (Day 335/76/6 to Day335/76/17)

17.8.3.193 Sergeant O told the RMP that there were petrol bombs thrown at them (B575.139) but he conceded that he had not seen any petrol bombs. Nor did he see any nail bombs. (Day 336/56/9 to Day 336/56/13) That means that he did not see any of the targets N, Q and R claimed to see. N placed his target in a location where, if he had existed, he would have been virtually within touching distance of Sergeant O. (P20). Soldier Q claimed to shoot at a nail bomber at the junction of Blocks 2 and 3 (P23), which is exactly where O said that, most of the time, he was looking and occasionally firing but during none of that time did he see Q's target. (Day 336/61/6 to Day 336/61/8) Indeed, if Sergeant O is to be believed, neither Q nor N even said to him that they had shot nail bombers in those locations.

17.8.3.194 Sergeant O accepted that the soldier seen in photograph P285 standing against the passenger side of the Pig is probably him. (Day 336/65/18 to Day 336/65/23 and Day 336/68/18 to Day 336/68/20) That soldier looks as if his left hand is resting on the mudguard and it appears that he is looking down the barrel of his rifle in the direction of Michael Bridge. Whether or not he is at that moment looking in that direction, it is quite obvious that anyone in that position could not help but see Jackie Duddy on the ground in the middle of the courtyard surrounded by a group of civilians, including Father Daly, and also Michael Bridge as he gesticulated and shouted at the soldiers around the Pig. Yet he repeatedly denied seeing any of this. (Day 336/68/25 to Day 336/69/5).

17.8.3.195 Sergeant O, it is submitted, was obliged to maintain this in the face of overwhelming evidence to the contrary because he was not prepared to admit that he saw Jackie Duddy, Michael Bridge, Michael Bradley and perhaps even Patsy McDaid shot in circumstances that were completely indefensible.

17.8.3.196 Indeed he was not prepared to admit to any malpractice on the part of soldiers. He even claimed that he had never heard of the practice of soldiers having their own private supply of ammunition. (Day 335/115/9 to Day 335/115/18)

17.8.3.197 It is submitted that what Sergeant O was doing in Sector 2 was engaging in the kind of firing to which he referred himself in his Praxis interview when he talked about "putting ammunition into an area where you know something is happening, just trying to keep people's heads down". (B575.20)

17.8.3.198 When it was put to him towards the end of his examination that he still believed that what the Paras did on Bloody Sunday was not wrong, he replied: "Some of it was wrong, obviously innocent civilians got hit; I've got no doubt about that, but I do not believe that they were hit deliberately". It is submitted that he knew this because of what he had seen himself, not, as he suggested, from what he learned subsequently. (Day 336/73/13 to Day 336/74/1)

17.8.3.199 Having said that some of it was wrong, he was then shown part of his Praxis interview where he had said: "Derry was not wrong .. ... from our point of view, Derry was not wrong. Derry was done by a disciplined force who were caught in a situation where they had to respond". (B575.94). He then said he would "stand by that".

17.8.3.200 Sergeant O knew from the beginning that what happened on Bloody Sunday was wrong, which is why he refused to talk to Praxis about those events (B575.74). Soldier 1413 said that soldiers were told by officers and senior NCO's to "button their lip on this". (O18.4) It is submitted that Sergeant O was probably one of the NCO's who issued that instruction.

17.8.3.201 It was put to Sergeant O that errors of judgement were made by soldiers on Bloody Sunday. He said that he had heard that but he did not know it for a fact. (Day 336/79/1). When it was pointed out to him that this was exactly what he had said himself to the Praxis interviewers (B575.95), he said he could not remember what he was talking about. (Day 336/80/14 to Day 336/80/22)

17.8.3.202 Sergeant O was in charge of the soldiers who took the bodies to Altnagelvin Hospital. Ivan Cooper described how "the soldiers were joking with each other and laughing .. .. the soldiers were jubilant and gave you the impression they were thinking they had busted an IRA unit. One of these soldiers was a Scottish soldier". (KC12.27 paragraph 81) Sergeant O denied that he was the Scottish soldier (Day 336/83/18 to Day 336/83/19) but he later told Counsel to the Tribunal that he was the only Scottish soldier in Mortar Platoon on Bloody Sunday. (Day 336/140/2 to Day 336/140/6) He also thought that this was "a job well done". (Day 336/83/15 to Day 336/83/17) It is submitted that Sergeant O was one of the soldiers joking and laughing as the bodies of John Young, Michael McDaid and Willie Nash were carried to the mortuary.

17.8.3.203 All the evidence points to the conclusion that Sergeant O was a thoroughly dishonest witness who bears a heavy degree of responsibility for the shootings in the Rossville Flats courtyard. Not only did he allow other soldiers to fire unjustifiably at innocent civilians but he himself took the opportunity to spray bullets around the courtyard in much the same way as his hero, John Wayne, might have done in a war film. (Day 336/70/10 to Day 336/70/14)

17.8.3.204 Since his account of his own shooting cannot be accepted, it is impossible to know where and at whom he fired and whether he hit any of the deceased or wounded. However, in addition to the fact that, like all the other soldiers in his platoon, he was acting in concert with them in a joint enterprise, he was the leader of the soldiers in his Pig and actively encouraged the shooting by his own example. On this basis alone, he is criminally responsible for the murder of Jackie Duddy and the wounding of Michael Bridge, Michael Bradley and Patsy McDaid.

Soldier R

17.8.3.205 Private R was an 18 year old soldier designated as the vehicle guard for Pig 2. He was dropped off in Rossville Street and was taken by surprise when the Pig drove on into the carpark. He had to run after it and as he caught up with it he said that he heard a number of shots from about six different weapons. He said he also heard explosions but couldn't say where they came from. According to his first RMP statement, he took up a position at the north-east corner of Block 1 and fired 1 round at a man with a fizzing object in his hand. He claimed a hit. He then fired 2 or 3 rounds at a man with a pistol at the junction of Block 2 and 3. He wasn't sure if he hit him.

17.8.3.206 In his second RMP statement he said that he was actually positioned between the wall and the Pig whenever he fired his first shot. He also added the fact that he had seen O's target behind the Cortina and saw O fire.

17.8.3.207 In his SA statement he said that he fired his shots from the right-hand back door of his Pig, i.e. the third location in as many statements. Acid bombs were thrown at him after he fired, not before as he had previously said in his second RMP statement. As the second acid bomb was thrown, T fired. He did not require medical attention for his acid burns.

17.8.3.208 He then said in his Eversheds statement that, in addition to the high velocity and low velocity incoming fire, he heard Thompson sub-machine gun fire.

In his first RMP statement Private R said that there were "in excess of 800" rioters at the junction of William Street and Rossville Street. (B691.9) He conceded during his oral testimony that he may have made that figure up on the basis of what he heard. (Day 337/85/13 to Day 337/85/25)

17.8.3.209 Private R debussed in Rossville Street. He said in his RMP statement that he heard the sound of shots and cocked his weapon before the Pig drove off again. In his SA statement he said this happened as he ran across the waste ground. (B691.015 paragraph 4) In his Widgery testimony, he first of all said that this happened after going about 10 to 15 yds. (B677 A) but in cross-examination he said it happened after going about 50 yds. (B683 F). In his Eversheds statement, he reverted to suggesting that the incoming fire occurred when he got out of the vehicle and, apparently, before the vehicle moved off. (B691.2 paragraphs 10 to 11)

17.8.3.210 In his first RMP statement he said that the crowd was throwing stones and bottles at him. In his SA statement, he said he was hit twice (B691.15 paragraph 4). He told Lord Widgery he was hit 3 times (B677 D), in the thigh, calf and hip. In his Eversheds statement he said that he was hit in the thigh, calf and head (B691.2 paragraph 12). He told this Tribunal that he knew he had not been hit in the head. (Day 337/91/3 to Day 337/91/16) When asked why he had said that in his Eversheds statement when he knew that he had not been hit in the head, he said "that must have been misinterpreted." (Day 337/91/17 to Day 337/91/21).

17.8.3.211 He said in his first RMP statement that he heard high and low velocity shots from about 6 different weapons. (B691.10). He did not suggest these weapons included or sounded like an M1 carbine, an Armalite, a Thompson submachine gun and a starting pistol. However, this is exactly what he did say in his Eversheds statement. (B61.2 paragraph 10) During his oral testimony, he admitted that he was not able to say what sort of weapons had been responsible for firing those shots because he did not distinguish them at the time and had not heard many such weapons. (Day 337/94/17 to Day 337/95/2)

17.8.3.212 In his first RMP statement he said that after he reached his vehicle in the courtyard he heard explosions (B691.10) and he repeated this in his SA statement. (B691.15 paragraph 5) However, when he got to the Widgery Tribunal, he said that he heard them after about 10 to 15 yds from the point where he debussed from the Pig in Rossville Street (B677). When this was pointed out during his oral testimony to this Tribunal, he accepted that these were completely different accounts of when he heard explosions.

(Day 337/97/16 to Day 337/97/23) He said he "may have been mistaken". (Day 337/96/22 to Day 337/96/25)

17.8.3.213 In his first RMP statement he had said he could not determine the locations of the explosions (B691.10). He agreed that he did not have any idea where the explosions had come from (Day 337/97/3 to Day 337/99/15) but he pointed out a location on the model during the Widgery Tribunal hearing (B677 A), which was somewhere at the "back of the flats".

17.8.3.214 He also gave a variety of accounts about where he himself was when, as he claimed, he noticed the "nail bomber" and fired a shot. First of all, he was at the north east corner of Block 1 (as per the map attached to his 1st RMP statement, B691.11). Then, when he made his second RMP statement (B691.12), he said he was between the wall of Block 1 Rossville Flats and one of the APC's. By the time he made his SA statement, he had decided that he had fired a shot from "beside the right hand back door of the Pig" (B691.015 paragraph 5). He then told Lord Widgery that he noticed the nail bomber when he was "just coming round this corner", i.e. the north east corner of Block 1. (B677 G)

17.8.3.215 In his first RMP statement, he said that the nail bomber was wearing dark slacks (B691.10) but he then told Lord Widgery he was wearing light slacks (B679 A-B).

17.8.3.216 In his first RMP statement he said the nail bomber was running with the crowd and then stopped and attempted to throw the fizzing object (B691.10). In his SA statement he said that the man was "not moving in the same direction as the others" (B691.15 paragraph 5). By the time he came to make his Eversheds statement, the nail bomber was "pressed against the wall" and took a few steps forward from the wall before attempting to throw the object (B691.3 paragraph 14), a version he repeated to the Tribunal (Day 337/32/3 to Day 337/32/5).

17.8.3.217 In his first RMP statement, he said that the nail bomber was thrown "to the right and backwards" by the shot. (B691.10) but he told Eversheds that the bullet hit the man high up on the right shoulder, "causing him to spin around" (B691.3 paragraph 14). Private R accepted that being spun around was not the same as being thrown backwards and to his right (Day 337/110/1 to Day 337/110/23).

17.8.3.218 This was another nail bomb that did not explode (B689 E).

17.8.3.219 He said that rioters threw acid bombs, 1 of which splattered across his legs. (B691.10). This had changed to 2 in his 2nd RMP statement, both of which he said struck him on the legs. (B691.12) He explained to this Tribunal that when he made his first statement to the RMP, he thought he had been hit by 1 acid bomb (Day 337/112/7 to Day 337/112/9), but someone else told him that he had been hit by 2. (Day 337/112/12 to Day 337/112/18). He admitted to the Tribunal that he then gave the impression in all his subsequent evidence that it was his own personal recollection that he had been hit by 2, even though "it may not have been true at that time" (Day 337/113/4 to Day 337/113/25). He gave this impression to Lord Widgery under oath. Indeed he said that the first one "struck [him] across the leg" and that he was hit by the acid on the leg both times (B679 B-D). This became modified when he said in his Eversheds statements (B691.3 paragraph 16) that 2 bottles smashed "near" to him and the acid splashed onto his trousers. Incidentally, when he was speaking to Soldier 005 subsequently, he did not mention that he had been hit by any acid bombs. (B1374.1 paragraph 15) Nor did he seek any medical attention. (Day 337/116/17 to Day 337/116/21)

17.8.3.220 It is submitted that, if he was struck by the contents of a bottle, it was not an acid bomb, whatever he may have thought at the time.

17.8.3.221 With regard to the pistol man in the corner between Blocks 2 and 3, he said essentially that he fired at a hand containing a pistol from about 70 yds away but he could not really say whether he had any prospect of hitting the hand from that distance. (Day 337/119/6 to Day 337/119/14)

17.8.3.222 Interestingly, Soldier 005 made his statement (B1370) on 4th February, 45 minutes after R made his 2nd RMP statement, and 005's statement was concerned almost entirely with an account of shots apparently fired by R. The details corresponded with R's firing in that it referred to a man firing 2 shots with a pistol at R and R firing back 3 times. However, the man that 005 claimed to see was located on the first floor on a veranda running between Blocks 1 and 2 whereas R said the gunman was on the ground floor between Blocks 2 and 3. Soldier 005 admitted that he made this up and could not have seen anyone in the location he described. (Day 338/160/14 to Day 338/160/20) It is submitted that 005 must have made up his statement in furtherance of an agreement for him to provide a supporting account for R.

17.8.3.223 R was another soldier who did not suggest that the Pig was hit, even though there were dozens of shots fired by civilians by his account. (Day 337/123/8 to Day 337/124/6)

17.8.3.224 He did not make any reference in his first statement to seeing Sergeant O's target behind the Cortina and admitted that he did not even mention this to the RMP at the time. (Day 337/124/9 to Day 337/124/12) It follows from this that he was, at the very least, wrong when he told Lord Widgery that he had mentioned this in his 1st statement. (B687 D) Significantly, in his Eversheds statement (B691.4 paragraph 19), he marked on a map (B691.8) the location of O's target behind the Cortina in the same spot marked by O in his photograph (P21), the location which O now accepts was wrong.

17.8.3.225 He initially suggested that the reason he didn't mention O's firing was that the RMP had only asked him if he had fired but he then had to accept that that was not the case because he had included in his statement evidence about other shots that he had heard and about high and low velocity weapons (Day 337/124/23 to Day 337/125/24).

17.8.3.226 Soldiers N, Q, S, and V all claim to have fired at targets which should have been readily visible to Private R but he denied seeing any of them. He also denied seeing Jackie Duddy or Michael Bridge even though he was "looking out for trouble". (B691.3 paragraph 12) He also accepted that he must be one of the soldiers behind the Pig at the time photograph P285 was taken. (Day 337/133/1 to Day 337/133/5) He accepted that he was concerned to see what was going on in the courtyard and it was more than likely that at least every now and again he had a look to see what was happening there. (Day 337/133/13 to Day 337/133/20).

17.8.3.227 As far as he could recall, "nobody claimed to shoot any of the people who was actually shot that day." (Day 337/135/16 to Day 337/135/20)

17.8.3.228 This, therefore, is yet another soldier whose evidence is riddled with inconsistencies and discrepancies. He has clearly told lies about material matters and his account cannot be regarded as truthful. He may also, therefore, have shot Jackie Duddy or one of the wounded in the courtyard. What is clear is that when he fired at the "nail bomber" he hit the man he intended to hit (Day 337/143/4 to Day 337/143/10) and did so intending to kill him. (Day 337/142/16 to Day 337/142/20)

17.8.3.229 INQ 1579 was the driver of Pig 2. He accepts that on the way into the Rossville Flats courtyard the front of the Pig "tapped" a man who was standing spreadeagled in front of him (C1579.3 paragraph 20). This was Thomas Harkin. He denied knocking down Alana Burke or any young girl (Day 336/159/14 to Day 336/159/15) even though he had apparently made contact with a soldier on his way through Barrier 12 without hearing any thud (Day 336/176/2 to Day 336/176/10) and he had not heard any impact when he knocked over Mr Harkin (Day 366/177/12 to Day 366/177/16). He also said his vision was restricted to the side of the vehicle, the engine was noisy and the occupants, in order to be heard, had to talk above the noise (Day 336/180/12 to Day 336/180/19). Sergeant O accepted that it would have been possible for the Pig to hit Alana Burke without him having seen it (Day 335/27/21 to Day 335/27/23).

17.8.3.230 It is submitted that Sergeant O's Pig did hit Alana Burke. Moreover, when Alana Burke was giving her own evidence to the Inquiry, counsel on behalf of the soldiers told her that it was accepted that she had been struck by the Pig and at no time was she challenged on that issue. (Day 76/101/10 to Day 76/101/12)

17.8.3.231 INQ1579 could not recall hearing explosions. He remembered smelling petrol and acid but did not see any petrol bombs explode or any acid bombs splash or explode (C1579.4 paragraphs 29 to 30 and Day 336/168/8 to Day 336/168/13).

17.8.3.232 He claimed to hear incoming fire (C1579.4 paragraph 28) but he could not say how many shots he heard or where they were coming from. (C1579.4 paragraph 27) He was not able to separate in his recollection what might be called civilian gunfire and SLR fire. (Day 336/170/7 to Day 336/170/10)

17.8.3.233 In support of the suggestion that the fire was incoming, he claimed to have seen the strike on the ground around the Pig and to have heard metal (presumably the Pig) being struck. (Day 336/170/1 to Day 336/170/6) However, he had said in his Eversheds statement: "I heard a bullet strike the ground and I would have seen them at the time but I cannot remember seeing this for sure now". (C1579.4 paragraph 28) When this was pointed out to him and he was asked why he could remember it in his oral testimony but not when he made his statement, he replied "It could be a possible flashback". (Day 336/200/13 to Day 336/200/16)

17.8.3.234 INQ1579 did not inspect the vehicle for damage after the event. (Day 336/168/24 to Day 336/179/3)

17.8.3.235 When asked to explain why, in his prime position, he did not see one shot being fired by any of his colleagues he said:

17.8.3.236 "Sir, there is no doubt that I have seen and heard more than what I have in my statement, but with the passage of time being in excess of 31 years, the memories have faded and disappeared." (Day 336/188/25 to Day 336/189/3) When asked in turn whether he had seen Peggy Deery, Jackie Duddy or Michael Bridge shot, he said he hadn't. When asked by the Chairman whether he had any recollection at all he said: "No, Sir, it is all faded and gone, Sir". (Day 336/189/25)

17.8.3.237 This is another witness who was "stone-walling" the Inquiry because he could not have given an honest account of the events he witnessed without implicating his former colleagues in shooting at civilians without justification.

17.8.3.238 Soldier 006 debussed in Rossville Street and, together with Soldier 037, arrested William Dillon. It was only then that he heard shooting break out and he took cover. After that, he "and a couple of lads from [his] Platoon" went to the stairwell of Block 1. He went up one flight of stairs and looked along the balcony but didn't go any further. In his Eversheds statement, he says that the only firing he heard was that of SLR's. (B1377.5 paragraph 24) He thought the firing was coming from soldiers behind the low wall. He was further forward than they were. He could not see anyone behind the rubble barricade at the time. (B1377.5 paragraph 25) He saw no civilians with guns and heard no explosions. Soldier 006 was one of the soldiers who picked up the bodies on the rubble barricade. He also says that at Fort George the officers wanted soldiers to say they had arrested men and the soldiers were saying they had not. (B1377.5 paragraph 28)

17.8.3.239 In his Eversheds statement, all that 006 could say about where he debussed was that the Pig was facing towards the high flats (B1377.5 paragraph 20). However, in his RMP statement, he said that the vehicle stopped at the junction of Eden Place and Rossville Street and he debussed. (B1375) Bearing in mind also that he was with Soldier 037 when he arrested William Dillon, it seems likely that he debussed when Sergeant O's Pig came to a temporary halt on Rossville Street at the end of Pilots Row so that 5 soldiers in all debussed at this point, viz R, U, P, 017 and 006.

17.8.3.240 He was the first to grab hold of William Dillon and he said that he probably hit him with the butt of his rifle. (Day 334/22/10 to Day 334/22/23) He said that Mr Dillon did not have a weapon or missile in his hand, he had not seen him throwing any kind of missile and he could not remember him taunting the soldiers in any way. When asked whether he had threatened the soldier in any way, 006 said: "Well, he were coming straight at us, so ... .." In answer to the question "what made him different from the other people who were running past you?", he said: "everybody else had dispersed". (Day 334/18/10 to Day 334/18/12)

17.8.3.241 Soldier 006 said that he had probably seen his colleagues using their rifle butts in the same manner as himself (Day 334/35/22 to Day 334/36/1); that Sergeant O and Lt. N may well have been aware of that (ibid); but he was never prevented from doing it. (Day 334/37/1 to Day 334/37/3) Indeed, in his Eversheds statement he said: "We thought that if we went in, we would give them all a good hiding .. ... " (B1377.2 paragraph 5).

17.8.3.242 Soldier 006 accepted that although the arrest form suggested that William Dillon was arrested for assault, that was not the reason in his mind why he was arrested (Day 334/55/18 to Day 334/55/21). He said that he must have said to the RMP that he had arrested a youth for assault "as you had to say something" (B1377.9 paragraph 43). He thought that the RMP just wrote in the statement that Mr Dillon was arrested for assault and he just agreed with it. He said that it was an experience of his that the RMP wrote things which may not even be true. (Day 334/56/19 to Day 334/56/22)

17.8.3.243 Soldier 006 was familiar with the sound of gunfire. He had come under Thompson submachine gun fire in the Falls Road in Belfast and he had been close to a nail bomb that exploded in Belfast. (Day 334/34/1 to Day 334/34/11 and Day 334/62/16 to Day 334/62/20) He did not hear any non-Army gunfire or explosions or nail bombs or petrol bombs at any time. (Day 334/60/17 to Day 334/63/25) The only fire he remembered hearing was the sound of SLR's (B1377.6 paragraph 24).

17.8.3.244 In his RMP statement, he said he heard shooting break out and took cover. He was not able to locate where the shots came from. He saw that the vehicle had moved (another indication that he debussed in Rossville Street) to a position about 10yds from Block 1. It was from this position that he saw a member of his Regiment firing at the Barricade. (B1376) He said that he did not recall hearing shots from SLR's in the courtyard (Day 334/63/21 to Day 334/63/25) but it is fair to remember that he went inside Block 1 and up a flight of stairs. He said he was not certain if this was before the shooting or not (B1377.6 paragraph 26).

17.8.3.245 Soldier 006 was involved in collecting the bodies from the rubble barricade. He did not search them because he did not expect to find anything of interest to the Army. (Day 334/66/3 to Day 334/66/11)

17.8.3.246 Solider 006 was an unusual witness. To his credit, he was the only member of Mortar Platoon prepared to say that he neither saw nor heard any civilians engaged in any attack on soldiers in the form of shooting or bombing of any kind. He was also the only member of Mortar Platoon to say that, although he had experience of civilian gunfire, the only gunfire he heard was that caused by Army SLR's. It is surprising that he did not hear or see Army shooting in the courtyard but we do not consider that there is a sufficient basis for suggesting that his account of this aspect of the matter is dishonest. The first shooting he heard, perhaps behind him, was probably Lt. N's shots, followed by those of V, S and the others in the courtyard area. He then entered Block 1 itself and may not therefore have been in a good position to see or hear further Army firing in that area.

17.8.3.247 Soldier 006 clearly had no reason to fabricate an account that was unfavourable to the Army. Given the robust attitude, to put it mildly, he exhibited towards the arrest of William Dillon and the handling of the bodies at the rubble barricade, he was obviously not unduly sympathetic to the families. Whilst we regard certain aspects of his evidence as unsatisfactory and we are not convinced that he disclosed the full extent of his recollection of events on the day, we recognise that he gave his evidence with a frankness and candour that was lacking in every other member of the Mortar Platoon. We respectfully invite the Tribunal to accept his evidence that there was no civilian gunfire or bombing attacks and that all the firing he heard was from soldiers.

17.8.3.248 INQ 768 appears to have been in Sergeant O's Pig. He claimed to have heard a short burst of incoming automatic fire at the back of the Pig followed by Army SLR fire. He didn't recall any other civilian gunfire or any bombs or explosions. He claimed that he did not remember hearing any baton rounds or seeing any soldier firing. He said he did not fire himself.

17.8.3.249 INQ 768 said he did not have a clear memory of the events but rather a number of vague recollections interspersed with a couple of clear recollections (C768.1 paragraph 2).

17.8.3.250 When he was in the Pig and before they went through Barrier 12, someone said: "If my men do not go in now, we are going back to Belfast" (C768.2 paragraph 14). INQ 768 definitely remembered these words but he could no longer remember whether they were spoken before he got into the Pig or when he was in the Pig. Nor could he remember whether it was an officer who said these words (Day 323/137/25 to Day 323/138/2) although it is unlikely that anyone other than an officer would have said this. The only person who would have been in a position to refer to "my men" and to have the authority to order them back to Belfast was Col. Wilford, so this is a further indication of the pressure Col Wilford was apparently putting on 8 Brigade HQ to move in.

17.8.3.251 The incoming fire that he claims to have heard soon after he got out of the Pig was "just a small burst of automatic fire or what I thought was automatic fire" (Day 323/143/22 to Day 323/143/23). He said he heard 5 or 6 rounds (C768.3 paragraph 18). It was "definitely high velocity" (Day 323/144/18 to Day 323/144/19) so it could not have been a Thompson. He said the rounds were fired "from either a machine gun or a rifle adapted to fire automatically, but I could not identify the exact weapon" (C768.3 paragraph 18). When asked if it could have been single but very rapid fire he said that it could not, "because there was not sufficient pauses" (Day 323/144/22).

17.8.3.252 Although he also denied that it could have been fire from more than one weapon fired at the same time (Day 323/144/23 to Day 323/145/1), this is exactly what it could have been in view of his Eversheds evidence that it could have come from a rifle adapted to fire automatically. There can be no difference in sound between the same rifle fired automatically and several identical rifles being fired within a short space of time of each other especially when only five or six rounds were heard.

17.8.3.253 At one point, in order to reinforce the suggestion that fire was incoming, INQ768 said that he thought the fire came from "the centre" of Rossville Flats (apparently Block 2) (Day 323/156/13 to Day 323/156/19) but in his examination-in-chief he had said that he did not know which block it was (Day 323/146/16)) and indeed, in his Eversheds statement he had said he "could not say who fired and from where" (C768.3 paragraph 20).

17.8.3.254 INQ 768 said that he heard between 3 and 10 rounds fired by the Army in reply to the "incoming" fire and, other than this, had no recollection of hearing any other firing. (C768.3 paragraphs 19 to 20) During his oral testimony, he confirmed that he had no recollection of hearing Lt. N's 3 SLR shots from behind him (Day 323/148/21 to Day 323/148/23) or of hearing anything like 100 live rounds fired by the soldiers (Day 323/149/7 to Day 323/149/11) or any baton rounds at all (Day 323/149/12 to Day 323/149/15). Not only has he no recollection of seeing soldiers firing, he does not even have a recollection of seeing any soldiers in the firing position (C767.3 paragraph 20).

17.8.3.255 This simply cannot be accepted as truthful evidence. INQ768 was in a prime position behind the Pig to see a number of soldiers firing, not only in his own sector but in Sector 3. When pressed about these matters, he said: "I just cannot remember anything going on around me". (Day 323/163/5 to Day 323/163/6) Among the soldiers firing from positions just a few yards (and in at least two cases just a few feet) from him were S, T, R and Q. It is submitted that the reasons for his refusal to admit a recollection of seeing these soldiers firing is that he knew they were firing at unarmed civilians. His evidence is summed up in his final answer to Counsel for the Madden & Finucane families: "I did not see anybody misbehaving". (Day 323/170/1 to Day 323/170/2)

17.8.3.256 However, unlike most of the soldiers in Mortar Platoon, he did admit that he did not see any kind of missile thrown or any civilian with any kind of weapon. (Day 323/146/22 to Day 323/147/1) Indeed, apart from the 5 or 6 rounds that he said opened the firing, he did not hear or see anything that could have been interpreted as civilian gunfire or bombing. Like the other soldiers involved in taking the bodies to Altnagelvin, he could not explain the delay in getting there.

17.8.3.257 Soldier 013 said he expected to be going into a gun-battle situation but his job was to fire a baton gun. He said he was expecting to be shot and could hear bangs all around but he didn't know where they were coming from. It could have been from soldiers, he said. He did not see any civilians carrying weapons and did not hear amongst the bangs anything he thought was a nail bomb. He said he did not fire a live round him.

17.8.3.258 Soldier 013 was required by the Tribunal to give oral evidence and he did attend on Day 339. However, he refused to give oral testimony. It was suggested that there was a medical reason but no details were given. It had not been suggested by his representatives that there were medical grounds justifying a failure to testify and we have seen no medical evidence in support of this suggestion. We took issue with the decision to excuse 013's attendance but our complaint was rejected without explanation. We maintain our submission that this witness should have been required to give oral testimony.

17.8.3.259 In his Eversheds statement, 013 said that hearing the drain pipe shot was a contributory factor to what followed in that it meant there were snipers in the area so that "as far as we were concerned this was now a gun battle and not just a riot" (B1408.2 paragraph 10). In other words, if he is right, the paras went in anticipating that they would be shooting.

17.8.3.260 He also went expecting that they would be "giving the rioters concerned a good going over" (B1408.3 paragraph 12). He admits that he probably came out of his Pig firing his rubber baton gun. (B1408.3 paragraph 13)

17.8.3.261 After he debussed he said he could hear bangs going off all around him although he did not know where they were coming from – "it could have been from us" (B1408.3 paragraph 14). Significantly, he did not in his Eversheds statement repeat the suggestion made in his RMP statement (which was another one made on 4th February) that he heard the sound of gunfire and saw 2 or 3 bullets strike the ground behind him on his right. (B1406)

17.8.3.262 He clearly did not consider that he was under fire since he proceeded to deal with "rioters" in the sense that he "gave a few of them a doing over" (B1408.3 paragraph 15). He concedes that he was probably over-aggressive as a soldier (ibid). He claims to have chased someone into the stairway in the northern end of Block 1 and fired his baton round up the stairs. He claims he did not remember seeing people in the stairway at the time but the likelihood is that he was the soldier who fired his baton round at Barman Duffy at close range. No other soldier with a baton gun admits to going to this or any other block.

17.8.3.263 It is of considerable significance that this soldier, who said he was expecting to be shot (B1408.3 paragraph 14), "didn't really think about snipers as [he] went in" to Block 1 (B1408.3 paragraph 16). This, of course, is completely at odds with the suggestion in his RMP statement that he had seen bullets strike the ground and that he believed the firing had come from the flats. He now says that he cannot remember saying this and cannot recall seeing bullets hit the ground (B1408.6 paragraph 34)

17.8.3.264 He also fired a number of baton rounds at windows in the Rossville Flats "as these were also good firing positions" even though he did not see anyone fire from there or anywhere else. (B1408.3 paragraph 16) He said that he "kept firing his [baton gun] to keep people away". (B1408.4 paragraph 17)

17.8.3.265 He is therefore a prime contender for firing the baton round which struck Patsy McDaid. In this connection, it should be noted that the other soldier in Sergeant O's Pig with a baton gun was 017, who had debussed in Rossville Street and remained in Sector 3. Of the two soldiers with baton guns in Lt. N's Pig (019 and 112), 019 accompanied Lt. N. and would therefore have been delayed before even arriving at the courtyard of Rossville Flats. Soldier 112 is the only other soldier who had a baton gun but since he also debussed from the Pig at Eden Place he would presumably not have had as much opportunity as 013 to fire at civilians in the courtyard before they dispersed completely.

17.8.3.266 He was apparently not asked about modifying rubber bullets but he did admit that he carried "buckshee" live rounds later on in 1972 and that it was possible to get them (B1408.5 paragraph 31).

17.8.3.267 013 did not see any civilians carrying weapons. He said "I cannot say we were shot at" and he did not hear anything he thought was a nail bomb. (B1408.4 paragraph 17)

17.8.3.268 He said he did not remember seeing anyone hit in the car park "although I saw people falling over in the crowd" (B1408.4 paragraph 18).

17.8.3.269 As noted above, 013 was not initially prepared to identify Private S (B1408.4 paragraph 18) as the soldier who had told him he had "dropped" a civilian gunman, who was apparently moving rather than stationary. (B1408.4 paragraph 19). The fact that he was not prepared to name him initially suggests that he knew that Private S had no justification for shooting.

17.8.3.270 With regard to bottles and acid bombs being thrown in Block 1, he remembered being in the Pig with Private T and seeing liquid all over his boot. He said that he thought it might be acid but "it was actually probably a bottle of piss" (B1408.6 paragraph 35). This would help to explain why Private T and others might have been in a panic about the possibility of sustaining acid bomb burns when in fact he did not.

17.8.3.271 Soldier 013 does not make any reference to seeing any soldier firing or even adopting a firing position. He did not say that he saw anything that would indicate that the soldiers had fired unjustifiably. However, he remembers O "calming everyone down" and 013 thought to himself "Fucking hell, we have done it now, haven't we?" (B1408.5 paragraph 27) In the barracks back in Belfast that night, he said: "I did think that we would be in deep shit" (B1408.5 paragraph 29). He also remembered thinking "that we were on our own now and we would pay for this" (B1408.5 paragraph 30).

17.8.3.272 It is difficult to understand why any of these thoughts would have occurred to him if he had not known perfectly well that the Paras had shot and killed unarmed, innocent civilians for no good reason.

17.8.3.273 With regard to talk in the barracks, he said: "No one said that they felt they should not have shot, but then again they would not say so, even if they did think that" (B1408.5 paragraph 30).

17.8.3.274 Soldier 013 claimed that he did not now know which Paras did the shooting. (B1408.6 paragraph 36) Quite apart from the fact that S told him that he had fired, it is quite clear from his recollection of talking to soldiers in the barracks who "felt they had shot at people who had either shot at them or were going to" (B1408.5 paragraph 30) that he had certainly known at one stage, in which case the likelihood is that he still knows but is not prepared to say.

17.8.3.275 This, in our submission, is one of the reasons why he was not prepared to give oral testimony. He knew who had done what and he also knew that it had been done without justification. He therefore is liable to have feigned a medical condition, which he did not apparently have before he arrived at the Central Hall, in order to avoid either committing perjury or implicating his former colleagues in murder.

17.8.3.276 Soldier 013 said he would "classify the day as an accident" (B1408.6 paragraph 37). The tone and contents of his statement suggest his belief that the Paras simply made understandable misjudgements and then covered it up when they realised the enormity of what they had done.

Private T

17.8.3.277 Private T is now dead. In summary, he claimed to have been splashed by liquid from an acid bomb and to have fired at an acid bomber on a balcony on Block 1. He did not see any civilian firing and did not see or hear any nail bombs. There are a number of significant discrepancies in his statements, in particular concerning his position when he fired (the trajectory map is different from his marked-up photographs), whether the acid bomber he fired at was on the 3rd floor veranda or the 6th floor veranda, whether the target was in the act of throwing when fired at and whether he saw where the bullets struck. There is no Eversheds statement.

17.8.3.278 In his RMP statement, Private T said that when he got out of his APC he assisted in making 2 arrests and when he moved back to the Pig the soldiers there were under a heavy stoning attack. He said that one of the bottles thrown from the balcony broke near him and he was splashed with the liquid. "It covered the front of my trousers from the waist to the knee" (B725). Sergeant O had told him to fire at anyone dropping acid bombs and he said he fired the next time a man appeared with a bottle in his hand. He fired two shots that missed.

17.8.3.279 Although this liquid covered the front of his trousers from the waist to the knee, he felt no more than a "tingling" on his leg (B726). If the liquid had indeed been acid he would clearly have felt more than a tingling sensation. He also passed the trousers to Warrant Officer Wood and they were then labelled, presumably for the purpose of being used as an exhibit (ibid). Whoever examined them must have realised that the liquid was not acid and they were not used as an exhibit at the Widgery Tribunal. At the Widgery Tribunal, Charles Hill, for the families, seemed to have instructions that the liquid may have been Windolene (B744), a suggestion echoed by Patrick Friel, who referred to his father throwing such a bottle from a balcony. (Day 118/139/12 to Day 118/139/15) Alternatively, Soldier 013's suggestion that the liquid in the bottles was no more than urine may be correct.

17.8.3.280 Significantly, Soldier T did not make any reference to even hearing civilian gunfire at any time or seeing Sergeant O or any other soldier shoot.

17.8.3.281 However, when he made his SA statement, he talked about hearing a burst of low velocity fire which was either automatic or very rapid single shots coming from inside the courtyard (B735). The bottle of liquid was thrown, he says, from one of the verandas that were three stories up. It is also in this statement that he first introduced the suggestion that he saw Sergeant O firing. The trajectory photograph (B747) indicates a target on about the sixth floor.

17.8.3.282 By the time he came to give oral testimony before Lord Widgery, he was able to say that the first round that he fired at the "acid bomber" hit the roof of the building (B742 F) although he had said in his RMP statement that he did not see the result of this shot. (B726)

17.8.3.283 When asked what he felt when the "acid" splashed on his legs, he said that he had cut his leg just above the left knee and it began to seep in there. (B742 G – 743 A) Again, it may be observed that if acid had seeped in to an open wound he would have felt more than a tingling. Indeed he appears to have waited until after the shooting had died down before he went to the rear of the vehicle and had water thrown over his trousers (B743A). It is hardly surprising that Warrant Officer Wood disbelieved him.

17.8.3.284 As regards Sergeant O's firing, he appears to have been a matter of 3 feet from Sergeant O but he did not see what the Sergeant was shooting at and he personally did not see anyone firing at the troops at all. (B745 D). Indeed, when he was asked whether he saw any persons firing, he said "no person actually fired at a target" (B745 D). This may not have been transcribed correctly but it tends to suggest that soldiers were not firing at targets. Nor did Private T see any nail bombs even though he accepted that in certain conditions he could hear a nail bomb as much as a mile away (B746 B).

Corporal P, Private U and Private O17

17.8.3.285 The last 3 soldiers in Mortar Platoon can be dealt with compendiously. Corporal P, Private U and Private O17 were all in Sergeant O's Pig and debussed in Rossville Street at the end of Pilot Row. Corporal P and O17 moved to Kells Walk and were involved in Sector 3. Private U followed the Pig towards Block 1 but took up a position at the north-west corner of Block 1 and became involved in Sector 3. The evidence of these soldiers is discussed in the Sector 3 submissions.

17.8.4. C Company

Introduction

17.8.4.1 C Company went through Barrier 14 in William Street. The Officer Commanding was Acting Major 221a and the Company was comprised of 3 platoons: 7 Platoon under the command of Lt. 110, 9 Platoon and then 8 Platoon under the command of Lt. 26.

17.8.4.2 7 Platoon was first through the Barrier and went to the junction of William Street and Rossville Street only to find that Support Company had gone in ahead of them to take up positions in Rossville Street and on the waste ground behind Chamberlain Street. 8 Platoon went in next but turned left to deploy into Chamberlain Street. They paused at the end of Chamberlain Street and then again at the junction with Harvey Street, where they were in position when Jackie Duddy was carried along Chamberlain Street and up Harvey Street. Following this they moved to the end of the street and arrested all the men present in No. 33.

17.8.4.3 Photograph P253 shows Sergeant 2000, Corporal 579, INQ2045, INQ2051, INQ12 and INQ471 of 8 Platoon at the west corner of the William Street and Chamberlain Street junction. P948 et seq show members of the platoon at the junction of Chamberlain Street and Harvey Street with Father Daly leading the group of civilians carrying Jackie Duddy from Rossville Flats courtyard.

17.8.4.4 None of the soldiers of C Company admits to firing a shot but most of them suggest that they heard "incoming" fire of some kind and many suggest they heard Thompson submachine gun fire. In our submission, their evidence of hearing or seeing civilian gunfire or bombing is either fabricated, imagined or mistaken. Although they do not appear to have engaged directly in shooting civilians, they were among those soldiers who engaged in the displays of triumphalism afterwards, as evidenced by the graffiti they daubed on the wall at the entrance to the chemist's shop in William Stand photographed by Jimmy Porter (AP9.99): "the Paras were here and they fucking hammered fuck out of you".

17.8.4.5 In Table 7 at Appendix 7, the evidence of the 33 members of C Company who have made Eversheds statements is summarised in tabular form insofar as it relates to the issues whether they saw civilians with guns, petrol bombs or nail bombs or heard nail bombs.

17.8.4.6 None of the claimed sightings match or, therefore, provide any corroboration for each other. Put another way, no soldier in this company saw the same sinister occurrence as any other soldier, so that a gunman who, according to a given soldier, appeared in full view of everyone was somehow not seen by anyone except himself.

17.8.4.7 Only 5 members of C Company even claim to have seen a civilian with a weapon and none saw any civilian firing a weapon. Only 2 claim to have seen civilians with petrol bombs and in both cases they claim to have seen them at Barrier 14. The overwhelming evidence is that no petrol bombs were thrown at Barriers 12 or 14. None of the soldiers saw nail bombs and only 1 suggests that he heard a nail bomb but even this soldier says he is not certain about that.

17.8.4.8 The claimed sightings of civilian gunmen do not correspond with each other or with any of the sightings claimed by members of Support Company. Lt 110 claims to have seen a youth with a long weapon like a rifle running between Blocks 1 and 2 from right to left. INQ 444 claims to have seen a civilian with a rifle move between the same Blocks but in the opposite direction and in different circumstances. INQ 1799 says he saw a man with an M1 carbine in the Rossville Flats courtyard between Blocks 2 and 3. These all appear to be at different times from, i.e. later than, the times when gunmen were allegedly seen in these areas by members of Support Company.

17.8.4.9. The other sightings do not correspond in any way with those claimed by Support Company. INQ1799 also claimed to have seen a man with a pistol in Chamberlain Street. INQ 2121 and INQ12 both claim to have seen a man with a rifle on the roof at Rossville Flats but the features of these claimed sightings do not match. In particular, one of these "gunmen" was "seen" on Block1 and the other on Block 2.

17.8.4.10. With regard to the order for the paratroopers to go in, a number of soldiers in C Company suggest that the officer commanding the troops in charge of Barrier 14 refused to lift the barrier for the paratroopers to go though into William Street:

17.8.4.11. Major 221a says in his Eversheds statement that he heard the orders given over the radio to both call signs 3 and 5 to move through the barriers. He says that the orders came from Battalion HQ (i.e. not Brigade HQ). The Royal Anglians did not lift the barrier so the first two platoons went through on foot.

17.8.4.12. INQ488 was a Platoon Sergeant. He says in his Eversheds statement that Major 221a asked an officer of the Royal Green Jackets to let a company through the barrier but he refused. Major 221a told INQ 488 to go over the barrier.

17.8.4.13. INQ876 was the driver of one of the C Company pigs. He says that the "crap hats" wouldn't move the barrier and he had to ram it.

17.8.4.14. INQ1093 said the Officer Commanding the local unit at the barrier wouldn't let them through and a Brigadier had to come and talk to him. He said they had to physically climb over the barrier.

17.8.4.15. INQ1334 said that General Ford was standing in a doorway near the barrier. General Ford could see that the barrier had not been lifted and "he just pointed towards the rioters beyond the barrier and looked to us as if to say "go on". So we did."

17.8.4.16. INQ2121 was listening to the Battalion net when he heard the order to move forward and then in.

17.8.4.17. INQ12 said "the crap hats" were saying that the Paras couldn't go in. They had to push their way though the "crap hats" and climb over the barrier to go in.

17.8.4.18. This evidence would tend to suggest that the Officer Commanding the local soldiers at Barrier 14 had not heard or received, either on the Brigade net or otherwise, an order to lift the barrier to permit C Company to move through into the Bogside.

17.8.4.19. Very few of the soldiers in C Company admit to seeing members of Support Company in action. However, INQ 444 says he saw a soldier firing with his rifle under his arm into the Rossville Flats courtyard area. He fired between 10 and 20 rounds. This may have been Private S, who admitted firing 12 shots into the Rossville Flats courtyard. Whoever it was, this is clearly damning evidence against a soldier firing in Sector 2.

17.8.4.20. A number of the soldiers in C Company also refer to their role in arresting civilians in 33 Chamberlain Street. This is dealt with separately in the Arrests Section.

Individual Soldiers

Major 221a

17.8.4.21. According to a statement dated the day after Bloody Sunday and therefore made with full knowledge of the gravity of the events of the previous day, Major 221a said that at 16.10 hrs he was ordered to "asslt. rioters in east end of William Street" (B2166) Note that the order related to rioters in William Street rather than Chamberlain Street or Rossville Street.

17.8.4.22. He claimed that he heard gunfire "from [his] right"; that he heard an M1 carbine across the open ground to the north (sic); and that he saw the strikes of several enemy rounds in the Rossville Street/William Street area. (ibid) He did not specify whether the gunfire from his right was civilian gunfire or Army gunfire or was indistinguishable. Significantly, he made no reference to hearing Thompson submachine gun fire or any other automatic fire or hearing nail bombs.

17.8.4.23. In his Eversheds statement, Major 221a said that his order to move came from Battalion Headquarters but the Officer Commanding the Royal Green Jackets at Barrier 14 clearly did not get any order to move the Barrier either from his own Battalion Headquarters or from Brigade Headquarters because he did not move it. C Company therefore went through and over the Barrier on foot rather than in their vehicles as planned. (B2168.3 paragraphs 16 to 17)

17.8.4.24. Major 221a did not seem to have a clear recollection of gunfire. After describing events without mentioning that he had heard any gunfire, he said:

> "In addition to the low velocity (hand gun) shooting I heard in the waste ground, I believe I heard an M1 carbine shooting at some time during the day. It may have been the shooting I heard over the radio while C Company were based in the Foyle College car park. We may even have been shot upon while in the Foyle College car park. I cannot really recall". (B2168.4 paragraph 30).

17.8.4.25. During his narrative he did not mention hearing any low velocity or other shooting on the waste ground. Indeed he said that he was "initially surprised to see C Company adopting a defensive stance" (B2186.3 paragraph 22), which suggests that he had not himself heard any civilian firing before he saw Support Company in the waste ground. Otherwise he would not have been surprised to see them adopting a defensive stance. While in the waste ground, he talked of having a "strong feeling of being exposed and vulnerable", not that he was aware of any civilian gunfire. He says that members of Mortar Platoon "briefly explained to me that they were under fire" (B2168.3 paragraph 22) but he would hardly need that explained to him if he had heard civilian gunfire himself.

17.8.4.26. If Major 221a's recollection is taken at face value, he had no idea what his own Company was up to in Chamberlain Street. He said that his Company had been very effective in the Chamberlain Street area and had made 22 arrests in the space of about 10 minutes. "That would have taken at least 44 members of the Company and probably more".(B2168.4 paragraph 25). He said that most of the rioters ended up being cornered in alleyways or blocked off streets along Chamberlain Street or High Street or Harvey Street and most of them "came quietly once they realised they were going to be arrested". (B2168.4 paragraph 26). Obviously, he had either forgotten or had no idea that all the arrests were carried out in one house by 2 or 3 soldiers who simply ordered the occupants out.

17.8.4.27 Major 221a's dishonesty or, alternatively, startling lack of awareness of what was going on around him, is reflected in his suggestion that he was "not aware of allegations of brutality against members of the Battalion during the afternoon in the Bogside". Brutality, he said, was never tolerated; it was simply not the way the Battalion operated. He said: "we were one of the very few units in Northern Ireland at the time who were able to restore and maintain law and order without resorting to the use of physical force." (B2168.5 paragraph 33, emphasis added)

Warrant Officer 204

17.8.4.28 Warrant Officer Soldier 204 was not called to give oral testimony. He was the Company Sergeant Major of C Company. He says he would have accompanied the Company Commander but all that he can recall, he says, it that his Company went to Derry that day. He cannot remember where he went or what he did. He did not hear any firing personally (B2117.2 paragraph 8). He did make an RMP statement in 1972 but made no reference to seeing or hearing any civilian gunfire.

17.8.4.29 Lt. 110 was the commander of 7 Platoon, which consisted of Sergeant INQ 488, Corporal INQ444, Lance Corporals 1799, 003, 736, 939 and Privates INQ 131, 815 and Soldier 5. Lt 110 would appear to have made two statements to the RMP, one on 3rd February (which we do not have) and one dated 4th February, when the RMP were particularly busy taking supplementary statements from soldiers and in many of which, for the first time, soldiers claim to remember hearing civilian gunfire of various kinds, including in particular Thompson submachine gun fire.

17.8.4.30 Lt 110 did not remember the contents of his first statement but he starts off his second statement by saying "Further to my statement ..I would like to add...." (B1726.8) so the facts that appear in the second statement presumably did not appear in the first statement. The two facts that appear in the second statement are that, firstly, he heard a burst of 8 shots from a Thompson submachine gun being fired from a two-storey block of flats west of Kells Walk and, secondly, he saw a man with a weapon about 100 yds away in a location not specified but which appears to have been in the direction of Rossville flats.

17.8.4.31 It is submitted that if Lt. 110 had really heard a Thompson submachine gun and had really seen a gunman, he would have said so in his first statement. It is simply not credible that he would have left such matters out of his first statement, especially when he does not appear to have seen or heard anything else of any significance so it is difficult to understand what it was that he could have put in his first statement that was more important than the details in his second statement.

17.8.4.32 Significantly, he did not recall any of the Thompson submachine gun fire when he made his Eversheds statement (B1726.5 paragraph 29) and he could not remember it when he gave his oral testimony to this Tribunal

(Day 350/83/17 to Day 350/83/22) although he was reluctant to admit that and he initially gave the impression that he did (Day 350/64/19 to Day 350/65/3 and Day 350/82/5 to Day 350/83/22).

17.8.4.33 With regard to the weapon, he said in his 1972 RMP statement that "all I saw was the butt of the weapon sticking out underneath his arm". When he made his Eversheds statement, he said he could not describe the weapon "in any way save that it was a long weapon, like a rifle" (B1726.5 paragraph 22). However, by the time he gave his oral testimony, he claimed he could see "the butt and the barrel" (Day 350/73/22 to Day 350/73/25 and Day 350/103/19 to Day 350/105/15 emphasis added). He said this was a clear recollection in his mind's eye (ibid) when it clearly was not in 1972. This was obviously a detail he added in 2003 in order to bolster his evidence about seeing a weapon.

17.8.4.34. In his RMP statement he had said that he was at the junction of William Street /Rossville Street at 15.45 hrs and at 1600 hrs he was at the rear of the Chamberlain Street houses when he saw the man with a weapon. These times were clearly wrong but, more importantly, he was suggesting that he saw the man with the weapon 15 minutes after he had arrived at the junction of William Street and Rossville Street, which was itself some time after Support Company had already entered the Bogside. By the time Lt 110 claimed to see his gunman, Support Company were in the process of withdrawing from Rossville Street altogether. This was suggested by Mr Elias and established by reference to actuality footage in Video 1 at 5 minutes 10 seconds V1/5.10 to 6.30 (Day 350/75/15 to Day 350/78/14).

17.8.4.35. Lt. 110 identified his men in this clip crossing the waste ground at the time when Mortar Platoon's Pigs had withdrawn and at least 1 Pig was making its way northwards towards William Street. This ties in with Lt. 110's own recollection, which was that by the time his Platoon moved across the waste ground "people had been moved away from this area" and he had no memory of seeing any military vehicles on the waste ground (B1726.4 paragraph 21).

17.8.4.36. In other words, the gunman allegedly seen by Lt. 110 could not have been the gunman referred to by any member of Support Company. The alleged sighting occurred at a time when it was inherently improbable that any civilian would have been in the Rossville Flats courtyard, let alone with a weapon. Not surprisingly, Lt. 110 is the only soldier in the entire Battalion to claim to have seen this gunman. Likewise, his account of the Thompson does not tally with any account of any member of Support Company because he suggested in his 1972 statement that it was being fired from a 2 storey block of flats west of Kells Walk.

17.8.4.37. Initially Lt 110 said that the reason he didn't shoot this gunman was because he didn't have a rifle (Day 350/98/25) but, when it was pointed out to him that he had told Eversheds he could not remember whether he had a rifle or a baton (B1726.3 paragraph 12), he said he started off with a baton but could not recall whether that changed (Day 350/103/1 to Day 350/103/3).

17.8.4.38. As appears below, some of Lt 110's men claim to have been fired on as they crossed the waste ground but Lt 110 did not recall any shots being fired at his platoon at any stage (Day 350/94/18 to Day 350/95/3); none were noted as having been fired at them (ibid); and no such firing was mentioned in his 1972 statement.

17.8.4.39. The truth, it would appear, is that Lt 110 and his entire platoon arrived at the waste ground after everything of significance had occurred but, possibly in response to a request from the RMP, he provided a statement on 4th February saying that he had heard a Thompson submachine gun fire and seen a gunman in Rossville Flats when he had clearly witnessed neither event.

17.8.4.40 Sergeant INQ 488 gave oral testimony on Day 300. In his Eversheds statement, he said that he and Major 221a asked an officer of the Royal Green Jackets to let them through the barrier but he refused. Major 221a was not very happy at this and said to Sergeant 488 "over you go". (C488.2 paragraph 14). This is a further indication that the Paras went through Barrier 14 without an order having been received from Brigade HQ.

17.8.4.41 He said that about 20 yards from the corner of William Street and Rossville Street he heard low velocity shots but he could not say what type of gun it was from. It could have been anything but he knew that it was low velocity fire because of the "booming sound that it made". (C488.3 paragraph 17) However, he also said that he did not hear any rubber bullets being fired and since we know that between 51 and 64 rubber bullets were fired in the waste ground area it is likely that this was the booming sound he heard. When asked by Counsel to the Inquiry why he was so sure that the shots he had heard were low velocity shots rather than the sound of rubber bullets, he replied "because there was crack and then thump" (Day 300/37/10). As was pointed out by Counsel to the Inquiry, crack and thump is the classic description of high velocity fire but Sergeant 488 was not prepared to accept this and insisted that "all rounds had a crack and thump" (300/37/13), which is simply wrong and confirms Sergeant 488 as an unreliable historian.

17.8.4.42 He then says he heard high velocity sounds which he believed to be Support Company – "it was certainly not the IRA firing". (C488.3 paragraph 18).

17.8.4.43 His platoon then deployed across William Street but did not go south around the corner and believes he was there for about 45 minutes. (C488.3 paragraphs 19 to 20). If, therefore, any member of his platoon did cross the waste ground he was not one of them. He does not suggest either that the platoon came under fire or that he heard Thompson submachine gun or any other automatic fire. Incidentally, another indication of the unreliability of this witness is his insistence that Support Company did not come from Little James Street but drove in their vehicles along William Street and took a right turn into Rossville Street (Day 300/63/23 to Day 300/64/13). It was only when the Chairman intervened that he was prepared to accept that it was possible that Support Company's vehicles came from Barrier 12, although he still insisted that he saw them coming towards him even though he must have arrived at the junction after these vehicles had passed. (Day 300/65/6).

Corporal INQ 444

17.8.4.44 INQ 444's evidence has to be treated with particular caution because his recollection of the whole affair was "very fuzzy" (C444.2 paragraph 14) and "very vague" (C444.3 paragraph 18). He also volunteered that he had made assumptions as well as including in his statement information that he had picked up from other soldiers after the event (Day 344/85/15 to Day 344/85/17 and Day 344/92/18 to Day 344/92/24).

17.8.4.45 He said that, almost as soon as he had moved through the barrier, he heard live gun fire "coming from the direction of the junction of William Street and Rossville Street" (C444.3 paragraph 20). Nobody else suggested that there was gunfire coming from that area and during his oral testimony he accepted that his recollection of where gunfire was coming from was wrong – it could have been coming from "anywhere". (Day 344/119/13 to Day 344/119/17) He was not able to identify the rest of the "general gunfire" he claimed to have (Day 344/119/20 to Day 344/119/25)

17.8.4.46 He claimed to remember hearing 2 bursts of Thompson submachine gun fire, each burst being 6 to7 seconds at most (C444.3 paragraph 21) but he "cannot remember whether it was when I was going up William Street or back down it or what particular stage it was". (Day 344/120/12 to Day 344/120/14). He said we should not pay much attention to the sequencing that he had suggested in his statement. (Day 344/120/18 to Day 344/120/20)

17.8.4.47 He was not prepared to accept that he could have mistaken the sound of other weapons for a Thompson. Although he recognised that there was a "huge difference" between the sounds of nail bombs and rifles and that at times one could get confused between the two (Day 344/123/24 to Day 344/124/2), he was not prepared to accept the logic that even if there is a huge difference between the Thompson and a rifle one could get confused between the sounds of the two depending on the surrounding conditions.

17.8.4.48 He said in his Eversheds statement that he was "fairly sure" that the bangs he heard in William Street were nail bombs (C444.4 paragraph 23) but conceded that these could have been the shots fired by Lt. N (Day 344/98/15 to Day 344/98/23). According to his recollection, each of these bangs "could have come from just about anywhere" (Day 344/126/12 to Day 344/126/24). It followed that the sound he identified as Thompson submachine gun fire could have been coming from just about anywhere because he said that the "sporadic rifle fire" that he heard about the same time sounded as though it was coming in the same direction as the Thompson submachine gun" (C444.4 paragraph 23 and Day 344/127/1 to Day 344/127/19). In other words, the so-called Thompson submachine gun fire was so indistinct that it could have been coming from anywhere. When pressed to accept the logic of this, he said: "all I know is the rifle and Thompson – all I know is I heard it" (Day 344/128/14 to Day 344/128/15).

17.8.4.49 He had suggested in his Eversheds statement that he had an "impression" that a gun battle was going on (C444.4 paragraph 25). But he accepted that, apart from what he said about the Thompson machine gun fire, all the firing he heard could have been SLR fire (Day 344/129/9 to Day 344/129/13).

17.8.4.50 With regard to the claimed sighting of a gunman, his recollection of where he was when this happened and how he got there is, by his own admission, completely unreliable. (Day 344/101/22 to Day 334/102/2)

17.8.4.51 In his statement, he said that after reaching the junction of Rossville Street and William Street his platoon turned around and went back along William Street, turned down Chamberlain Street, moved near the south end of Chamberlain Street, turned right into a small alleyway and ended up on wasteground. (C444.4 paragraphs 24 to 29). There is no such alleyway and no other member of his platoon describes this route.

17.8.4.52. INQ 444 had already said that the Tribunal should not rely on his sequencing of events but it appears that this claimed sighting occurred some time after the Mortar Platoon Pigs had withdrawn from the waste ground at a time when Major Loden's Command Vehicle was parked at the north gable wall of Block 1. (Day 344/104/4 to Day 334/104/22) In other words, as with Lt. 110, this "sighting" must have occurred at least 15 minutes after Mortar Platoon went in and after all the material events in the courtyard area were over. Incidentally, this cannot be the same sighting as the sighting claimed by Lt 110. Lt 110's gunman was running from right to left with his weapon partly concealed under his right arm (B1726.5 paragraph 22) whereas INQ 444's gunman was running left to right making no attempt to conceal the weapon (Day 344/102/10 to Day 334/103/4), unless of course it was the same gunman running back and forth across this gap until he was spotted by soldiers. INQ 444 said that, at best, he had a "fleeting glimpse" of this individual but he was not prepared to concede that his recollection of this glimpse could be unreliable (Day 344/133/15 to Day 334/113/21).

17.8.4.53 The second incident that he said "sticks out in mind" is seeing a person on the roof of Block 1 throwing a bucket of liquid at a Pig which is marked on his map (C444.9) in a position not far from where Sergeant O's Pig was parked. He saw a couple of soldiers jumping about, with other soldiers dousing them with water, which is how he knew it was acid (C444.5 paragraph 32).

17.8.4.54 The problem with all this is that, if such an incident happened at all, it happened when Sergeant O's Pig was parked at the mouth of the courtyard. Neither INQ 444 nor any other member of his platoon arrived until some time after Sergeant O's Pig had been withdrawn from that position so that INQ 444 could not possibly have seen this.

17.8.4.55 The third incident recalled by INQ 444 was seeing a soldier with his rifle under his arm firing between 10 and 20 shots at an angle of 30 to 40 degrees towards Blocks 2 and 3. (C444.5 paragraph 34) This, he agreed, was not a fleeting glimpse. (Day 344/136/23 to Day 344/136/25) The firing could only be described as reckless firing of a kind that was bound to endanger life. (Day 344/141/20 to Day 344/142/2)

17.8.4.56 It may be suggested that this account could be as unreliable as all of INQ 444's other accounts but there is an obvious and important distinction. The other accounts were designed to suggest civilian gunfire and acid bomb attacks of such a kind as to have warranted "return" Army fire. The account of seeing a soldier firing recklessly into the flats is an admission against interest. It was also clearly one that he had been reluctant to make. He had not admitted to it in 1972. It was something he felt "pretty bad about" because he was "shirking [his] responsibilities". (Day 344/112/21 to Day 334/113/4)

17.8.4.57 He also tried to resile from it to the extent that he suggested that this soldier had probably started firing "with his rifle properly in his shoulder" and that the rifle had "slipped out of the shoulder and was working its way down his body." (Day 344/108/6 to Day 344108/11)

17.8.4.58 With regard to the timing, there is reason to believe that, contrary to his evidence, he did not in fact see this incident from the back of Chamberlain Street at a time when Sergeant O's Pig had withdrawn to the north gable wall but from Rossville Street near the junction with William Street before he crossed the waste ground. Ironically, this possibility emerged when INQ 444 was trying to dilute the quality of his evidence on this issue. On the basis of his own map, it was put to him that he was very close to the soldier who was firing but he rejected this and said that, although his map suggested it was a distance of between 25 and 30 yds, it was more like 50 yds. (Day 344/137/3 to Day 334/137/20).

17.8.4.59 Unlike the rest of his recollection, this was an event that was clear in his mind. (Day 344/137/1 to Day 344/137/2). If he was not absolutely sure that he had seen this, he would not in our submission have admitted to it. He felt guilty about not reporting the matter (Day 344/143/1 to Day 334/143/3) and, although he denied it, he could not think of a more likely reason for not admitting it than a wish not to break ranks with his comrades. (Day 344/143/21 to Day/344/144/25) He did, however, tell at least one of his colleagues that he had seen a soldier fire in this manner. (C2597.2 paragraph 8)

17.8.4.60 Again, this was not a witness who was going out of his way to do any favours for the families. Indeed, when Eversheds showed him a photograph (probably E14.4) showing two crouching figures behind the gable wall at the back of 36 Chamberlain Street, he suggested that one of these figures was holding "what might possibly be a Thompson". "It is not an SLR magazine on the weapon", he added. (C444.8 paragraph 51) In other words, he was trying to suggest that these two figures were probably civilian gunmen with at least one Thompson submachine gun of the kind that he had claimed to have heard being fired that day. It was only when the whole photograph was shown to him that he realised that the figures were soldiers.

17.8.4.61 The Tribunal can be satisfied that this soldier did see a member of Mortar Platoon fire between 10 and 20 shots into the Rossville Flats. Whilst the availability of private supplies of ammunition means that it could have been any soldier, the only solider who admits firing that number of rounds is S.

17.8.4.62 Finally, it should be noted that INQ 444 did not see any civilian fire and he did not recollect anyone else from his own platoon (including Lt.110) saying that they had seen civilian gunmen that day. (C444.6 paragraph 41)

Lance Corporal INQ1799

17.8.4.63 Lance Corporal INQ1799 gave oral testimony on Day 314. It quickly became apparent that he was an unreliable witness.

17.8.4.64 His impression of the briefing given by Major 221a was one of "serious business" and that they would be required to go into the No Go area, which was going to be challenging (C1799.2 paragraph 8).

17.8.4.65 He wanted to place himself beside Col Wilford and remembered Col Wilford asking on several occasions for permission to deploy his units but "he seemed to be being kept on hold" (C1799.4 paragraph 25). Counsel for the Inquiry demonstrated that Col Wilford was not where 1799 said this happened and he had to resile from that suggestion. He believes that his Platoon Commander was Lt. INQ1267 (C1799.4 paragraph 26) but he also said that he was in 7 Platoon and refers to Corporal 444 so he must be mistaken about this too.

17.8.4.66 Although other members of 7 Platoon recall going to the junction with Rossville Street, INQ1799 said that he turned into Chamberlain Street and just before he reached Harvey Street he saw a civilian gunman directly in front of him (C1799.5 paragraph 31). He said that he "closed on the crowd to within about 5 feet of them" and "the gunman I saw was about 2 or 3 people deep into the crowd" (ibid). No other soldier claims to have seen this gunman and indeed no other soldier claims that any of the soldiers came so close to the crowd. Indeed, it emerged during his testimony that 1799 didn't actually remember being in Chamberlain St at all and then suggested this could have happened in William St.

17.8.4.67 Private INQ815 said that he was one of 1799's "buddies" on the day and that they walked south down Chamberlain Street together. INQ815 said that there were "a few civilians about, but no one for us to chase and arrest .. .. there were some soldiers further ahead of me, that is, further south down Chamberlain Street." He did not see any civilian gunmen or hear any shots and certainly does not appear to have seen INQ1799 dive into the doorway of a house. (C815.5 paragraphs 20 to 21).

17.8.4.68 Nor did any civilians, including journalists such as Gilles Peress, see the gunman or see any soldier so close to the crowd as it made its way down Chamberlain Street

17.8.4.69 Although this gunman was pointing an automatic pistol in 1799's direction he apparently did not fire but allowed 1799 to dive "obliquely across the barrel of the gun" into the doorway of a house and take cover, where he exchanged his baton gun for an SLR that he had slung around his shoulder. (C1799.5 paragraph 34).

17.8.4.70 It is submitted that this account of seeing a gunman must be rejected as a fabrication, not only because it is inconsistent with all the other civilian and indeed soldiers' evidence but it is inherently improbable, to say the least.

17.8.4.71 As he was in this house, he claims that he heard two distinct bursts of Thompson machine gunfire "close enough to be potentially threatening to me" (C1799.5 paragraph 36). It is submitted that this also was a pure invention.

17.8.4.72 Not content with seeing the pistol man in Chamberlain Street, 1799 claimed to see a gunman with an M1 carbine "lying in the prone position" at the east edge of a wall which, from his map (C1799.10), was directly in front of Block 2 (C1799.6 paragraph 46). It is important to note that when he claims to have seen this man he was, he said, standing at the end of Chamberlain Street with Major 221a and his radio operator. (C1799.6 paragraph 44). Although, according to INQ1799, the rifleman would have been just across the courtyard from the three of them, neither Major

17.8.4.73 INQ 1799 says that he was going to fire his SLR through the wall because "the SLR is so powerful that a round would go through a wall and strike the man behind it" (C1799.7 paragraph 47) but as he released the safety catch and was taking aim another man stood up beside the gunman waving his hands in the air (C1799.6 paragraph 48). He decided that it was dangerous for him to fire so he decided not to do so. (C1799.7 paragraph 49) Just after he had been taking aim at the gunman, he claimed to remember hearing Major 221a say "don't fire!" (C1799.7 paragraph 51). Major 221A did not suggest that he said or did anything of the kind. It is submitted that this account is either a figment of INQ 1799's imagination or simple invention.

17.8.4.74 When he returned to barracks, he reported the gunmen that he had seen to either UNK221 or Lt INQ1267 (neither of whom was his Platoon Commander). He was never asked to give a formal statement or to file a report and he remembers being surprised that he was not called to give testimony at the Widgery Inquiry. (C1799.8 paragraph 61). If he had seen what he claims to have seen and had reported it, INQ 1799 would have been a star witness at the Widgery Tribunal. The only explanation for the absence of an RMP statement from him or an appearance at the Widgery Tribunal is either that he made up his account some time after the Widgery Tribunal or that even his superior officers at the time regarded him as a fantasist.

17.8.4.75 Soldier 003 was a Lance Corporal who went through Barrier 14 with Lt. 110 and Corporal 444. He said he was the first soldier through the barrier (Day 309/67/21 to Day 309/67/22) so that by the time his company went through the barrier there were no civilians between the barrier and the junction with Chamberlain Street. When he was in a position to see up Little James Street as far as the junction with Rossville Street, he saw that the crowd had moved right back to that junction. (Day 309/107/21 to Day 309/107/25). He accepted that at the time of his deployment there was no pressure on the barrier in the sense of crowds rioting there. By the time they moved in "there was no prospect of catching anyone". (Day 309/109/6 to Day 309/109/17)

17.8.4.76 Contrary to the accounts of Lt. 110 and Corporal INQ 444, he was aware of no shooting as they made their way up William Street and the first time he heard shooting was when he crossed the waste ground. (Day 309/109/22 to Day 309/110/8).

17.8.4.77 In his 1972 RMP statement, he had not suggested that he had come under fire as he crossed the waste ground. He suggested that while he was at the back of 36 Chamberlain Street there was "quite a lot of firing coming from the flats at this time directed towards us". (B1364). When he came to give his evidence to this Tribunal, he reversed this. He said that they came under fire as they crossed the waste ground (B1366.4 paragraph 19) and that they did not come under fire while they were at the back of Chamberlain Street (Day 309/112/16 to Day 309/112/17). The fire he came under as he crossed the waste ground, he said, was from a Thompson.

17.8.4.78 Two points occur in relation to this. First, as appears above, both Lt 110 and Corporal INQ 444 said that the platoon did not come under fire as they crossed the waste ground. Secondly, the sound of the Thompson submachine gun fire that Lance Corporal 003 claimed to hear did not occur at the same time as the sound of the Thompson that INQ 444 claimed to hear, so that they were not purporting to talk about the same sound.

17.8.4.79 Lance Corporal 003 said this sound was definitely from a Thompson but in his RMP statement and in his Eversheds statement (B1366.6 paragraph 32) he said it could "possibly" have been a Thompson. He claimed to have heard one burst of about six or seven rounds fired in two or three seconds. When it was suggested to him that the slowest Thompson fires at a rate of 600 rounds per minute, i.e. 10 a second, he said it could have been 20 or 30 or 40 rounds that he heard. (Day 309/117/22 to Day 309/117/23)

17.8.4.80 He had no sense of ever coming under fire from Rossville Flats (B1366.4 paragraph 21) and he conceded that, when he admitted that, he did not realise that in 1972 he had said the opposite. (Day 309/118/22 to Day 309/118/24)

17.8.4.81 In his Eversheds statement, this soldier said that he did not see anyone in the courtyard of the Rossville Flats and did not see any vehicles parked there. He also said that Support Company came into the Bogside after he had reached the back of the houses at Chamberlain Street. (B1366.4 paragraphs 21 to 22) Like other members of his platoon, Lance Corporal 003 obviously arrived in the waste ground sometime after the material events had all occurred. It is submitted that his accounts of hearing Thompson submachine gun fire or any other civilian fire are completely unreliable.

17.8.4.82 Lance Corporal INQ 736 claimed to have heard two small explosions as he ran along William Street and then some low velocity rounds when he got to the end of William Street. It sounded like a Thompson. (C736.2 paragraph 8) He did not go beyond this position because this was "the boundary of operations for C Company" (C736.2 paragraph 9). He said that he heard more incoming fire than Army fire. He tried to find out where the incoming fire was coming from by looking for smoke from gun muzzles, movement in buildings and so on but he did not see any smoke or anything else that warranted him opening fire (C736.3 paragraph 12). He did not make an RMP statement.

17.8.4.83 During his oral testimony, INQ736 rejected the suggestion that he could have mistaken the sound of baton round fire for the sound of a nail bomb explosion (Day 310/142/5) even though he did not remember hearing any baton rounds being fired once he had gone through Barrier 14. (Day 310/141/24) He explained that a nail bomb explosion is much louder than a baton being discharged. When asked by the chairman about the sound of two or more baton rounds being discharged at the same time, he insisted that the volume would be exactly the same. (Day 310/142/9). The explosions he claimed to have heard were to his left as he ran along William Street past the entrance to Chamberlain Street, in other words in or around the waste ground off Rossville Street (C736.2 paragraph 8). During his oral testimony, he confirmed that this meant he claimed hearing them at a time before the vehicles of Support Company went into the Bogside. (Day 310/171/24). In other words, according to this soldier, nail bombs were being thrown in the Bogside in or around the Rossville Street area before any soldiers entered that area, which is difficult to understand He was "as certain as anyone can be" (Day 310/149/12) that the low velocity fire he heard was a Thompson machine gun. However, he was also convinced that Support Company had entered the Bogside on foot, stopped advancing on foot when they were fired on and then returned to their vehicles to replace their batons with rifles. (Day 310/150/16 to Day151/3) He was "absolutely" sure of this and had a vivid recollection of that happening (Day 310/164/4 to Day/310/164/6) even though this was clearly all wrong. Since it was the Support Company soldiers who were advancing on foot who were the object of the hostile incoming fire which 736 claimed to have heard, the entirety of his evidence on this matter has to be regarded as unreliable. It is also significant in this respect that he did not report hearing these shots to anyone (Day 310/174/1). It is submitted that this soldier's recollection of hearing nail bombs and low velocity fire must be either mistaken or fabricated.

Lance Corporal INQ939

17.8.4.84 Lance Corporal INQ939 did not give oral testimony. He also went to the junction of William Street and Rossville Street. He heard shooting but could not say from which weapon they were fired. He thought they could have been fired on from perhaps two or three weapons at the same time but he would not say that the fire was automatic. (C939.3 paragraph 26).

He did not see any civilians with weapons or bombs. (C939.4 paragraph 34).

Private INQ131

17.8.4.85 Private INQ131 believed that the Paras were going to Derry to "break the No Go area so that the troops could go back on patrol" (C131.1 paragraph 5)

17.8.4.86 He also talks about coming under fire but his account of this is at variance with the accounts given by Lt. 110, Corporal INQ 444 and Lance Corporal 003. He has indicated on his map an area at the junction of William Street and Rossville Street as the point where he came under "incoming" fire. (C131.9 and C131.4 paragraph 19) The shots he claimed to have heard were single shots from a low calibre weapon. Enemy fire, he said, was almost continuous (C131.5 paragraph 27) but he did not recall hearing any automatic fire or explosions. (C131.5 paragraph 26) So, whatever he heard, it was not Thompson machine gun fire.

17.8.4.87 Despite his apparent recollection of continuous enemy fire, he claims that his platoon left the cover of the buildings at the junction with Rossville Street and made its way across the open waste ground in full view of Rossville Flats. He even embellished his account of the civilian firing by adding that he could see dirt jumping on the ground (C131.4 paragraph 19). He accepted that as he made his way across the waste ground and along the wall behind Chamberlain Street there was no cover at all (Day 333/29/9 to Day 333/29/12) despite the suggestion in his Eversheds statement that he took cover in this area. (C131.4 paragraph 21)

17.8.4.88 By the time he reached the back of Chamberlain Street, he said that most of the crowd had disappeared but he could see people "milling around on the waste ground, on Rossville Street and in the car park of the Rossville Flats". He had no memory of what exactly they were doing but he had no impression of them fleeing (C131.5 paragraph 23). He said he could see a single Pig with its back towards him between him and the car park of the Rossville Flats but cannot remember any other vehicle in the area (C131.5 paragraph 24).

17.8.4.89 It is submitted that this soldier's account is also unreliable insofar as he suggests hearing or seeing civilian gunfire. Like the other members of his platoon, it is likely that he arrived on the scene after the material events had all occurred but has difficulty accepting that he was present on Bloody Sunday and did not witness any civilian gunfire. Alternatively, if he was there when he heard gunfire, he must have been lying when he said that he "didn't see any soldiers actually firing in the area all day" (C131.5 paragraph 26).

17.8.4.90 Not even this soldier said that there was any civilian gunfire after the soldiers ceased firing.

17.8.4.91 Private INQ5 was a signaller. He gave oral testimony on Day 379 and identified himself as the soldier with a radio running across the wasteground in Video 1/5.13 to 5.50 a still of which was saved as C5.61 (Day 379/15/12).

17.8.4.92 He claimed to have gone down an alley which would have been Macari's Lane but he accepted during questioning that he was wrong about that and that he must have gone to the junction of William Street and Rossville Street (Day 379/13/25). He said that as soon as he reached the open waste ground "a whole lot of muck came down on us, by which I mean fire was opened up on us" (C5.2 paragraph 10) He was anxious to stress that he was definitely fired on by civilian gun fire. He said it was a mix of small arms fire and some heavy calibre weapons and machine gun fire. (C5.2 paragraph 11) He did not know where it was coming from or how much enemy fire there was but "there was a lot". There was then "return gun fire from our lads" (ibid). Even when it must have been apparent to him that he was wrong, he insisted on adhering the story given to Lena Ferguson that he and other members of C Company were the first Paratroopers to the waste ground, that C Company were the first soldiers to be fired at and that, unknown to the gunmen who were firing at him, Support Company then came in and took the gunmen by surprise. (Day 379/64/5 to Day 379/64/13). It was then demonstrated to him by reference to P272, P273 and P274 that he was not behind the burnt-out van at all at the time when Support Company were in Rossville Street.

17.8.4.93 This soldier's evidence is undermined by the fact that, first of all, he claims to have immediately hidden behind a burnt-out car as soon as he heard gunfire (C5.2 paragraph 10) and sheltered there for between 10 and 15 minutes (C5.2 paragraph 13) so that his view was limited on his own account. Secondly, again, by his own admission, he did not know if Support Company was in the area at the time. (C5.2 paragraph 12) In other words, he clearly didn't hear Lt N firing shots just a few yards from him at Eden Place, or members of Support Company firing 29 shots into the courtyard of Rossville Flats and other members of Support Company firing shots in Rossville Street and Glenfada Park North. The explanation for all this is that he did not arrive at the waste ground until sometime after some or all of this occurred.

17.8.4.94 He claims to have kept in touch with events over the radio but, as we know from the logs and the Porter tape, there were no reports made over the radio at this time. Significantly, he had no recollection of being notified himself by any member of the platoon that contact had been made and that he should get on the radio (Day 379/37/17 to Day 379/37/20). The only time he recalled using the radio himself was before the Paratroopers went in (Day 379/38/8 to Day 379/38/15) even though he claimed to have personally witnessed incoming fire from the flats. In other words, although it was his job to report any contact, he did not do so, which gives rise to the inference that he was aware of no incoming fire.

17.8.4.95 INQ 5 denied talking to the Press about Bloody Sunday (C5.3 paragraph 19) but later made a supplementary statement in which he admitted talking to Praxis (C5.5 paragraph 2), Lena Ferguson (C5.6 paragraph 8) and Jimmy McGovern (C5.7 paragraph 13). His Praxis interview is at C5.15. His interviews with Lena Ferguson are at C5.28 et seq and notes of the McGovern interviews are at C5.39 et seq. These interviews are so extensive that he could not have forgotten them, which means that he deliberately lied to the Tribunal when he said in his original statement that he had not talked to the Press. His explanation for not disclosing them was that he did not regard the T.V. as the Press (Day 379/59/14to Day 379/59/17) but he had been confronted by Lena Ferguson and he refused to release her from her duty of confidentiality to him (Day 379/61/1 to Day 379/61/4). He maintained his claim that the army had come under fire but he never saw a gunman (Day 379/36/19) and has no recollection of any member of his platoon indicating that any "contact" had been made (Day 379/37/17 to Day 379/37/20). The account he gave to Lena Ferguson and others was based, at least in part, on information he received after Bloody Sunday, not on his own recollection. (Day 379/40/6 to Day 379/40/8) he himself has not recollection of hearing any army fire (Day 379/27/20 to Day 379/27/22). With regard to the "non army" fire he claimed to have heard, he told Praxis and Lena Ferguson that it definitely came from Rossville Flats but he accepted in his testimony that this was simply an assumption on his part (Day 379/28/22 to Day 379/29/28). In a built up area it is "virtually impossible to tell where the rounds come from" (Day 379/30/16 to Day 379/30/18). This is another soldier upon whose account no reliance can be placed.

17.8.4.96 Private INQ 815 went through Barrier 14 in a Pig after other members of his Platoon went in on foot. As mentioned above, he walked down Chamberlain Street with INQ1799 but there were very few civilians about and they were some distance behind other soldiers further down Chamberlain Street. (C815.5 paragraphs 20 to 21)

17.8.4.97 He did not recall hearing any shooting at all during the day (C815.4 paragraph 17). The thing that sticks out in his mind from the day is the way the dead bodies were handled. He says that the way they were thrown into the Pig was "totally disrespectful." He was "disgusted" (C815.6 paragraph 27)

Lt 26

17.8.4.98 Lt. 26 was the Officer Commanding 8 Platoon, which crossed Barrier 14 after 7 Platoon and 9 Platoon. 8 Platoon went down Chamberlain Street.

17.8.4.99 Initially, during his oral testimony, he tried to justify the arrests carried out by his platoon on the basis that the people withdrawing down Chamberlain Street were throwing stones at them. (Day 315/126/19 to Day 315/126/21).

17.8.4.100 However, when it was pointed out that in his RMP statement he had said that the crowd remained 50 yds ahead of them and nothing was thrown at them (B1545.7), he said without blushing: "right, in that case I accept my version of 1972, nothing was thrown at us" (Day 315/127/2 to Day 315/127/5).

17.8.4.101 This made it clear at the outset that this witness was prepared to fabricate allegations of misconduct on the part of civilians in order to justify the misconduct of his own men, even in the relatively peripheral matter of arrests. Incidentally, it does not appear from his Eversheds statement that carrying out arrests was the main purpose of the operation but was no more than an "option". (B1545.1 paragraph 14)

17.8.4.102 Lt. 26 had no idea that he was to take part in any kind of pincer movement (Day 315/153/17 to Day 315/153/19).

17.8.4.103 He heard no shooting when he was moving down Chamberlain Street (Day 315/157/7 to Day 315/157/8). He accepted that when his Pig parked at the very end of Chamberlain Street with his men around it they were "an absolutely perfect target there for any gunmen operating in Rossville Flats" but the Pig was not fired upon and none of his men were fired upon (Day 315/157/17 to Day 315/157/22). He also appears to have persuaded two frightened women to move from behind a car in the courtyard to Chamberlain Street (B1545.3 paragraph 23) which, as he agreed, he presumably would not have done if firing had been going on at the time (Day 315/159/3 to Day 315/159/6).

17.8.4.104 He claimed to have heard 2 or 3 gunshots from a high velocity weapon while at the end of Chamberlain Street (B1545.3 paragraph 24), not the 20 or 30 he said in his RMP statement (B1541). In 1972, he said that one weapon was "almost certainly" an M1 carbine and the other was "possibly" a .303. (ibid). By the time he came to give his oral testimony, he could distinguish accurately between the sounds of high velocity weapons "without any doubt" (Day 315/135/19 to Day 315/135/22) and was "absolutely certain" that one was an M1 carbine (Day 315/163/24 to Day 315/164/1). In addition, it should be noted that the M1 carbine is a medium velocity weapon.

17.8.4.105 He claimed to have formed the view that the firing was coming from the roof of Rossville Flats "in the immediate vicinity of a lift housing" (B1542) but he had to accept that from where he was he could not have seen any such structure (Day 315/166/23 to Day 315/167/2). He also claimed that these rounds passed right across his front in a "north westerly direction" (B1545.3 paragraph 24), i.e. effectively towards soldiers. When pressed to explain how he would have known the direction in which any such bullets were travelling, he initially claimed that he heard the bullets. When it was pointed out to him that he would only have heard the crack if it passed overhead and that it had not passed overhead, he said that he could not recall if he heard a crack or thump and agreed that he would only have heard a crack if it had passed directly overhead, which it did not. (Day 315/168/1 to Day 315/168/10)

17.8.4.106 The upshot of this was that, contrary to his RMP and Eversheds statements, he could not have formed the view that these shots were being fired in the direction he claimed and his evidence about the location of the alleged gunmen is undermined by the dishonesty in his account of what he could see on the roof.

17.8.4.107 He did not see any of the targets claimed by any of the soldiers in Mortar Platoon.

17.8.4.108 Based on his own evidence, it is likely that he was one of the group of soldiers who were laughing and joking when Antoinette Coyle of the Knights of Malta was seeking assistance for a number of civilian casualties. (AC85.17 paragraph 42)

Sergeant INQ2000

17.8.4.109 Sergeant INQ2000 did not give oral testimony, presumably because he said in his Eversheds statement: "I have no recollection of going to Londonderry whatsoever and I have no recollection of the day at all" (C2000.1 paragraph 3).

17.8.4.110 He accepts that he signed formal statements alleging that William McCloskey, Charles McCarron and OIRA 8 (all arrested from 33 Chamberlain Street) were throwing stones at the military and that he also arrested James Ferguson for being in the house. .

17.8.4.111 This evidence was clearly fabricated. In his RMP statement made on 10th May 1972 he said he was chasing about 50 rioters but "this group disappeared on reaching the top of Chamberlain Street and I had assumed that they had gone into the Rossville Flats area, because on our arrival at the top of Chamberlain Street they were nowhere to be seen". (C2000.2). He said he went into the house at 33 Chamberlain Street, it was full of people and these people were the ones they had chased up Chamberlain Street after having seen them throwing stones. (C2000.2)

1.8.4.112 However, he did not suggest either in his RMP statement or in his Eversheds statement that he had seen any civilian gunmen or heard any kind of civilian gunfire, automatic or otherwise, or bombs of any kind.

17.8.4.113 By the time Corporal 007 went through the barrier, he could see that the crowd was already dispersed some distance away from him. (Day 310/63/12 to Day 310/63/17).

17.8.4.114 Although he initially denied it, he signed 3 statements alleging that he had seen his arrestees throw stones when in fact he did not. (Day 310/72/6 to Day 310/72/7) When asked to accept that when he made a statement alleging that William Duddy had thrown stones (ARR17.3) he knew it was not true, he said: "I know it now not to be true" but "I obviously believed it then". When asked how he could have believed it then if he now knows it to be untrue, he said: "I'm not sure how I can answer that one". (Day 310/72/17). The Chairman pointed out to him that in May of the same year he had told the RMP that he had not seen any of three arrestees throwing stones (B1384) and asked if the position was not the same when he signed his statement on 4th February (note the date). He agreed that was correct. (Day 310/73/1) For this reason alone, his evidence cannot be relied upon.

17.8.4.115 His account in his RMP statement of hearing a gunman when he was at the end of Chamberlain Street bears a resemblance in several respects to Lt. 26's account. He thought that the weapon he heard was an M1 carbine. He said: "from what I could see the gunman was in the vicinity of the lift housing on the roof of Rossville Flats". (B1378) He admitted that as he stood in Chamberlain Street that day he did not form a view as to where the shots had come from or what kind of shots they were. It was not until he was asked to make his statement in 1972 to the RMP that he decided this. (Day 310/77/5 to Day 310/77/13) He claimed that he must have believed what he said in 1972 about the high velocity shots being from an M1 carbine but "standing here today [he] could not say that" (Day 310/76/24 to Day 310/76/25).

Corporal INQ 579

17.8.4.116 Corporal INQ 579 provided yet another version of events unlike that of any other soldier. He remembers his section advancing down Chamberlain Street side-by-side covering the whole width of the street. (C579.2 paragraph 13.) He could hear gunfire to his right but could not make out whether the shots were from an SLR or other types of weapon (C579.3 paragraph 13) but when they were half way down Chamberlain Street he heard the crack and thump of a bullet passing close to him. He thought it was a high velocity weapon fired from directly in front of him from Rossville Flats area. (C579.3 paragraph 15) "We all took cover when the shot was fired", he said. (C579.4 paragraph 16) He said he asked if anyone had seen the gunman but nobody had (C579.4 paragraph 16). Lt. 26 does not remember this.

17.8.4.117 He went into 33 Chamberlain Street and saw a wounded woman who was lying on the settee but she "did not appear to be in any great pain" (C579.4 paragraph 18).

17.8.4.118 Corporal INQ 579 claims to remember then withdrawing to the junction with Harvey Street and seeing a priest walking up the street in front of a group of people carrying an injured person (C579.4 paragraph 21). This of course happened before C Company reached the end of Chamberlain Street and went into No.33. He said that it now occurred to him that "the priest could only have been waving his white handkerchief to prevent people firing from behind him, as there was no shooting from my direction". (C579.4 paragraph 21) That is a fairly clear reflection of either the perspective or the standard of honesty of this witness.

Lance Corporal INQ 1334

17.8.4.119 Lance Corporal INQ 1334 remembers that "the general feeling among the Paras was that Londonderry was out of hand" and that the leadership there was weak. He remembers the headline referring to soldiers as "beaten dogs", which made him feel very emotional, and "we were looking forward to a chance to put things right". (C1334.1 paragraphs 3 to 4). He remembers that the barrier was not being lifted and General Ford, who was standing in a doorway nearby, "just pointed towards the rioters beyond the barrier and looked at us as if to say "go on". So we did". (C1334.3 paragraph 14)

17.8.4.120 He claimed that as he ran on to Chamberlain Street he heard Thompson submachine gun fire coming from "somewhere in William Street" (C1334.3 paragraph 16). However, he claims not to have heard any other live firing apart from this before seeing Father Daly coming towards him with a group including Jackie Duddy. (Day 340/108/3 to Day 340/108/7) This is indicative of a selective memory and cannot be right since it is common case that dozens of SLR shots had been fired by this stage in or around the courtyard and on Rossville Street. .

17.8.4.121 1334 is the soldier who interrupted the passage of Father Daly's group when it reached the junction of Harvey Street. He suggested that the civilians in his group had sworn at him (Day 340/108/23 to Day 340/108/24) but it is clear from the Video 1 (V1/5.00 to 6.00) that he was simply told to "go away".

17.8.4.122 He claimed that the people in 33 Chamberlain Street were "obviously rioters because they were flushed and sweaty and some were trying to drop stones on the way out". (C1334.5 paragraph 23)

17.8.4.123 With regard to his claim of hearing M1 carbine fire from Rossville Flats, he told Eversheds that he could not recall from which block he thought the shots were coming. (C1334.5 paragraph 25) When asked about this during his oral testimony, he said: "what I meant was: I did not know the number of which block it was. I knew it was the one that was directly opposite the end of Chamberlain Street". (Day 340/117/12 to Day 340/117/14) However, in the very same paragraph, he had referred by number to Block 2 of the Flats and in the next paragraph he referred to both Block 2 and Block 3, so he knew the numbers perfectly well and was obviously lying about this.

17.8.4.124 He also claimed to have heard a low velocity pistol or submachine gun being fired from the direction of Block 3. (C1334.6 paragraph 26) In neither case did he see any gunmen. All of this firing from Rossville Flats, on his account, took place after Father Daly had moved into Harvey Street - in other words at a time when all the firing in the courtyard area must have ceased. In addition, despite his accounts of hearing Thompson submachine gun fire and various kinds of civilian gunfire from two blocks of the Rossville Flats, he was not asked to make a statement to the RMP. He claimed that he had told his Company Sergeant Major and a staff sergeant from the RMP what he had heard (Day 340/122/12 to Day 340/122/23) but, if this had been true, it is likely that he would have been asked to make a statement at the time.

17.8.4.125 The clearest indication of this soldier's integrity appears at the end of his Eversheds statement. In paragraph 32 he said: "On 30th January 1972 I am confident that only issued ammunition was carried in my vehicle. There had been an incident of a solider keeping his own supply of ammunition the previous October and the individual involved had been demoted. Demotion was something that everyone took very seriously and I would be amazed if anyone had dared to have any private ammunition in C Company that day". (C1334.7 paragraph 32)

17.8.4.126 The soldier who had been demoted was in fact himself. (Day 340/99/4 to Day 340/99/7) His explanation for this blatant deception, that he thought the offence was "spent" under the Rehabilitation of Offenders Act, does not bear scrutiny. Moreover, the rounds that he had stolen were tracer rounds. Tracer ammunition was not issued in 39 Brigade, so that as soon as he fired one round it would have been obvious to everyone near him that he had fired unauthorised ammunition (Day 340/123/20 to Day 340/123/22) The obvious inference is that he fully expected to be able to use private supplies of tracer ammunition without anyone reporting it to the authorities. This reflects the extent to which the practice occurred and was tolerated.

Private INQ 12

17.8.4.127 Private INQ12 was another demonstrably dishonest witness. He said in the first paragraph of his Eversheds statement that when he was called upon to operate in Derry on Bloody Sunday it was the first time he had been out of Belfast. (C12.1 paragraph 1) In fact he had been at Magilligan the previous week, which must have been a particularly memorable occasion for him because it was the one and only time he said that he was disciplined for his conduct in the Army. These were disciplinary proceedings that were referred to by Col Wilford during the Widgery Inquiry. (WT 11.58 B) He had kicked a man on the ground and was "caught on television" (Day 351/5/15). At the beginning of his testimony to this Inquiry, he admitted to the Tribunal that he had been at Magilligan the previous week. When asked why he had said in his statement that he had not been out of Belfast before 30th January 1972 he said: "I forgot about it, Sir". (Day 351/3/7)

17.8.4.128 The only television footage of a soldier kicking someone on the ground at Magilligan is in Video 11 at 3 hours 12 minutes but he denied that this is the incident in which he was involved (Day 351/6/15 to Day 351/6/19) although he knew of no other soldiers who were disciplined for kicking a civilian in any other incident. (Day 351/72/21 to Day 351/73/5) Nor does his account of the disciplinary proceedings correspond with the account given by Col. Wilford (Day 351/74/21 to Day 351/75/11).

17.8.4.129 In his Eversheds statement (C12.2 paragraph 8) INQ 12 said that there were thousands of people about 8 feet from the Barrier. He denied that this was an exaggeration and was positive that it was not more like 60 people about 25 to 30 yards away (Day 351/81/8 to Day 351/81/13). However, in his RMP statement this is exactly what he had said. (C12.9)

17.8.4.130 He also suggested that petrol bombs and acid bombs were thrown at the soldiers at Barrier 14 and their feet were set on fire. He was not prepared to admit that this was wrong even when he was shown the statement of the OC the soldiers manning the Barrier in which he said that there were no bombs of any description thrown (C2079.4 paragraph 24).

17.8.4.131 He also said in his Eversheds statement (C12.3 paragraph 11) that only 2 men from his platoon carried rifles. Apart from the evidence of the other members of his platoon, he was shown a photograph (P253) in which a number of members of his platoon were shown carrying rifles. In order to extricate himself from that difficulty, he suggested that this photograph had not been taken before they entered Chamberlain Street but after they had been "involved in everything, with what happened on Chamberlain Street and the prisoners at the end of Chamberlain Street and come back down". (Day 353/87/13 to Day 353/87/19). When it was suggested to him that the photograph had been taken just after he had gone through the Barrier and when they were assembling at the William Street end of Chamberlain Street before they went into Chamberlain Street, he said that in fact he thought it had been taken after they had come back from Fort George (Day 351/88/3 to Day 351/88/8), when it would have been dark.

17.8.4.132 In his Eversheds statement (C12.3 paragraph 12) he said that as they went into Chamberlain Street they came under fire but he had made no reference to coming under fire in any of his 3 statements made in 1972 either to the Police or the RMP. His explanation for that was that he had never been questioned about this. (Day 351/88/19 to Day 351/89/1). When asked why he did not mention himself that he had live rounds fired at him, he said that it was mentioned. Then he said it was not mentioned. Then he said he did not say he said it was mentioned. Then he said it was mentioned. (Day 351/89/2 to Day 351/90/22) His final position was that he did tell the RMP and the police about being fired on but they did not write it down. (Day 351/92/12 to Day 351/92/23)

17.8.4.133 He also said that he had told them about seeing a civilian gunman (Day 351/93/9 to Day 351/93/11) but this did not appear in his 1972 statements either.

17.8.4.134 He explained that the firing he heard was not an SLR because the firing he heard was from a semi-automatic rifle. Then he agreed that an SLR was a semi-automatic rifle. (Day 351/93/24 to Day 351/93/25) When it was pointed out that that could not therefore be a reason why the firing he heard was not an SLR, he said the rifle he heard was a low velocity semi-automatic rifle, not high velocity. (Day 351/94/3 to Day 351/94/8) However, what he had said in his Eversheds statement was that it was a high velocity weapon. (C12.3 paragraph 12) After a pause, he said with a smirk: "I must have made a mistake, it must have been high velocity". (Day 351/94/22 to Day 351/95/1)

17.8.4.135 When asked how he knew the shots were being fired in the Company's general direction, he said the rounds were hitting the road (Day 351/96/2) but he had not suggested this in his Eversheds statement.

17.8.4.136 He claimed to have seen a gunman walking a distance of about 20 or 25 yards across the roof of Block 2. He saw him clearly (Day 351/97/8 to Day 351/98/18) Nobody else claims to have seen this gunman, including soldiers in the Observation Posts on the Embassy Building, soldiers on the city walls and soldiers in the helicopter that was apparently flying overhead, not to mention the soldiers he was with. Peter Pringle confirmed that the roof was overlooked by the Observation Posts on the Embassy building and the City Walls. (M68.225 paragraph 8 and S3) INQ 12 agreed that the gunman would have been "very visible" and he could not explain why others had not seen him. (Day 351/101/6 to Day 351/101/7) He then added that the "gunman" got up from his position and went back for more ammunition (Day 351/101/17 to Day 351/17/18).

17.8.4.137 INQ12 said he (12) did not have a weapon (C12.3 paragraph 15) but he is clearly seen in the photograph P253 carrying his rifle.

17.8.4.138 In (C12.4 paragraphs 18 to 20) of his Eversheds statement, INQ 12 explained how he went into 33 Chamberlain Street and arrested a number of people. However, as appears from OS1.819 paragraph 18 he had originally omitted all reference to this event and pretended not to remember it. When pressed about how such an important event in his day could have been omitted he talked incoherently about 5 other statements "until we finally got to here". The questioning continued as follows:

"Q. What do you mean "5 other"?

A. Well, until the document that was finally agreed as my statement, there was 5 or 6 other times I was interviewed by Eversheds and it finally came out.

Q. Does that mean there were 5 or 6 previous drafts before you got the story cobbled together that is now produced to us as your final version?

A Yes" (Day 351/106/10 to Day 351/106/17)

17.8.4.139 INQ 12 told the Police that he had seen George Nelis run up Chamberlain Street into a house (C12.9) but in his first RMP statement he had said that on his arrival in Chamberlain Street "they had disappeared" and the patrol continued along Chamberlain Street in an effort to locate the rioters "but without success". (C12.10). When asked which of these contradictory statements was the truth, he said: "the both of them really, Sir". (Day 351/110/9)

17.8.4.140 INQ12 was a 5'6" Scotsman of stocky build. (Day 351/46/1 to Day 351/46/9) He was clearly the person identified by a number of civilians as having subjected them to extensive physical and verbal abuse (Day 351/46/18 to Day 351/60/12 and Day 351/112/2 to Day 351/115/23). INQ12 accepted that the person described in those statements behaved like a sectarian, racist thug if those complaints had any validity (Day 351/115/24 to Day 351/116/1) but he refused to accept that they referred to him, even though one of them (George Nelis) was able to repeat that INQ12 had been wounded in Belfast.

17.8.4.141 INQ12 initially denied participating in any media interviews but on 25th September 2003 he made a supplementary statement admitting that he did talk to Praxis, although he maintained in it that his original denials had been made "truthfully". (C12.18 paragraph 2). He also claimed to have difficulty identifying the portions of the transcript which could properly be attributable to him. The explanation for his difficulty is obvious.

17.8.4.142 INQ12 suggested that he had been subjected to a good deal of abuse by civilians in the house (C12.4 paragraph 19) but INQ579 said: "they were quiet and they did not give me any trouble....everyone was calm and not threatening (C579.4 paragraph 19). INQ12's attitude to civilians is reflected in the fact that when he saw Jackie Duddy's body being carried along Chamberlain Street he assumed that he had been shot by the IRA (Day 351/120/9 to Day 351/120/11).

Private INQ 876

17.8.4.143 Private INQ 876 did not give oral testimony but his Eversheds statement is unreliable even on its face. Among other things, he claimed to have heard blast bombs and nail bombs going off even before the soldiers went through Barrier 14. He also "definitely saw petrol bombs being thrown by civilians towards the barricade". (C876.2 paragraph 12).

17.8.4.144 He claimed that ammunition within the Parachute Regiment was extremely tightly controlled and he did not know how anyone could obtain a private supply of ammunition. (C876.5 paragraph 32). However, one of the soldiers in his own Pig, INQ 471, said that there were always ways and means of getting private supplies of ammunition, namely off the firing ranges: "it was common and many soldiers did it". (C471.1 paragraph 4) 17.8.4.145 INQ876 also says that "any suggestion that soldiers tampered with ammunition and created dumdum bullets is ridiculous. (C876.5 paragraph 32). INQ471 that that ammunition acquired off the firing range "could be, and often was, doctored" by filing the end flat. (C471.2 paragraph 5).

17.8.4.146 Nothing that INQ 876 said can, therefore, be taken at face value.

17.8.4.147 He drove one of the Pigs through the Barrier. He said that: "as [he] proceeded through the Barrier [he] could still hear the same noise as before", i.e. a sporadic mixture of gunfire, SLR fire, other high velocity fire, automatic fire, petrol bombs and nail bombs. (C876.3 paragraph 18) Even he didn't claim to see any civilian firing or throwing nail bombs or petrol bombs. Indeed he claims that it was only when he stopped at a village on the way back from Derry that he "began to learn what had happened that day". (C876.5 paragraph 30)

Private INQ 471

17.8.4.148 As described above, Private INQ 471 says that many soldiers, including himself, carried private supplies of ammunition acquired off the firing ranges. The ammunition was often doctored. (C471.2 paragraphs 4 to 5) After jumping across the barrier, he thought he went straight down Chamberlain Street and stopped at the corner with Harvey Street but he accepted during his oral testimony that he could not be certain that it was this corner rather than the William Street corner of Chamberlain Street. (Day 312/150/3)

17.8.4.149 As he stood there, he heard gunfire which could have been either from a rifle or a pistol and then he heard what he assumed was return fire.

(C471.3 paragraph 15). He thought that the first shots were high velocity shots and accepted that they could have been Lt N's shots. Although he believed at the time that the subsequent shots were return fire, he accepted that he had no basis for suggesting that. He also accepted that all the fire he heard could have been fire from soldiers. (Day 312/151/23 to Day 312/151/25)

17.8.4.150 INQ 471 is the only soldier we know of who has himself been wounded by Thompson submachine gun fire. As he said: "I have been shot with one of them, I know what that sounds like". (Day 312/152/5 to Day 312/152/6) He "definitely" did not hear Thompson submachine gun fire (Day 312/152/7 to Day 312/152/8). This is one of the very few soldiers who even appeared to give his evidence in a frank, straightforward and apparently balanced manner. As someone who was also in the lead platoon of C Company as it made its way down Chamberlain Street, his evidence should be accorded considerable weight.

17.8.4.151 INQ 2045 was close to INQ12 and he says that as he was three quarters the way down the street he heard the sound of automatic gun fire and single shot gun fire. (C2045.2 paragraph 15) He was aware of bullets passing over his head, he said, but did not form an opinion at to whether the bullets were from military or civilian gunmen. (C2045.3 paragraphs 19 to 20). He claimed he took cover at the Rossville Flats end of Chamberlain Street (C0245.3 paragraph 21) and as he looked ahead he could see a scene of mayhem with "women and kids screaming, shouting and running around". (C2045.3 paragraphs 21 to 23). As we know, this platoon did not arrive at the end of Chamberlain Street until after Jackie Duddy's body had been carried up Harvey Street. It is common case that the courtyard was virtually deserted at this stage. Indeed, this soldier said that he saw a group of men, including a priest, carrying a body after the events he witnessed at the end of the street. (C2045.3 paragraph 28) This also was wrong. His evidence is unreliable.

17.8.4.152 INQ 2121 gave oral testimony on Day 369.

17.8.4.153 His evidence is seriously muddled, to say the least. He appears to have been driving a vehicle at the forming-up point in or around Clarence Avenue when it broke down. The rest of his platoon got into other vehicles and went on but he was ordered to stay with the broken down Pig. (C2121.2 paragraphs 10 to 11) Some time later he got a lift with the Battalion medical officer at a time when there was radio traffic indicating that there were casualties from shooting in he Bogside. He arrived in the Bogside about 5 minutes after that. (C2121.2 paragraphs 13 to 14) He seems to have stopped somewhere near Rossville Flats at a time when the shooting must have stopped and when Support Company's vehicles were gathered at the north gable wall of Block 1.

17.8.4.154 However, this soldier claims that as he got out he saw a figure on the roof of Block 1 "with something long that he was holding in both hands across the body". "It was only a fleeting glimpse as I formed the impression that what he had in his hands was a weapon". (C2121. 3 paragraph 16) By the time 2121 had put his weapon to his shoulder the figure had gone," he said. (C2121.3 paragraph 17)

17.8.4.155 No other soldier has given an account of this nature and, in our submission, it can be safely discounted in view especially of the timing suggested by the solider himself. He is the only soldier apart from INQ 12 who claims to have scene a gunman on the roof of Rossville Flats. It should be noted, however, that this witness' "figure" was on the roof of Block 1 whereas INQ 12's was on the roof of Block 2 so the accounts cannot be regarded as corroborating each other.

17.8.4.156 In a supplemental statement, INQ 2121 identified himself as the soldier referred to by Toby Harden as Soldier Y in the Daily Telegraph articles. INQ12 and INQ 2597 had also identified him as one of those who participated in a Praxis interview (C12.18 paragraph 4 and C2597 paragraph 10). He is also identified himself as one of the five soldiers who talked to Praxis (C2121.7 paragraphs 3 to 5). Although not disputing that the transcripts of the interviews were accurate, he explained discrepancies by suggesting that "it was an interview given in a relaxed atmosphere to a journalist and the facts of which I cannot recall totally" (Day 369/238/24 to Day 369/239/2). Although he had obviously referred to soldier H as "a nut case" and as "a lunatic", he tried to suggest that this was a reference to a person nicknamed as Callan (Day 369/245/10).

17.8.4.157 In one of the Daily Telegraph articles he is quoted as saying that individuals fired who shouldn't have done but he now says that he has no direct knowledge of that and did not see any soldiers firing on the day. He was referring to Soldier H, even though Soldier H never told him anything about the shots he fired. He says he must have discussed the day with people who did fire but he no longer recalls what he was told. (C2121.5 paragraph 5). He is also quoted in the Daily Telegraph as having stated that legitimate targets were fired at too but again he says this was based wholly on hearsay and the fact that the had allegedly seen a gunman. (C2121.6 paragraph 6).

17.8.4.158 INQ2121 told Eversheds on 27th July 2000 that he knew the name of "Soldier X" but was not prepared to disclose it. He has now decided that he does not know the identity of this soldier. (C2121.6 paragraph 7). This person's evidence can safely be discounted as totally unworthy of belief.

Private INQ 429

17.8.4.159 Private INQ 429 was not called to give oral testimony. He was a member of the Provost Staff. "Any action that had taken place was over by the time we got there", he said. (C429.1 paragraph 8) He did not recall hearing any gunfire (C429.2 paragraph 9).

Private INQ 437

17.8.4.160 Private INQ 437 was not called to give oral testimony. He seems to have made his way down Chamberlain Street. He claims to have heard shooting but could not work out were it was coming from (C437.2 paragraph 16) or what kind of weapon it was except that it was more like high velocity rifle fire. (C437.2 paragraph 20).

Lance Corporal INQ 457

17.8.4.161 Lance Corporal INQ 457 has a "vague" recollection of events. (C457.1 paragraph 3) He claims to have heard the sound of a heavy calibre automatic weapon "in the distance" as he was sitting in the back of a Pig waiting for orders (C457.1 paragraph 6). He did not seem to remember where or when this was except that it must have been some distance from the Bogside. He was eventually deployed "up some road near the Rossville Flats courtyard" but could not identify were it was (C457.2 paragraph 9).

17.8.4.162 This witness's evidence is too vague to be given any weight. It was presumably for this reason that he was not called to give oral testimony.

17.8.4.163 Private INQ 559 did not give oral testimony. He recalls "suddenly going into the riot situation, but after that my memory seems to be a blur" (C559.2 paragraph 9). As he ran down Chamberlain Street he heard shots but he was unable to identify the type of weapon fired or how many shots he heard. (C559.3 paragraph 13)

9th Platoon

17.8.4.164 INQ 587 claimed in his Eversheds statement to have heard a Garand rifle, Thompson submachine gun and Army SLR (C587.3 paragraph 15). He claimed in his supplemental statement that the weapon he first heard was a

Thompson (C587.7 paragraph 3). However, he admitted in his Eversheds statement that he could not distinguish the sounds of the different weapons on the day and did not know what the different sounds were at the time. It was only later with the benefit of training as a weapons expert that he was able to "put names to the sound". (C587.3 paragraph 15 and C587.7 paragraph 3) In his oral testimony, he said this was years later.

17.8.4.165 Even if, which is not accepted, this soldier was doing his best to give a truthful account of his recollection, the Tribunal could not rely on the evidence of a witness seeking to identify, years after the event, sounds when he did not distinguish them at the time.

17.8.4.166 We do not consider he can be regarded as a truthful witness because of the manner in which he gave his evidence concerning the first sounds he heard. In his Eversheds statement it was recorded that he heard the shootings start before he reached Aggro Corner. It went on: "I definitely heard both army and civilian fire but I could say objectively which came first" (C587.3 paragraph 14). This obviously did not make sense and it was noted in the body of his statement that Eversheds had asked the witness to clarify the amendment. During his oral testimony, he accepted that what he had told Eversheds was that he could not say objectively which came first. Nevertheless, he insisted that the civilian fire did come first This is another witness who did his best to justify the shooting by Support Company. His view was that "no one was responsible" for Bloody Sunday. (C587.5 paragraph 25).

17.8.4.167 In his experience, "all soldiers have extra ammunition". (C587.5 paragraph 26).

Private INQ 1010

17.8.4.168 Private INQ 1010 did not give oral testimony. In his Eversheds statement, he gave an account of being heavily bombarded with petrol bombs at his barrier and seeing one of the soldiers shot as they crossed the barrier. At the end of his 3 page statement, he said that this was still his current recollection of Bloody Sunday. He was told that that incident took place on a different day, whereupon he said that 30 January 1972 "was just another riot" and he has no specific recollection of it. (C1010.3 paragraph 22).

17.8.4.169 This is the kind of evidence that might have been taken seriously if it had not been known that no soldier was wounded on the day. It is a salutary reminder of how cautious the Tribunal needs to be in assessing the evidence of soldiers who were involved in Bloody Sunday at the margins and whose actual experience may not have been radically different from their experience of other riot situations if they were not involved directly in material evidence. Their recollections of petrol bombs, nail bombs and gunfire on other occasions may simply merge with their vague recollections of being in Derry.

17.8.4.170 INQ 1093 did not give oral testimony.

17.8.4.171 He was the 9th Platoon Commander's signaller. The OC of the local unit would not let him through the Barrier (C1093.3 paragraph 13) and they were only allowed in when a "Brigadier" cleared the way. (C1093.3 paragraph14). His recollection is very confused. He says that he saw support company moving vehicles between 15 to 20 feet in front of him from a street that ran at right angles to his position but then he says he walked into a street with terraced houses on both sides, which must have been Chamberlain Street, although he thinks it could have been Rossville Street, which does not of course have terraced houses on either side.

17.8.4.172 As he entered the streets he could see the soldiers from Support Company dismounting near the Rossville Flats at the end of the street, which they did not do at the end of Chamberlain Street. He then "saw" what "looked to be" a burst of automatic fire. He did not hear any sounds because of his head set but he saw the sparks as the bullets hit the road 10 -12 metres ahead of him. The sparks, he said, "came along the road towards our position from the south (assuming that this was Rossville Street or Chamberlain Street) although they were not fired directly at us". (C1093.3 paragraphs 14 to 15).

17.8.4.173 This is a colourful recollection but is inherently improbable and does not match the recollection of other soldiers within his Platoon. He went on to give his impression of how the bullets bounced off the road and "danced down the street". He speculated that a gunman was probably firing from a high position on the Rossville Flats with a Thompson submachine gun or some other short barrelled gun with no aim. (C1093.4 paragraph 16) Given the relative positions, it is difficult to understand his earlier suggestion that this fire was not directed at him.

17.8.4.174 He claims that he then retreated and reported on the C Company net to Call Sign 3 that he had come under fire from Rossville Flats. At the same time, he said, he heard reports from other Platoons to the same effect. None of this, of course, features in either the Army's own logs or in Mr Porter's recording. (C1093.4 paragraph 17).

17.8.4.175 He claims to have heard sporadic firing but cannot recall whether it was from automatic weapons or from rifles.

17.8.4.176 The idea of his Regiment deliberately killing unarmed civilians was "an alien concept" to him and he believes it simply wouldn't have happened. (C1093.5 paragraph 20). In our submission, this explains his recollection of bullets dancing down the street.

Private INQ 956

17.8.4.177 Private INQ 956 did not give oral evidence.

17.8.4.178 His recollection of the event was clearly confused. He said that he went down Chamberlain Street and "got hold of the one closest to me. I made two or three arrests" (C956.2 paragraph 14) He is not recorded as having made any arrests and must have been thinking of a different occasion. He said that he hadn't got the "faintest idea about timings" but the first shots he said he heard were low velocity and high velocity shots. He could not remember which came first (C956.4 paragraph 23). He could not remember hearing any automatic fire but, as if to explain this omission on his part, he said it was "hard to distinguish rapid fire from automatic fire because of the layout of the streets and the echoes". (C956.4 paragraph 25) This was clearly the reason why he could have confused low velocity and high velocity shots.

2nd Platoon

172.8.4.179 Private INQ 1574 was a signaller in 2 Platoon who did not give oral evidence. Unencumbered by false modesty, he explained that "the Parachute Regiment were the crème de la crème. No one was better than us" "... .. one soldier in our Regiment was worth two in any other. .. ... Whenever the Paras were deployed, all the hardliners would go away on holiday" (C1574.1 paragraph 3).

17.8.4.180 When INQ1574 received the order to go in, his Pig broke down. He spent the following hour sitting in the Pig with the driver smoking and drinking cups of tea. He cannot remember hearing anything. (C1574.4 paragraphs 23 to 26).

17.8.4.181 His evidence was not always measured ("I recognised INQ1334 because he had the biggest nose in the world" - (C1574.6 paragraph 41) or balanced ("this Inquiry is political and it stinks") (C1574.7 paragraph 46). The metaphors may be frothy but, it is submitted, there is one which does hit the nail on the head. We obviously cannot agree that "it is not the men on the ground that are to blame" but INQ1574 makes what we regard a key point for this Inquiry, as follows:

"At the end of the day 1 Para took orders from above and those people took orders from the Government. If you have a man-eating tiger in a cage who's to blame if it is let out and kills somebody. Is it the tiger or the handler? I believe the blame lies with the people who opened the cage. On that day, the command was given to unleash the animals." (C1574.7 paragraph 47).

3 Platoon

17.8.4.182 INQ 2057 did not give oral evidence. He could remember hearing shots but could not say what type of shots he heard or how many. (C2057.2 paragraph 10). He gave no other relevant evidence.

17.8.5 Observation Posts

17.8.5.1 According to the Operation Order,

> "The containment line and the area within it are to be dominated by physical military presence, by OP observation and by sniper posts. The maximum number of soldiers are to be in the shop window. They are to be covered by deployment of OP's and by a massive deployment of snipers in the anti-sniper role, who should be deployed at every possible vantage point within our secure area" (G95.568, emphasis added)

17.8.5.2 Bearing in mind that soldiers were to be deployed at "every possible vantage point", the most striking feature of the evidence of the soldiers deployed in the observation posts, both permanent and ad hoc, is that claimed sightings of civilians engaged in hostile action against the army are few and far between. The vast majority of these soldiers did not even claim to have seen anything that could have justified Army fire. None of them claims to have witnessed the sort of widespread and intensive shooting and bombing alleged by the paratroopers in Support Company. The credibility of the few who claim to have seen isolated incidents of civilians firing a weapon or throwing a nail bomb is undermined not only by their universal failure to report these claimed sightings at the time, either over the radio or to more senior colleagues but also by the absence of corroborating evidence of other soldiers in the same vicinity with similar opportunities for observation.

17.8.5.3 There were 19 Army Observation Posts in Derry on Bloody Sunday, located as follows:

(i) Abbey Taxis, William Street,
(ii) Back gate, City Walls,
(iii) Barrack Street,
(iv) Blighs Lane,
(v) Butcher Gate,
(vi) Castle Gate,

(vii) Charlie OP, City Walls

(viii) Derry Walls,

(ix) East Way Road,

(x) Echo OP, Embassy Building,

(xi) Foxtrot OP, Embassy Building

(xii) Harrison's Garage, William Street

(xiii) Long Tower Street / Howard Street

(xiv) 14 Marlborough Avenue,

(xv) Mex Garage, Brandywell,

(xvi) Old City Dairy,

(xvii) Pet Shop OP, Little James Street / Sackville Street

(xviii) Peter England shirt factory,

(xix) Kilo OP, Roaring Meg.

17.8.5.4 The members of the Tribunal have, we understand, visited the roof of the Embassy Building themselves and been able to form their own impression of the views currently available from there. Contemporary photographs of the area taken from the roof of the Embassy Building demonstrate that soldiers at Echo OP would have had a clear view of many of the important locations, including the junction of Little James Street/ Rossville Street/William Street, Rossville Street, the Rubble Barricade, the Rossville Street wasteground, the Rossville Flats courtyard and Chamberlain Street. Among these photographs are P233.69A, P233.69, P279, P402, P403, P404, P406, P407, P408 and P409.

17.8.5.5 Photographs showing the view from the City Walls include P233.70, P333.006, P475, P476, P477, P478, P479.

17.8.5.7 The OP's at Harrison's Garage, Abbey Taxis, the Pet Shop and the Peter England shirt factory can be seen in EP 21.7. Taken from ground level at a point near the junction of Little James Street and Sackville Street, P364 shows the OP's at the Pet Shop and the Peter England shirt factory (sometimes referred to as the Hogg and Mitchell factory). It was apparent from these two photographs that soldiers in the Pet Shop OP and the Peter England shirt factory OP would have had a commanding view of most of Rossville Street, including the Rubble Barricade, parts of the wasteground and parts of the Rossville Flats courtyard. This is also apparent from the evidence of some of the soldiers deployed in these OP's.

17.8.5.8 Captain 021 was an Intelligence Officer in 22 LADR and had responsibility for some of the photographers, including UNK 48. Both Captain 21 and UNK48 were positioned on the roof of the Embassy Building. Although he was reluctant to concede it, he had an excellent view of the area within Sector 2. He saw nothing to justify the firing by soldiers on any civilians in that area. (Day 317/112/15) If he had seen anything indicating the presence of civilian gunmen or bombers or anything of that kind presenting any kind of threat to soldiers he would have asked UNK48 to take photographs of that (Day 317/10/3). As we know from Col. Overbury's report, no such photographs were taken. It should also be noted that Captain 021 was using binoculars (Day 317/122/16) and had access to the "donkey's ears". Apart from a reference at serial number 58 (W97) to one shot, the log entries of transmissions from Echo OP make it clear that neither Captain 021 nor any of the other soldiers observing the events at or near Rossville Street from the top of the Embassy Building reported seeing or hearing any shooting or bombing by civilians or indeed the 100 plus shots that were fired by paratroopers. When asked to explain why, of all the people that were standing on top of the Embassy Ballroom watching the scene below them, not one mentioned that soldiers were firing scores of shots at civilians on Rossville Street, on the waste ground and near the flats, he said, after a pause, that he had "no idea" (Day 317/125/25).

17.8.5.9 Soldier 118 was also on the roof of the Embassy Ballroom Building with Captain 021. Soldier 118 estimated that there were nearly 2 dozen soldiers of mixed ranks and duties on the roof of the Embassy Ballroom at the material time (Day 359/206/8 to Day 359/206/13). He saw no civilian doing anything improper in the form of throwing nail bombs or anything of that kind even though he was perfectly placed to see that if it had happened (Day 359/221/21 to Day 359/22/14)

17.8.5.10 Others who were on the roof of the Embassy Ballroom at some stage in the afternoon included General Ford, Lt Col Ferguson, INQ102, Sergeant INQ0853, Warrant Officer INQ1164, Lt Soldier 009 (who claims to have been in charge of the OP), Sergeant 108, Soldier 157, Sergeant INQ1382 and Captain INQ2. Despite the availability of binoculars and "donkey's years" at the OP, not one of these soldiers claims to have seen a single civilian gunman or bomber.

17.8.5.11. Major 159 was in charge of three observation posts on the City Walls, viz Charlie OP, Roaring Meg OP and the one near Butcher's Gate. At no time did he see any civilians with weapons. (B1953.003 paragraphs 23 to 24) INQ 783 was a Corporal in A Company of 1 Royal Anglian. He claims to have seen a paratrooper running across open ground, possibly at Eden Place, firing from the hip towards civilians. He said that this was noted by others with him on the walls and that they too were surprised. None of the others who witnessed this event appears to have made a statement admitting it.

17.8.5.12 INQ 555 was also on the walls, possibly near the Roaring Meg cannon. He claimed to see a man fall on the balcony of Rossville Flats but this does not correspond with any other evidence, civilian or military, to this effect. INQ 236 was stationed on the walls near Butcher's Gate in a sangar. He claimed to have seen a man with a sten gun or Thompson submachine gun on waste ground around the Rossville Street / William Street junction. He said that the gunman was popping out of a doorway and shooting at a pig as it went up and down William Street. After watching this occur two or three times, he fired at the gunman and the shot hit the ground in front of him, whereupon the man retreated into the house. He then recalled seeing paratroopers enter the Bogside and move towards Rossville Flats. Again, this account does not correspond with any other evidence and, although he claims to have been seen by the SIB about the shot that he fired, he did not make any statement at the time, which itself renders his account implausible.

17.8.5.13 This soldier had described being deployed on the Walls between Butcher Gate and the Observation post beside Roaring Meg. He had a good view of the Bogside and all three blocks of the Rossville Flats. He watched the march and saw Pigs go into the Bogside. He watched the Paratroopers debuss in the Rossville Flats car park. At C564.2 paragraph 12 he claimed to have heard shooting from the top of the Rossville Flats which was directed at the Paratroopers. This happened more or less simultaneously to the Paratroopers de-bussing. He did not see anyone shooting or he would have returned fire. He claimed that because he had been in the army shooting team he could tell that the rounds had been fired from block1. They were high velocity but certainly not from an SLR judging from the speed of the bullets. His impression was a large number of single shots as opposed to an automatic weapon. He had no doubt these were the first shots of the day to be fired.

17.8.5.13.1 At C564.2 paragraph 13 he claimed that although he could not identify a gunman he could see other people either on the roof of block 1 of the Rossville Flats or on the upper levels throwing things at soldiers below. These people were at the north end of block 1. He could not see what they were throwing. At C564.2 paragraph 14 he claimed that when the shooting started the Paratroopers dived for cover behind the Pigs' doors. The soldiers returned fire firstly with baton rounds and then with live bullets. He had no recollection of seeing soldiers firing but he had a clear recollection of the noise of shots. He did not remember seeing any civilian being shot. At C564.2 paragraph 15 he described an exchange of fire as the Paratroopers defended themselves. He could not remember how long the gun battle went on 17.8.5.13.2 The witness gave It is clear from his oral evidence at Day 318 that the witness had to correct and qualify a large number of the assertions made in his Eversheds statements. It is submitted the witness is manifestly unreliable on a number of the central assertions contained in his evidence:

(i) The direction of the target and the firing was surmise on his part. Day 318/122/9 to Day 318/127/23

(ii) His statement about shooting from the top of block 1 was put to him. He replied: "Yes, that area, yes".

(iii) The suggestion that the soldiers in the car park must have been the targets was surmise on his part.

(iv) He could not be sure now about his view that they were not SLR shots because they were not as fast as SLR shots.

(v) He accepted that firing in an urban environment distorted the sound of fire.

(vi) The witness missed entirely the shooting from the Abbey Taxis building and Lieutenant N's shots.

(vii) The witness could not have seen the number of events he claimed given his position on the walls. Day 318/128/7 to Day 318/130/13.

(viii) The witness could not make out people or see what if anything was being thrown from the balconies as claimed. Day 318/130/23 to Day 318/131/21.

(ix) His suggestion that the army "defended themselves" was surmise on his part. Day 318/132/24 to Day 318/133/11 .

(x) The witness accepted his evidence was an amalgamation of information from other soldiers and an entanglement of memories of different events. Day 318/140/15 to Day 318/145/5 .

(xi) His evidence on the issue of gunfire came into this category.

(xii) He agreed he could not have distinguished gunfire on the basis of the speed of the bullet. Day 318/145/1 to Day 318/145/3.

17.8.5.14 Soldier 030, a Gunner in 22 LADR apparently positioned on the walls "together with other soldiers" (B1599.1 paragraph 1), said that he saw a youth with a pistol in the gap between Blocks 2 and 3 of Rossville Flats

(B1599.1 paragraph 3). By drawing this soldier's evidence to Sergeant O's attention (Day 335/129/3 to Day 335/132/25), Mr Elias implied that the civilian seen by Soldier 030 was the same civilian gunman Soldier O claimed to have fired at in that area. However, this cannot be right since Soldier 030's account simply does not tally in any material respect with Sergeant O's account. Whereas Sergeant O claimed that the gunman was firing from behind a car to the north of the gap between Blocks 2 and 3, the gunman described by Soldier 030 told Lord Widgery that he was behind the small wall that we know to have been close to Block 2 (B1604). He did not suggest that the gunman was anywhere near a car or that he came under fire himself at any stage. It also must be queried whether or not a soldier on the walls could even have seen between Blocks 2 and 3 into the Rossville Flats courtyard to the point described by Sergeant O. Moreover, none of the other soldiers who were with Soldier 030 seems to have seen this gunman. Nor was the sighting reported over the radio.

17.8.5.15 INQ 1351 was in an OP at Blighs Lane. He saw two paratroopers fire unaimed shots towards Rossville Flats as they ran down Rossville Street (C1351.2 paragraph 11 to 12 and Day 312/93/13 to Day 312/99/5). He pointed out the location of these soldiers on a map saved at C.1351.5.

17.8.5.16 Taken as a whole, therefore, the evidence of the soldiers in Observation Posts with a view of Sector 2 flatly contradicts the paratroopers' accounts of the events in that sector.

17.9 Paratrooper Brutality and Recklessness in Sector 2

17.9.1 Introduction

17.9.1.1 The soldiers of Mortar Platoon de-bussed from Lt. N's Pig and Sergeant O's Pig and began engaging in a series of sustained and brutal assaults on unarmed civilians in and around the waste ground on Rossville Street and the Rossville Flats Car Park. Such violence did not just occur during arrests but also in circumstances unconnected to arrests. The assaults on civilians were wanton and unprovoked and demonstrated clearly violent intent on the part of the Parachute Regiment on deployment. Such behaviour could only have occurred if those engaging in it were secure in the knowledge that they had the endorsement of senior officers or were at least free from the likelihood of discipline or sanction. Such behaviour was also of course a prelude to more violent and lethal assaults on innocent civilians.

17.9.1.2 The behaviour of the Parachute Regiment members in this area on the day must also be seen in the context of the behaviour of regiment members the previous week at Magilligan.

17.9.1.3 Soldier 013, who was a baton round gunner in Sergeant O's Pig described his role thus:

> " My job was to use the baton gun to keep rioters away from the Pig and to make arrests, though that usually meant giving the rioters a good going over, as it was often not worth the hassle to actually arrest someone." B1408.003 paragraph 12.

17.9.1.4 It is submitted that this attitude was not confined only to Soldier 013[16] amongst the soldiers of Mortar Platoon. The "good going over" was not inflicted on rioters but on civilians, first-aid personnel and members of the Press. By their attitude and actions on the day the Platoon members who de-bussed on the waste ground and at the entrance to the car park of the Rossville Flats showed a common and consistent propensity for the infliction of unlawful violence on civilians.

[16] See the evidence of Soldier 006 Day 334/35/22 to Day 334/37/2.

17.9.1.5 Coleman Doyle took the series of photographs from EP24.1 to EP 24.7 showing the activity of a number of soldiers towards the crowd running in the car park of the Rossville Flats. It is submitted that even a cursory examination of these photographs from EP24.1 through to EP24.4 shows two soldiers on the waste ground engaged in violent assault on two civilians who do not appear to be armed and who do not appear to be presenting any threat to either soldier. The civilian on the left of EP24.2 appears to be attempting to get up. By EP24.4 the civilian is, apparently after receiving the attention of the soldier in EP24.3, lying flat on the ground. The soldier on the right of EP24.1 is approaching his civilian apparently wielding a baton or stick and in EP24.2 and EP24.3 is beating the civilian with the instrument in his right hand.

17.9.1.6 In addition, it is submitted that the series of photographs show a crowd moving away from the army not seeking to confront them. In addition to the persons being approached by the soldiers the photographs show a number of civilians having fallen over clearly in their haste to escape. It is submitted that the evidence of Coleman Doyle confirms these propositions. Day 072/135/10 to Day 072/135/15 and Day 072/136/6 to Day 072/136/10.

The assault on Jeffrey Morris.

17.9.1.7 Jeffrey Morris was a Press Photographer present on the day. He described at M57.2 paragraph 5 getting to the open ground in front of Rossville Flats. The Saracens had stopped in Rossville Street and the paratroopers were fanning out and running in pairs across open ground.

> " As the paratroops caught anyone they knocked him down with their rifle butts and kicked him. Then, leaving him lying, they ran on."

He would have photographed this but was caught by two paratroopers and forced against a wall.

17.9.1.8 He gave a further description of this incident at WT2.47 B to 2.48 A. One of the paratroopers had a blackened face and the other a gas mask. The one with the gas mask jammed a rifle across his neck forcing his head back. The soldier with the rifle and the gas mask lifted his knee to which he assumed was to stop him going in his pocket. He moved and the soldier caught him on the thigh. His press card landed on the ground. He managed to say "Press, Daily Mail". Someone ran from a nearby doorway. The paratrooper with the rifle went after this man whilst the other held onto Mr. Morris. Whilst he was being held he took P273. The other man was struck on the head by the paratrooper who had gone after him and just after Mr. Morris had taken the photograph which shows Duncan Clarke being held by INQ 1918. Immediately after Mr. Morris took this photograph the soldier who had gone after the man struck the man across the face with his rifle. The word "me" on the Widgery transcript should probably read "him" when the context and M57.2 paragraph 5 are considered. Mr. Morris was thrown to the ground by the soldier holding him in response to him taking the photograph. Mr Morris then witnessed what were clearly Lt. N's shots up Eden Place.

17.9.1.9 The soldiers engaged in this incident were clearly INQ 1918 and in all likelihood Soldier 019. The evidence of Mr. Morris was put to INQ 1918 at Day 342/82/19 to Day 342/85/9. He claimed not to have any recollection of a confrontation with a member of the press or seeing any press photographers in the area. At Day 342/111/3 to Day 342/111/20 he was asked about the specific suggestion from Mr. Morris that he had placed a rifle against his throat and forced him up against the wall.

Q Is it possible you did?

A. Everything is possible."

He went on to say he had no recollection of placing his knee in Mr. Morris's groin.

17.9.1.10 Soldier 019 identified himself on B149.006 at the position marked F which was on a corner of the alleyway which was a continuation of Eden Place. He was also able to identify the positions taken up by Lieutenant N and INQ 1918. He had no recollection of Lieutenant N grappling with a rioter. He also identified himself as the soldier in P273 at Day 343/111/23 to Day 343/112/13 but could not recall seeing INQ 1918 grappling with a civilian.

17.9.1.11 He did not recall the incident involving two paratroopers and Jeffrey Morris nor did he recall press photographers in the area. Day 343/110/21 to Day 343/111/12. It is submitted that in all likelihood that given the admitted proximity of Soldier 019 the second soldier involved in the incident with Jeffrey Morris was Soldier 019.

17.9.1.12 It is submitted that the Inquiry should be slow to accept INQ 1918 's persistent claims as to his lack of recollection of events.[17] Even if he was being truthful about that he clearly did not and could not deny Mr. Morris's evidence.

The arrest of Duncan Clarke.

17.9.1.13 This incident was witnessed by Jeffrey Morris as we have seen above. Duncan Clarke whose 1972 statement appears at AC61.1 described his initial arrest as being told to "Come with me, you bastard." He was taken to an armoured car at "Eden Terrace" and searched. After about ten minutes he opened the door to get air and was hit on the head with a rifle butt. He required two stitches for this injury. The armoured car was then driven to William Street. After about five minutes a paratrooper opened the door and asked: "What do you think of this you Irish cunt?" and fired a rubber bullet into his face from about five feet. He was badly stunned and bled profusely. Later when himself and the elderly man were being placed in another military vehicle a paratrooper hit him on the hand with a rifle butt injuring his middle finger. At the detention centre he was made to run a gauntlet of about ten paratroopers.

17.9.1.14 INQ 1918 acknowledged at Day 342/81/19 that he thought he was the radio operator visible in P853. He further acknowledged in his evidence that he would assume he can be seen in P273. He was asked at Day 342/106/9 to Day 342/108/11 why as appears at P273 he was pointing a loaded rifle at Mr. Clarke's chest. He also conceded the rifle might have been cocked. When asked if the most likely explanation was that he was using the rifle to threaten the man he replied:

" It is possible, but I do not recall threatening the man."

17.9.1.15 It is submitted that on analysis of P273 and the evidence of INQ 1918 it is clear that he was using a loaded and possibly cocked rifle to threaten an unarmed civilian. It was suggested to him that he had not in fact seen Duncan Clarke throwing stones at all and that he signed the arrest forms knowing the allegation was untrue. He answered:

" Well, I cannot remember, this is the problem." Day 342/126/21 to Day 342/128/17.

17.9.1.16 It is submitted that it is clear from the photographic and civilian evidence Duncan Clarke was grabbed, assaulted and arrested by Soldier INQ 1918 without any justification whatsoever.

The arrest of William John Dillon.

17.9.1.17 William John Dillon[18] stated at AD46.13 that he was grabbed by a soldier, he thought was a sergeant, by the scruff of the collar and dragged along. The soldier kept yelling at him "run you bastard". The witness identified himself in EP2.7 on Day 103/178/23.

---

[17] INQ 1918 could not even recollect N's shots despite having been a matter of feet away on the day. Day 342/114/12 to Day 342/114/20; Day 342/121/16 to Day 342/121/24.

17.9.1.18 At M57.3 paragraph 7 Jeffrey Morris described seeing, from a position near the burnt out van seen in P273, a boy aged about 16 or 17 moving across open ground in the "Eden Place" area[19]. He was looking from side to side obviously very confused. A paratrooper near the three tonner on Rossville Street stood up and levelled a pistol at this boy from some yards away and shouted " Stop, you bastard or I'll shoot".

17.9.1.19 The boy turned towards him and this was repeated. Another paratrooper went out towards the boy. Unknown to the boy another came up from behind the end of the Rossville Flats building. He slammed the boy across the head with his rifle. At this point Mr. Morris took photograph 5 which is EP2.5. The other paratrooper came up and they both went for the boy. The boy was crying out " God, don't hit me". Mr. Morris then took photograph no. 6 which is EP2.6. The soldiers then hauled the boy off to a Saracen and he took photograph no.7 which is EP2.7. Mr Morris also gave this account at WT2 49 C-F.

17.9.1.20 David Capper, the BBC journalist gave a description which sounded similar to this incident at M9.2 paragraph 5. He indicated to this Inquiry at Day 73/29/11 to Day 73/31/13 that he did not think it was the same incident because his recollection was of only one soldier involved that actually hit him with the butt of a rifle. It may be noted that Mr. Capper also recorded in M9.2 paragraph 9 that the young man was challenged by an officer carrying a pistol. This is strikingly similar to the events witnessed by Mr. Morris found at M57.3 paragraph 7. The account of Mr. Capper was put to Mr. Dillon at Day 103/181/7 to Day 103/183/17. He thought the account could relate to him although he didn't ask permission to cross the ground. At the time of giving his oral evidence he was not conscious of being hit on the head with a rifle or the head with a baton. Day 103/183/8 to Day 103/183/17. At AD46.5 paragraph 24 he thought he was being hit on the back with a baton as he was run across.[20] Mr Dillon denied kicking a soldier. Day 103/191/2 to Day 103/191/10.

17.9.1.21 The soldiers involved in this incident were Soldier 006 and Soldier 037. Soldier 006 confirmed in his Evershed's statement and at Day 334/16/12 to Day 334/17/10 that he had assisted Soldier 037 in the arrest of William James Dillon. In his statement at B1377.002 paragraph 4 Soldier 006 described how because of Dyslexia he could not deal with paperwork. He therefore preferred to avoid arresting people and if he saw people acting unlawfully he would give them a cuff to disperse them. He used reasonable force. At B1377.002 he stated:

> "We thought that if we went in we would give them all a good hiding and by that I mean that if we were attacked as we had seen on television we would not stand there and take it, we would confront the rioters and disperse/arrest them as we did in Belfast with controlled aggression."

17.9.1.22 He accepted that he probably hit Mr. Dillon with the butt of his rifle but not on the head. He denied Mr Dillon was moving away from him. It was pointed out to him that the photographs did not indicate any other person near them and that EP2.5 would suggest Mr. Dillon was turning away from him. He said you could not tell this from the photograph. When asked how the young man presented a threat to him Soldier 006 replied:

[19] See photographs and evidence of Coleman Doyle EP24.5, EP 24.6; P233.10 frame 6-11A and Day 072/81/24 to Day 072/82/25. The boy was "just running."

[20] Mr Dillon also gave evidence of being kicked, hit with a baton and threatened with being thrown out of the lorry by soldiers on the way to Fort George. At Fort George he was hit with a baton. Day 103/187/15 to Day 103/191/22.

"Well, at the time I must have thought he was a threat. Do not forget we are still in a riot situation here." Day 334/13/22 to Day 334/23/24.

17.9.1.23 The sequence of relevant photographs of this incident are EP2.5 taken by Jeffrey Morris showing Soldier 006 with the prisoner. EP24.5 and EP24.5A which were taken by Coleman Doyle and appear to be next in sequence showing Mr. Dillon away from Soldier 006. Soldier 006 then approaches Mr. Dillon. Soldier 037 comes to assist and during the struggle seems to lose his helmet in EP33.7. Then EP33.6 shows Soldier 037 without his helmet. Then EP2.6 shows Soldier 037 on one side and Soldier 006 on the other side of the prisoner. EP2.7 shows both soldiers leading him to a Pig in Rossville Street. EP2.9 shows Mr Dillon at the corner of Rossville Street. EP5.20 shows him on William Street and possibly in EP5.21 near the City Cabs office.

17.9.1.24 Soldier 006 was asked at Day 334/35/22 to Day 334/37/2 whether he had seen any of his colleagues on the day using rifle butts in the same manner as himself. His answer was "probably". Sergeant O and Lieutenant N may have known that this was his or his colleague's standard practice in such situations. He was never told by a superior officer not to engage in such methods nor prevented from doing so by a colleague or a superior officer.

17.9.1.25 In his oral evidence at Day 357/138/4 to Day 357/20 Soldier 037 who had indicated on the arrest form that he saw the prisoner kick a soldier on Rossville Street was asked did he recollect William Dillon kicking a soldier on the day. He said he recalled him struggling. He later claimed to have a limited recollection of this incident. Day 357/185/24 to Day 357/186/1. The essential point is also that each of the soldiers involved in this incident gave wholly conflicting reasons for his arrest. Soldier 006 made no claim at the time or following the arrest of being assaulted or kicked by William John Dillon.

17.9.1.26 Indeed Soldier 006 accepted in his oral evidence he may have hit him with his rifle. It is submitted that the incident witnessed by Mr. Morris and Mr. Capper was in all probability the arrest of William John Dillon. Whilst the recollections of Mr. Dillon and the witnesses may differ as to the precise nature of the contact it is clear that he was arrested without lawful or valid reason and was assaulted in the course of that arrest.

The arrest of Charles Canning

17.9.1.27 At AC25.2 Charles Canning described his arrest on his way towards the Rubble Barricade in Rossville Street. He saw a Para in the vicinity of Glenfada Park North who saw him and started to run towards him with an SLR. There was also a soldier who ran after him with a baton gun. He fell and was caught. He believed he was arrested in front of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats at point H on AC25.6. The paratrooper carrying the SLR kept threatening to shoot him although he could not recall the precise threats. Both these paratroopers had Liverpudlian accents. The one with the SLR was small and of average build.

17.9.1.28 At AC25.3 paragraph 16 he described being taken to one of the Pigs on Rossville Street. As they approached the pig about six soldiers started kicking into him. In his 1972 statement at AC25.5 he had, not surprisingly it is submitted, described the incident in greater detail. As he ran he saw the soldiers deploy. He saw paratroopers leaping from the back of Saracens and proceed to shoot, baton and kick anyone who got in their way. He saw a man being beaten to the ground. He noticed two paratroopers one of whom was firing towards the people at the barricade. When they saw him they ran towards him shouting. He could not run very well and as he thought he was going to be shot he dived to the ground. He was kicked by the two paratroopers until he got up off the ground. When they got to the Saracen the paratroopers there were abusing a youth but when the witness arrived they and his captors started to assault him.[21] The witness believed Jim Doherty was in the Saracen when he was put in[22]. He was hit in the face with a rifle by the Paratrooper who had been firing at barricade earlier. The witness then described being run off towards William Street and the beating of another man at the "City Cabs" taxi stand by paratroopers.

17.9.1.29 At AC25.4 paragraph 27 the witness described seeing, at Fort George, one of the Liverpudlian Paras who had arrested him. This paratrooper started on him again. He was photographed with this Paratrooper and processed. The soldier who appears on Charles Canning's arrest forms is Soldier U.

17.9.1.30 Soldier U was asked at Day 369/37/23 to Day 369/41/10 about the allegations contained in Mr. Canning's statements. Soldier U admitted that he used the stock of his weapon to hit Mr. Canning in order to subdue him. He claimed that he also may have used a wrist lock. When asked did he remember kicking Charles Canning on the ground he replied no. When asked was it possible that he hit Charles Canning in the face with the foresight of his rifle he replied:

" I do not recall." Day 369/40/16 to Day 369/18.

17.9.1.31 It is notable that despite indicating at Day 369/38/9 to Day 369/38/13 that he was trained to avoid hitting people in the head he cannot rule out that that is what he did to Charles Canning. Soldier U went on to deny threatening to shoot Charles Canning.

17.9.1.32 Soldier U's arrest documentation in respect of Mr. Canning at ARR8.2 described the arrestee as "throwing stones and bottles at security forces". His RMP statement at B749 described the arrestee as "a man throwing stones at the vehicle." According to his Treasury Solicitor's statement at B767 he claimed that he saw a man of about 25 in a crowd and: " he threw a bottle at me which hit me". At WT 13.95 D he claimed that the man had just thrown a bottle, picked up a stone and was about to throw that at me". It is submitted that it is clear that Soldier U gave utterly inconsistent reasons and lied about the grounds for the arrest of Mr. Canning. There may be two reasons for that. It may be that he had no justification whatsoever for arresting Mr. Canning and simply detained and inflicted brutality on him in the course of his dealings with him.

[21] James Charles Doherty AD69.1 paragraph 21 confirmed Charles Canning was placed in the rear of the vehicle he was in. " Charlie got as bad a beating as I did."

17.9.1.33 Another possible reason is that he simply picked Mr Canning out at Fort George and accused him of rioting. In his RMP statement at B749 he claimed to have taken: " Charles Collins (Canning) back to an arrest vehicle which had moved up to the junction of Rossville Street and Eden Place. I handed him over to the military police." When he came to make his statement to the Treasury Solicitor at B767 he described taking the man to " the arrest point " and did not mention a vehicle. At WT13.96B he described taking the man back to the arresting point at the corner of the street which was the junction of Rossville Street and William Street. On Video 48 the soldier with Mr. Canning is clearly not on physical appearance Soldier U when compared to the arrest photograph P503.4. When asked at Day 369/136/12 to Day 369/136/15 did he arrest Charles Canning that day or just go to a compound and select someone and allege they were rioting he replied that he arrested a man that day.

17.9.1.34 If that was the case it is submitted that the conduct of Soldier U was part of a pattern of unjustified and unlawful force inflicted on civilians in the course of arrests on Bloody Sunday by the Parachute Regiment. This violence by the paratroopers was not justified to any degree by the conduct of the arrestees.

[22] Mr Canning can be seen at Video 48 Snap 12 being escorted by another soldier possibly of Guinness force having been handed over by Soldier U. See also V1/6:31;V48/12:30; P496.

The arrest of James Charles Doherty (or O'Doherty)

17.9.1.35 Mr. Doherty was moving quickly down Rossville Street towards Free Derry Corner. He saw Saracens behind and in front of him and decided to run across the waste ground and into the Rossville Flats car park. He slipped on ice at point marked B on AD69.17. Before he could get up he was hit hard on the back of the head with a rifle butt. He thought he was unconscious for a couple of seconds and when he came round he thought he was being dragged by the hair and clothes back across the waste ground by two soldiers. He was being called "fucking Irish, fucking Paddy" and was told "You're dealing with the Paras now." This soldier was quite small, stocky with black hair and blacked up face. This soldier at one point, as Mr. Doherty fell to the ground, brought his rifle butt down on Mr. Doherty's right hand as hard as he could. In the Saracen he was kicked and punched by soldiers and one of them wearing a visor was head butting him with it. When Charles Canning was placed in the same Saracen he got as bad a beating as the witness. Day 104/84/6 to Day104/84/25.

17.9.1.36 They were let out and made to stand against a wall and then taken to William Street. The witness confirmed he was at the locations in AD69.9 at the junction of William Street and Rossville Street, then at EP5.20 and later at AD69.12 with his arms against the retaining fence of the GPO sorting office. At this location he was kicked on the back of the ankles and legs by a soldier.[23] Day 104/93/13 to Day 104/93/19. At Day 104/111/25 to Day 104/114/5 he described further assaults in the Lorry they were placed in and on arrival at Fort George. At Fort George the witness described being forced to run a gauntlet of soldiers, being deliberately scared by an army Alsatian dog, being made to grab barbed wire, being beaten with batons, kicked, and punched. AD69.5 paragraphs 30 to 39. The Soldier on the arrest form for this witness is

INQ 627 but the witness confirmed he did not look like the same soldier who arrested him or assaulted him. Day 104/102/13 to Day 104/103/7. He thought the photograph of the soldier who arrested Mr. Canning looked the same general height as the soldier who arrested him. That was, of course, Soldier U. Day 104/108/1 to Day 104/108/9.

17.9.1.37 The arrest forms and photograph for Mr. Doherty indicate that the arresting soldier was INQ 627. In his statement to Eversheds at C627.4 paragraph 22 INQ 627 indicated that he did not snatch any rioters that day because he was operating the radio and it was not his function to arrest anyone. His role was to stay with the Major and to pass messages to and from him. At Day 338/48/25 to Day 338/49/2 he indicated that he now remembered arresting someone on the day. It is clear this recollection came about by being shown the evidence recently that he had arrested someone. Day 338/81/11 to Day 338/81/13. It was suggested to him at Day 338/87/12 to Day 338/90/20 that given his duties as Major Loden's Radio Operator on the day he would not have engaged in arrests and that the documentation in fact could have reflected an arrest he did not carry out. He was also shown Video 48. No particular comment was offered by INQ 627 on this issue.

The arrest of William Doherty

17.9.1.38 At AD113.1 is the NICRA statement of Mr William Doherty made at the time. In it he says:

> "I was chased and caught by a soldier wearing riot equipment... ... he took me back to a Saracen about 20 yards away.. I was put inside the Saracen." Mr. Doherty then described the soldier lifting his rifle and hitting him in the face with the butt. The injury was in the area of his left eye. A soldier, who he believed was the same one, fired a rubber bullet at his left arm hitting him over the elbow. He confirmed that Duncan Clarke was in the vehicle with him. Mr Doherty also witnessed Mr. Clarke being assaulted. Mr. Doherty described severe bruising of his left arm, severe facial bruising lacerations to his nose, bruising to his left leg, and cuts to his upper leg and knee.

17.9.1.39 At AD113.3 is a note of Philip Jacobson of the Sunday Times headed "William Doherty, the grey haired man". The note reads "Mr Doherty is our famous grey haired man."...."He was heading towards the car park when a Para overtook him and grabbed him. 'I am not so fast on my feet any more and this little Para, he was certainly Scottish, I know that well enough for he was abusing me all the time, came running up behind me and grabbed me' He hit him several times on the top of the head with the barrel of his rifle causing cuts and abrasions to the top and the side of the head that eventually required 7 stitches, 'the Para kicked me all the way back to a Saracen that was standing about 20 yards away where Eden Street used to be'. Doherty was hurled inside; as he got up the Scottish Para said 'you Irish bastard' and crashed the butt of his rifle into Doherty's face.

17.9.1.40 Whilst the detail in the two reports differs in some respects it is clear that Mr. Doherty was describing an assault and arrest by Sergeant O who gave evidence of the arrest he was involved in. At Day 335/33/9 to Day 335/36/20 Sergeant O was asked about his dealings with the person he arrested. He described on de-bussing having had a bottle thrown at his head by a man a couple of feet away from him. He grabbed hold of the man with his left hand and alleged he was struck by other civilians. He admitted using the stock of his rifle to hit the man and smashed the plastic stock on the man's head to subdue him.

19.9.1.41 The arrest photograph of William Doherty was shown to Sergeant O and he acknowledged that the wound to Mr. Doherty's head was the result of Sergeant O hitting him. Day 335/34/24. Sergeant O claimed he could not have simply seized the man as he was struggling extremely hard, trying to get away and Sergeant O was determined he would not, so he subdued him. Day 335/36/6 to Day/36/20. Sergeant O denied hitting

Mr. Doherty several times on the top of the head with the barrel of his rifle or kicking him all the way back to a Saracen. He denied hurling Mr. Doherty inside, calling him an " Irish bastard" or crashing the butt of his rifle into Mr. Doherty's face. The Peter Jacobsen note contained a note about scars on Mr. Doherty's left forehead and face. When asked about that he said:

> " I do not know if he was scarred, but I know he was bleeding from that area." Day 335/38/10 to Day 335/38/20.

17.9.1.42 It is submitted that the above evidence and response clearly established that Sergeant O used considerably more violence and force than he was prepared to admit to in dealing with Mr. Doherty.

17.9.1.43 He denied himself firing a rubber bullet gun into the Pig where Mr. Doherty was, seeing anyone else do it or hearing of anyone else who had done it. Day 335/39/1 to Day 335/39/10.

17.9.1.44 At B1494.005 paragraph 15 Soldier 019 confirmed that following Lieutenant N's shots at Eden Place he returned to their Pig to get his SLR. At Day 343/116/19 to Day 343/118/5 he confirmed he was in P488 still positioned at the alleyway and which shows Duncan Clark being led to the Pig by Lieutenant N and INQ1918. Soldier 019 did not think it was possible he was in the group shown at P489 at the Pig although he agreed it is likely he would have gone back to collect his rifle. Mr Doherty's accounts of events regarding the firing of a baton round at himself in the back of the Pig were put to Soldier 019 and he denied he fired a rubber bullet gun point blank at an arrestee that day. Day 343/121/1 to Day 343/121/6. The allegations of Duncan Clarke[24] and Captain 200[25] as to firing a rubber bullet into the back of the Pig were also put to the witness. He denied at any time firing a rubber bullet into the back of his pig. Day 343/123/18 to Day 343/123/20.

[24] See AC61.1 1972 statement of Duncan Clarke.

[25] B1980 1972 RMP statement of Captain 200.

17.9.1.45 It is submitted that the evidence before the Inquiry on these matters as well as consideration of Soldier 019's general reliability must lead to the unmistakeable conclusion that he was responsible for the unlawful use of the baton gun as a weapon of assault in the incidents described by William Doherty, Duncan Clarke and Captain 200.

17.9.1.46 Evidence of an assault on an old man is persistent amongst the evidence of civilians in this area on the day. At AG43.3 paragraph 21, Charles Glenn, the Knight of Malta, described two paratroopers jump out of the rear of the vehicle which was parked at point C on the map attached to his statement. As they jumped out of the vehicle they were hyped up and shouting abusively at the crowd. He was then distracted as one of the Paratroopers grabbed an elderly man who was standing very close to him by the neck and started hitting him with his rifle. The Paratrooper was holding his rifle by the butt and bringing the barrel down repeatedly on the man's head. At Day 80/182/13 he confirmed it was the pistol grip being brought down on the man's head. The elderly man was quite tall and wore an overcoat of some sort. He had grey hair and looked as though he was in his 60s. The Para may have been shorter than the older man.

17.9.1.47 At AG43.3 paragraph 22 he described thinking that the Para was going to kill him. He recalled shouting at the para 'I order you to stop'. As he said this the Para threw the old man to one side and aimed his rifle at Mr. Glenn. He thought he was threatening him. Then very quickly another Para who he thought for some reason had some type of authority and who came from the same vehicle hit Mr. Glenn in the chest with the butt of his rifle and he fell back to the ground and felt quite dazed. At Day 80/181/18 to Day/80/182/5 the witness thought that the scene in P273 was familiar but thought the coat might have been different and he could not recall the radio pack. Day 80/4/18 to Day 80/181/20. At Day

335/42/15 to Day 336/43/8 Sergeant O denied this statement referred to him.

17.9.1.48 John McCrudden described at AM152.2 paragraph 9 how a Saracen pulled into the car park and a soldier got out of the front passenger seat. ...He immediately turned his rifle upside down and started using it like a baseball bat, clubbing people who were running past. He stayed on the east side of the Saracen, near the front, but moved about to club people who were running past. At Day 336/20/6 Sergeant O accepted he got out of the passenger seat of his vehicle but at Day 336/20/17 to Day 336/20/22 he denied he was the soldier described in the above extract. Patrick McCrudden described at AM153.12 a soldier attacking an elderly man when a member of the Order of Malta attempted to intervene. He described an assault on the Knight of Malta including him being struck with the butt of a rifle and then kicked. The Knight of Malta collapsed and the middle-aged man was arrested. At Day 335/44/7 to Day 335/44/8 Sergeant O denied anything of the kind occurred.

17.9.1.49 William Barber was quoted in a note from the Sunday Times in 1972 at AB9.2 describing: "a Para grasping an old man, he must have been 50 or 60, with his left hand, grasping him by the coat and trying to beat the hell out of him with the barrel of a rifle he was holding in his right hand.." He was then quoted as describing a civilian intervening, hitting the soldier and freeing the old man but the soldier getting the old man again. At Day 335/40/24 to Day 335/41/1 Sergeant O denied this account claiming he did not let go of the man until he handed him over to the NCO.

Other Evidence of Assault on Civilians

17.9.1.50 At AB101.1 paragraphs 4 to 5 Alana Burke stated that she moved onto the waste ground in Eden Place. Frankie Campbell shouted to her that the Army were coming and to run. They ran down towards the car park at the Rossville flats to try to get out of the way. As she tried to get out of the way she looked over her shoulder and saw soldiers on foot. She saw a short elderly man struck in the face with the butt of a rifle by a soldier at the spot marked A on AB101.4. He seemed to rise up in the air for a split second and then fell to the ground with blood streaming down his face. She could not say whether it was either man in P503.12 or P503.5 who were William Doherty and Duncan Clarke respectively.

17.9.1.51 It may be the same man who is referred to by Charles Canning at AC25.2 paragraph 13 who recalled when he was in Rossville Street seeing an old man being beaten up by a Paratrooper. Another man tried to stop and help him. However, the Paratrooper hit the man who stopped to help him with a baton round in the face. He thought that military policemen took these two men away.

17.9.1.52 At AH27.2 paragraph 9, Patrick Harkin described watching from the window of a flat in Block 2 of the flats. He was looking out of the front window for maybe 10 minutes when all of a sudden he saw Saracens racing south up Rossville Street. One drove in the opening between the waste ground and the car park behind the Rossville flats and stopped at the point marked C at AH27.5 facing down towards the car park. This was clearly Sergeant O's Pig.

17.9.1.53 The witness thought it was a snatch squad of soldiers looking to arrest troublemakers. He saw about half a dozen soldiers jump out of the Saracen whilst people were fleeing across the car park towards the two between Blocks 1 and 2 and Blocks 2 and 3. He would not class those people as rioters. They were trying to get away from the soldiers as soon as possible. The soldiers then started roughing people up. One thing that stood out in his mind was that they started attacking an old man, hitting him with the butts of their rifles. He did not know the old man well but recognised him as a local refuse collector. He was a non-offensive kind of man. He did not see anyone confronting the soldiers.

17.9.1.54 The reference to the elderly man being a refuse collector or having been a refuse collector is consistent with the evidence of Hugh O'Donnell Senior at AO31.3. He had run down Macari's Lane from William Street into the wasteland when he heard the roar of the armoured vehicles. He then saw three APCs pull up at points which he described as being points 6, 7 and 8 on AO31.9. Point 6 is approximately in the position where Sergeant O's Pig is known to have ended up in the photographs. However, it is further over to the east. He described one of the soldiers came out of the APC at point 6 and fire two shots into the alleyway between Blocks 1 and 2.

17.9.1.55 At AO31.3 paragraph 18 he described running into the car park after running south along the waste ground. As he went he continued to look over his left shoulder at what the soldiers were doing. When he reached the approximate position marked 12 on AO31.9, his eye was drawn to a tall man in his 50s picking his way through the rubble at the rear of the gardens of the houses on the west side of Chamberlain Street in the approximate position marked 13 on AO31.9. In oral evidence he believed the position was lower south down Chamberlain Street. Day 79/133/20 to Day 79/134/7. The man was leaning his left hand against the rear garden walls as he went as if to steady himself. He was not doing anything but trying to get out of the way. He recognised him as being one of their bin men. Before that, he had been a doorman at the old Rialto cinema in Market Street. He did not know his name. Suddenly the witness noticed a soldier who he thought was the soldier who had been standing at position 9 on AO31.9, go over to this man and knock him hard over the head with the barrel of his rifle. The man put his hands up to his head to protect himself.

17.9.1.56 The evidence of Manus Hugh McDaid at AM169.2 paragraph 10 was not dissimilar. As they approached the door to Block 1, he noticed a soldier to the west of the houses on Chamberlain Street approximately at point E on the attached map at AM169.5 striking an old man with the butt of his rifle. The soldier had his back to him and the witness saw him strike the old man once. As he made to strike him again, the soldier turned so that the witness could see him in profile. He was a tall man, wearing a helmet, goggles and a gas mask, gloves and camouflage Army dress, and high boots which covered his ankles. The old man was in his mid 60s, wearing a flat cap and a brown overcoat and looked pale and thin. The soldier seemed to be holding the man with one arm whilst trying to strike him with the butt of the rifle in his other hand.

17.9.1.57 At AM169 paragraph 11 he described instinctively starting to run over to help the old man, intending to remonstrate with the soldier and hit him if he would not stop striking the old man. However, his wife and another man near him restrained him and he was pulled into the stairwell of the northern end of block 1 of the Rossville flats. Point E may be found at AM169.2 and this, as one can see, is at the rear of 36 Chamberlain Street, much further south than the location described by Hugh O'Donnell. It is possible that what is being referred to is a completely separate incident.

17.9.1.58 Another witness who places the assault on an elderly man at a similar position is William Patrick McDonagh, whose statement is relevantly at AM192.2. He had been watching from the door of his girlfriend's flat in block 1. At AM192.2 paragraph 9, he described looking down into the courtyard. The first thing he saw was a man who he thought at the time was quite elderly, although he does not know why. He had been seized by two or three soldiers who were standing behind a Saracen which he thought was a patchy camouflage colour. The man and the soldiers were at the south gable end of the west side of Chamberlain Street, at the approximate position marked C at AM192.8. The Saracen was to the south of the men, at the approximate point marked D at AM192.8 facing south.

17.9.1.59 At AM192 .2 paragraph 10 he stated he did not know the man who had been seized by the soldiers. It seemed to him that the soldiers were trying to hit him. Two of them were holding him and another one had his rifle raised at shoulder height as though about to hit him. He did not however actually see the soldier hit the man. He could not hear anything that the soldiers or the man may have been saying because there was so much shouting and screaming all around. There were a couple of boys in the courtyard who tried the get to the old man but he did not think they reached him. On AM192.8 he placed the man and the soldiers south of 36 Chamberlain Street.

17.9.1.60 At AM402.1 paragraph 7 the witness Susanna Miller described watching from her flat in Block 2. She then went to the bedroom window at the back of the flat which overlooked the car park, to see what was happening. She saw large crowds of people running south through the car park towards the Rossville flats. From her bedroom window she could not see out on to Rossville Street and could only see part of the waste ground around Eden Place and Pilot Row. She did not remember looking at the waste ground as her attention was drawn to a man who was standing against the garden wall of the gable end house in Chamberlain Street at approximately the point marked B on AM402.4. The position marked B is at the south-west corner of number 36. This wall is also shown on the attached photograph with the place marked where the man was standing as point 2.

17.9.1.61 At AM402.1 paragraph 8 she stated she could not say what colour hair the man had, although he was going bald and in his early 50s. He was wearing a three-quarter length dark coat. She could not see his face as he was facing west towards Rossville Street. Two soldiers were hitting the man in the face with their rifle butts. The soldiers were wearing an ordinary Army uniform and were very tall. She did not remember what they were wearing .... The man they were hitting was trying to resist by sheltering his face with his forearm but they hit him about three or four times. He seemed angry and it looked as though he was cursing them. That was the last she saw of the man. She did not know who the old man was. She never found out who he was or what happened to him and this is something which upset her, although she believed that she would recognise him if she saw a photograph of him.

17.9.1.62 Isabel Duffy at AD158.3 paragraph 18 described an old man being beaten by soldiers in car park. Celine Frances Brolly in her 1972 statement describes three soldiers punching and kicking a middle-aged man. A first-aider came to his assistance and was also punched, kicked and thrown the ground. A rubber bullet was also fired at him.

17.9.1.63 Michael Cregan, whose evidence relevantly appears at AC119.4 paragraph 26 and therein described soldiers trying to pull an old man from the car park marked H at AC119.7 to Saracens at the north west corner of the car park. He was pulled away and the soldiers let him go.

17.9.1.64 It is possible that some of these accounts are variations or snap-shots of the same or similar incidents. It is not surprising given the amount of activity in the area and the time frame of these events that locations or precise details might vary. However the weight of these accounts lies in the fact that they are independent recollections of witnesses in close proximity at the time they occurred and which fit into a pattern of behaviour by the Parachute Regiment in this area on the day.

The assault on the Knight of Malta

17.9.1.65 Charles McMonagle, a Knight of Malta, was attending to a casualty at the back of the Chamberlain Street houses by the wire fence at a position marked A on AM367.16. He acknowledged at Day 102/109/10 to Day 102/109/15 that the fleeing crowd knocked him over as he was attending the casualty. A paratrooper got out of the back of a Pig and began firing straight ahead towards the car park. At AM367.3 paragraphs 21 to 22 he described how the paratrooper turned to his left and looked at Mr. McMonagle. The witness put his hands up and the soldier shouted at him. They both had gasmasks on. The witness pointed to the Red Cross badge on his chest and shouted "Red Cross, Red Cross". The soldier pointed his rifle at Mr. McMonagle's chest.

17.9.1.66 Mr. McMonagle is the figure in P272 at the wall in the white gaiters and white belt. P273 is also likely to show Soldier V and Soldier S who appear to grappling with someone located roughly in the position the figure of Mr. McMonagle occupied in P272. P278 shows Mr McMonagle on the ground in roughly the location of the previous photographs with Soldier V on the left of the photograph and Soldier S on the right.

17.9.1.67 At Day 102/120/11 to Day 102/120/25 Mr. McMonagle indicated that EP33.5 confirmed an impression that he had had that the soldier who fired from the hip and approached him was left-handed from the way he fired his rifle on the left hand side. The soldier on the right of the photograph appeared to him to be left-handed. It was pointed out at Day 102/152/5 to Day 102/152/18 by Lord Saville that the soldier on the left of the photograph could equally be left handed.

17.9.1.68 Soldier S did not recall any incident involving a first aid man. He had no recollection of pinning somebody against a wall and rifling through his bag. He denied firing from the hip at any stage in the general direction of the flats. Day 331/55/13 to Day 331/56/3. He further indicated he was right handed and carried his rifle in his right hand. Day 331/56/4 to Day 331/56/18.

17.9.1.69 It is notable that Soldier V at B821.003 paragraph 2.3 acknowledged pinning a first-aider with a respirator "against the wall." He described his immediate thought as these guys were extremely well organised and he therefore ran at the man pinning him against the wall with his rifle. This incident occurred when Soldier V got out of the Pig, turned right, saw the man and went straight for him. It was certainly very shortly after getting out. Day 333/46/5 to Day 333/46/21. When shown P278 Soldier V acknowledged "it was possible" that it was himself on the left with the Lance Corporal's stripe and Soldier S on the right. He denied firing in the manner described by Mr. McMonagle or pulling the medic's respirator to one side. He said he never saw the bag emptied and that the pushing of Mr. McMonagle to the ground by one or possibly both soldiers never happened in his sight. He had no recollection of telling the man not to move as the soldiers went through the gap in the fence. Day 333/5/7 to Day 333/53/19. It is submitted that it was in all likelihood Soldier V, assisted by Soldier S, who carried out the assault on Mr. McMonagle.

17.9.1.70 Mr. McMonagle described the soldier screaming at him and pulled Mr. McMonagle's gas mask to one side. This soldier released him and the witness acknowledged it was another soldier who came up from his other side who went through the bag and its contents. Day 102/149/12 to Day 102/149/18. The witness confirmed that EP33.5 showed himself on a heap on the ground with his gas mask lying askance. Day 102/120/2 to Day 102/120/6.

17.9.1.71 At Day 102/119/11 to Day 102/119/17 the witness confirmed he could not now remember if he had been picked up of the ground by the soldier but did remember being stood against the wall with the soldier's rifle in his chest. In his hand written report in 1972 he described being pulled up by the soldier. AM367.19. In EP33.5 it is clear that Mr. McMonagle has ended up back on the ground.

17.9.1.72 It is submitted that the significance of this incident is that quite apart from the evidence of unjustified firing by Soldier V on de-bussing his immediate reaction on seeing someone clearly in first-aid apparel was to treat him as one of "these guys" and presumably a threat. He pushed Mr. McMonagle against the wall and pushed a rifle into his chest. Soldier V clearly assaulted a first-aider who presented no threat to him whatsoever. He was assisted in this assault by Soldier S. It is a clear example of unjustified, inappropriate and wholly unwarranted force by Soldiers of Mortar Platoon on the waste ground. It is an illustration of the mindset of both these soldiers towards innocent civilians and a prelude to the further unjustified discharge of their weapons in the Rossville Flats Car Park.

17.9.1.73 At AG19.2 paragraph 6, Joseph Martin Gallagher described going through the double doors into Block 2 from the stairway and getting down on their stomachs as they went through the causeway i.e. the second veranda on Block 2 marked on photograph as point 2 at AG19.7. He looked out on the courtyard and saw, what he believed was a first aid man being beaten up by some soldier. The man was wearing a dark coat and he had a strap over his shoulder with a box attached. He associated this box with that of a first aid man. He could not say precisely where the man was, although he believed he was approximately at the point marked C on AG19.9. This point was behind the back wall of No.32 Chamberlain Street on the west side. He no longer remembered the soldiers hitting the man with their boots and rifle butts, although he said this in his previous statement from 1972. He knew that the first aid man was getting a kicking but he could not recall the precise nature of the beating nor how many soldiers were involved. He heard more shots and he got down for cover.

17.9.1.74 Hugh O'Donnell Senior at AO31.4 paragraph 19 whose evidence was considered above further described running south a few steps further along Chamberlain Street. He was looking behind him over his left shoulder once more. This time, when he was in the approximate position marked 14 on AO31.4. He saw, he thought, in the position marked 15 on AO31.4 what he believed to be a first-aider or Knight of Malta as he had some form of armband on his arm. This location was behind the west wall of No.36 Chamberlain Street. He could not recall whether or not the man was wearing a hat of any kind. The man was up against the wall and was facing towards the witness as he kneeled or was on his hunkers crouched over to treat someone lying on the ground. Suddenly a soldier, again possibly the same one as had hit the bin man, went over to the first-aider and hit him, he thought over the head with either the barrel or the butt of his rifle. He could not then recall which it was. The witness was terrified and continued to run towards the alleyway between Blocks 1 and 2. The witness confirmed his description of this incident at Day 79/145/21 to Day 79/146/25.

17.9.1.75 It is clear that P278 shows Charles McMonagle at a spot further to the north than Joseph Martin Gallagher or Hugh O'Donnell Senior placed their first-aider but they may well have given descriptions of the same incident. Inevitably perceptions and detail of such an incident may differ but both can be reconciled with the scene described by Mr McMonagle and Soldier V.

33 Chamberlain Street.

17.9.1.76 Number 33 Chamberlain Street was the house into which Peggy Deery and Michael Bridge were taken. The people in that house were arrested and marched north up Chamberlain Street.

17.9.1.77 At AN8.3 paragraph 16 Anna Nelis[26] who lived in 33 Chamberlain Street described waiting for the ambulance. When it did not arrive, she ran back out of the house into Chamberlain Street and approached two soldiers who she saw standing beside a Saracen parked outside her house. She explained about the wounded woman and asked if they could get an ambulance for her. She asked the soldiers to come into the house so they could see for themselves how badly wounded the woman was so that they would see that she desperately needed an ambulance. She told them that nothing would happen to them in her house. She remembered that the fair complexioned soldier seemed very hyped up. He seemed out of control and was drawing attention to himself by shouting out ugly remarks that could have been directed to anyone in the vicinity. He was generally loud and so offensive that it seemed to me that he wanted to provoke a fight or argument with someone. The language he was using was obscene and he started swearing at me. She though that he had a northern English accent. She thought that the other darker soldier may have had a Scottish accent.

17.9.1.78 At AN8.4 paragraph 21 she thought that the two soldiers eventually came into their house and looked at the two wounded people there. At one point, she very clearly remembered the fair complexioned soldier saying of the wounded woman: 'Let the whore bleed to death' I think it may even have been when he was actually standing looking at her. It was such a horrible thing to say and she was shocked by it. She thought it may have been after that she told the soldiers about the wounded man lying in the backyard. She thought the fair complexioned soldier then said something like: 'Let them all die'.

17.9.1.79 At AN8.5 paragraph 23 she stated that after the ambulance had left, three or four soldiers including the two she described above pushed their way into the house and arrested most of the men who were inside. She later found out that the soldiers had arrested a total of 23 men who were all in their house at that time. The soldiers took the arrested men out of the house and back into Chamberlain Street. They were then marched north up Chamberlain Street with their hands folded behind their heads like criminals.

17.9.1.80 At AN9.3 paragraph 20 George Nelis[27], Anna Nelis's brother, described Peggy Deery and another man being brought into the house. When he came down from upstairs again there were two soldiers in the house. He could not remember much about them or what they were wearing and was unable to say whether or not they were armed or whether their faces were blackened up. He could remember them making abusive comments about Mrs Deery and the other injured men in the house such as let them bleed to death and they deserve it. The house was quite full of people by this stage and everybody was scared.

[27] See evidence also of Margaret Nelis AN11.4 paragraph 23.

Nobody dared confront the soldiers who seemed to be very angry, unpleasant people. The two soldiers ordered everybody out of the house and out into Chamberlain Street, including himself. There may have been some other soldiers outside the house as well as the two soldiers who had come inside.

17.9.1.81 He believed that the four soldiers marched them north up Chamberlain Street with their hands on their heads. There were about twelve of them and perhaps three or four soldiers. He could remember the soldiers ordering them to walk on the pavement and then as soon as they did so ordering them to walk on the road.AN9.4 paragraph 25.

17.9.1.82 At AN9.4 paragraph 28 the witness was crouched down and was facing the wall. The soldier came up behind him. The Soldier told him he had been wounded in Belfast but had then got his revenge by killing four Irish men. He told him how he had shot two of them in the head, one of them in the chest and one of them in the "balls". He remembered him saying how he had enjoyed watching the man who he had shot in the "balls" dying slowly. He then said to him that he was going to kill Mr. Nelis as well today and that he would not see tomorrow or see his wife again. After what he had seen had happened to Mrs Deery and the young boy in the Rossville flats courtyard he completely believed what the soldier told him and was certain that he was going to be killed imminently. The Soldier described by Mr. Nelis[28] was INQ 12.

17.9.1.83 The experience of the Nelis family was reflected in the experience of a number of other witnesses in the house including verbal abuse and physical brutality which continued on the journey to and at Fort George.[29]. Mr Otto Schlindwein was arrested in the street outside 33

[28] See evidence of Mr.Nelis at Day 103. He also gave evidence of brutality including running a gauntlet and threats from an Alsatian Dog at Fort George.

Chamberlain Street and, like George Nelis, described a Scottish soldier who he says hit him in the side with the butt of his rifle. Day 104/166/16 to Day 104/167/7.

17.9.1.84 INQ 12 features in a very substantial number of the allegations arising out of events at 33 Chamberlain Street. At Day 351/46/10 to Day 351/60/12 a large number of the allegations against him were put to him:

"Q Do you have any idea how so many different people came to make these allegations against you if there is not a grain of truth in them?

A No, sir."

It is submitted that it is clear from his failure to mention his involvement in arrests to Eversheds until a number of draft statements were taken is further evidence of the unreliability of his denials in oral evidence of the allegations made against him. Day 353/104/10 to Day 353/108/11.

Assault on man at north end of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats.

17.9.1.85 At AM173.2 paragraph 10 to 13 Paul McDaid, who was standing at the south of number 36 Chamberlain Street, described the car park of the Rossville flats as fairly empty. There were between one and two dozen people in the car park. Some people were on the ground, but most people seemed to have already gone through the gap between blocks 1 and 2. He could see two Saracens at the northeast corner of block 1. He did not remember a lot of soldiers, just two or three soldiers standing at the front of the Saracens, who were wearing reddish gear which he knew was the Paratroopers uniform. He could not describe the physical appearance of these soldiers.

17.9.1.86 When he first saw the soldier, he could hear shooting but could not say if this was these particular soldiers who were shooting. From his position at the gable end of Chamberlain Street he saw one soldier who was at the northeast corner of block 1 ... shoot from chest level in the direction of the gap between blocks 2 and 3. He thought he fired a couple of shots but did not know if he hit anyone. There was a guy coming out of the northeastern exit of Block 1 into the car park. He started shouting and swearing at the soldiers who were standing by this exit. One of these soldiers attacked the man by hitting him with the butt of his rifle.

17.9.1.87 At AM161.4 paragraph 27 Charles McDaid described running on the pavement on the western side of Rossville Street and as he reached just in front of the Rubble Barricade that is to the north of the barricade marked at AM161.13. He slowed down. There were people in front of him clambering over the rubble barricade trying to take cover. As the pace of his running slowed he glanced over his left shoulder towards the soldiers he knew to be at the northern end of Rossville Street. He glanced only for a split second and the only scene which he recalled is of a man lying on the ground near the corner of the northern end of block 1 ... with a soldier standing over him. Another soldier who had been running towards Rossville Street from the waste ground to the north of the Rossville flats then laid a boot into the man on the ground. At Day 060/147/2 to Day 060/147/6 the witness could not elaborate any further on his description. When shown P486 and P487 depicting the incident with William Dillon the witness did not recollect that incident. Day 060/148/7 to Day 060/148/22. There remains the possibility that this witness saw an entirely separate incident.

17.9.1.88 Thomas McAdams saw a paratrooper near a Pig at the north gable of Block 1 move towards a man trying to get into the entrance at the north gable, and strike him with his rifle without provocation. A second soldier then fired a rubber bullet at the man. AM36.2 paragraphs 11 to 13.

The Injury to Rosemary Doyle.

17.9.1.89 Rosemary Doyle was a 19 year old Knight of Malta who was on duty on Bloody Sunday. She wore a distinctive and easily recognised white coat with a white linen kit bag strapped across the chest. She also had a badge with her name it. At AD140.2 paragraph 6 to 7 she described walking with her colleague Robert Cadman south along Chamberlain Street to the Rossville Flats car park. People were running to the gaps between the blocks of flats. She and Robert walked north again across the wasteland in the direction of William Street. On viewing P593, P594 and P595 she accepted that they might in fact have come through the gap between Chamberlain Street and the waste ground. Day 101/9/14 to Day 101/11/8. She accepted it was probably herself on the right, Robert Cadman in the middle and Maureen Gallagher on the left in P595.

17.9.1.90 They had reached point A on AD140.11 when a Saracen stopped a short distance to her left-hand side at point B on AD140.11. A soldier stepped out of the Saracen with a rubber bullet gun in his hand and fired a rubber bullet in their direction which struck her in the mask on the side of her face. She thought he was half in and half out of the vehicle when he fired. She gave the distance in her 1972 report at AD140.6 as between 2 feet 6 inches and 3 feet and, although she could not now honestly remember precisely, her 1972 estimate was accurate or very good to accurate. Day 101/11/13 to Day 101/11/24. At the time she and Robert were running having heard a cry for help on the western side of Rossville Street. She remembered feeling something hit the side of her mask as she ran. She removed her mask shortly after this and felt the right side of her jaw swell up. She later learned the rubber bullet had cracked some teeth. She could not understand why they were fired at as their Knights of Malta uniforms made them clearly identifiable.

17.9.1.91 Counsel for some of the soldiers stated at Day 101/23/20 to Day 101/23/23 that he did not dispute she was hit by a rubber bullet or that rubber bullets were being fired. He referred to the NICRA statement of Robert Cadman at AC1.1, his hand written contemporaneous statement at AC1.22 and his Eversheds statement at AC1.35 and the statement of Maureen Gallagher at AG21 and Day 70/62/15 to Day 70/64/25 who both described Rosemary Doyle as being shot from a moving Saracen. It should also be noted that Maureen Gallagher was also obviously in error when she placed the shooting of Rosemary Doyle at in her 1972 account at Columbcille Court.

17.9.1.92 Robert Cadman's evidence is to be read by the Inquiry. It is submitted that the photographs cited above show the location of the incident and in all probability the soldier involved in the shooting. It is submitted that the account given by Rosemary Doyle is the correct one. Even if that were not the case the other accounts describing the firing of a rubber bullet from a moving Saracen at a woman in medical uniform could hardly be justified by reference to legal use or appropriate discharge of a rubber bullet.

17.9.1.93 The use of the Rubber Bullet gun in such circumstances was clearly not only unwarranted but potentially lethal. It was fired at the head of an innocent civilian clearly identifiable by her medical uniform. P593, P594 and P595 appear to show Ms. Doyle and two persons with her. They also show Lieutenant N's Pig. V2/1.47 seconds also shows the discharge of two baton guns from this Pig on stopping. The two baton gunners in this Pig were Soldier 019 and Soldier 112[30].

17.9.1.94 At Day 343/108/1 to Day 343/109/13 Soldier 019 was asked about his firing on the waste ground. He accepted it was the usual procedure for guys with the baton guns to position themselves by the doors and he himself was positioned at the back close to the doors. He was asked was it the usual tactic to fire rubber bullets almost immediately on de-bussing. He replied that he could not recall. When he was then asked was there a tactic of just randomly firing rubber bullets on de-bussing he replied that he did not think they would fire randomly.

[30] At Day 353/161/4 to Day 353/161/12 Soldier 112 gave evidence that he was in Lieutenant N's Pig.

17.9.1.95 Soldier 112 confirmed on Day 353 that he was of the view that he was in Lieutenant N's Pig. He claimed to have fired some baton rounds at a group who he categorised as rioters who were "firing stuff" at us. Day 353/98/19 to Day 353/99/12.

17.9.1.96 The evidence before the tribunal is that Soldier 019 and Soldier 112, on his evidence, were the baton gunners in Lieutenant N's Pig. Soldier 013 and Soldier 017, on his own evidence, were the baton gunners in Sergeant O's Pig. If, as appears from the evidence before the Inquiry, they were the four baton gunners who deployed in the area on the day one of these soldiers was responsible for the firing and injury to Rosemary Doyle. On her evidence it could only have been deliberate. On any view and on the evidence of the photographs it constituted reckless and unjustified use of a baton gun.

17.9.2 Patrick "Barman" Duffy Incident.

17.9.2.1 In a 1972 civilian witness statement Patrick Duffy described an incident where a paratrooper fired a baton round at point blank range at himself in the stairwell of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats.

17.9.2.2 Mr Duffy was described in the following terms by Bishop Daly at H5.2 paragraph 9 "...a Civil Rights steward, a very much respected man in the Bogside area" and a person whom he had personally requested to keep an eye on youths on Bloody Sunday lest they do any damage to property in the William Street area.

17.9.2.3 Soldier 112 in his statement at 20:40 on 4 February 1972 at page B1731 stated:

"I then took up position further south at the Corner of Block 1 one Rossville Flats and fired a number of baton rounds to disperse rioting persons. I then regrouped some 10 minutes later, at the corner of Pilot Row / Rossville Street ..."

His current evidence before the Inquiry is that he travelled in Lieutenant N's Pig. Soldier 112 gave an account of firing rubber bullets at persons in the car park from the northeastern corner of Block 1, before moving to the northwestern corner of Block 1 to observe the Rubble Barricade. At no time does he say that he entered the Northern entrance to Block 1 of the Rossville Flats.

17.9.2.4 It is apparent from B1377.006 paragraph 26 that Soldier 006, also from the Mortar Platoon, entered Block 1 of the Rossville Flats and went up the stairwell to look along the balcony. He had travelled in the same Pig as 013 and also must have, if that Soldier's current evidence were accepted, travelled with Soldier 017. In his evidence at Day 334/64/9 to Day 334/65/12 he confirmed he went into the stairwell but denied any soldier fired a baton gun or used a rifle butt to strike someone in the stairwell. He thought there were about two to three soldiers in his group and was not aware of any other group of soldiers who entered the stairwell whilst he was there.

17.9.2.5 Soldier 013, at B1406 in his statement to the RMP said – "During the 30 minutes I was in the Car Park at Rossville Flats I fired a total of ten baton rounds at the crowd which numbered about 50 persons of mixed sex..."

In his Eversheds statement at B1408.003 paragraph 15 he recalled:

"...I was probably over aggressive as a soldier. The Para's ethos is that if someone is going to be violent to you, you attack them. I always used aggression and it worked. It is the best form of defence. I felt the aggression was justified given what I faced as I got out of the Pig.

17.9.2.6 At B1408.003 paragraph 16 he remembered chasing a lad into the stairway in one of the blocks of the Rossville Flats. He thought it was the stairway at the northern end of Block 1. He chased him up the stairway and fired his baton round up the stairs...He could not remember seeing any other people in the stairway at that time. He also fired a number of baton rounds at windows in the Rossville Flats as these were also good firing positions. He wanted to keep people away from the windows to prevent them from shooting at the soldiers. He could not now recall which windows he fired at. Soldier 013 therefore admits at one point in the deployment being in the Block and firing a baton round up the stairs.

17.9.2.7 Soldier 013 also referred in his statement at B1408.003 paragraph 13 in the context of emerging from the Pig to firing his rubber bullet gun but also having a rifle with him but not using it at all that day. At B1408.003 paragraph 18 he described looking for firing positions and gunmen but did not use his rifle at all. His role was to use the baton gun. The significant point on the face of these parts of his statement is that Soldier 013 had both a baton gun and a rifle with him.

17.9.2.8 Patrick Duffy is now deceased but he gave a statement to the NCCL on 1 February 1972 which appears at AD164.1:

> "...I was standing at the doorway to the flats at the William Street end. A crowd of people then rushed around the corner and headed for the stairs. Two Saracens then came around the corner into the square behind the flats. These Saracens were travelling very fast and they stopped dead at the corner. I saw a boy who was actually struck by one of the Saracens and his body somersaulted a few times. My view was then blocked by another Saracen which arrived. Two soldiers jumped out of the back and rushed at me in the doorway. I appealed to the soldiers not to fire gas or rubber bullets as the stairs were packed with women and children. One of the soldiers kicked me in the pelvis and as I did not drop to the ground, he fired a rubber bullet from close range at me. This bullet struck me in the left thigh. The soldier then pointed the rifle at my head and was going to shoot me when William McIntyre tackled the soldier and pushed him out of the way. The other soldier then hit a woman with the butt of his rifle..."

17.9.2.9 On Day 126/175/25 to Day 126/176/19 Mr. Duffy's son Gavan Duffy gave evidence. He presented the damaged snuff box his father had in his left trouser pocket. He was questioned as follows by Ms McGahey:

MS McGAHEY: Sir, one further matter which has been brought to my attention: I understand, Mr Duffy, that you believe that your father on Bloody Sunday was slightly injured when a rubber bullet was aimed at him; is that right?

A. Yes, that is correct, yes.

Q. Did he tell you of the circumstances in which this had occurred?

A. He told me the soldiers had tried to come into the flats and he tried to prevent them because he told them there were only women and children in the flats and he was actually hit with a rubber bullet. He grabbed the gun and pushed it down and hit him in the leg. He had this in his pocket, you know, and the mark of the rubber bullet is still there clearly to be seen.

17.9.2.10 Frank Deane whose NCCL statement appears at AD16.1 was 65 years old in 1972 and is now deceased.

"...Then the Saracens swung into what was previously Pilots Row. I then ran into the entrance of the High Flats, where there were a number of people including Mrs Mellon and Mr P. Duffy. A soldier ran into the doorway. Mr Duffy said, "There are a lot of women in here." The soldier immediately turned and kicked him in the pit of the stomach and then shot a rubber bullet at him at point blank range. Then the soldier ran out..."

17.9.2.11 Margaret Mellon whose handwritten statement appears at AM400.5 (undated 1972) stated as follows:

"...I got into the front door at the bottom of the multi storey flats when a soldier came running. He struck Mr Paddy Duffy with the butt of a rifle. I got a slap with it as well. When Mr Duffy tried to tell him that there were women present he shot a rubber bullet at close range into his thigh. The soldier kicked Mr Duffy in the groin as he stumbled after being struck with the rubber bullet..."

17.9.2.12 Mrs Mellon made a statement to Eversheds at AM400.1 and gave oral evidence before the Tribunal on Day 101 when she was aged 83. She did not recall the details of her 1972 statement.

17.9.2.13 In her Eversheds statement at AM400.1 she described heading straight for the first entrance at the northern end of Block 1. There were four other people hiding in the entrance to the stairs with her. Barman Duffy, a man called Frank Deane who she knew quite well, a woman in a camel coat and another man she did not know. At AM400.2 paragraphs 10 to 14 she stated that by the time she reached the staircase entrance there was no one left on the waste ground. She then heard more shooting, this time two or three sharp cracks coming from the north end of Rossville Street. These had a different sound to the shots she had heard earlier and she began to get nervous; she realised that these were probably live bullets not rubber bullets. After a few minutes she tried to make a run for it, however, the shooting was continuous by now and before she was able to get out of the staircase entrance Frank Deane pulled her back. The next thing she remembered was a soldier coming up to the entrance and sticking his rifle in. Barman Duffy raised his hand and started to say there is only women here, but the soldier lifted his rifle and hit Barman Duffy in the stomach with the butt. Barman Duffy doubled over, holding his stomach and then the soldier cocked his rifle and turned it on the rest of us. She thought he was going to shoot Barman.

17.9.2.14 He slowly pointed it in each of their faces. She was looking directly at him and thought 'oh, no this is it'. She could hear Mr Deane rattling his beads behind him as he said the rosary. She remembered that the soldier was tall and probably in his late twenties with a fair face. He was wearing camouflage clothes and had a beret on his head. She did not remember the colour of the beret, but she did notice that there was no signature or badge on it, which she thought was unusual.

17.9.2.15 Andrew Barr at AB12.2 paragraph 8 described hiding under the stairs in the north east corner of Block 1 and a soldier lowered his rifle to my head and held it pointing down towards him approximately 12 inches away from his head. When the soldier pointed the gun at his head he was looking into his eyes. He was convinced the soldier was going to shoot him. The soldier was "hyped up". As the soldier was pointing his gun at my head Paddy Duffy who was standing at the side of the soldier and Paddy Duffy reached forward and tipped up the gun which the soldier was pointing at him. Paddy Duffy said to the soldier something like "We don't want any trouble here". He clearly remembered thinking that if Paddy Duffy had not done this he would have been shot by the soldier. He still felt that he, and possibly Paddy Duffy, would be shot when an officer came into the flats. He knew this man was an officer because he had pips on his shoulder. He remembered that the officer grabbed the soldier by his shoulder and pulled him out of the flats and gave him some sort of orders..."

17.9.2.16 At Day 98/17/20 to Day 98/19/1 the witness told Peter Clarke QC that after he had come out from underneath the stairs he went up the stairs more or less together with Barman Duffy. The witness went right to the top but he "lost" Barman Duffy. He said he was positive there were no shots fired in the stairwell.

17.9.2.17 We know on the evidence before the Inquiry that according to Soldier 006 a number of soldiers "two or three" in a group entered this Block. He saw civilians there. He was not aware of any other group of soldiers apart from themselves entering the stairwell when he was there. Day 334/64/9 to Day 364/64/23.

In addition Soldier 013 stated he fired a rubber bullet at a lad up the stairs in Block 1 at the Northern End. B1408.003 paragraph 16.

17.9.2.18 Given the limited number of soldiers deployed in the area of Block 1 during the relevant short period and the even more limited number of soldiers who admit entry to Block 1 Soldier 006 and Soldier 013 are prime candidates for being present during the "Barman" Duffy incident. Mr Barr only saw one soldier, apart from the Officer who entered at the end of the incident on his description, when it is clear on the evidence of the soldiers there was two or three at some point in the Block when civilians were present. Mr Barr also was "positive there were no shots in the stairwell." Day 098/19/12 to Day 098/19/22. He therefore either was not present when Soldier 013 was or he completely missed his firing of a baton gun in the stairwell in which he was present.

17.9.2.19 We do know on the evidence of Mr. Barr at some point he "lost" Mr. Duffy. It is perhaps possible the incident occurred after he had left Mr. Duffy. The evidence of Mr. Duffy as to the number of soldiers present is though closer to the suggestion of Soldier 006 who entered the Block than is the evidence of Andrew Barr. [31]

17.9.2.20 It is submitted that the evidence of Mr. Duffy himself and the testimony of his son present the most reliable accounts of this incident. The contemporary evidence of Margaret Mellon and the evidence of Mr Frank Deane are clearly corroborative of the accounts given. Given the admission of Soldier 013 as to firing inside Block 1 with his rubber bullet gun he is the most likely candidate for this assault on Mr. Duffy.

17.9.3 Conclusion.

17.9.3.1 It is submitted that the evidence before the Inquiry is overwhelming in demonstrating widespread and systematic brutality by the Parachute Regiment on Bloody Sunday. This brutality and reckless behaviour was endemic amongst the soldiers of Mortar Platoon and others and could only have been engaged in with explicit approval or tacit acceptance by their superiors. This behaviour also demonstrates the mind set of the soldiers on deployment and is highly relevant in assessing the behaviour of those who engaged in lethal force on the day. These soldiers were out of effective command and control and behaved accordingly.

[31] Rosin Stewart described being in Block 1, hearing shooting and being made aware of soldiers outside. She recalled Barnan Duffy being there. She believed when she came down to exit there were no soldiers. She gave no account of any soldiers entering Block 1 or the stairwell. Again, subject to timing, this does not accord with the evidence of even Soldier 006 and Soldier 013. Day 097/60/9 to Day 097/65/25.

17.10 Civilian gunmen and bombers

17.10.1 Introduction and summary of submissions

17.10.1.1 The evidence supports the following conclusions:

i) The soldiers were not attacked with nail bombs or petrol bombs.

ii) The soldiers were not attacked with acid bombs or other bombs.

iii) Civilian gunfire was limited to the shots fired by OIRA 4, also known as Father Daly's gunman, at a time and a location which did not impact at all on the actions of the soldiers.

iv) No soldier was wounded by civilian gunfire.

17.10.2 Nail, petrol and acid bombs

17.10.2.1 There is no civilian evidence whatsoever which supports the contention of soldiers of Mortar Platoon in regard to the presence of nail bombers and petrol bombers. Soldier V claimed to have fired at a petrol bomber in the car park of Rossville Flats. Lieutenant N claimed to have fired at a nail bomber in the car park of Rossville Flats. Soldier Q claimed to have fired at a nail bomber at the alleyway between blocks 2 and 3 of Rossville Flats. Soldier R claimed to have fired at a nail bomber in the car park, close to block 1 of Rossville Flats. The civilian evidence would indicate clearly that the accounts of the soldiers with regard to nail bombs and petrol bombs were completely fabricated in order to justify their shooting. As can be seen in our submissions on Observation Posts, the observations of soldiers in these posts do not provide support for the accounts given by the soldiers of Mortar Platoon.

17.10.2.2 There is a limited amount of civilian evidence with regard to the throwing of bottles from block 1 of Rossville Flats into the car park below. Thomas Wilson gave evidence at Day 84/15/12 to Day 84/16/9. He confirmed that the bottles thrown from the end of block 1 were thrown by "just a few kids." He described the bottles as looking as if they contained paint, they were coloured white. Somebody told him later it was diluted acid. It was just somebody passing who gave him this information and he could not remember if it was on the day or subsequently. In his statement at AW19.5 paragraph 17 to 20, he described a Saracen being hit by a bottle. A soldier pointed his rifle in response, but the witness did not know if he fired. He heard a shot while the rifle was raised but he thought it might have been fired by someone else near by. In examination by Mr. Glasgow, the witness told the Inquiry that the soldier fired. When he saw a second bottle thrown, the soldier did not fire. This account does not appear in his Eversheds statement and indeed contradicted the earlier account he gave to Counsel to the Inquiry. The Inquiry should be slow to conclude that this witness was able to present credible evidence of an acid bomb attack on the soldiers in the car park of Rossville Flats.

17.10.2.3 The witness Maureen Gerke made a statement in 1972, which appears at AG27.18. It was recorded there that she saw, being thrown at the Army, "some acid from the multi-storeyed flats." In her Eversheds statement at AG27.5 paragraph 7, she recorded that she had no recollection of acid being thrown from roof of block 1 of Rossville Flats, nor did she recall anyone being on the roof of block 1 of Rossville Flats. Sometimes when there were riots, people would get up on to the roof of block 1 of Rossville Flats via level 8:

> "I would not have known if acid was being thrown or not."

She was asked at Day 133/84/21 to Day 133/84/25, whether she ever remembered acid being thrown from the flats. She replied that she remembered things being thrown from the flats:

> "...whether I would know if it was acid or not, I could not tell how I would know that."

She confirmed that she could not now remember anything being thrown from the flats on the day. Day 133/85/1 to Day 133/85/3. The witness has confirmed in her evidence to this Inquiry that she could not tell how she would have known if it was acid in 1972. The Inquiry is therefore dealing with testimony from a witness who recalls nothing of the events she described in her statement in 1972 and, in 2001, could not say how she would have known it was acid in 1972.

17.10.2.4 It is submitted that there is no significant credible civilian evidence to authenticate the descriptions of acid bombs presented at various times by the soldiers of Mortar Platoon. Notwithstanding the above observations, it remains clear that even on the accounts of the soldiers of Mortar Platoon, the actions in firing at an alleged acid bomber were outside the Yellow Card. The issue of acid bombs was raised and used as a pretext by the soldiers of Mortar Platoon to explain unjustified firing at the Rossville Flats.

17.10.3 Civilian gunfire

The Lawton document on civilian gunmen seeks to identify evidence that there were civilian gunmen present in the Rosville Flats on Bloody Sunday. This is addressed in the following section.

17.10.3.1 Monica Barr

The witness watched events from her house in [redacted] as the Paratroopers entered the Rossville Flats courtyard. In her Eversheds statement at AB16.3 paragraph 12, she recalled seeing a hand sticking out of an open window on the 8th floor of block 1 of Rossville Flats. The flat was approximately in the middle of block 1, but she could not be more precise. The hand, which was holding a pistol, appeared over the top of the window pane. She recalled one shot being fired which made a "pop" sound. The window, she recalled, tilted inwards at the top and outwards at the bottom. Almost immediately she head a "crack" and saw the wood at the top of the window frame splinter where she presumed a bullet, fired by a soldier below the flats, had hit.

17.10.3.2 The following points arise:

i) She was examined on the difficulties that the type of window she was describing would have presented to someone firing in the manner she described. Day 148/21/2 to Day 148/25/25.

ii) It is submitted that the witness would have had considerable difficulties in identifying a person with a pistol in the circumstances described.

iii) It is also clear that a person endeavouring to fire in the manner described would have had considerable difficulty.

iv) The witness would also have had considerable difficulty in identifying the popping sound at the distance of her location from block 1 of Rossville Flats, given the noise and the events in the courtyard.

v) No soldier of Mortar Platoon claims to have seen a gunman at this location. In fact, Soldier T claimed to have fired up towards a balcony in block 1 at a man throwing a bottle containing acid.

vi) When it was suggested to her that her attention might have been drawn high up to the flats of block 1, by a soldier taking aim in that direction from beneath her, she replied:

"I do not honestly remember, I do not know." Day 148/28/18 to Day 148/28/22.

vii) Her husband was standing at her side by the window and he did not see the gunman.

viii) OIRA 4 was located in the area beneath her window, from where he fired his shots. The witness did not accept it as a possibility that they were the shots that she heard. However, given her location and the sounds she heard it is probable that she was hearing the sound of OIRA 4 firing not far from her window, but out of her sight.

ix) It is submitted no other civilian or soldier claims to have seen this reported gunman.

x) Significantly no other soldier claims to have reacted to a gunman at that location.

xi) The witness can only be mistaken in her recollection.

17.10.3.3 Billy Gillespie

Peter Pringle of the Sunday Times had a note from a person claiming to have seen a gunman on the fifth floor of the Rossville Flats with an M1 carbine. This person claimed the gunman fired seven shots and three shots were returned at him by the Army. The note made at the time by Peter Pringle is as follows:

> "Story suspect and as yet unconfirmed but as far as I know we haven't had any statements from people who came out of Chamberlain Street at that end as the Army moved into the car park area. Let's face it, no-one in their right minds would have done." AG34.17

17.10.3.4 Billy Gillespie, to whom the claim was attributed, denied making it in his Eversheds statement. At AG33.4 paragraph 23, he stated that he did not see any civilians with guns that day and would not have known what an M1 carbine would have looked like. Peter Pringle gave evidence at Day 190/40/15 to Day 190/41/7. Mr Pringle's evidence was that he considered the story suspect at the time, because they had not heard as story like this and did not hear another like this. The second reason he considered the story suspect was that the firing from the flats would have been from a very exposed position. At his statement to this Inquiry at M68.255 paragraph 8, he said that there was one statement he took that did not make much sense which mentioned firing from the flats and he confirmed that it was this statement, which was attributed to Billy Gillespie.

17.10.3.5 The following issues arise:

i. As Peter Pringle pointed out, this statement was never corroborated by any other civilian witness or journalist. If authentic, it represented an account of a major engagement in the centre of the events in Rossville Flats car park.

ii. As Peter Pringle also pointed out, this firing from the flats was in a very exposed position. It was exposed to military snipers on the Walls, as well as views from the observation posts and the Embassy Ballroom. In addition none of this activity is recorded in the Brigade or Regimental Logs.

iii. The observation of the journalist at the time clearly was one of disbelief. At M68.255 paragraph 8 he said the following:

"I adopted the rule of thumb that one statement on its own required corroboration and I could find none in this instance."

iv. This story bears no relation to the reality of events in Rossville car park on the day. The story as related to Peter Pringle bears all the hallmarks of an invented account, perhaps given to impress a journalist.

17.10.3.6 No civilian witness, photographer or journalist has given eyewitness evidence to the Inquiry placing a gunman or bomber at the locations at which the soldiers discharged their shots or located their targets. This is because no such targets existed and no reliable civilian evidence refers to such a target. The overwhelming weight of civilian evidence is to the effect that the firing in the car park came from the soldiers on the waste ground and entrance to the car park and that was the direction of the shots fired into the car park.

17.10.3.7 Peter Beggin

(i) This evidence remains untested by this Inquiry. The witness reported in 1972 at M4.3 that some of the Paratroopers who had dismounted advanced across open ground towards the Rossville Flats. Perhaps three or four shots were fired as the Paratroopers ran along in front of Rossville Flats. They were not in firing positions. He did not think any of the Paratroopers near him were firing. His impression which he shared with everyone there at the time was that the shots were coming at them from the direction of the flats. The Paratroopers on open ground in front of the buildings scattered for cover too.

(ii) His Widgery testimony contained a number of caveats at WT2.6 A-B When asked were the shots fired by the soldiers he was watching he said no, they did not appear to be. The soldiers scattered very slightly but did not appear to fire at that time. He "assumed" without seeing the individual firing that they came from the direction of the flats.

(iii) In examination by Mr. Hill for the families he accepted that if soldiers in a normal military movement had taken cover they would have been out of his sight. He further accepted that not every soldier was in his sight. " Not every soldier, far from it."

(iv) The witness confirmed that he had only heard rifle fire. It was not suggested to the witness in 1972 that what he may have in fact heard was Lieutenant N's shots. This is an all probability what the witness heard.

(v) Firing at the soldiers from the direction of Rossville Flats is likely to have been a mistaken observation . It is against the weight of the civilian evidence and is inherently unlikely given the number of civilians fleeing in front of and amongst the deploying troops.

17.10.3.8 Father Bradley

In the Praxis notes at H1.65, Dennis Bradley was noted was saying that he had been told by a colleague "[another priest?]" that there was an Official gunman behind block 3 of Rossville Flats. This man may have fired but he did not know. He said his friend saw the gunman. This is of course not primary evidence of the existence of such a gunman, but the witness stated in oral evidence to this Inquiry that this was a reference to Father O'Gara.

17.10.3.9 Edward Dillon

The witness made it clear in his Evershed's statement at AD45 paragraph 5 that he had no doubt the shots he heard were fired by soldiers. He confirmed this in his oral testimony at Day 174/89/5 to Day 174/89/8. He could not pin-point in his oral testimony anything which definitely made him think there was even a possibility of the fire having come from the flats. The witness was asked about when he said that the gunfire was possibly coming from the roofs of blocks 1 and 2, could he indicate what made him think that, even as a possibility, however remote. He answered as follows:

> "No, I told you it was confusing. There was a lot of noise and a lot of echo about at that stage, you know, so I was confused at the time, regarding coming from, coming from the roof of the flats, you know, it was just a, I was not just quite sure. I cannot recall exactly why, why I would have thought that they were coming from that area, you know, because, as I say, there was quite a bit of noise or quite a bit of echo around the area." Day 174/79/14 to Day 174/80/1.

He was asked at Day 174/80/2 to Day 174/80/10 was this in response to a question or a belief he had at the time. He said it was possibly in response to a question. He was not just sure. When asked was it the case that he could pinpoint absolutely nothing definitely which made him think there was even a possibility that it could have come from the flats, he answered:

"That is correct."

17.10.3.10 It is abundantly clear on the evidence that the witness was confused in his recollection as to the source and direction of the shots on the day. The only logical conclusion on the evidence is that he heard Army firing.

17.10.3.11 Noreen Donnelly

In a NICRA statement at AD127.1 the witness reported a person saying to her to look at a man on the flats with a gun. Also she was told at about Kells Walk not to come in as the boys have guns up in the flats. It is not even clear where these alleged conversations were referring to and could not possibly form the basis of a proper submission of activity by civilian gunmen in Rossville Flats.

17.10.3.12 Patricia Jarvis.

This does not purport to constitute evidence of civilian gunman activity on 30 January 1972 at Rossville Flats. In fact the witness was quite positive in her assertion that she did not hear any shots being fired from the flats on the afternoon in question and did not remember seeing anything thrown from the windows of the flats.

17.10.3.13 Frank Lawton

In his Evershed's statement at AL6 paragraph 25, the witness described his location in his mother in law's flat on the fourth or fifth floor of block 1 looking over the car park. He heard two or three high velocity shots which he said in his previous statements appeared to come from the floors above him in block 1 of Rossville Flats. He also said in those statements that the shots were fired at the soldiers in retaliation:

"I am no longer certain that that shots came from the floors above me in block 1 or indeed were fired in reply or retaliation. The shots sounded to me at the time to come from the southeastern corner of block 1. I also thought at the time that somebody might be having a go at the Army. However, I have since learnt there is a possibility that shots were fired by the Army from the City Walls, from a position south of my mother in law's flat. It could well be that it was these shots that I heard."

The witness gave evidence on Day 389/131/10 to Day 389/135/13. He was asked was it the fact that he had learnt since that shots were fired from the City Walls on Bloody Sunday that made him uncertain. He replied as follows:

" I had my doubts about the firing from the flats anyway because the soldiers, later on they were in those flats and they were on the roof and everywhere, as far as I can remember and they did not find anybody. So with hindsight and assumption, I suppose those shots I heard probably did come from a sangar by Governor's monument on the walls. "

At Day 389/133/22 to Day 389/134/6 the witness was then asked did he see or hear shots fired in the direction of the flats. He replied "yes" as far as he could remember. He was asked did this happen after the Scaracen had picked up the bodies. He replied "no" he did not think it was although at Day 389/132/7 to Day 389/132/10 he had said it was. All this seemed to be happening at once and there was definitely shots fired above the floor he was on. He had learned a few hours after the incident about the shots at Fulvio Grimaldi. At Day 389/135/8 to Day 389/135/13 he said the following:

" .. it is very difficult to pinpoint actually where these shots did come from, because I was in a flat on a fifth floor in this position we are talking about, the sound of the position was way up to my left so it could have been coming from anywhere around that direction."

It is clear that the current evidence of the witness to this Inquiry is that although in 1972 he believed he had heard shots coming from above him in the Rossville Flats he had doubts within a very short time afterwards. The witness also made the clear point himself that it was very difficult to pinpoint where these shots came from because he was in a flat on the fifth floor.

It is submitted that the witness clearly had substantial doubts about the evidence he gave in 1972 and he held an honest but mistaken belief that the shots he heard came from the direction of the flats to his left. It is much more likely that the witness heard army fire and was attempting to place the firing he heard into the context of fast moving and confusing events.

The current evidence of this witness is such that the Inquiry ought not to conclude that this witness was correct in 1972 in placing high velocity shots fired from the location he mistakenly believed them to have been fired from in 1972.

17.10.3.14 Thomas McGlinchey

The witness gave a statement at AM249 and oral evidence to the Inquiry at Day 053. This does not purport to the evidence of the activity of IRA gunmen on the roof of the Rossville Flats either before or on Bloody Sunday. The witness was reporting something he read in newspapers that the flats had been used as a vantage point prior to Bloody Sunday.

17.10.3.15 Eunan O'Donnell

The witness gave a statement at AO28 and gave oral evidence to the Inquiry at Day 54. He had described standing at the corner of Kells Walk, when took cover from a volley of shots. Mr. Elias questioned him at Day

054/119/22 to Day 054/120/25. He was asked did he think the volley of shots came from somewhere high up, either in or on the Rossville Flats. The witness said quite clearly at Day 054/120/22 to Day 054/120/23 that "...I mean, I would never have thought they came from the top of the flats."

17.10.3.16 Observer B

The Inquiry is referred to our submissions on the status of Observer B, which appear at section 12.5.6.

17.10.3.16 Officer A/Infliction

The Inquiry is referred to our submissions on the status of Infliction which appear at 26.2.

17.10.3.18 Sunday Times working papers

S260. The Inquiry is referred to the submissions on Billy Gillespie at 19.10.3.4 above. The Sunday Times working papers referred to includes the following observation, of direct relevance to Bloody Sunday:

> "...the flats themselves are rarely used by IRA snipers for the simple reason that Army return fire would endanger too many non-combatants."

17.10.3.19 Derrick Tucker

AT16.11 contains an extract from his Widgery oral evidence. This evidence contains a question to Mr. Tucker regarding shooting from the Rossville Flats. His answer was:

"There was no shooting on that Sunday."

17.10.3.20 John Barrett

This witness is referred to in the Lawton document as seeing an OIRA Man between the gaps of Rossville Flats blocks 1 and 2. There was no suggestion that the man was armed.

17.10.3.21 Hugh Foy

This witness in his Eversheds statement at AF29.4 paragraphs 19 and 21 described the arrival of soldiers at the car park of Rossville Flats. He had the impression that the soldiers were shooting into a crowd of people in the Courtyard. There had been a gap of no more than a second or two between There were shots echoing all over the place. He clearly heard the same cracking noises as shots were fired and ,at the same time, he could recognise the sound of shots being fired in one burst from a machine gun.The machine gun seemed to be coming from the same direction as the rifle fire but from slightly further away from him perhaps from the area of waste ground to the east of Rossville Street to the east of Rossville Street near to Pilot Row. There seemed to him to be shots being fired in the area near to him and shots being fired further away from him. He was not aware of any shots being fired from block1 of the flats or shots being fired towards block 1 of the flats.The whole scene lasted no more than 30 seconds during which time there were perhaps a hundred shots which appeared to be fired, but he may have been hearing the echoes of shots.There was just one burst of machine gun fire.

(i) The witness was asked at Day 146/106/3 to Day 146/106/12 was he sure of the location where he heard automatic fire was at the junction of Rossville Street and William Street rather than at the location he had described. He answered "Now I cannot say for certain now". It is not accepted that the witness heard automatic or machine gun fire at any location on the day.

(ii) The witness' evidence of firing in the location described in his Eversheds statement is inherently unlikely.It does not accord with the civilian evidence as to gunfire in Sector 2 ON the day.It does not accord with the testimony of the soldiers of Mortar Platoon who did not indicate they were fired on by a burst of machine gun fire from their rear.

17.10.4 Role and responsibility of civilian gunmen and bombers in Sector 2

17.10.4.1 There is no credible or reliable evidence identified in the Lawton document upon which the Inquiry could rely on to find that the Army were fired on by civilian gunmen in the Rossville Flats on Bloody Sunday. Further, with the exception of OIRA 4, there were no weapons fired by civilians at the Army in Sector 2 on Bloody Sunday. In addition there were no petrol or nail bombs used against the Army in Sector 2 on Bloody Sunday. Contrary to the evidence of the soldiers of Mortar Platoon, they fired not at civilian gunmen, petrol bombers, nail bombers or acid bombers, but at innocent civilians in an unlawful and reckless manner.

17.10.5 Father Daly's Gunman.

17.10.5.1 Father Daly's gunman was seen as Jackie Duddy was about to be lifted and carried from Rossville Flats Car Park. Father Daly saw a man move along the southern gable wall of the last house on the western side of Chamberlain Street. He described the man at the time as appearing to be in his thirties and wearing a brown car coat. He suddenly appeared at the corner of this house and moved along the gable. Suddenly the man produced a small hand gun and fired two or three shots around the corner at the soldiers. Father Daly recalled that the soldiers in this area were facing the flats and were stepping out in the open from time to time. He could not recall the soldiers reacting or firing in his direction. He did not believe that they were aware of the gunman. They screamed at the gunman to go away because they were frightened that the soldiers might think that the fire was coming from where they were located. The gunman looked at them and just drifted away across or into the mouth of Chamberlain Street. H5.6 paragraph 24.

17.10.5.2 Father Daly's evidence establishes that the gunman who we now know as OIRA 4 fired his shots at a late stage in the car park certainly following the shooting of Jackie Duddy and Michael Bridge. It was after this that the group carrying Jackie Duddy's body were about to move off when he saw OIRA 4 fire. It is clear that OIRA 4's shots were fired in the direction of the soldiers in the waste ground and that the soldiers did not react to these shots in any way. They did not return fire. OIRA 4's shots did not influence the actions of the soldiers on the day in any way and had no influence on the shooting into the car park and towards the flats.

17.10.5.3 A number of witnesses to the Inquiry saw OIRA 4 fire his pistol. He can be seen in E14 004 and E14 005. OIRA 4 has made a statement to the Inquiry in which he admits to being the gunman seen by a number of witnesses although inevitably the descriptions provided by the witnesses have some variation.[32]

17.10.5.4 The witness Patrick Doherty described hearing someone shout about an Official IRA member carrying a handgun. He accepted in evidence that the incident might have happened after Jackie Duddy and Michael Bridge had been shot. Day 085/23/4 to Day 085/23/15. This witness is likely to have been reporting a conversation concerning the activity of OIRA 4 if his evidence can be considered in any way reliable.

[32] John Barry M3.5 paragraph 20; Robert Brady AB71.1 paragraph; James Donal Deeney AD26.5 paragraph 19; Francis Dunne AD173.27 paragraph 22 ; Maureen Gerke AG27.4 paragraph 16; John McCrudden AM152 paragraph 16; Brian Magee AM220.6 paragraph 27; Denis Mullan AM449.2 paragraph 13; Joseph Nicholas AM17.4 paragraph 16; Susan North M35; Patrick Walsh AW5.16 paragraph; James Norris AN20.4 paragraph 17; Thomas Wilson D84/85/4 to D84/87/7appers to have described Father Daly's gunman .It would appear Charles McLaughlin also described Father Daly's gunman at AM322.2 paragraphs 16 to 17.

17.10.5.5 Gerard Doherty gave a statement to the Inquiry at AD65.1 and a supplementary statement at AD65.17. He gave evidence at Day 400/56/19 to Day 400/58/17 and confirmed that on Bloody Sunday he seen a gunman. It was clearly OIRA 4.

17.10.5.6 William Harley gives a description of OIRA 4's activity. In his Eversheds statement at AH36.5 paragraph 30, he described the incident. He clearly made errors in the description of OIRA 4 and the number of shots fired. He was also wrong about the timing of this incident. In his evidence to the Inquiry at Day 077/29/17 to Day 077/29/23, the witness corrected the error he had made as to timing. He now accepted that the gunman fired around the corner while Jackie Duddy's body was lying on the ground.

17.10.5.7 Peter McLaughlin gave a clearly recognizable account of the incident in his statement to the Inquiry at AM352.2 paragraphs 11 to 15. He placed the gunman as firing up Chamberlain Street. However, having placed the gunman on the gable wall to the east of Chamberlain Street, after thirty years he could no longer be certain. Day 174/12/2 to Day 174/12/6. The witness was asked was it possible that he saw the same gunman as his father, Charles McLaughlin, who had described seeing the gunman fire several live shots towards the waste ground. He replied at Day 174/12/1: "It is possible." This is clearly a description of OIRA 4 and the witness has accepted it was possible he was firing in the direction of the waste ground.

17.10.5.8 Frank Lawton gave evidence to the Inquiry on Day 389. He gave an account to the Inquiry of seeing a gunman firing up Chamberlain Street. Mr. Lawton had not mentioned the gunman in his 1972 statement or in his statement to the Inquiry at AL6. He did give a Praxis interview the notes of which appear at O8.1 to O8.2. He had described an elderly man with long raincoat and flat cap running about and having fired a hand gun as far a he could see along the street where the soldiers came down. He did place this incident after the shooting of Jackie Duddy. He described seeing four or five shots fired along the street and the man then disappeared. There are differences in the detail of the description between the age of the man and that of OIRA 4 as well as OIRA 4's evidence that he was not wearing a flat cap. In addition he described the man as firing up Chamberlain Street significantly though there is a further Praxis Note O8.13 which reads as follows; "... Duddy carried away, gunman ran along wall pulled out pistol... fired at troops stopped by three people thrown against wall and "admonished". Could have been a point 22 or even a starting pistol". This description attributed to the witness is clearly a description of the actions of OIRA 4. If this is the case the overwhelming evidence is that OIRA 4 fired towards the mouth of the car park and not up Chamberlain Street. The witness agreed with Counsel for the soldiers that the man he saw fired up Chamberlain Street yet at Day 389/142/21 to Day 389/144/11 the witness agreed with the proposition advanced by Counsel for OIRA 4 that it could be right that the movements and actions of the man he saw accorded with the movements and actions of OIRA 4.

17.10.5.9 However he changed his position again to Counsel to the Inquiry that the man fired up Chamberlain Street. At the very least the witness could only be described as wholly unsure which direction he saw the gunman point his weapon or fire.

17.10.5.10 The Lawton document refers to a socialist worker pamphlet by Eamonn McCann at T9 which included information that a member of the Official IRA fired a point 38 revolver into Chamberlain Street after seeing Jackie Duddy shot. It is clear in the context of the Evershed's statement at AM77.6 paragraph 34 of Eamonn McCann and his evidence at Day 87/40/1 to Day 87/44/25 that the author was referring to the man known as Father Daly's gunman . At L236 is an article in the Sunday Tribune the individual concerned is quoted as follows: " I drew the gun and edged along the wall and fired either two or three shots towards the Paras in the Rossville Street vicinity." This version clearly accords with the bulk of the civilian evidence and the evidence of Father Daly himself as to where the gunman fired. OIRA 4 has confirmed he fired in the direction of the waste ground.

17.10.5.11 Given the fact that Chamberlain Street at that stage had army personnel and at least one vehicle in it there is no report from the soldiers of an engagement or a sighting of a man with a pistol at that location. It appears overwhelmingly likely that the reports of a man firing a pistol up Chamberlain Street are simply versions of sightings of OIRA 4 and his activities.[33]

17.10.5.12 Bernard Gilmore at AG38.4 paragraph 24 described a man with a gun firing a few shots along Chamberlain Street whilst the soldiers were coming down in that direction. At Day 88/14/18 to Day 88/14/23 he was asked which hand the man had the gun in when he was firing some shots along Chamberlain Street. He answered that if the man was firing up Chamberlain Street it was his left but if he was firing at the waste ground it was his right. He could not remember which he was firing at. At Day 88/15/21 to Day 88/15/23 the witness said that there was only one man there at that wall at that time so he assumed that he must have been firing at the waste ground.

17.11 Missing casualties

17.11.1 There were no unaccounted for missing casualties in Sector 2. All persons killed and wounded in Sector 2 were accounted for. The people who were shot were not gunmen or bombers, but the innocent civilians who have been accounted for.

[33] The enhanced photographs E14 004,E14005 show clearly the location and direction of OIRA 4's activity which he described at AOIRA4.18 as shooting in a westerly direction towards the Scaracen and the Paras near the Scaracen.

17.11.2 As is the case in other sectors the issue of so-called missing casualties is a distortion of the reality of events on the ground and a diversion from the reality that the casualties on Bloody Sunday have long been accounted for. The document submitted by the legal representatives of the soldiers at OS7.36, places a "missing casualty" in the Rossville Flats car park based on the evidence of John McIntyre. At AM286.3 paragraph 16 he had described a young man sprawled on tarmac with no one attending him. The witness gave evidence on Day 92/150/3 to Day 92/150/23 and his unchallenged evidence was that he believed this person to be Jackie Duddy.

17.12 Conclusions

17.12.1 Shortly after 4.15pm on the 30th January 1972, a convoy of soldiers from Support Company entered the Bogside. Soldiers P, U and 017 of Mortar Platoon debussed to the western side of Rossville Street. The rest of Mortar Platoon in Sergeant O's Pig and Lieutenant N's Pig debussed on the eastern side of Rossville Street. Lieutenant N's Pig ended up on the waste ground and Sergeant O's Pig at the mouth of the Rossville Flats car park.

17.12.2 Alana Burke was knocked down by Sergeant O's Pig as they entered the Rossville Flats car park. Lieutenant N debussed from his Pig and fired shots above the heads of civilians at Eden Place.

17.12.3 The soldiers of Mortar Platoon, on debussing, engaged in a series of unlawful and unprovoked physical assaults on civilians. Soldiers of Mortar Platoon also engaged in the reckless and wholly unwarranted misuse of rubber bullet guns on the waste ground and in the courtyard of Rossville Flats.

17.12.4 Soldiers of Mortar Platoon wounded Peggy Derry and then murdered Jackie Duddy in the car park of Rossville Flats. They then wounded Michael Bridge and Michael Bradley. Patsy McDaid was then injured by a doctored rubber bullet.

17.12.5 Soldiers of Mortar Platoon engaged in unlawful and reckless shooting into the car park of Rossville Flats and at the flats themselves. They did not come under attack from gunmen, petrol bombers or nail bombers. They were not attacked by acid bombs. There was no action by any person towards the soldiers, which could have been perceived as posing a threat such as to justify the use of lethal force.

17.12.6 The deceased and wounded were unarmed when shot and no action taken by any of the deceased or wounded justified the use of live rounds or the use of lethal force.

17.12.7 Role and responsibility of soldiers of Mortar Platoon in Sector 2

17.12.7.1 Lt. N

It is alleged as follows:

i) At the time of Bloody Sunday, Lt. N was mentally unstable and was unfit to be serving as an Army officer on active duty in Northern Ireland.

ii) Whether or not he was mentally stable, he was an inadequate officer with insufficient experience to be entrusted with the responsibility of leading the entire body of Support Company into the Bogside to carry out an arrest operation in the midst of a dispersing crowd.

iii) He failed to take any or adequate steps to acquire sufficient understanding of the conditions in Derry and the Bogside in particular.

iv) He failed to take any or adequate steps to obtain clear guidance and instructions about the purpose of the operation to be undertaken by his battalion; his own role and that of his platoon; any restrictions and constraints imposed on the operation, concerning in particular the geographical limits of their deployment, the use of their firearms and their contingency plans in the event of gunfire of any kind; and the likelihood of coming under fire.

v) He failed to give any or adequate briefing to the members of his platoon concerning these matters and, if anything, permitted or encouraged them to believe that they were likely to come under sniper fire, that they ought to adopt aggressive tactics, that they ought to cock their rifles before debussing and that they were free to respond to any real or perceived threat by firing at civilians rather than disengaging in an orderly fashion.

vi) Instead of stopping at the junction of William Street and Rossville Street when he realised that the rioters has dispersed into the Bogside, he led the entire convoy into a situation in which soldiers were bound to and did debus and deploy in the middle of dispersing crowds.

vii) The upshot of the circumstances described was that the mostly young, relatively inexperienced, over-aggressive members of his platoon deployed in an unfamiliar, unfriendly environment in a heightened state of tension under a misapprehension about the nature of the threat facing them while straining at the leash to teach the Bogsiders a lesson with their rifles cocked and ready to use lethal force on the slightest pretext.

viii) When his platoon debussed, he exercised no supervision or control of any kind over his men at any stage during the material events even when it was obvious that they were shooting at innocent civilians.

ix) Virtually his first act on debussing was to fire, in breach of the Yellow Card, at or above the heads of civilians, thereby encouraging his own men and other soldiers in the vicinity to open fire on civilians.

x) The shots he fired at Eden Place were the first shots he heard after the paratroopers entered the Bogside. Whether his shots were construed by others soldiers as hostile fire or Army fire, they were apparently interpreted by some as a "green light" to open fire.

xi) Lt N was asked whether he had fired in panic or as an overreaction but the more obvious explanation is that, since he had fired "warning shots" before without any "fuss" being made about it, he simply believed that he could shoot at or above the heads of civilians with impunity, an attitude he is likely to have shared with or even encouraged among the men under his command.

xii) By the time he turned his attention to the Rossville Flats courtyard, it is likely that Peggy Deery and Jackie Duddy had already been shot. However, far from calling a ceasefire or seeking to restrain his subordinates, he himself shot Michael Bridge when he clearly posed no threat and was doing nothing more than protesting about the shooting of Jackie Duddy. Insofar as Lt. N was leading by example, he thereby further encouraged soldiers from his platoon to continue firing without justification at unarmed civilians, intending to kill such civilians and reckless as to the possibility of killing or wounding others in the process.

xiii) He then personally supervised the removal from the rubble barricade of the bodies of Michael McDaid, John Young and Willie Nash in a manner that was callously disrespectful and insensitive.

xiv) Following the shootings, he covered up his and his men's criminal behaviour by inventing accounts of nail bombers and gunmen while pretending not to have noticed any shooting by his own men.

xv) As leader of the platoon whose members shot dead Jackie Duddy and wounded Peggy Deery, Patrick McDaid, Michael Bridge, and Michael Bradley, Lt N bears a personal responsibility for murdering Jackie Duddy and causing grievous bodily harm to Peggy Deery, Patrick McDaid, Michael Bridge and Michael Bradley.

17.12.7.2 Sergeant O

Sergeant O was a religiously sectarian, anti-Irish racist who, as the senior NCO in the platoon, was largely responsible for permitting and fostering within Mortar Platoon a culture of racist hostility towards Irish Catholic civilians superimposed on a tolerance of an over-aggressive, trigger-happy attitude among paratroopers when dealing with public disorder.

i) He regarded his involvement in Derry as an opportunity to "sort out" Catholic civilians. He saw no distinction between rioters and marchers.

ii) In breach of the Yellow Card, Sergeant O cocked his rifle in the Pig even before going through Barrier 12 and he thereby encouraged all the men in his Pig to do likewise.

iii) As commander of his Pig, he either caused or permitted the driver to knock down Alana Burke as they entered the Rossville Flats courtyard.

iv) Even though Lt N's Pig turned back towards Eden Place, Sergeant O took his Pig right into the courtyard of Rossville Flats.

v) Leading his men by example, he debussed and immediately started clubbing innocent civilians with his rifle.

vi) Shortly after debussing, he began to start firing without justification at civilians.

vii) He exercised no supervision or control over his men and did not even see it as part of his responsibility to monitor the firing by other soldiers.

viii) His accounts of his own firing and that of his men are false.

ix) Bearing in mind his prominent location beside his Pig, he must have been aware of the involvement of his men in shooting Jackie Duddy, Peggy Deery, Patsy McDaid, Michael Bridge and Michel Bradley.

x) Since his account of his own extensive shooting is demonstrably false, he may personally have shot one or more of those who were killed or wounded in the Rossville Flats courtyard.

xi) Whether he personally shot any of the victims, his role both as senior NCO in the platoon and in the way he conducted himself on the ground, renders him at least jointly responsible for the murder of Jackie Duddy and the wounding of Peggy Deery, Michel Bradley, Michael Bridge and Patsy McDaid.

xii) He covered up his own and his men's criminal conduct by fabricating accounts of civilian gunfire and petrol bombing and falsely denying that he witnessed any improper shooting by any of his men.

17.12.7.3 Corporal 162

i) It is apparent from the interviews that this soldier clearly gave to Neil Davies of Praxis that he and other soldiers had "almost a free hand" and could "get away with murder" in Northern Ireland.

ii) It is also apparent from the Praxis transcripts that, contrary to his denials, he did see other members of his Platoon firing and saw some of them firing from the hip.

iii) Even though there is no evidence that he fired himself, he failed to exercise any supervision or control over any of his subordinates.

iv) It was probably Corporal 162 who struck William Doherty in the face with the butt of his rifle following his arrest.

v) He also covered up the criminal conduct of members of his Platoon by inventing accounts of automatic fire and denying that he had seen other soldiers' fire.

17.12.7.4 Lance Corporal V

i) Lance Corporal V probably shot Jackie Duddy. He did so without any justification.

ii) He failed to exercise any supervision or control over his subordinates even though he was in a position to witness the shooting by other soldiers.

iii) He was one of the two soldiers who assaulted Charles McMonagle.

iv) In order to cover up his own murder of Jackie Duddy and the unlawful shooting by other members of his Platoon, he fabricated accounts of hostile civilian activity and falsely denied seeing other members of his Platoon shooting at civilians.

v) He altered his own false account of the shooting in order to conceal that he had, by his own admission, murdered a civilian.

17.12.7.5 Private S

i) Soldier S fired at least 12 shots. He claimed not to recall the shots but deferred to his 1972 statements which, by his own admission, were false.

ii) It is therefore impossible to know whether he was responsible for any of the casualties in the Rossville Flats courtyard but since he fired at least 12 shots and a number of these were probably fired from the hip, he may very well have been personally responsible for shooting one or more of the civilians hit in that area or indeed Patrick Campbell in Sector 5 through the gap between Blocks 1 and 2.

iii) He also lied in an attempt to justify the shooting and cover up the criminal conduct of other members of his Platoon. In particular, he invented an account of seeing a civilian gunman, in support of Sergeant O's account of firing at such a gunman.

17.12.7.6 Private Q

i) After Lance Corporal V, Private Q is the soldier most likely to have shot Jackie Duddy. He fired without any justification.

ii) He invented accounts of hearing low velocity fire and of a nail bomber in the courtyard.

17.12.7.7 Private INQ 1918

i) Private INQ 1918 claimed to have fired no shots.

ii) Despite the clear evidence that he was in close proximity to Lt N, he claimed to have been unaware of Lt N's firing and falsely claimed to have no memory of anything to do with Bloody Sunday.

iii) He is identified by Jeffery Morris as having been one of the two paratroopers who forced him against a wall, put a rifle across his neck and kicked him on the thigh. He was also seen by Mr Morris to hit Duncan Clarke on the head with his rifle butt.

17.12.7.8 Private 019

i) Private 019 does not appear to have fired any shots.

ii) However, he made up false accounts of hearing civilian gunfire in order to justify the shootings by others.

iii) Although he denied it, he was obviously the source of the Praxis interviews in which he discussed the paratroopers' involvement in dirty tactics, "set- up situations", murdering civilians and fabricating evidence as well as giving an account of Lt N firing first and suggesting that he had "lost it".

iv) He may have been the soldier who fired his baton gun at point blank range at both William Doherty and Duncan Clarke.

17.12.7.9 Private 112

i) Private 112 was armed with a baton gun and claims not to have fired any live rounds.

ii) He invented accounts of hearing Thompson submachine gunfire and low velocity fire.

iii) He denied seeing any soldiers opening fire.

iv) By his own admission, he fired his baton gun indiscriminately at the crowd on the waste ground after he debussed.

v) He made a false statement claiming that he had arrest Eamonn McAteer after having seen him throwing stones in Rossville Street.

17.12.7.10 Private R

i) Private R is a possible candidate for shooting either Jackie Duddy or one of those who were wounded in the courtyard.

ii) In order to conceal his own and his Platoon's criminal conduct, he invented accounts of hearing high and low velocity incoming fire including Thompson submachine gun fire and seeing a nailbomber whom he claimed to shoot.

iii) In particular, he made a false statement purporting to support Sergeant O.

17.12.7.11 Private INQ 1579

i) As the driver of Sergeant O's Pig, Private INQ 1579 was responsible for knocking down Thomas Harkin and Alana Burke. He claimed to fire no shots himself.

ii) He falsely claimed to have heard incoming fire and to have smelt petrol and acid.

17.12.7.12 Soldier 006

i) Soldier 006 was the only member of Mortar Platoon prepared to say that he neither saw nor heard any civilians engaged in any attack on soldiers in the form of shooting or bombing of any kind. The only gunfire he heard was that of Army SLR's.

ii) He was involved in arresting William Dillon and was one of the soldiers who picked up the bodies on the Rubble Barricade. His role as well as that of the other arresting Soldiers and allegations in respect of those arrests have been examined at section 17.9.

17.12.7.13 Private INQ 768

i) Private INQ 768 claims not to have fired any shots.

ii) However he also was involved in covering up misconduct of other members of his Platoon claiming to have heard a short burst of incoming automatic fire and claiming not to have seen any soldier firing, even though he was within yards of S, T, R and Q.

17.12.7.14 Private 013

i) Private 013 was a baton gunner and claimed not to have fired any live rounds.

ii) He probably fired the baton round which struck Patsy McDaid. As such, it was probably he who modified the baton round in order to cause maximum injury.

iii) He fired his baton gun indiscriminately, including a number of rounds at windows in Rossville Flats.

iv) He also invented an account of hearing incoming fire.

v) This witnesses attended at Central Hall Westminster to give evidence but refused to do so, apparently citing medical reasons which had not previously been suggested.

17.12.7.15 Private T

i) Private T claimed to have shot at an acid bomber on a balcony in Block 1. Nobody in that location was shot. He too claimed to have heard civilian shooting.

17.12.8 Conclusion

17.12.8.1 With the exception of Soldier 006, the soldiers of 1 Para, identified in these submissions perverted the course of justice, individually and collectively, by concealing the criminal behaviour of their colleagues in Support Company and ensuring they would evade prosecution for their crimes. Those who gave dishonest evidence on oath also committed perjury.

APPENDIX 4 - SECTOR 2 SOLDIERS' EVIDENCE
TABLE 4 - POSSIBLE ORDER OF SHOTS FIRED[1]

Soldier	Towards	Shots	Remarks
Lt N	Eden Place	3	N heard no shots before his own. He fired soon after debussing from Pig 1. Pig 2 had been delayed by stopping on Rossville Street and soldiers from that pig appear to have debussed in the car park after those in Pig 1.
S	Junction of Blocks 1 & 2	12	S said he fired after O had fired. But if (a) Peggy Deery was shot by a soldier from Pig 1, (b) N's one shot into the ca rpark hit Michael Bridge and (c) V's one shot into the car park hit Jackie Duddy, this would leave S as the only other shooter from Pig 1. If he hit Peggy Deery with 1 of his 12 shots, he was the first to fire a shot that caused an injury.
V	Car park	1	Trajectory matches Jackie Duddy, who was probably the second person hit.
R	Car park near Block 1	1	R said that he fired before O, which would mean he was the first in Pig 2 to fire.
[illegible]	Car park	1	N claimed to have hit his victim in the thigh, which sounds like Michael Bridge and we know that he was shot shortly after Jackie Duddy.
Q	Alleyway between Blocks 2 & 3	1	Q says that, although they were thinning out, there were still groups of people in the car park when he fired.
O	Behind Cortina at Block 3	3	These were O's first shots and came after R's first shot.
	Block 3 balcony	3	These were fired shortly after O's first burst of shots

18. SECTOR 3

18.1. Introduction & Summary of Submissions

18.1.1 A convoy of soldiers from Support Company entered the Bogside on Bloody Sunday having driven through Barrier 12, across William Street and down Rossville Street. The convoy was led by the 2 Pigs occupied by soldiers from Mortar Platoon and these Pigs were followed in turn by: Major Loden's command vehicle; the Ferret car; the 2 empty Pigs of Machine-Gun Platoon; the soft-skinned lorries occupied by Composite Platoon and bringing up the rear the 2 Pigs of Anti-Tank Platoon.

18.1.2 While the majority of Mortar Platoon debussed when their Pigs came to a halt in the waste ground: after they entered the Bogside and before the Pigs came to a complete halt, Sergeant O's Pig stopped momentarily on Rossville Street at the end of Pilot Row and 5 members of Mortar Platoon de-bussed. These were Corporal P, Private 017, Private U, Private R and Private 006. Of these, Private R followed his Pig into the Rossville Flats car park and his involvement in the events of the day relates exclusively to Sector 2. Corporal P, Private 017, Private U and Private 006 were involved in Sector 3 and between them Corporal P and Private U fired 10 live rounds in Sector 3.

18.1.3 After the vehicles in Mortar Platoon stopped in the waste ground, Major Loden's command vehicle stopped in the middle of Rossville Street in an exposed position and the remainder of the convoy stopped behind him. Despite the fact that they brought up the rear soldiers from Anti-Tank Platoon were among the first to de-bus after Mortar Platoon. They de-bussed at a location just beyond the Rossville Street, William Street junction and P1116 shows Anti-Tank Platoon soldiers taking shelter in the lee of derelict buildings at the top of Rossville Street, prior to moving up the west side of Rossville Street.

18.1.4 The Composite Platoon consisted of 36 men and travelled in two Bedford 4 tonne soft skinned lorries. Each lorry comprised one half platoon. The first lorry comprised the half platoon known as Call Sign 71, commanded by Captain 200 who was in overall command of the unit and also two Colour Sergeants, Colour Sergeant INQ 147 and Colour Sergeant INQ 1318. Call Sign 71 debussed in the lee of the buildings at the north end of Rossville Street on the eastern side of the road. The second lorry contained the other half platoon known as Call Sign 71 Alpha, commanded by Colour Sergeant 002. Call Sign 71 Alpha debussed immediately behind the first lorry at the corner of Rossville Street and William Street. The ABC footage at V48/12.43 to 12.53 shows Composite Platoon's position when they debussed.

18.1.5 Upon debussing Captain 200 sought advice from Major Loden in respect of how his platoon should be deployed. He was instructed to "Go and assist the Mortar Platoon" B2002E. Whilst Captain 200 was receiving his orders, Composite Platoon remained positioned at the lorries and buildings at that location and were "leapfrogged" by Anti-Tank platoon who advanced south to Kells Walk. 200 then deployed his troops away from the buildings. Call Sign 71 remained under his direct command. They deployed east to assist the Mortar Platoon in Sector 2 and then advanced across Eden Place, along the rear of the houses of Chamberlain Street and finally ended up near Block1.

18.1.7 A further section of Composite Platoon remained at the north end of Rossville Street and dealt with civilians who had been arrested

18.1.8 After speaking to Major Loden for a second time whilst at the north end of Block1, Captain 200 deployed Call Sign 71 back across to the west side of Rossville Street at Kells Walk and into the Columbcille Court area B1981, B1987, B2007 and B2022.008 paragraph 47. Some members of Composite Platoon, including Private C, Lance Corporal D and Private 024 took up position on the veranda at Kells Walk at a very late stage in the events.

18.1.9 As Support Company entered the Bogside, advancing beyond the junction of William Street, Rossville Street, civilians had run for cover. Some moved into the Rossville Street car-park, where they sought shelter in the Flats. Many others had run down Rossville Street where on the east-side of Rossville Street they either sought shelter in entrance to Block 1 of the Rossville Flats or behind Block 2. On the west side of Rossville Street they moved into the area of Columbcille Court or sought cover behind the Rubble Barricade.

18.1.10 Upon reaching the Rubble Barricade, many civilians stopped believing that the Barricade represented a position of relative safety, a secure vantage point from which people could observe the soldiers. By the time the Support Company vehicles had come to a halt, approximately 40-50 civilians were taking shelter behind the Rubble Barricade and in a scene represented by EP27.6 there was a large gap between the majority of civilians standing at the Rubble Barricade and the soldiers who had debussed with little or nothing happening.

18.1.11 However that sense of security was shattered within seconds as Corporal P, Private U and soldiers from Anti-Tank Platoon fired over the Rubble Barricade. Michael Kelly was the first person shot and killed He was killed by Soldier F, his death followed swiftly by the deaths of Michael McDaid, John Young and William Nash. All 4 were shot while behind the Rubble Barricade on the Glenfada Park side of the Barricade. Hugh Gilmore was shot and killed while running away from soldiers down the east side of Rossville Street. Kevin McElhinney was killed some time later while crawling away, in all probability shot by a member of Composite Platoon, at a point in time after Anti-Tank Platoon had advanced down Rossville Street from the low wall at Kells Walk and when at least some members of Anti-Tank Platoon were in Glenfada Park North.[1]

18.1.12 The order in which Michael McDaid, John Young and William Nash were killed has not been definitively established, nor has it been possible to establish the precise location at which they were killed. It will be submitted that the objective evidence demonstrates that they were killed while on the Glenfada Park side of the Rubble Barricade, at the edge of the footpath, very close to the spot where Michael Kelly was killed.[2]

18.1.13 The civilian evidence on this topic has been confused because civilians testify to a sustained volley of fire over the Rubble Barricade which caused them to run for their lives from the Rubble Barricade into Glenfada Park and towards the Rossville Flats. It was only upon reaching the relative safety of those locations that people realised that there were three young men dead on the Barricade. Civilians also testify to their inability to go to the bodies, to offer help or comfort because soldiers continued firing over the Barricade meaning that to offer assistance or succour to these three young men was to face certain death.

18.1.14 6 young men died at the Rubble Barricade, with Alex Nash injured at a later stage. However, in sharp contrast to the testimony of civilians

[1] See Video 48

[2] This will be dealt with in more detail below, however in summary we make this submission on the basis of the following evidence. The video evidence which shows Alex Nash, the photographic evidence which shows the location of the Pig which eventually removed the bodies and the testimony who described sustained shooting over the Rubble Barricade, soldiers claim to have fired only 12 shots over the Rubble Barricade which could have claimed the lives of these men.[3] Moreover of those 12 shots, 4 were claimed by Composite Platoon, one of whom undoubtedly killed Kevin McElhinney, at a point in time after Anti-Tank Platoon had left Rossville Street. It will be our contention that the evidence supports the conclusion that Sergeant K murdered Kevin McElhinney. By this time the Barricade had been cleared, with Michael Kelly's body having been removed to Glenfada Park North, Hugh Gilmore's body lying behind Block 2 of the Rossville Flats and Michael McDaid, John Young and William Nash lying dead on the Barricade.

18.1.15 However even these 12 shots do not explain the killings. Corporal P fired two shots at a nail-bomber, on Rossville Street in the direction of the Rubble Barricade, he claims that one of those shots the nail bomber who was on Rossville Street near an alleyway and not behind the Rubble Barricade.[4] He fired 4 shots at a man he claims was firing a pistol from behind the Rubble Barricade, but he claims to have hit the barricade once and the man 3 times. This could account for the death of one of John Young, Michael McDaid or William Nash except for the fact that none of these men was hit 3 times. Private U fired 1 shot from the north of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats at a man who he claimed had fired 2 pistol shots from the east pavement of Rossville Street, south of Block 1. This shooting could account for the death of Hugh Gilmore, although there is a possibility that Hugh Gilmore was hit twice. L/Corporal F eventually admitted to having fired a shot from behind the low wall at Kells Walk at a man behind the Rubble Barricade, who of civilians and the soldiers who removed the bodies to the effect that all three men fell at the same location and at the same time.

[3] While a total of 30 shots were fired in Sector 3 the majority of those shots, if the soldiers account is to be believed, cannot account for the deceased and wounded in Sector 3, either they were fired down alleyways, at windows in the Rossville Flats or over the heads of the crowd.

[4] This account is based on his statement to the Treasury Solicitor and his trajectory photograph. In his account to the RMP, with the attached map, the nail-bomber was at a different location.

he claims was attempting to throw what he believed to be a nail bomb. We know that L/Corporal F is responsible for the killing of Michael Kelly because his bullet was removed from Michael Kelly's body. Corporal E fired 1 shot from the low wall at Kells Walk at an alleged sniper in Block 1 of the Rossville Flats, again it is possible that Hugh Gilmore was the victim of that shooting. L/Corporal J fired 1 shot from the low wall at Kells Walk at someone he claimed to have believed to be throwing a nail bomb, however he claims to have missed his target, thus accounting for none of the deaths. Sergeant K, Private L and Private M all claim to have seen 2 men 'leopard crawling' towards the doors of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats and carrying weapons. There are significant discrepancies between their accounts of this event which will be dealt with in more detail below. They claim to have fired 4 shots between them from Kells Walk at one or other of these men. One of these shots certainly claimed the life of Kevin McElhinney.

18.1.16 There were further shots fired in Sector 3. Soldier P claims to have fired shots over the heads of a crowd on Rossville Street, however on his account these could not have claimed the lives of those killed behind the Barricade. Lance Corporal F and Private G claim to have fired shots in Rossville Street in the direction of the Flats after they had left Glenfada Park North but this was at a point when all of those behind the Barricade had been killed. To similar effect Private C and Lance Corporal D claim to have fired shots down Rossville Street, from their evidence this shooting occurred at a time when all of the victims were dead and injured.

18.1.17 Therefore on the soldiers' accounts Soldier F, eventually, accounted for the death of Michael Kelly, whom he undoubtedly killed. Private U or Private G could account for the death of Hugh Gilmore. Only Corporal P and Lance Corporal J fired the shots which could have resulted in the deaths of Michael McDaid, John Young and William Nash. However, their accounts cannot be accepted in their entirety because Soldier P claims to have hit 1 person 3 times while Soldier J claims to have missed his target. One of Sergeant K, Private L or Private M is undoubtedly responsible for the death of Kevin McElhinney.

18.1.18 Therefore, not only is the soldiers' account of 12 shots at the material time and location, entirely inconsistent with civilian testimony, it fails to account for the known deaths at the Rubble Barricade. If the soldiers' account was to be accepted, it would mean that at least two of the young men, John Young, Michael McDaid and William Nash were not in fact killed. Even disregarding the body of civilian evidence, the soldiers' accounts cannot be believed. Their accounts fail entirely to explain the deaths behind the Rubble Barricade.

18.1.19 Soldiers have sought to justify their use of lethal force by claiming that they came under attack by gunmen and bombers located behind the Rubble Barricade. These accounts are completely undermined by the lack of a single shred of objective supporting evidence. No soldier in Sector 3 sustained any injury as a result of the alleged gunfire or bombings. If the soldiers' account was to be accepted Sector 3 was awash with unexploded nail bombs. Nor, despite the large number of photographers positioned on Rossville Street and behind the Rubble Barricade, can soldiers point to a single photograph, a single video clip, or a single piece of objective evidence which lends support to their case that persons behind the Rubble Barricade were involved in the use of weapons of any kind.

18.1.20 However, that is to deal with the account of each individual soldier taken in isolation. The soldiers' account collapses entirely when their accounts are read as a body of evidence. When one examines the testimony of soldiers, standing shoulder to shoulder, as on their account they came under hostile fire from the direction of the Rubble Barricade, their case is riddled with inconsistencies. The accounts given by the soldiers who admit firing over the Rubble Barricade are not corroborated in material respects by other soldiers. Where one soldier sees a nail-bomber, another sees a man with a rifle and a third sees a man with a pistol. Whereas for those soldiers who did not fire live rounds and were standing beside the shooters - the nail bombers, petrol bombers and gunmen shot by their colleagues were invisible and silent - for the large part unseen and unheard by those who did not have to justify the firing of live rounds. The soldiers' accounts are inconsistent with each other in virtually all material respects and do not provide support or justification for even the limited firing which is admitted at the location at which 6 young men died.

18.1.21 This may be the reason why soldiers who fired over the Rubble Barricade, and particularly the soldiers of Anti-Tank Platoon, have been struck by collective amnesia. What is clear is that soldiers from Mortar Platoon and Anti-Tank Platoon in particular, fired more shots over the Rubble Barricade than they have accounted for, and that the shooting over the Rubble Barricade which left 6 young men dead was unjustified and unlawful. Moreover as this Inquiry concludes not a single soldier who fired live rounds, or who witnessed the firing of live rounds in Rossville Street has given a truthful account about the circumstances in which Michael Kelly, Michael McDaid, John Young, William Nash, Hugh Gilmore and Kevin McElhinney were murdered on Bloody Sunday.

18.1.22 In our submission, the material events that occurred in Sector 3 can be summarised as follows:

(i) Sergeant O's Pig stopped momentarily in the waste ground and 5 soldiers dismounted, 4 of those remained on Rossville Street and were involved in the events of Sector 3.

(ii) Corporal P and Private 017 crossed Rossville Street to the west side and positioned themselves in front of the low wall at Kells Walk and advanced towards the Rubble Barricade. They had no cover from the Rubble barricade or the Rossville Flats.

(iii) Soldiers from Anti-Tank Platoon de-bussed and moved down the west side of Rossville Street, initially moving in front of the low wall and then positioned themselves behind the Kells Walk wall.

(iv) Some civilians at the Rubble Barricade shouted abuse at soldiers and threw stones, albeit that because of the distance of the Rubble Barricade from the soldiers there was no prospect of their hitting any soldier. No action by the crowd at the Rubble Barricade posed a threat to soldiers, nor could it have been perceived by them as posing a threat. The majority of civilians stood around talking and watching the soldiers until the first shots were fired. Soldiers were not attacked with gunfire, nail bombs or petrol bombs from the Rubble Barricade.

(v) Corporal P and Soldiers from Anti-Tank Platoon, including, but not confined to Lance Corporal F and Lance Corporal J, opened fire over the Rubble Barricade.

(vi) The evidence suggests that the first two shots fired over the Rubble Barricade were fired by Soldier P shooting from the hip. These shots did not cause any casualties.

(vii) Michael Kelly was the first person to be shot and killed behind the Rubble Barricade. He was killed by Soldier F, he was unarmed when killed and no one around him was doing anything which could have led Lance Corporal F to believe his life was threatened by anyone positioned behind the Rubble Barricade.

(viii) Michael Kelly's body was removed from the Rubble Barricade and taken into Glenfada Park North.

(ix) As Michael Kelly was being attended to, Michael McDaid, John Young and William Nash had been shot and killed. They were shot and killed by either Corporal P or Corporal E, Lance Corporal F,Private G, Private H or Lance Corporal J from Anti-Tank Platoon. They were unarmed when killed and no one around them was doing anything which could have led the soldiers who murdered them to believe their life was threatened by the actions of any person positioned behind the Rubble Barricade. There followed sustained shooting over the Rubble Barricade as a result of which civilians at the southern gable end of the eastern block of Glenfada Park North were unable to reach the Deceased.

(x) Hugh Gilmore was shot in the back as he ran down the east side of Rossville Street by Private U or a soldier from Anti-Tank Platoon. He was unarmed and running away when killed. Neither Hugh Gilmore himself nor anyone around him was engaged in activity which could have led the soldier/s who shot and killed him to believe that their life was in danger.

(xi) Anti-Tank Platoon moved forward from the low wall at Kells Walk into the alleyway leading to Glenfada Park North. They all left Rossville Street and some or all of them went into Glenfada Park North. In making their way to Glenfada Park North, they were completely exposed to the Rubble Barricade and the Rossville Flats from where they had claimed to be under fire.

(xii) Soldiers from Composite Platoon made their way to the low wall at Kells Walk, some positioning themselves behind the low wall and some positioning themselves on the pram way.

(xiii) One of Sergeant K, Private L or Private M shot and killed Kevin McElhinney as he crawled towards the entrance to Block 1 of the Rossville Flats seeking shelter. Kevin McElhinney was shot from behind, he was unarmed when killed and even on their own account the soldiers were under no threat from any person when Kevin McElhinney was murdered.

(xiv) Alex Nash went to the body of William Nash and sought help from the soldiers, he was shot by a solider as he held his dying son.

(xv) Anti-Tank Platoon returned from Glenfada Park North and while positioned in their vehicle Lance Corporal F and Lance Corporal G fired shots at a window in the Rossville Flats from which Fulvio Grimaldi was taking photographs.

(xvi) One of the Mortar Platoon Pigs was sent up Rossville Street and the bodies of John Young, Michael McDaid and William Nash were thrown into the back of the Pig. The soldiers handling the bodies showed no respect for the deceased and the bodies were loaded into the Pig one on top of the other. Priests and first aid personnel were subsequently denied access to the bodies when the Pig left the Rubble Barricade and was parked in the waste ground.

(xvii) Private C and Lance Corporal D fired shots down Rossville Street at the ambulances removing the deceased and injured.

18.1.23 In our submission the evidence supports the following conclusions:

(i) The deceased and injured in Sector 3, including Alex Nash, were shot by members of 1 Para Support Company from Mortar Platoon, Anti-Tank Platoon and Composite Platoon.

(ii) All of the Deceased and Injured on Sector 3 were unarmed when shot.

(iii) They were shot deliberately – not accidentally – and without justification.

(iv) None of the deceased or injured had handled a gun or a bomb at any time on Bloody Sunday. None of the deceased or injured had acted in support of any person handling or using a gun or bomb on Bloody Sunday.

(v) None of the deceased or injured was doing anything, at the time they were shot, which would have led the soldiers responsible for the shooting to believe that they posed a threat of any kind to their lives or the lives of their colleagues.

(vi) None of the deceased and injured was in the vicinity of civilian gunmen or bombers when shot. Nothing was taking place in the vicinity of the deceased or injured at the time when they were shot which would have led the soldiers to believe that their lives or those of their colleagues were at risk.

(vii) There were no weapons behind the Rubble Barricade.

(viii) None of the deceased or injured was shot in crossfire or in the course of a 'gun battle' with civilian gunmen.

(ix) When the vehicles and soldiers of Support Company appeared on Rossville Street they did not come under fire. Soldiers opened fire without justification and not as a result of having been fired on first.

(x) There was no 'gun battle' nor any 'exchange of fire' as has been alleged by soldiers.

(xi) There were no 'missing casualties' behind the Rubble Barricade. Rather there are extra casualties killed by soldiers whom soldiers have failed to account for.

(xii) Soldiers fired more rounds over the Rubble Barricade than they have accounted for.

(xiii) Soldiers manhandled the bodies of John Young, Michael McDaid and William Nash. They were thrown into the back of the Pig, no attempt was made to have them medically examined. Moreover when priests and the Knights of Malta sought to medically examine the three young me and provide them with spiritual care they were obstructed by soldiers.

18.2 Overview of Civilian Evidence

18.2.1 The Civilian evidence (including that from the clergy and journalists) in relation to the interests that we represent is dealt with below in detail on a case-by-case basis. However when taking this evidence as a whole, it supports the following propositions:

i) There was nothing other than stones thrown from the Rubble Barricade at the soldiers positioned at Kells Walk and the northern end of Block 1. There was no armed activity anywhere in this area. No shots were fired at the Paras. No bombs were thrown. Nothing exploded. There was no real or perceived threat to them.

ii) There was a crowd of approximately 30 civilians of all ages at the western side of the Rubble Barricade.

iii) Michael Kelly was standing on the footpath to the south of the Rubble Barricade on the west side of Rossville Street, looking towards the Paratroopers as they deployed near Kells Walk, when he was shot within a minute or so of the Paratroopers arrival at Rossville Street. He had nothing in his hands and did nothing to warrant being shot. No one else around him was engaged in any activity which merited the use of lethal force.

iv) Michael Kelly fell where he had been standing and was carried to the southern gable end of Glenfada Park North by a number of civilians and given the Last Rites by Father Bradley.

v) On the eastern side of Rossville Street, near the Rubble Barricade, Hugh Gilmore had thrown one or possibly more than one stone at the soldiers further north of his position. The soldiers were hopelessly out of range. Hugh Gilmore was then shot when he had nothing in his hands. It is not exactly clear according to the civilian evidence on which side of the Barricade he was standing or which direction he faced when he was shot. Hugh Gilmore ran to just south of the entrance to Block1 where he collapsed with a serious abdominal gunshot wound. He was dragged around the corner to the southern end of Block 1 where he died.

vi) On the western side of Rossville Street, John Young and Michael McDaid along with William Nash were shot. All of them were unarmed. Neither were they in close proximity to someone handling a weapon when they were shot and killed.

vii) John Young and Michael McDaid were shot and killed, probably within seconds of each other. They fell in close physical proximity to each other as Fathers Bradley and O'Keefe were attending to Michael Kelly at the southern gable end of the eastern Block of Glenfada Park North.

viii) They were probably located at the edge of the broad footpath on the western side of the Rubble Barricade when shot and killed, not far from the location where Michael Kelly was shot and killed.

ix) Alex Nash, William's middle-aged father made his way from the gable end and held his son. Such was the level of fire that he was effectively pinned down on the Barricade. He was shot in the arm.

x) Civilians at the gable end tried but could not go to their aid because the gunfire over the Rubble Barricade was so sustained. Absolution was given from the gable wall.

xi) The civilians at this location watched helplessly as Kevin McElhinney either alone or with one other person crawled southwards along the eastern side of Rossville Street towards the entrance of Block 1. They spoke of bullets literally bouncing around the youth as he crawled for the doorway but was eventually shot just before he gained refuge. He had nothing in his hands and was unarmed.

xii) Paratroopers who were involved in shooting further civilians in Glenfada Park North then arrested the civilians who present at the gable wall.

xiii) Paratroopers then arrived at this position in an APC and removed the bodies of John Young, Michael McDaid and William Nash from the Rubble Barricade. The manner in which they were removed was shocking, disrespectful and contemptuous.

18.3 Michael Kelly

18.3.1 Personal Details

18.3.1.1 Michael Kelly was 17 years old on Bloody Sunday. He attended college in Belfast during the week and on a Saturday worked at a shirt factory as a sewing machine engineer. As a hobby he kept and flew pigeons. Michael came from a close knit family who were not involved in politics. It was his first march and he attended because his friends were going. His girlfriend at the time, Bernadette Ball, described Michael as a generous and kind person, she remembered how one day he'd actually helped a small British soldier carry a rucksack because he felt sorry for him. Michael was known as a very light-hearted person, always joking and smiling and the whole family were known as decent and good natured. Any involvement with guns and nailbombs would have been totally alien to Michael's nature. He had no criminal record. The grief of the Kelly family like all the families of the deceased was insurmountable. His mother felt the blow particularly and her own health was particularly affected. She dealt with her grief as best she could in her own particular way. She was known to have brought blankets to the graveyard to put over his grave in an attempt to keep him warm.

18.3.2 Civilian Evidence

18.3.2.1 Michael Kelly was standing on the footpath to the south of the Rubble Barricade on the west side of Rossville Street, looking towards the Paratroopers as they deployed near Kells Walk, when he was shot by Soldier F within a minute or so of the Paratroopers arrival at Rossville Street. A single bullet entered the lower left side of his abdomen and remained in his body. Neither he nor those around him were doing anything to warrant shooting by the soldiers. He was carried to the southern gable end of Glenfada Park North by Charles McLaughlin amongst others and was given the Last Rites by Father Bradley. From there he was carried by a number of people including Pearse McCaul, Joseph Donnelly, Patrick Doherty and George Downey and across Glenfada Park North and into 8 Abbey Park. Accompanied by his brother John amongst others he was taken by ambulance Altnagelvin Hospital, where he was pronounced dead on arrival.

18.3.2.2 Relevant Photographs

The series of photographs at EP27 were taken by Ciaran Donnelly of the Irish Times. EP27.6, EP27.7, EP27.8 and EP27.9 show events at the Rubble Barricade and EP27.10 and EP27.11 show the body of Michael Kelly being carried across Glenfada Park North. EP27.6 and EP27.7 shows the crowd on the west side of Rossville Street at the Barricade and what appear to be soldiers who are either getting out of or around the back of the command vehicle. EP27.7 shows a number of people behind the Rubble Barricade, some clearly crouching or ducking down. EP27.8 and EP27.9 show a number of people looking at the soldiers further to the north. A number of troops have de-bussed on to the west side of Rossville Street.

EP32.1 and EP32.2 were taken by Robert White. Both these photographs showing the body of Michael Kelly were taken from the Glenfada Park South pram ramp marked by the witness on the map attached to AW11.1.

The series of photographs EP23.4, EP23.5, EP23.6, EP23.7, EP23.8, EP23.9, EP23.10, EP23.11 and EP24.12 were taken by Liam Mailey. His photographs cover the Rubble Barricade, the deployment of troops on Rossville Street, movement of troops at the low wall at Kells walk and a group tending to Michael Kelly in Glenfada Park North.

18.3.2.3 The spot where Michael Kelly appears to have fallen is almost precisely the spot identified in Soldier F's trajectory photograph. P7 shows that the spot indicated is just to the west of the gap in the barricade on the western pavement of Rossville Street just to the south of the barricade. As appears in the photograph taken by Mr White at EP32.1 this is the location where Michael Kelly was shot.

Timing of Events

18.3.2.4 Robert White took a series of photographs attached to his statement at AW11.23 which run from P27 to P29. These photographs show the passage of the first two Saracens up Rossville Street. Mr White confirmed that these photographs were taken in fairly quick succession. He believed they would have been taken within a few seconds of each other. Day 137/86/25 to Day 137/87/23. He confirmed that he then ran into Glenfada Park North up to the pram ramp and took his photographs there which are EP32.1, EP32.2 and EP32.3. He recalled it did not take him very long to get to the pram ramp, because he was afraid of missing something. He did not think the distance was as far as sixty yards. He thought he was standing at the pram ramp for a matter of seconds, but less than a minute, before he took the photograph we know as EP32.1. This is the photograph that shows Michael Kelly lying on the ground at the Rubble Barricade. He did not see anyone at the Rubble Barricade with a rifle or a pistol. Day 137/90/16 to Day 137/91/8. Mr. White was asked about the time lapse between taking EP32.2 and P32, which is his photograph of Hugh Gilmore running along Block 1 of Rossville Flats. He thought it would have been a very short time, even less than a minute, but he did not honestly know. Day 137/81/16 to Day 137/82/1.

18.3.2.5 Ciaran Donnelly took photographs from the north-eastern corner of the pram ramp north east corner of Glenfada Park South, marked on M22.24. At this point there were fifty to sixty people at the Rubble Barricade. Day 071/21/18 to Day 071/21/22. He witnessed an incident of an arrest of a youth. He thought EP2.5 taken by Jeffrey Morris and showing the arrest of William John Dillon looked extremely like it. He took EP27.6 and EP27.7 from this position. He heard two shots and about two to three minutes later he saw a youth fall on the left side of the barricade. He thought it was "definitely no longer than a minute to two minutes, maybe less than a minute even", when he saw another man fall on the Rossville Street side of the barricade. Day 071/28/7 to Day 071/29/2.

18.3.2.6 Professor Terence O'Keefe thought that by the time EP23.12 was taken, which was shortly after Michael Kelly had been brought to the gable end of Glenfada Park North, he had seen the other bodies at the barricade. Day 127/108/22 to Day 127/108/24.

Before arrival at the Rubble Barricade

18.3.2.7 George Downey, Michael Kelly's brother-in-law, met Michael Kelly near a house in Kells Walk and was there when Michael Kelly's mother shouted out to her son from the first floor verandah of Kells Walk. He thinks she was in her sister's house at the southern end of Kells Walk. AD134.2 paragraph 12. He and Michael were talking when someone told George that two fellows had been shot and pointed out to George the direction of a house to which the two in question had been taken. Day 123/8/21 to 123/9/5. That was the last time he saw Michael until he was at the south side of the barricade in Rossville Street. Michael Kelly's mother, Kathleen Kelly saw him at the rear of no.2 Kells Walk in the area of the four garages seen in P200. She shouted to him but he did not hear her above the noise of the crowd. He ran south towards Glenfada Park along with the crowd although he seemed to be on his own. AK14.2 paragraph 15.

At the Rubble Barricade and the shooting

18.3.2.8 Michael Kelly was the first person to be shot at the Rubble Barricade. He was shot within a very short time of the deployment of the Anti-Tank Platoon soldiers at the Kells Walk wall. He was shot across the Rubble Barricade and fell to the left of the barricade and was then taken into Glenfada Park North, whilst shooting continued. It is submitted that the reliable civilian evidence demonstrates beyond doubt that Michael Kelly was unarmed at the time he was shot and presented no threat whatsoever to the soldier who shot him, or indeed any soldier. It is further submitted that there was no activity at the Rubble Barricade which justified the shooting by soldiers. The killing of Michael Kelly was wholly unjustified and he was murdered by Soldier F.

18.3.2.9 The evidence of Hugh O'Boyle is at AO1 and Day 131 to Day 132. His evidence, contained in AO1, is that he saw about ten or twelve men and boys gathered at the barricade. When he saw it first, some soldiers just to the south of the south end of Kells Walk and a few boys shouting and throwing stones at the soldiers, who were too far away to be hit. The witness said at Day 132/3/19 to Day 132/3/25 "When I say throwing stones they were probably shouting at them. I cannot remember if they were throwing stones, maybe one or two might have been, I just cannot recall." He heard a young lad shout out "I have been shot" and he fell to the ground immediately behind the barricade near to the west end. The young lad who fell had been standing in front of the witness, slightly to his left. The witness had not been throwing stones himself and at that time and place he could not remember other people around him throwing stones. Day 132/6/10 to Day 132/6/12. The witness confirmed the position of the young man by reference to P418 at Day 132/8/13 to Day 132/8/24. The witness accepted that he would have been positioned just off the right of photograph P637, which would have been two to three feet to the right of where Michael Kelly lay. Day 132/52/5 to Day 132/52/9. The young man, who was clearly Michael Kelly, was shot by soldiers possibly positioned near Kells Walk in Rossville Street. Day 132/6/22 to Day 132/7/21. Michael Kelly was not doing anything or saying anything when shot. Day 132/52/10 to Day 132/52/12. The relevant evidence of Soldier F was put to the witness. There were no explosions or nail bombs in front of i.e. to the north of the barricade. The witness saw no-one with a fizzing object or bomb at the barricade. The witness agreed that if somebody very close to him had had a fizzing object he would have seen this and he would not have been standing beside him either. Day 132/54/6 to Day 132/54/9. The young man had a very small red hole in his stomach. He was carried or dragged away from the barricade. He was then carried into the southeast corner of Glenfada Park North. Some people tried to go out and help casualties on the barricade and others said it was too dangerous to go out there. His statement to Eversheds is consistent with the statement that he gave to NICRA at the time. The NICRA statement is at AO1.1.

18.3.2.10 Jack Nash, whose evidence appears at AN27.1 and Day 137, was at the Rubble Barricade. He saw a number of soldiers at the north end of Rossville Street and others at the small flats at Kells Walk. He also may have seen some soldiers on or beside a pram ramp who were firing rubber bullets. AN27.2 paragraph 7 and Day 137/6/16 to Day 137/8/3. These rubber bullets came up against the side of the Glenfada Park North houses facing onto Rossville Street. Day 137/8/1 to Day 137/8/16. The witness confirmed there was stone throwing, including by himself, although it was not even close to a riot but more of a stand-off. AN27.2 paragraph 8. It was suggested that given the distance, there was no reasonable prospect of stones thrown from behind the barricade at the soldiers hitting anyone and that they must have been going further up Rossville Street to have a chance of hitting anyone. The witness stated that he was behind the barricade and threw to vent his frustration. Day 137/43/14 to Day 137/43/16.

18.3.2.11 Mr. Nash saw a youth fall behind the Barricade on the Free Derry Corner side slightly in front and to the north of him. Both the youth and the witness had been looking north. The youth had been doing nothing to attract his attention and the witness did not have a specific recollection of the youth throwing stones. The witness identified the youth in EP32.2 as the youth who fell. This was Michael Kelly. The witness thought the youth had been hit by a rubber bullet or had fallen down and did not believe at the time they were live shots, although he heard them. The witness went forward to the barricade and helped lift Michael Kelly to the gable end wall. He opened his coat and saw a small hole but no blood. Day 137/15/14 to Day 137/15/18. During his time at the barricade and at the Glenfada Park North gable, the witness saw no-one with a weapon or nail bomb. As far as he was aware, no-one fired a rifle, pistol or bomb from the barricade towards the soldiers. Day 137/15/25 to Day 137/16/7.

18.3.2.12 Charles Lamberton, whose evidence appears at AL3.1 and Day 183, was at the Rubble Barricade and saw soldiers on Rossville Street out of their Saracens and out from behind their riot shields. There was some chanting at the Barricade and the mood was quite confrontational. However the witness did not see the crowd moving north of the barricade to rescue a boy. He did not see stones being thrown from the Barricade and although someone might have thrown a stone they could not have reached the soldiers. AL3.5 paragraph 32 and Day 183/111/15 to Day 183/111/21. The witness recalled a volley of shots, possibly five or six, and everyone dived to the ground. He saw Michael Kelly fall. Michael Kelly was lying on his left side with his head pointing towards Free Derry Corner and his feet closer to the barricade, curled round slightly, bringing his knees in towards his stomach. Day 183/112/12 to Day 183/115/7. The witness confirmed that EP32.1 and EP32.2 showed the position as he remembered it. Day 183/113/8 to Day 183/115/14. The witness confirmed that he had seen Michael Kelly immediately before he fell and he was just standing where he was actually lying on the photographs, looking down towards the Army. The witness thought that Michael Kelly was helped by a group of people who had been on the south side of the barricade but who might also have come out from the gable end of Glenfada Park North. Michael Kelly was dragged to the shelter of the gable end of the eastern block and the witness joined them. He could see a small bullet wound in his stomach. AL3.6 paragraph 36. There was a fusillade of shots, apparently from the north. The witness recalled there then was a lull and Michael Kelly was taken to the gable end of Glenfada Park North. Day 183/115/15 to Day 183/115/23.

18.3.2.13 Ronald Wood, a witness who had spent twelve years in the Royal Navy, saw the soldiers arriving in Rossville Street. EP27.6 shows a picture fairly close to the account which Mr. Wood gave in his Widgery evidence at day 2. His Eversheds statement is at AW24.1 and Day 127. He had crossed over the barricade in a southerly direction and was standing at the entrance to Glenfada Park car park. He saw some of the Pigs go into the Rossville Street car park and others stay on Rossville Street itself. He saw the soldiers get out and take up cover around the Pigs and some go behind the wall at the south of Kells Walk. This was marked by the witness on AW24.25 and AW24.26.

18.3.2.14 He said that some of the people threw stones and that rubber bullets were fired in reply. Then live bullets started flying. He said that he did not see who fired the first two of them, but one of them -- and these were his exact words -- "downed a man next but one to me facing the soldiers in Rossville Street". The witness did not see anything at the barricade which would have justified the firing of live rounds and he was never told of any justification. Day 127/26/2 to Day 127/26/7. That man, he said, was hit in the front whilst standing at the barricade and hit in the lower left abdomen. The witness was certain that the boy he saw shot was shot in left hand side of his torso. Day 127/26/8 to Day 127/26/10. He described the man as wearing a sports jacket, slacks and a white T-shirt. The witness was shown F5.4 and F5.9, which were photographs of the clothes that Michael Kelly was wearing on the day. The witness stated that the t-shirt was very similar and the jacket was also very similar to the ones worn by Michael Kelly. Day 127/26/18 to Day 127/27/17.

18.3.2.15 The witness was reminded of his description to the Widgery Tribunal of the boy being shot as next but one to him and he accepted that, looking at P635, the witness could have been positioned just off to the right of the photographs (i.e. EP27.6 and EP27.7). The witness confirmed that the photographs suggested that his impression of the boy with a group of people standing together talking before he was shot was correct. Day 127/29/10 to Day 127/29/17.

18.3.2.16 He said that the man had not fired any shot or thrown any bomb and if he had thrown a stone earlier, Mr Wood had not seen him do so. He was not throwing stones when he was shot. The witness saw him at the moment he fell and there did not appear to be any action from him of throwing anything. The man was close enough to him that he would have seen or been aware of any action like that. Day 127/15/5 to Day 127/15/23. The witness heard no firing from Rossville Flats. Day 127/29/18 to Day 127/29/24. He heard no nail bombs that day at all. He did not see anyone attempting to throw a fizzing object that day. Nor did he see Michael Kelly with a fizzing object in his hand. Day 127/30/9 to Day 127/30/17.

18.3.2.17 The man shot was, as far as the witness was aware, was facing the army when he fell. Day 127/16/2 to Day 127/16/6. He fell a yard or two behind the barricade in a general area very nearly at the western extremity of the Barricade. Day 127/17/1 to Day 127/17/12. When shown P637 the witness indicated that the scene with a boy lying on the ground with his face up was a scene he could recall from what he observed on the day. The position of the person in the photograph corresponded with the position of the boy he saw fall with his head facing south in the direction of Free Derry corner. Day 127/18/11 to Day 127/19/2.

18.3.2.18 He and others went out to the body and four people picked him up and took him into the Glenfada Park North car park and put him on the ground. Day 127/19/3 to Day 127/20/4. P638 and P639 corresponded to scenes he recollected.

18.3.2.19 He said that he did not see any use of any weapon by a civilian nor hear any nail bombs, nor any automatic fire and saw no reason for the soldiers having fired. WT2 and AM24.3 paragraph 20.

18.3.2.20 Professor Terence Michael O'Keefe, who on Bloody Sunday was Father O'Keefe, gave evidence to the Widgery Tribunal. His Eversheds statement is at H21.44 and he gave evidence on Day 127. The witness had reached the southern gable end of Glenfada Park North on its east side, and at this time there were something like 25 or 30 people around the gable end, some people still in the centre of Rossville Street and some five or six young people on the barricade on the opposite side from the Army vehicles. The witness was able to identify himself in EP27.6 and EP27.7 and marked his location in H21.139 and H21.140. The witness believed the sequence of these photographs suggested to him that the soldiers who had debussed from the military vehicles in the background had opened fire. Day 127/89/21 to Day 127/90/14. The witness recognised himself in EP27.6 and marked himself on H21.129. The witness then confirmed EP27.8 as very much his recollection of the number of young men looking down Rossville Street towards the army somewhat challengingly. Day 127/90/15 to Day 127/91/4. It is to be emphasised that neither this witness nor any other witness identified Michael Kelly in this group. The photograph would seem to show, broadly speaking, the picture described by him in his oral testimony to Lord Widgery. EP27.9 again accorded with his recollection of the scene at the time he was located close to or at the gable end of Glenfada Park North. Day 127/91/5 to Day 127/91/11.

18.3.2.21 He saw men debus from the vehicles and about 10 run to their right, that is to say, to the west which would appear to be the scene in EP27.8. At H21.45 paragraph 10 the witness described soldiers jumping out of Saracens up Rossville Street and taking up positions left and right. Some soldiers took up firing positions pointing their rifles down Rossville Street with some standing and some kneeling. At Widgery he had said he heard some shots which he assumed were rubber bullets. His impression was that when the vehicles halted stones were thrown at the troops by people standing at the barricade, none of whom, he said, had firearms. He got the impression of youths picking up a few stones and firing them off rather aimlessly. At H21.46 paragraphs 11 to 13 the witness said he saw a small group of youths clearly intending to confront the soldiers. He had a vague recollection of them waving their arms and yelling at the soldiers. He had the impression stones were being thrown. Day 127/99/9 to Day 127/99/18. The witness accepted that EP27.7 and EP27.8 suggested to him that it was more likely that Michael Kelly was part of the main group of people, of whom he was one, standing around the entrance to Glenfada Park and not part of the group of youths challenging the army. Day 127/145/16 to Day 127/145/20.

18.3.2.22 At WT5.6 Professor O' Keefe had been asked: "You have taken your narrative to this point, that soldiers have dismounted from the Saracens and adopted an aiming weapon with their weapons. Q: "How long after adopting that position do you suggest they opened fire?" Answer: "I got the impression it was all in one gesture. They adopted firing positions and opened fire and I heard the reports." The witness said that the soldiers got into position and started shooting "very swiftly indeed. Day 127/100/20 to Day 127/101/1. At no stage was the witness conscious of any firing from the barricade or any noise which he could have thought of as firing. Day 127/101/2 to Day 127/101/6. The witness had a vague memory or vision of stones being thrown but not conscious of anything else. Day 127/101/7 to Day 127/101/12. The witness did not see anyone behind the barricade with anything that was fizzing or hear anyone mention anything that was fizzing at the barricade. Day 127/146/4 to Day 127/146/9. The witness confirmed his testimony to Widgery and said he did not see any person take or ferry guns or weapons away from the Barricade and thought it would have been impossible for anyone to have got across to ferry weapons away. Nor did he hear any blast bombs. Day 127/151/5 to Day 127/151/12. When asked about the totality of the soldiers allegations about weapons at the barricade the witness stated: "I saw none of that and I think it would have been impossible for that to have happened without me having noticed." Day 127/150/11 to Day 127/150/20. At no stage did he see anyone in his vicinity or did in see anyone pass carrying a rifle right into Glenfada Park. Day 127/152/24 to Day 128/153/2. There was in his visual memory a fairly empty space between the Barricade and the soldiers. Day 127/101/13 to Day 127/101/21.

18.3.2.23 At WT5.6 D the witness had been asked: What was the first casualty you observed? Answer: One young man who dropped holding his stomach and four young people detached themselves from this crowd which was still on that gable end corner and ran over very fast indeed. They crouched and grabbed him by the arms and legs and ran back behind the gable end of the wall. At that stage the crowd more or less got in behind the wall to see what was wrong with the young man." Question: "Can you say whereabouts on that barricade that first casualty was?" Answer: "More towards my side of the barrier on the gable end ... nearer to the gable end of the maisonettes ... in Glenfada Park." The witness confirmed on Day 127/102/5 to Day 127/102/16 by reference to EP27.7 that the person he saw fall fell in approximately the position occupied by Michael Kelly in the photograph but he could not confirm that he was able to recognise the man in the photograph. He had the impression that the first casualty would have fallen three or four paces in from the gable end of Glenfada Park North. Day 127/102/25 to Day 127/103/2. He saw the young man fall in a cluster of three or four shots. Day 127/106/22 to Day 127/107/2. At Widgery he had said that the young fellow had been standing facing down Rossville Street towards the soldiers. This was confirmed at Day 127/101/22 to Day 127/102/4. He had seen him hold his stomach and double up and begin to fall, at which these four young people took him and carried him. It was very swiftly done. Day 127/106/4 to Day 127/106/15. The witness confirmed that the scenes in EP32.1 and EP32.2 brought back a memory though he could not say if the first casualty on doubling up fell forwards or backwards. Day 127/103/11 to Day 127/103/20.

18.3.2.24 At WT5.6 G he had been asked: "Was that the young man attended by Father Bradley?" Answer: Yes. At first I thought he had been hit in the stomach by a rubber bullet. I still thought it was rubber batons being fired but when they put him on the ground I saw a bullet wound in his lower abdomen and his eyes seemed to be glazed. I was not sure whether he was dead or not, but Father Bradley and I got down and Father Bradley attended to him." The witness was able to identify himself and Father Bradley in EP23.12. He was asked at WT5.7 A: "As a result of that firing was anybody else hit?" Answer: "I saw one man being hit and my attention was on him being carried away. When I left after Father Bradley to attend to him, I saw these three bodies behind the rubble barricade lying very still." The witness thought he had some memory of shots hitting the gable end wall where they were huddled after he had looked across and seen three more casualties at the Barricade. Day 127/105/23 to Day 127/106/3. At WT5.8 C he was asked to give an estimate of the sort of time between the first shot that he heard and when he peered round and saw this soldier apparently aiming a rifle in that direction. He replied: "I said in my statement a minute to a minute and a half, but it is a terribly subjective moment of time. I am trying to deduce that from the four people carrying him there to the time it would take to attend him, and then a discussion. It would perhaps be longer, three minutes or four minutes, but it certainly was not a long time." The witness recalled the scene at EP23.12 showing himself trying to persuade some young people not to run. He believed that he had seen the bodies on the barricade by the time this photograph had been taken. Day 127/108/2 to Day 127/108/24.

18.3.2.25 Charles McDaid gave a statement to Eversheds, which appears at AM161.1, and his evidence is at Day 060. He confirmed that the scene in EP27.6 was in accordance with his recollection of the scene as he approached the barricade. At WT5.46 C he said he turned round and saw that a soldier had a man on the ground just at the corner of the flats, and he was just holding the man by the arm. Then a second soldier came out from the side of the flats and kicked the man on the ground. At AM161.5 paragraph 28 he stated: "I had just managed to pass on to the southern side of the rubble barricade when I heard a voice of a young lad coming from my left and slightly behind me, crying 'Mister, I am shot. Help me'. I do not think he called out to me in particular but as far as I could tell I was one of the nearest people to him. I looked over my left shoulder and saw the young lad, maybe 15 or 16 years old, on the ground. The approximate point ... is marked K." At AM161.10, the point marked K can be seen as almost the spot where Michael Kelly died. The witness saw nothing, which would justify the shooting of the young lad who fell. Day 060/170/15 to Day 060/170/19. He did not see anything to justify the shootings of the other three persons he saw lying behind the barricade. He saw no-one take or ferry guns or weapons away and he did not hear any blast bombs explode. Day 60/170/24 to Day 060/171/3. He saw no-one with weapons of any kind at the Barricade. Day 060/170/8 to Day 060/170/14.

18.3.2.26 In AM161.5 paragraph 29 he stated: "The lad must have just fallen when I saw him and was lying partly on his side with one arm out to support him. His head was facing towards Glenfada Park and his feet towards the Rubble Barricade and his face was looking up in my direction." That is broadly consistent with the photograph EP32.2.[1] At AM161.5 paragraph 30 he stated that, "there was no weapon in the lad's hands" and he saw none removed from him. He stated that he was one of the four or five persons who carried the lad from where he lay to an area behind the south gable end of Glenfada Park North. He referred to the appearance of Father Bradley. The witness confirmed he could identify himself in EP23.11 and EP23.12. They carried him into the alley at Glenfada Park and Father Bradley administered the Last Rites of the church to the boy. There was shooting seemingly still going on at that time, but helping the boy in he could not see where the shooting was or whether anybody else had been shot at that particular time.

[1] The evidence of William Vincent Hegarty at WT7.23 that the boy he learned was Michael Kelly fell face down cannot be correct in the light of the weight of the medical and civilian evidence. His evidence of the boy crossing over the barricade and that of Noel McCartney at Day 157 cannot be accurate given the weight of the civilian, medical and photographic evidence. See Day 157/105/1 to Day 157/105/25 and also Day 157/136/1 to Day 157/136/25: "I just have this memory perhaps wrong of someone being shot as they came across the barricade".

18.3.2.27 Mr McDaid said that he was about four or five yards away from the boy, who had, he said, no weapon in his hand or near him. Nor did he see anybody removing anything from the boy. He did not see anyone at the barricade throwing stones. The witness saw nobody with any form of weapon at the barricade or saw or heard any firing from behind the barricade towards the north end of Rossville Street. Day 060/159/5 to Day 060/159/11.

18.3.2.28 Gavan Duffy, whose statement appears at AD155.1 and who gave evidence at Day 126, was a friend of the witness Paul McGeady whose evidence is considered below. He accompanied him on the day. He identified himself in the middle of EP35.3 on the south side of the Rubble Barricade. The witness then described the movement of people towards the barricade and in front of the barricade and seeing a soldier hit a boy with a rifle butt. Some of the people threw missiles at the soldiers, more of whom had appeared. The boy to his left who had been either on the barricade or slightly to the south of it was blown backwards by a shot fired from around the bottom end of the Kells Walk/Glenfada Park side. There were about five or six soldiers in the area. Day 126/145/18 to Day 126/146/6. That was the first live shot the witness recalled hearing that day. The boy fell backwards and he had nothing in his hands. Day 126/146/12 to Day 126/146/19.

18.3.2.29 It was put to the witness that Mr. McGeady had said he believed the boy had been moving forward to rescue the youth on the waste ground. The witness replied that everybody was sort of moving forward "maybe" to give assistance to the person that was being arrested. Day 126/146/24 to Day 126/147/4. However, he did not notice any people approach the soldier in an effort to rescue the boy who had been struck by the rifle butt. Day 126/145/15 to Day 126/145/17. The witness was shown P635 and Michael Kelly was pointed out to him on the photograph. The witness said he would have been maybe a matter of yards from him. The witness confirmed that the majority of people behind the barricade were not throwing stones and he agreed with the suggestion that P635A and EP27.7 suggested that Michael Kelly was one of the majority of people who were not throwing stones or doing anything at the barricade. Day 126/161/18 to Day 126/162/8.

18.3.2.30 Some relevant parts of the evidence of Soldier F were put to the witness. He stated that he heard no firing from the Rossville Flats at any time that day. He did not see or hear any nail bombs being thrown or exploding in front of the barricade. Day 126/164/5 to Day 126/164/8. He saw no-one with a fizzing object in his hand before Michael Kelly was shot. He did not see Michael Kelly throw a nail bomb as described by Soldier F. The witness was clear from his position he would have seen it if it had occurred. Day 126/164/21 to Day 126/165/8.

18.3.2.31 Paul McGeady was, according to his evidence at AM219.3 and Day 137, standing in Rossville Street to the south of the Rubble Barricade with Gavin Duffy whose own evidence was considered above. Mr. McGeady stated that they stood in Rossville Street at a point that has been marked E on the map attached to his statement. From this position, he looked north up Rossville Street to see what was going on. He saw about six soldiers standing behind the low wall at the south end of Kells Walk and recognised these soldiers as Paratroopers. He also saw about six more soldiers who were also Paratroopers behind the wall at the southernmost end of the pram ramp leading on to the first floor of Kells Walk.

18.3.2.32 At AM219.1 paragraph 17 he stated that: "Some of the lads who were standing to the south of the rubble barricade were throwing stones at both groups of Paras. The Paras responded with rubber bullets." He then described an incident where a young lad has been caught and assaulted by a soldier and a group of lads from behind the barricade intending to go out to his assistance. One of the young lads in the rescue group moved forward and was climbing over the barricade to go to the lad on the ground. He recalled that this boy was casually dressed and had dark shoulder length hair. He could not recall whether or not he had a stone in one of his hands. He was certainly not carrying a gun, a nail bomb or a petrol bomb. The witness did not see anyone at the barricade carrying a gun, nail bomb or petrol bomb. He did not see or hear any exploding. Day 137/129/14 to Day 137/130/4.

18.3.2.33 He was standing directly behind the boy and was looking at his back. The witness was directed to a photograph of Michael Kelly at P413. The witness thought the fellow he saw was more to the right but the person in the photograph did look similar. Day 137/130/14 to Day 137/131/2. As the boy climbed on to the top of the Rubble Barricade he was suddenly thrown violently backwards. The witness marked the point on a plan attached to his statement and it is right in the middle of the barricade in the middle of Rossville Street. The boy was thrown backwards both his arms went up in the air as he fell. He was not moving. The witness knew immediately that he had been shot, even though he had not heard a shot being fired. Nothing else could account for the violent way he was thrown backwards. There was a crowd of people around the lad who was lying just in front of him and so he did not actually see the lad on the ground or the position in which he was lying.

18.3.2.34 It seems clear the witness saw the shooting of Michael Kelly but his recollection of the location is mistaken. This witness ended his evidence by placing an arrow on AM219.9, marking the spot where he saw the person fall. As can be seen this is considerably further towards Rossville Flats than the known position where Michael Kelly fell as depicted in EP32.2 and as described by a number of witnesses. He confirmed the general location to the right towards Rossville Flats at Day 137/137/1 to Day 137/137/3 even though in his original statement he marked the spot on the plan on AM219.7 as the middle of the barricade. The evidence is clear that Michael Kelly was shot not far from the position he can be seen at in EP27.7 and not on top of or on the northern side of the barricade.

18.3.2.35 Soldier F, for what his evidence was worth, did not suggest that the person he shot was anywhere other than behind the barricade.

18.3.2.36 It is clear that the witness is attempting to describe the shooting of Michael Kelly but as with his location he is mistaken about his activity when shot. His evidence on this issue should be read in the context of the weight of civilian evidence above which suggests that Michael Kelly was not engaged in any hostile activity prior to being shot.

18.3.2.37 The following summary submissions are made on the civilian evidence considered above:

i. Michael Kelly was shot without any weapon or any other item in either of his hands.
ii. He was not engaged in rioting
iii. No other person was shot in the vicinity of Michael Kelly at or around the time he was struck.
iv. Michael Kelly was facing north towards the soldiers on Rossville Street when he was shot on the southern side of the Barricade.[2]
v. He had been standing close to the spot he fell for a period of time prior to being shot.
vi. He was shot without any justification.
vii. Michael Kelly was murdered by the soldier who shot him.
viii. There was no firing from the Rossville Flats at the soldiers.
ix. There was no-one at or around the Rubble Barricade with a nail-bomb, petrol bomb or any other weapon.[3]

[2] See also evidence of Don Mullan AM488.5 paragraphs 36 to 38

x. No weapons were taken or carried away from the Rubble Barricade.

18.3.2.40 The witness Patrick Norris whose statement is at AN24.1 also gave evidence on Day 167/92. At AN24.2 paragraph 8 he stated that he walked down Rossville Street and passed the Rubble Barricade, where he met a young lad that he knew, Michael Kelly. He was standing behind the southern gable end of the east block of Glenfada Park North. He was standing in a position where he could see back north up Rossville Street. He was standing only a yard or so to the east of the gable. He refers to a photograph of the gable end. At AN24.2 paragraph 9 the witness described how he knew Michael Kelly and chatting to Michael Kelly for about ten minutes. At AN24.2 paragraph 10 he stated: "Michael Kelly said 'Here they come'. I did not see who he was looking at and did not see anyone coming myself. I heard no noise of gunshots or engines and just heard Michael Kelly say 'Here they come'. He must have seen the Army coming down Rossville Street. He did not sound shocked or surprised by this but when he said 'Here they come', he could possibly have been giving a warning shout."

This was described at Day 167/94/18 to Day 167/95/2 as just a "simple here they come" so people knew that the army were coming and they were going to come into the Bogside not a warning that people should get ready to take on the army. He continued: "Almost immediately after he said those words, he reached down to pick up a stone from the ground at his side. As he stood up again, he pulled his arm back and bent his body as if to throw the stone northwards up Rossville Street. It was then that he was shot. I did not hear the shot that killed him." At AN24.2 paragraph 11 he stated:" he did not throw the stone that he had picked up and he was shot before he had even begun to throw it. It was only a matter of seconds between him shouting 'Here they come' and being shot. He fell backwards almost at my feet. From the way that he fell, I assumed that the bullet that had hit him had come north from the William Street direction. Not a sound left his body, but as soon as he hit the ground, there was no sign of life. He might have given a very small tremor or spasm just as he hit the ground. I saw no blood." The witness then described shouting for help and a group of six or seven men helping him to carry Michael Kelly to safety to the gable end wall. At AN24.5 paragraph 14 he stated: "He was eventually carried away into a house by others. I am unsure now where he was taken. I was still extremely shocked at this time. I do remember that a couple of men who were part of the group that carried Michael from where he had been shot were people I knew. One of them was John Kelly, who I knew quite well, and another was his brother-in-law".

18.3.2.41 The following submissions are made on the evidence of this witness:

i. The witness when shown EP27.6 did not remember seeing Michael Kelly as far out on the pavement or the number of people around immediately before he was shot as depicted the photograph. In fact his recollection was that there was no-one around Michael Kelly or no-one else with the two of them at the gable end wall. Day 167/96/6 to Day 167/97/11.

ii. A further point in relation to this photograph is that the person who is Michael Kelly is some considerable distance to the right from the gable end wall where the witness claimed to have been talking to Michael Kelly for some ten minutes before Michael Kelly was shot. The witness claimed Michael Kelly was shot half a metre to a metre from the gable wall Day 167/99/8 to Day 167/99/10 and AN24.16 or an arms length from the witness Day 167/147/25 to Day 167/148/5. According to the witness Michael Kelly fell at his feet Day 167/148/12 to Day 167/148/14 yet the witness had to accept that he himself did not appear anywhere in EP27.6 and P635.

iii. Again with EP27.7 and P635A the witness accepted he did not appear in the photograph. Day 167/151/10 to Day 167/151/12.

iv. In EP32.2 and P637 the witness accepted that the photograph fitted with where Michael Kelly was shot. Day 167/103/7 to Day 167/103/22. However he also had to accept that the kerb in the photograph P635 was nowhere near the point that he suggested Michael Kelly fell. Day 167/154/23 to Day 167/154/25.

v. The witness gave a description and demonstration in evidence of Michael Kelly being shot as he bent his body or back slightly backwards as if to throw a stone. Day 167/158/6 to Day 167/159/18. This is clearly inconsistent with the forensic evidence, which is more consistent with Michael Kelly bending forward and facing the direction of the bullet.

vi. The witness had to accept contrary to what he stated at AN24.3 paragraph 14 that in the light of the evidence of John Kelly, Michael Kelly's brother, that he was not involved in carrying his brother from the scene of the shooting of the Rubble Barricade. Also that he did not come across his brother until he saw him being carried out of a house in Abbey Park.

vii. The evidence from the witness of the position and movements of John Young and Michael McDaid, having been shot whilst running south from the gable end wall of Glenfada Park North and their shooting after Kevin McIlhenny, is not consistent with any other civilian evidence notwithstanding his position proximate to Glenfada Park North. AN26.1 and Day 167/126/5 to Day 167/126/15. In oral evidence he stated he was no longer sure if it was Young and McDaid .

viii. It is submitted in the light of the above and the evidence of other witnesses such as Jack Nash, Ronald Wood and Hugh O' Boyle that the witness is mistaken about Michael Kelly picking up a stone at the Rubble Barricade.

18.3.2.42 Danny Craig gave a statement at AC111.2 and evidence to the Inquiry at Day 135. At AC111.2 paragraph 10 he described moving back to the safety of the Rubble Barricade. He got talking to a young lad who introduced himself as Michael Kelly. He said he knew his brother John because he worked with him. The lad told him he was 17 and this was his first march. Because the witness was twenty-five at the time he started playing 'big daddy' (corrected by witness to more like brother Day 135/51/20 to Day 135/51/25). "I told him to run when I ran, to throw stones when I threw stones and to do everything I did and he would be all right. This is what he then did. I asked him where his brother John was and he said he was around somewhere. He also told me that his mammy had not wanted him to come on the march because she thought there might be trouble. I said as long as he stuck by me he would be fine and the worst that could happen was that he would get a rubber bullet." He was wearing a suit in a darkish colour, maybe grey with stripes on it. The witness had his black bomber jacket on (corrected by witness to navy blue Day 135/52/1 to Day 135/52/5). At AC111.2 paragraph 13. the witness stated the following:" I said to Michael Kelly 'get down' and I bent down to pick up a stone and he did the same because he was doing everything that I did, but as he stood up he fell back and said 'Danny, I am shot'. I will never forget him falling back and saying my name like that. I looked at him and he seemed to have nothing but a pinhole (corrected by witness to mean small hole Day 135/52/15 to Day 135/52/19) in his gut." The witness then described leaving Michael Kelly and running. He got into an area he thought was Glenfada Park North. Then he described two men running out and pulling Michael Kelly on to the footpath in the shelter of the southern gable end wall of the eastern block of Glenfada Park South." When they turned Michael over "his back was blown out and his guts had come out."

18.3.2.43 The following submissions are made on the evidence of this witness:

i. At AC111.1 paragraph 8 of his statement of evidence and at Day 135/54/22 to Day 135/55/2 he claims that the army came out from behind Barrier 14 pushing the rioters back up William Street and down Rossville street and then returning behind the barrier. There is no other civilian or army evidence to support this recollection.

ii. The witness recollected the "bigger soldiers" i.e. the Paras, taking over from the "little guys" i.e. non- paras in Rossville Street. On the weight of the evidence the witness cannot be right about the deployment of non-parachute regiment soldiers on Rossville Street. Day 135/97/8 to Day 135/100/11. The witness also indicated that at one point he had reached the Rubble Barricade and left it to go back up Rossville Street and engage in stone throwing but changed his evidence to state that it had occurred before he had moved back to the safety of the Rubble Barricade. Day 135/98/2 to Day 135/98/18.

iii. The witness stated at AC111.2 paragraph 12 that one of the "big guys" i.e. the paras got down on one knee in Rossville Street and fired at them. When it was put to him that in his 1972 statement at AC111.12 that he did not say he saw the paras take aim and fire the witness replied that he could remember nothing about that statement and could not answer on it.

iv. His evidence that two others were shot before Michael Kelly is clearly at odds with any other civilian evidence available and is inherently unreliable.

v. There are fundamental differences between the accounts given by the witness of the alleged shooting of another person or persons around the time of Michael Kelly's shooting in his NICRA statement at AC111.7, his Eversheds statement and his oral evidence to the Inquiry. The obvious inconsistency is the timing of the shooting of the man in the leg as in the NICRA statement which occurred after assisting Michael Kelly and the Eversheds statement before Michael Kelly was shot. The descriptions of the man's actions and location at the time are therefore also obviously contradictory. In addition the second person who appears in the Eversheds statement as falling and who was surmised to have been shot does not appear in the NICRA statement. At Day 135/59/23 to Day 135/60/3 the witness said when asked by Counsel to the Inquiry about this episode: "I can remember just what it says there. I can remember the second lad, the other lad was hit somewhere, where-things were happening so quick, just, you know. One of them definitely seemed to have been shot in the leg, that would have been on what it says there." (The witness is here referring to para 12 of his Eversheds statement dated 1 June 1999). The witness then stated that he did not know or learn later that the first lad was shot although it was his "guess" as time was going past and that he saw the second one clutch his leg. Day 135/60/4 to Day 135/60/11.

vi. It is clear from the NICRA statement and the words "I now know the first lad to be Kelly" that the witness could not have had the meeting and the introduction to Michael Kelly he claims in his Eversheds statement. The obvious inference of these words is that the witness only learned later that the man shot at the barricade was called Kelly. Day 135/88/22 to Day 135/89/16.

vii. A further point on the issue of his alleged meeting with Michael Kelly is that the witness appears to have told Paul Mahon at X447.16 that Michael Kelly told him who he was and: "it didn't dawn on me that I was working with his brother John then, but I know see that he has been talking to the Bloody Sunday Inquiry, saying that his brother was shot". This interview was recorded on 20th June 1998. In his statement to Evershed's at AC111.2 paragraph 10, made on 1st June 1999, the witness claimed that he knew his brother John because he worked with him and that he asked Michael Kelly where his brother John was, and Michael Kelly said he was around somewhere.

vii. In his NICRA statement in 1972 the witness stated that Michael Kelly shouted to him "I am shot, help me". This can be contrasted with the words as they appear in the Eversheds statement: "Danny I am shot". It is a clear inference that the name did not appear in the NICRA statement in 1972 because at that stage Michael Kelly did not know Mr. Craig and could not have used his name. It is submitted the use of the name viii. The witness does not appear in photographs EP27.6 or EP27.7. This is significant given the witness's claim to extremely close proximity to Michael Kelly when he was shot, at a time which must have been very shortly after EP27.7 was taken. Day 135/91/9 to Day 135/92/10.

"Danny" is not credible and did not occur. AC111.2 paragraph 13.

ix. It should also be noted that the witness himself was "surprised" he did not appear in the photographs and gave the following response when questioned:

Q. Because if your evidence were true in that regard, (i.e. that the witness was with Michael Kelly at the time Michael Kelly appears in EP27.6 and EP27.7) you would be in that photograph?

A. Yes. Day 135/92/1 to Day 135/92/10.

x It may also be noted the witness Gavan Duffy who was able to recognise Danny Craig in P636 did not recall seeing him anywhere near Michael Kelly at the time Michael Kelly was shot. Day 126/165/21 to Day 126/166/14.

xi On a number of occasions the witness attempted to distance himself from his 1972 statement saying he did not remember it but also saying "If denial means I do not remember, I do not remember making it....I deny that I have made that statement.

Q. Did you or did you not make the statement in 1972?

A If I did my honest answer is I do not remember." Day 135/89/17 to Day 135/90/1.

He also claimed to have no memory of the second 1972 statement bearing his name at AC111.11. Day 135/124/17 to Day 135/125/22.

xii The witness appeared to suggest at AC111.3 paragraph 14 that he had run to a fence somewhere in Glenfada Park before Michael Kelly was brought to the gable end of Glenfada Park North, when the soldiers were coming into Glenfada Park North. At one stage in his evidence he suggested his location was Abbey Park where of course he could not have seen Michael Kelly at the gable end or indeed the other two people he claimed to have seen dragged to the gable end before Michael Kelly. Day 135/65/8 to Day 135/70/25.

There is also an internal contradiction in the witness statement at AC111.3 paragraph 14 where he says he doesn't know where the two others were dragged to and at AC111.4 paragraph 25, where he states that he thought they and Michael Kelly had been dragged to the same place i.e. the gable end of Glenfada Park North.

xiii As was pointed out to the witness at Day 135/108/10 to Day 135/108/19 there is no support for his proposition that the two males and Michael Kelly were taken to the gable wall by P638.

xiv The witness description of Michael Kelly's injury is not consistent with the close view and proximity that he claimed. Day 135/109/11 to Day 135/110/20. In addition his correction of his initial description of the wound from a pinhole to a small hole is still not credible on the nature of the wound given that he said in evidence it was about the breadth of a cigarette end maybe larger. Day 135/103/3 to Day 135/103/19.

xv His account of a tray of petrol or nail bombs is wholly unsubstantiated or corroborated at that time and location and is not credible. When questioned on whether they were nail bombs or petrol bombs he said that they were nail bombs even though he told Eversheds they were petrol bombs or nail bombs. He claimed he should not have said that to Eversheds. Day 135/110/21 to Day 135/115/15.

xvi The description by the witness of his exit and route from Glenfada Park through William Street etc. was the opposite direction from the account contained in his 1972 statement. Day 135/119/23 to Day 135/120/16.

xvii The witness indicated at AC111.4 paragraph 26 that he was "long gone" by the time of the scene depicted in photograph AC111.21 which had been taken before the soldiers had entered the square in Glenfada Park North. Earlier at AC111.3 paragraph 14 he appeared to indicate he had been there by indicating that he heard lads shout "the bastards are coming through."

xviii The witness was further challenged regarding AC111.4 paragraphs 27 to 29 and his account of a shooting incident on the night of Bloody Sunday in Beechwood Avenue. This is clearly a relevant matter for the Inquiry in assessing the general credibility of this witness. Day 135/129/20 to Day 135/137/23 and Day 135/153/12 Day 135/155/6.

18.3.2.44 The above submissions must cast considerable doubt on the reliability of the evidence of this witness and the Inquiry ought not to place reliance on his evidence, either in respect of seeing Michael Kelly bending down to pick up a stone, or engage in throwing stones with Mr. Craig and the alleged sighting of nail bombs in the location or locations suggested by the witness.

18.3.2.45 The witness Sean Eugene O'Neill, at AO65.8 claims to have been present at some stage in the afternoon at a number of important locations including the Rubble Barricade and was described by Counsel to the Inquiry in his opening statement at Day 24 as "a fleet-footed" witness. His testimony on Michael Kelly as a "regular rioter" is it is submitted utterly mistaken or false. The civilian evidence on the background and character of Michael Kelly is relied upon to oppose this suggestion. We also note his use of exactly the same description of some of the other deceased. In addition the weight of the civilian evidence clearly refutes such a suggestion. His failure to give evidence deprives the families of the opportunity to refute his suggestions directly and it is submitted that the Inquiry should attach no weight to his evidence.

18.3.2.46 The evidence of Ciaran Donnelly, the Irish Times Staff Photographer, appears at M22.21 and Day 71. At M22.21 paragraph 6 he stated: "I took up a position behind the barricade to take some photographs. This was on a pram ramp at the North Eastern corner of Glenfada Park South. The witness confirmed he would have taken EP27.6 and EP27.7 from this location. Day 071/30/16 to Day 071/32/6. He saw a lad in his late teens come out from behind block 1 of the Rossville flats and run towards the Pigs taunting the soldiers. At this point two soldiers came from behind one of the Pigs and chased him. He then saw two other soldiers, who had also come from the area of block 1, catch him and then drag him away. It was at this point that he heard what he thought to be two live rounds. People on the barricade ducked and he heard someone shout "don't run away - they are only firing blanks." The witness thought that it was the two shots he heard or baton rounds being fired which might have caused the figures to duck in the photograph. Day 071/32/7 to Day 071/32/18. There were about eight to ten youths standing on the top of the barricade and one of them, standing on the left of the barricade as he looked at it (the Glenfada Park North side) had his arms in the air and was taunting the Army. Whilst he did see some youths at the barricade throwing stones at the Army, at no stage did he ever see any weapons fired at the Army or any petrol or nail bombs thrown. Nor did he see any weapons at all at the barricade. Day 071/27/13 to Day 071/27/16.

18.3.2.47 At M22.21 paragraph 8 about two to three minutes after he heard the first two live rounds he saw the youth on the left of the barricade who was taunting the soldiers fall to the ground. The witness was at the barricade taking either EP27.8 or EP27.9 at the time. The witness stated: "This man was standing on the barricade, maybe just in front of it. I think he fell to the William Street side of the barricade. I am not sure though, it is a long time ago." Day 071/29/12 to Day 071/30/1. The youth had just been standing when he fell. WT2.82F. People immediately ran to help him. His reaction was that he could not believe the Army were firing live rounds. He then saw another guy fall on the other side of the barricade i.e. the Rossville Flats Block 1 side, and thought, "I am getting out of here". The interval between the shooting was maybe one to two minutes, maybe less than a minute. Day 071/28/15 to Day 071/29/2. He said that when the man fell on the west side, he, Mr Donnelly, took cover behind Glenfada Park North. Then, as the crowd rushed to the aid of the man who had been shot, he said that there was another two or four shots and a man fell on the opposite side of Rossville Street, that is to say on the east side. The witness confirmed he did not actually see the man fall. Day 071/36/17 to Day 071/37/3. Somebody shouted "they have got another man" and a crowd gathered around that man too. Mr Donnelly told Lord Widgery that he did not actually see the second man fall and he presumed that he was dragged into the Rossville Street flats. Then a crowd of youths ran around the corner of Glenfada Park, that must be the gable end, shouting that the Army was coming again and Mr Donnelly ran round the corner too. He then said that he saw the body of the man whom he had seen fall being carried out, over from the barricade to Glenfada Park and then across the car park of Glenfada Park North towards the west. He took a picture of that which appears at EP27.10.

18.3.2.48 At WT2.84 E the witness, in response to a suggestion from Counsel that shots were fired from the area where the man fell, answered: "I was there, and if I was 15 yards at the most from these people I would know if someone was shooting near me, and the first thing I would do would be to run away, because I would not want to be caught in it." At WT3.7 he put the first shot towards the barricade some four or five minutes after the Paras came in and after the troops had gone into the Rossville flat courtyard on the eastern side.

18.3.2.49 The following submissions are made on the evidence of this witness:

i As the Inquiry will note Michael Kelly is not identified by any witness in either photograph EP27.8 or EP27.9. It is submitted that certainly close to the time he was shot he was not on or close to the barricade as part of this group facing the army.

ii With regard to the witnesses suggestion that the young man he saw shot on the west of the barricade had his arms in the air taunting the army it is noted the witness described it as "just the standard sort of what you see at football matches". Day 071/26/23. It is clear that the witness's suggestion of "taunting" whatever that amounted to did not appear in his Widgery evidence. At WT2.84 F the witness describes the man he saw as "not doing anything at all. He was not even throwing stones at that time".

18.3.2.50 Removal of Michael Kelly from Rubble Barricade

Michael Kelly was removed from the Rubble Barricade in circumstances where firing continued from the Army down Rossville Street. Whilst Michael Kelly was being carried through Glenfada Park, shooting resumed from soldiers who had entered the park from the north east entrance. These soldiers were the members of Anti-Tank Platoon, who had been at the Rubble Barricade.

18.3.2.51 Michael Kelly was lifted from where he fell by a number of people. Charles McLaughlin was one of the people who carried Michael Kelly from the Rubble Barricade into Glenfada Park North. At AM321.3 paragraph 8 of his statement he described his position at the gable wall (that is of Glenfada Park North) where he could see the rubble barricade going across Rossville Street from near where he was standing to block 1 of the Rossville Flats. He saw a young boy lying on his back on the concrete on the Free Derry Corner side of the rubble barricade, near to Glenfada Park North. The position as marked at AM321.6 with an X is close to where other witnesses have placed Michael Kelly. He thought there were other people near the rubble barricade but no one was near the boy. He thought that the boy had fallen with his head towards the barricade and his feet towards himself. He ran out and tried to lift him. The boy had long curly hair and was wearing a white shirt. He did not notice what else he was wearing. He could have been wearing a jacket over the shirt. He found him to be so heavy that he could not lift him on his own. He was crouched down and shots were being fired all around him at this point. He assumed it was the soldiers at the back of the APC's parked in Rossville Street. Day 177/79/14 to Day 177/79/18. The six or seven people huddled against the gable wall were watching him. He shouted at them "Christ, will you fucking come out and help me?" A man he now knows to be Father Bradley came out to help. At AM321.3 paragraph 9 the witness described trying to lift the boy. "Bullets were whizzing down Rossville Street from a northerly direction and we were crouching low to avoid being hit." As he lifted the boy he saw blood start to stain red through the front of his shirt. The blood spread out in a large circle over his chest. He did not realise that the boy had been shot until they lifted him and he saw the blood. Until then he had thought that the soldiers had just been firing over people's heads. He was shocked when he realized that the boy had been shot. The boy was drifting in and out of consciousness when they picked him up. He never spoke.

18.3.2.52 At AM321.3 paragraph 10 the witness described the movement of soldiers and civilians at this time: "As we were lifting the boy, I saw Paras walking alongside the Saracens which were advancing south down Rossville Street towards the rubble barricade. Shooting was coming from all directions by this point. People were completely panicked. Some people were desperately trying to get into the entrance to block 1 of the Rossville flats. From the gable wall I had seen people lined up in the shelter of the shops at the rear (Free Derry Corner side) of block 2 of the Rossville flats. I had also seen hundreds of people hiding in gardens behind wooden fences in Glenfada Park North. All the people that I saw around the rubble barricade had their backs to the advancing soldiers. I did not see any civilian gunmen in the area. The people were clearly panicked and were running away from the Rubble Barricade towards Free Derry Corner." Although this witness refers to being assisted by Father Bradley, Father Bradley himself referred to being restrained from going out to the boy, rather than carrying him. The witness recalls carrying the young boy with Father Bradley over the concrete flags towards the gable wall. As they were carrying the boy, one of the men sheltering there came out. The witness then recalls George Downey coming towards them and saying "Jesus that is my brother-in-law". The three of them carried the boy to the shelter of the gable wall.

18.3.2.53 At AM321.4 paragraph 12 he stated that after he had carried Michael Kelly to the gable wall he became aware of more firing into the courtyard of Glenfada Park North. He was still wearing his handkerchief and knew that he could be identified as a rioter. As the young boy was now in safe hands - with his brother-in-law and Father Bradley - he decided to escape from the area as fast as he could. As he left the gable wall, he heard Father Bradley begin to give the boy the last rites. He ran through Glenfada Park North to the southwestern corner running in a zig-zag pattern to avoid being hit by flying bullets. As he ran he saw two Paratroopers enter the Glenfada Park North car park through the northeast corner. Day 177/86/16 to Day 177/87/2. The witness said one was firing sporadically from the hip and the other from a standing position. The witness was aware of bullets from both soldiers coming past the witness, splitting the wooden fences while he was running behind him to the left and to the side of him. Day 177/87/18 to Day 177/89/7.

18.3.2.54 Father Denis Bradley, as he then was, gave evidence to Lord Widgery and his statement to this Inquiry is at H1.1 to 79. He gave evidence on Day 140. He told Lord Widgery that he reached Glenfada Park having come there from Columbcille Court to the north. Whilst he was there a number of people came rushing in off Rossville Street. When he asked what the matter was they said that the Army had come. Within seconds of his question he heard gunfire and saw a man, who turned out to be Michael Kelly, lying on the ground at the entrance to the car park of Glenfada Park, almost immediately opposite the entrance to the high flats, about ten yards away from him. He rushed over to Michael Kelly and administered the last rites. He saw no sign of a weapon. During the incident there was shooting going on which the witness had the impression was from the William Street end of Rossville Street. He then asked people to take Michael Kelly to some place to get attention and it was after that that he was lifted and taken to the far end of the Glenfada Park car park. A number lifted him up on their shoulders and began to carry him away down another small alleyway which exited out of Glenfada Park North to Abbey Park at the south western corner. H1.9 paragraph 23.

18.3.2.55 Joseph Donnelly was born and raised in Liverpool and after serving in the Royal Navy for nine years, moved to Derry in 1964. At AD124.3 paragraph 10 he described entering Glenfada Park North by the entrance at the north east corner, at grid reference I13 on the plan attached to his statement. He was facing south looking towards the wooden fence which ran west to east along the south side of the Glenfada Park North courtyard. There were very few people in Glenfada Park North at the time but he could see a group of people standing by the gable wall at the southern end of the east block of Glenfada Park North. Paddy Doherty (not the man shot on Bloody Sunday) and himself went over to see what was going on. He began to assist a man called Mr Liddy who was in difficulties. He was standing just south of the gable wall. He was hunched over in some pain and was being assisted by two men. He [Mr Liddy] told him he had been hit in the chest by a rubber bullet. There was a group of people standing at the Rubble Barricade but he did not pay much attention to them as he was helping Mr Liddy. He was also turned slightly away from Rossville Street in order to give Mr Liddy his full attention.

18.3.2.56 There was gunfire at this time but he thought it was just rubber bullets that were being fired. He was not aware of anyone throwing stones or other missiles from the area around the Rubble Barricade. He did not hear any nail bombs or other bombs going off. In fact, throughout the day, he did not recall seeing a single person carrying or throwing a nail bomb, acid bomb or petrol bomb. AD124.3 paragraph 12. He then heard the crack of three shots being fired, one after another, and he could tell these to be live bullets from the sound they made. He was not sure from where these bullets were fired. Mr Liddy looked over his shoulder towards the Rubble Barricade and said "That man needs you more than I do". He turned and saw a young man lying on his back, face up, next to the barricade. He had been shot in the stomach. He was told that this man was called Michael Kelly. He assumed that one of the shots that he had just heard had hit him. A group of men standing around Michael Kelly were going to pick him up to carry him to safety.

He told them instinctively not to do so as they could increase the severity of his injury. He heard at least ten live shots being fired, which were directed at the people behind the Rubble Barricade. The witness confirmed these shots came down Rossville Street from the direction of William Street. Day 128/95/7 to Day 128/95/14.

18.3.2.57 There were no nail bombs or guns lying around Michael Kelly. He could see no reason why Michael Kelly should have been shot. AD124.4 paragraph 14. According to the witness about six men picked up Michael Kelly and ran with him from the Rubble Barricade west into Glenfada Park North despite his warning. They were going to carry him to the safety of Glenfada Park North. He did not recall seeing them put Michael Kelly down on the way but accepts that he was put down. Day 128/96/18 to Day 128/96/22. He followed them, taking off his tie as he went. He was going to use his tie to try to stem the bleeding from Michael's stomach. The witness confirmed this scene as it appeared in EP23.11 and identified himself in the photograph. There was then a large number of people in Glenfada Park North. He thought that most of these people had previously been standing by the Rubble Barricade and then sought shelter in Glenfada Park North. The witness also appears in EP27.11. He identified himself in this photograph as the man with quite a bushy sideburn, just to the left of the window. He also identified James Wray. This group appears to be carrying the body of Michael Kelly as Michael Kelly's body does not appear to the south of the gable end wall at this stage. EP27.10 shows Michael Kelly's body being carried across Glenfada Park North, with the witness, Joseph Donnelly, identifying himself on the right-hand side of the group as turning towards Michael Kelly. He is the figure with the sideburns and the tie to which he referred.

18.3.2.58 At AD124.4 paragraph 17 the witness described making his way west across Glenfada Park North, when three Paratroopers entered Glenfada Park North from the northeast entrance. The crowd carrying Michael Kelly almost dropped him in panic at the sight of the soldiers and he slipped down in between their arms. The witness took him in his arms and carried him on his own. He did not seem heavy. At AD124.4 paragraph 18 the witness described Michael Kelly as being still alive at this stage. As he got hold of him he noticed that one of the soldiers was taking up a firing position. He was kneeling on the ground with his rifle at his shoulder and was aiming towards them. The two other soldiers had their rifles at waist height. All three soldiers fired shots at the crowd. He thought that the soldiers who had weapons at waist height had, roughly, only a 20% chance of hitting him, but he was afraid of the third soldier who knelt down. The witness confirmed he thought the three of them were firing at them since the sound came from the three of them. Day 128/99/20 to Day 128/99/25. At AD124 paragraph 19 the witness described the scene thus: "I ran across Glenfada Park North towards the entrance to Abbey Park carrying Michael. Paddy was running beside me to my right and Michael's brother-in-law, George Downey, ran in front of us. I am sure that had there not been so many people in Glenfada Park North the soldiers would have had a clear shot at me and I am in no doubt that I would have been fired at. As it was bullets were flying past me and hitting the wooden fence, which was splintering. The soldiers seemed absolutely determined to hit someone. I was in no doubt that I was running for my life". The witness confirmed that there was no threat to the soldiers or anyone apart from a soldier with a firearm. Day 128/100/8 to Day 128/100/10.

18.3.2.59 Paddy Doherty, the man referred to in the evidence of Joseph Donnelly, gave evidence at Day 157 of the Inquiry and his statement appears at AD97.2. At the Rubble Barricade the witness saw a man struck by a rubber bullet in the chest. The witness identified himself in the photograph EP27.6 and marked himself on AD97.12. Also in P638, P641 and P642 and at AD97.14. The witness confirmed his presence with Mr. Donnelly in Glenfada Park North assisting with carrying Michael Kelly. After the shooting began people scattered, leaving about three of them, who continued to take Michael Kelly to a house in Abbey Park. He heard the shooting but did not see the soldiers himself. He was running for his life. AD97.3 paragraphs 7 to 11 and Day 157/159/7 to Day 157/160/5.

18.3.2.60 Pearse McCall was one of those who carried Michael Kelly across Glenfada Park North. His statement appears at AM93.1. He accepted in his oral evidence on Day 164 that he could be mistaken on a number of issues in his Eversheds statement, AM93.1. These included the number of soldiers in a snatch squad and whether he had seen soldiers coming down as far as free Derry Corner on Bloody Sunday, or on another date. He did maintain that he saw soldiers lined across Rossville Street north of the Barricade on the day. No stones were thrown from the Rubble Barricade, although there was some shouting at the soldiers which was not unusual. At AM93.3 paragraph 11 he described an intense burst of rubber bullet fire which lasted for a few minutes. Bullets were bouncing off the Rubble Barricade. After no more than three to four minutes Seamus Friel and the witness were about to leave the barricade, when live shots were fired. No more rubber bullets were fired. It was sustained live fire and worse than the intense rubber bullet fire.

18.3.2.61 At AM93.3 paragraph 12 he described running to the southern gable end of the eastern block of Glenfada Park North as soon as the live shots were fired. There were about fifteen to sixteen people sheltering there. From his position he could see people sheltering behind fences of houses in Glenfada Park North. He then described the scene as follows: "I saw three to four bodies lying in Rossville Street to the south of the rubble barricade. One man was lying at the edge of the footpath near the gable end of Glenfada Park North. He had fallen forward with his head pointing north and his feet pointing south, although I am not certain about this. I cannot remember what he was wearing. Another man was lying about one to two feet further east along the rubble barricade, but I do not remember much about him. I did not realise that the two men had been shot because I could not see any blood on their bodies. I cannot remember anything about the other bodies on the Rubble Barricade". At AM93.3 paragraph 13 he went on to describe fetching one of the bodies lying near the Rubble Barricade with the help of one or two other people. He was not sure which body it was. They could not drag the man by his feet so they turned him over and dragged him away by holding him under his arms. He did not see his injuries and he did not remember seeing anything in the man's hands, not even a stone. He was not sure whether they dropped him and could not remember where they left him. He then went on to describe picking up another body, which he recently found out was the body of Michael Kelly. They each took hold of one of his legs and possibly his shoulder and carried him from the Rubble Barricade west toward and through the Glenfada Park North car park. He saw the bullet entry wound in his abdomen and he recalled the clothing on his back felt very wet. The witness identified himself in the photograph which shows him helping to carry Michael Kelly west through the Glenfada Park car park EP27.10. He identified himself as the man without a beard, whose face is facing the cameraman, carrying Michael Kelly.

18.3.2.62 At Day 164/87/9 to Day 164/88/11, the witness accepted that it could be the case that it was only one person that he helped to take from the barricade and across Glenfada Park, and that it could have been the situation that that he took in Michael Kelly and then picked him up again. As regards seeing a number of bodies at the Rubble Barricade the witness accepted that the persons he saw were just people who had simply fallen or dropped to the ground when the gunfire started. Day 164/106/16 to Day 164/106/22. He also accepted it could well be that rather than carrying two people from the Rubble Barricade it was likely that he helped carry Michael Kelly on the two occasions rather than two separate bodies on two occasions. Day 164/110/9 to Day 164/110/18.

18.3.2.63 At AM93.3 paragraph 15 he described being at a point just before the southwest entrance to the alleyway leading into Abbey Park. He looked up and saw two soldiers sauntering into the car park from the direction of Rossville Street through the alleyway at the northeast corner of Glenfada Park North. They were both tall soldiers, approximately the same height. The witness believes that they may have been wearing face paint but he may be wrong about this. He was unsure if they had facial hair or what they were wearing on their heads, although they may have been wearing helmets with the visors raised. The soldier on the left was holding his rifle at his chest in a very casual fashion "like John Wayne". The soldier on his right was holding his rifle higher up. The witness did not see them shoot, but had no doubt in his mind that they were about to start shooting. As soon as he saw the soldier, he must have either dropped Michael Kelly on the ground or put him down somewhere in the car park. Seamus Friel and the witness started to run towards the northwest corner of Glenfada Park North. He was unsure where the other person who had helped him to carry Michael Kelly was. The gunfire started almost immediately and the witness recognised different types of gunfire and the distinct crack of Army rifle fire[4].

18.3.2.64 The following submissions are made on the above evidence:

i. There was no-one at the Rubble Barricade with a fire-arm.

ii. There was nothing being thrown apart from some stones.

iii. No-one at or around the barricade was carrying a nail-bomb or a petrol bomb.

iv. Shooting continued towards the barricade as Michael Kelly was being carried into Glenfada Park North.

[4] George Downey, who was Michael Kelly's brother in law, was at the gable end of Glenfada Park North and saw a body at the barricade, which turned out to be Michael Kelly. He also assisted in carrying Michael Kelly from the south gable of Glenfada Park North. He identified himself in EP27.10 with his face obstructed. He described extensive firing, he assumed, from a soldier who had emerged from the alley into the north eastern corner of Glenfada Park North. AD13.4 paragraph 22. At Day123/47/1 to Day 123/47/17 he described tripping and Michael Kelly being picked up by Joseph Donnelly.

v. There was no nail bombs or weapons near Michael Kelly lying at the barricade.

vi. As Michael Kelly was being carried through Glenfada Park North, civilians and those assisting him were fired on by a soldier or soldiers, who had emerged from the alleyway at the northeast corner of Glenfada Park.

18.3.2.65 The removal of Michael Kelly to 8 Abbey Park.

At AD134.5 paragraph 25, George Downey described Michael Kelly being taken into 8 Abbey Park and described seeing two people, a man and a woman, looking out of the window of the first house in the row, which lay immediately to the west of Glenfada Park South. Although he did not know them at the time, the couple in the window was Mr and Mrs Carr. He motioned to Mr and Mrs Carr to open their front door. AD134.5 paragraph 26. He headed for the door and almost flattened Mrs Carr as he burst in with Michael and the Englishman. Michael was carried into the living room and laid down very gently. He still did not know where he was hit. He knelt down beside him and asked Mrs Carr to draw the blinds. He could still hear shots from outside and he did not want them to be seen by the soldiers.

18.3.2.66 As Michael lay with his head facing the living room window, he examined him and noticed a spot of blood on his shirt and pulled it out of his trousers where he had it tucked in. He saw a bullet entry wound which was no bigger than the tip of a little finger on the left-hand side to his waist line. He slipped his hand round his back to check for the exit wound. There was none. He then asked Mrs Carr for something to clean and bind the wound. She gave him a white baby-grow which he wrapped around Michael's waist and then knotted. He seemed to me to be in shock and his lower arms were extremely cold, he was drained white. AD134.5 paragraph 27. After between five and ten minutes a Knight of Malta girl came into the Carr's living room. He did not know the name of the Knight of Malta girl but he recollected that she had a bad leg and limped. She knelt down and examined Michael and his wound. They redressed the wound using bandages and cotton wool. He asked her how Michael was. She replied that he was not too good and was in shock. She told him that he had better start praying. He knelt forward and said an act of contrition in Michael's ear. AD134.6 paragraph 30.

18.3.2.67 At AD124 paragraph 20 Joseph Donnelly described running through the alleyway to the south-west corner of Glenfada Park North which leads into Abbey Park. George (Downey) ran to number 8 Abbey Park which was directly opposite the alleyway. George was shouting to the occupant to let them in. He described being let into the house and the lady of the house fetching a sheet which was torn into strips to use as bandages. At AD124 paragraph 23 he described Michael Kelly as wearing a shirt with a T-shirt underneath which he pulled up so that he could find out where he had been shot and put pressure on the wound to try the stop the bleeding. He could see the entrance wound of the bullet in the stomach. The skin around the entry wound was blue. Michael was still alive at this time.

18.3.2.68 Conclusion.

The weight of the relevant civilian evidence confirms overwhelmingly that Michael Kelly was the first person killed at the Rubble Barricade, in circumstances which provided no justification whatsoever for his shooting by Soldier F. He was unarmed and neither he nor any person around him was engaged in any activity which could have led Soldier F to conclude that his own life or anyone else's was in danger.

18.3.2.69 John Kelly, the brother of Michael Kelly, in his evidence at AK13.3 paragraph 9 and Day 167 described having been in the vicinity of the body of Gerard McKinney facing 8 Abbey Park. His brother-in-law

George Downey shouted to him. George Downey was coming out of no.8 and was carrying a body. Mr Downey said it was Michael and he had been shot. Together with Mr. Downey and George Cooley, his other brother-in-law, he helped carry Michael through the alleyways between Glenfada Park North and Glenfada Park South to an ambulance. John travelled in the ambulance to Altnagelvin hospital and Michael was pronounced dead at Casualty.

18.3.3 Injuries sustained

18.3.3.1 The post mortem examination was carried out by Doctor Marshall at 19.00hrs hrs.(E2.68) The report of Doctor Shepherd and Mr O'Callaghan appears at E2.40, E2.41 with the accompanying diagram at E2.76. The morgue photographs are in Bundle P2 Tab2 (P41 to P54) inclusive.

18.3.3.2 Michael Kelly was struck by a single bullet which entered the left side of his abdomen "side on", most probably with the nose of the bullet pointing upwards and to the right and the base downwards, indicating that the bullet was unstable. Internal injuries were caused to the bowel, main artery and vein supplying the left leg, lumbar vertebrae and the sacrum. The bullet lodged in the sacrum so there was no exit wound. Cause of death was internal haemorrhage. A 7.62 mm calibre bullet was recovered and later traced to Soldier F's rifle.

18.3.3.3 No description of the angle of the wound track was given in Dr Marshall's notes or in the main report but, as appears from the Opinion, the direction of travel of the bullet appears to have been from front to back, left to right at 20° and downwards at 30°. This is consistent with him facing the shooter and stooping slightly, not unlike the way he was seen stooping in photograph P635.

18.3.3.4 According to Mr O'Callaghan, the fact that the bullet was unstable when it struck Michael Kelly was consistent with it having struck someone or something before it struck him (Day 230/18/18 to Day 230/18/21). However, Dr. Martin found no evidence of damage to the bullet (D0040). According to Mr O'Callaghan, no conclusions can safely be drawn from the X-ray of the bullet. (Day 230/19/6 to Day 230/19/10).

18.3.3.5 Counsel to the Inquiry explored the possibility of the bullet having struck stone, wood, metal or human bone without sustaining visible damage. In each case, Mr O'Callaghan said that he would have expected damage but it all depended on the severity of the impact (Day 230/19/17 to Day 230/22/1). Dr Shepherd said that the most likely reason for the instability of the bullet was some prior contact but did not think it was possible to say whether this was because of a ricochet or because it had travelled through some object. (Day 229/7/7 to Day 229/7/11). However, he thought that the relatively pristine state of the bullet suggested that it was a very shallow contact or no contact at all. (Day 229/78/24 to Day 229/79/1).

18.3.4 Removal to hospital

18.3.4.1 George Downey described how, together with John Kelly and George Cooley, he subsequently carried Michael Kelly to an ambulance in Glenfada Park North and accompanied him to Altnagelvin Hospital. Gerard McKinney and possibly Joe Mahon were also taken in this ambulance along with a number of relatives and first aid personnel. The ambulance had been called at 4.30pm and arrived at Glenfada Park at 4.37 pm. The ambulance reached hospital at 5.00pm. The journey took about 10 to 15 minutes maybe shorter. Michael Kelly was examined by a Consultant in the casualty Department. His words were "I'm sorry." AD134.7 paragraph 39.

18.3.5 Forensic Evidence

18.3.5.1 As appears from the table in Dr Lloyd's report at E1.30 setting out details of Dr Martin's tests, the tests for lead were positive in that one particle was found on swabs from the left hand, 29 on the jacket surface and 11 on the trouser surface. None was found on the right hand.

18.3.5.2 During his testimony at the Widgery Tribunal, Dr. Martin said the results were consistent with exposure to a firearm discharge and was prepared to accept the suggestion that these results could have been due to the use of a gun in a gloved right hand. (WT9/14B and WT9/31D) Dr Lloyd regarded that explanation as "of doubtful credibility" (E1.44 paragraph 8.7.2a). He thought it improbable that the distribution of particles could have been produced by Michael Kelly's proximity to a person who was discharging a gun. (E1.44 paragraph 8.7.2b) More generally, Dr Lloyd concluded that the absence of controlled testing nullified any evidential significance that Dr Martin's results might have had (E1.25 paragraph 8.1.g). Bearing in mind the likelihood of spurious contamination, he considered that Dr Martin's results were "worthless" (E1.52 paragraph g) In his oral testimony, Dr Martin agreed. (Day 226/2/6 to Day 226/2/22)

18.4 Hugh Gilmore

18.4.1 Personal Details and Background

18.4.1.1 Hugh Gilmore was 17 when he was murdered on Bloody Sunday. He was from Block2 of the Rossville Flats at 21 Garvan Place. He was the youngest in a family of eight children, four sisters and four brothers. His ambition was to be a mechanic and he had been working for the Northern Tyre company for approximately 18 months before he was shot. Neither he nor his family had any political affiliations.

18.4.1.2 The photograph of Hugh Gilmore running fatally wounded with nothing in his hands towards the doorway of Block1 on Rossville Street is one of the most famous images of Bloody Sunday. EP23.9A

18.4.1.3 Relevant Photographs

The following are photographs of Hugh Gilmore taken on Bloody Sunday:

18.4.2 Civilian Evidence in relation to Shootings

Summary

18.4.2.1 The civilian evidence in respect of Hugh Gilmore's actions and movements on Bloody Sunday is often confused in relation to location and whether or not he was involved in stone throwing. Two possible explanations can be advanced for these apparent inconsistencies.

Firstly, rioters were generally young fleet footed individuals who rarely, if ever occupied a static role. Traditional and acknowledged territorial positions permitted a fluidity of constant movement from one location to another. This was particularly so in a situation where soldiers had advanced to a position and in a manner which up until the events of Bloody Sunday was unprecedented.

Secondly, unlike the military witnesses, the civilian witnesses were exposed to sudden and unexpected incidents of horrendous violence. For virtually all, the experience was both traumatic and shocking. Most people who were present were gripped in fear as they watched unarmed teenagers being randomly shot with high velocity weapons.

18.4.2.2 The civilian evidence in respect of the exact location and position of Hugh Gilmore when he was shot appears at times to be confusing and irreconcilable. Twelve witnesses actually claim to have seen him shot. Of these, three placed him in a different position in their Eversheds statement than had appeared in their 1972 evidence (Sean MacDermott, Eamon Melaugh and Geraldine Richmond).

Other factors which add to the confusion concern the following:

i) The preferred conclusion reached by the Inquiry's experts was that Hugh Gilmore was shot twice.

ii) Hugh Gilmore continued running after being shot and at least one witness, Margaret Patterson appeared to have mistaken his falling over with his actually being shot.

iii) Hugh Gilmore appears to have shouted "I am hit" on at least two separate occasions, a factor which may have led to confusion over the timing and location of the shooting.

18.4.2.3 Four witnesses, namely Sean MacDermott, Eamon Melaugh, PIRA 14 and PIRA 26 place Hugh Gilmore just north of the Rubble Barricade when he was shot. Geraldine Richmond, when providing her first account of this incident also shared this belief but now accepts that she may have been wrong about this.

Three witnesses, namely James Donal Deeney, James Green and Frank Mellon gave evidence that he was shot at the Rubble Barricade.

Four witnesses claim that Hugh Gilmore was running south down Rossville Street at the time when he was hit by a bullet and that he was close to the entrance of Block1. Geraldine Richmond and Michael McCusker indicate that he was slightly north of the entrance.

Margaret Patterson believed that he was south of the Barricade and level with the southwest corner of Block1. It will be recalled that Eamon Melaugh thought he was running south but that Hugh Gilmore was on the north side of the Barricade at the point of impact.

18.4.2.4 Kathleen Brown is the only witness to suggest that Hugh Gilmore was shot south of Block1 of the Rossville Flats. Her evidence in this regard it is submitted is incompatible with all of the other witnesses who saw him shot and with those who heard him shout "I am hit" as he cleared the entrance to Block1. Furthermore, she made no reference to having seen him shot in her 1972 statement and claimed that there was no-body else sheltering at the gable end at the time of the shooting, which again contradicts the evidence of those who were in this location when the soldiers opened fire in Rossville Street.

18.4.2.5 Finally, Alexander McFadden uniquely asserts that Hugh Gilmore was shot in the Rossville Flats car park as he attempted to make his way between Blocks 1 and 2. He gave oral evidence on Day 401 and remained adamant that it was Hugh Gilmore that he saw hit though he assumed at the time that it was a rubber bullet and not a live round. Day 401/161/10 to Day 401/161/17

Most of the witnesses who claimed to have seen Hugh Gilmore shot (nine) testified that he had been facing away from the soldiers on Rossville Street when the bullet hit him.

18.4.2.6 Kathleen Brown, James Green, PIRA 14 and PIRA 26 are the only witnesses to suggest that Hugh Gilmore was facing north towards the soldiers. It will be recalled that James Donal Deeney who had been listed in Christopher Clarke QC's "Summary of the Evidence in Relation to the Death of Hugh Gimore and Kevin McElhinney" is represented as suggesting that the deceased was facing north, in fact during his evidence the witness was unable to recall in which direction he was facing.

Six of the witnesses are clear that he was facing away from the soldiers at the time of the shooting. They include Geraldine Richmond, Frankie Mellon, Eamon Melaugh, Michael McCusker, Alexander McFadden and Margaret Patterson.

Sean MacDermott no longer claims to have actually seen him shot. In 1972 he claimed that Hugh Gilmore was at the Barricade when hit but did not specify the direction in which he was facing.

18.4.2.7 In summary, the evidence of those witnesses in respect of Hugh Gilmore who in our respectful submission are most important is illustrated in the table below:

Witness [1]	Location of HG when shot			Direction in which HG was facing		Reason for believing saw impact of bullet

[1] Bold ticks represent witness' 1972 evidence
[2] Unsure of direction in which HG was facing when shot; however, was facing south when shouted 'I'm hit'
[3] Did not give clear evidence on this point

18.4.2.8 It seems reasonable to assume that Hugh Gilmore was shot when he was at or near the Barricade close to the west side of Block1 Rossville Flats. The fact that a number of witnesses claim to have seen him shot whilst running south down Rossville Street is consistent with the position adopted by Messrs O'Callaghan and Shepherd, viz, that Hugh Gilmore was shot twice:

i) First, whilst on the north side of the Barricade; and
ii) Secondly, whilst either at or near it as he ran for safety.

18.4.2.9 Evidence shows that Hugh Gilmore commenced his "death run" from just north of the Barricade to just south of the entrance to Block1 where he collapsed with a serious abdominal gunshot wound. It may well be that Hugh Gilmore was shot first in the arm on or perhaps slightly north of the Barricade and then subsequently in the stomach, as he was running down the eastern side of Rossville Street. The first shot hitting the arm theory could be supported by Eamon Melaugh's evidence in that he claims to have seen Hugh Gilmore suddenly bend over and clutch his arm just north of the Rubble Barricade. Although he is the only witness to expressly suggest this, none of the other witnesses who actually saw him shot, (with the exception of PIRA 14 and PIRA 26) give any indication to the Inquiry where on his body they thought he had been hit. It will be recalled that in 1972 Sean MacDermott thought that Hugh Gilmore clutched his stomach but no longer has any recollection of this.

18.4.2.10 There was no evidence to suggest that Hugh Gilmore could not have run the distance between the northern end of the Barricade and the southern corner of Block1. If indeed it was suggested that the deceased could not have run this distance then it would give weight to the theory that he was shot at or near the entrance to Block1. There is a two-fold problem with this theory however:

i) Firstly, James Greene who claims to have seen Hugh Gilmore shot on the Barricade and who sees him running south down Rossville Street, had no recollection of seeing him shot a second time. Day 149/21/4

ii) Secondly, PIRA 14 confidently asserted that he saw a soldier fire two shots and as he did so a young man standing in front of him, slightly to his right clutched his stomach in a spasm. APIRA14.4 paragraph 21

18.4.2.11 A second possible conclusion could be that Hugh Gilmore was hit by two bullets either fired simultaneously or in quick succession. A number of witnesses, namely Geraldine Richmond, Eamon Melaugh, James Greene and PIRA 14 claimed to have heard two bullets fired at the time that Hugh Gilmore was hit. These descriptions however do not explain the discrepancies that exist between the statements. An explanation has been partially averred to at the outset.

18.4.2.12 The sudden and dramatic nature of this particular event occurred in an extremely short period of time within a relatively crowded street over a distance of approximately 50 yards. It would be more surprising that in these shocking and traumatic circumstances all the witnesses supplied consistent and stereotyped accounts of this particular event.

18.4.2.13 Timing of Events

Virtually all of the civilian evidence indicates that Hugh Gilmore was shot before William Nash, Michael McDaid and John Young, but in light of the sequence of photographs taken by Robert White it is likely that he was shot very soon after Michael Kelly, although the witnesses do not recall any bodies being on the Barricade at this stage.

18.4.2.14 The majority of witnesses suggest that Hugh Gilmore was shot before Kevin McElhinney although Don Carlin claims that McElhinney was already on the stair well of Block1 as Hugh Gilmore ran past Day 134/54/7. It is virtually certain that Mr Carlin was confused about the sequence of these events.

It is also tolerably clear that Hugh Gilmore was shot some time after the shootings of Jackie Duddy, Michael Bridge and Michael Bradley as a number of the witnesses who saw him running down Rossville Street had come from the Rossville Flats car park in an attempt to seek shelter from the shooting e.g. Mitchel McLaughlin, Donal Deeney and Patrick Kelly.

18.4.2.15 Position of the Soldier who Shot Hugh Gilmore

A number of witnesses claim to have actually seen the soldier who fired the shot or shots which struck Hugh Gilmore.

i) Kathleen Brown locates the soldier at the gable end wall of Glenfada Park North and describes him as quite a small soldier wearing a beret AB94.12 paragraph 11. Her evidence in respect of this matter is less that convincing and at best highly improbable given that it was unlikely that any soldier had made his way to that location at such an early stage in the events.

ii) Geraldine Richmond however AM45.4 paragraph 18 and Eamon Melaugh Day 143/84/3 to Day 143/84/7 shared the belief that the deceased was shot that the deceased was shot from the east side of the east block of Glenfada Park North or from the west side of Rossville Street.

iii) It will also be recalled that Michael McCusker AM160.5 paragraph 11, Donal Deeney and Robert White all thought that Hugh Gilmore had been shot by a soldier, positioned on Rossville Street north of the Rubble Barricade. Donal Deeney thought that the soldier was on the west side of the road AD26.12 paragraph 13 while Robert White suggested that the soldier was standing at the north gable end of Block1 Day 137/111/4 to Day 137/112/14, having seen a soldier in this location immediately after catching sight of the deceased.

iv) The most confident description of the soldier who fired the fatal shots into Hugh Gilmore came from PIRA 14 and PIRA 26. This evidence described Hugh Gilmore as being shot north of the Barricade APIRA 14.4 paragraphs 21 to 24 and APIRA26.4 paragraphs 25 to 27.

18.4.2.16 Movements After Being Shot

Witnesses concur that Hugh Gilmore died within minutes of being brought to the gable end, lying on the ground with his head resting in Geraldine Richmond's lap. A number of people attempted unsuccessfully to assist him by stemming the flow of blood from his stomach wound and administering mouth-to-mouth resuscitation.

The civilian evidence relating to where the deceased actually fell is much clearer than the evidence relating to the location that he was shot. All the evidence suggests that the deceased collapsed at or about a southerly position of the entrance to Block1 and he was then carried from there to the gable end of Block1 by a number of people. Eight witnesses support this conclusion. (See Table below)

Four witnesses however, suggest that Hugh Gilmore made it to the gable end on his own and a further two suggest that he collapsed in Rossville Street level with the south gable end Block1 and that he was dragged round the corner by those already sheltering at the gable end. Only one witness, James Quinn, suggests that Hugh Gilmore was carried from the Rubble Barricade to the south gable end.

18.4.2.17 Weapons

None of those who saw the deceased at any stage on Bloody Sunday before or after he was shot were asked by Counsel for the Soldiers whether or not Hugh Gilmore was carrying a weapon on the day. Counsel for the Inquiry asked this of this of only three witnesses, viz, Brendan Gallagher Day 147/208/16 to Day 147/208/22, Frank Mellon Day 151/144/25 to Day 151/145/16, PIRA 14 Day 421/48/17 to Day 421/49/1.

James Quinn and PIRA 26 were asked whether anyone at the barricade was armed but not whether the deceased was carrying a weapon. Both witnesses were clear that no-one was armed in this location. Day 179/57/9 to Day 179/57/19; Day 425/62/14 to Day 425/62/19.
This highlights a tacit understanding shared by everyone representing the interests of all parties that the deceased was unarmed.

18.4.2.18 Out of the twenty three witnesses who saw Hugh Gilmore alive, nineteen indicated that immediately before or after he was shot, he was unarmed. Twelve of these expressed these explicitly: Kathleen Brown AB94.14 paragraph 24, Don Carlin AC141.3 paragraph 15, Bernard Gallagher Day 147/208/22, James Greene AG54.4 paragraph 20, Liam Mailey M50.37, Geraldine Richmond AM45.8 paragraph 39, Eamon Melaugh Day 143/36/4 to Day 143/36/22, Frank Mellon AM399.13 paragraph 31 and Day 151/145/1 to Day 151/145/3, James Toye AT13.3 paragraph 12, Robert White AW399.6 paragraph 31, PIRA 14 Day 421/48/24 and PIRA26 Day 425/65/19 to Day 425/66/3.

18.4.2.19 It is also worth noting that two of these witnesses, James Greene and Bernard Gallagher also stated that there was no possible way that anyone could have mistakenly believed that Hugh Gilmore was armed with a gun or a bomb. A further nine of the twenty-three witnesses made a blanket statement that they had seen no civilian armed with guns or nail bombs on the day. None of the remaining witnesses claimed to have seen Hugh Gilmore armed, but merely made no mention of civilian weapons in their statements and were not questioned on this point by Counsel.

As a final point, not a single one of the twenty witnesses who saw Hugh Gilmore's body at the gable end was questioned by the soldiers' representatives or by the Inquiry as to whether there were any weapons on his person.

18.4.2.20 Key Witnesses

Sean MacDermott AM4 gave evidence on Day 144. This witness recalled that along with his friend Frankie Mellon, that he left the vicinity of Free Derry Corner and walked in a northerly direction to Rossville Flats. When they reached the flats they became aware of a riot in progress in or about the junction of William Street and Rossville Street. By the standards of the day this was not an unusual event and both he and Mr Mellon stood at the southern side of the Barricade and observed the riot from a safe distance. At or about this time, Hugh Gilmore approached their position from the doorway of Block1. They exchanged greetings and the deceased made his way in the direction of the riot. Mr MacDermott was unable to observe any soldiers within the vicinity at this point in time. However events were clearly moving quickly and within a short period someone shouted "They are shooting live rounds" AM4.3 paragraph 15.

18.4.2.21 The witness immediately crouched down, but was still unable to see any soldiers in or about his line of vision. Approximately thirty seconds later the witness provides the following description of events:

> "He was running unaided in a semi-crouched position along the east side of Rossville Street when I first caught sight of him, he was almost level with us on our side (the south side) of the Barricade. His approximate position when I first saw him is marked "A" on the map (AM4.8) (grid reference K15). He shouted "I'm hit, I'm hit". On hearing this, those gathered at the barricade turned to run towards Free Derry corner... but at that stage I assumed that Hugh Gilmore had been hit by a rubber bullet." AM4.3 paragraph 17

18.4.2.22 The witness then relates how he and Mr Mellon ran after the deceased. They caught up with Mr Gilmore at the south west corner of Block1 just as his knees seemed to give way from under him. Both he and Mr Mellon each took an arm and carried him to a position near the south west corner of the south facing gable end wall of the same Block. He further recalls seeing Geraldine Richmond standing at or about Hugh Gilmore's head and at some point Hugh's head resting in her lap. Geraldine Richmond was later taken away as she was crying hysterically. AM4.4 paragraph 21

18.4.2.23 The witness was never questioned about whether Hugh Gilmore was carrying any weapon or weapons not whether any such weapons were present on the Barricade. It is clear from this evidence that Hugh Gilmore was deliberately shot in circumstances where he presented no threat to the advancing soldiers.

18.4.2.24 Frankie Mellon AM399 gave evidence on Day 151. He can be seen in P441, P445, P663, P664, E14.9. Curiously Mr Mellon has no recollection of accompanying his friend Mr MacDermott to Free Derry Corner nor indeed returning from that location northwards towards the Barricade Day 151/136/17; Day 151/137/9 to Day 151/137/20.

His first recollection involves the witness walking through a "mini riot" towards the Barricade. A number of rioters were throwing stones at soldiers who by this stage had entered Rossville Street and who had conveniently thrown their missiles to one side in order to allow him access to the Barricade. The witness could not recollect seeing any arrests being made at this point Day 151/139/24 or of hearing or seeing any rubber bullets being fired Day 151/140/5.

18.4.2.25 Interestingly this witness expressed the opinion that the stone throwing was in effect "an empty protest" AM 399.3 paragraphs 12 to 13; Day 151/141/5. He recognised Hugh Gilmore as a stone thrower, observing him run a distance of 40 to 50 yards north of the Barricade and throw a stone in the direction of the Army Day 151/141/15. The witness was asked directly if Hugh Gilmore had a weapon:

> "Q. Did you see Hugh Gilmore with any weapon at all in his hand other than a stone?
> A. Hugh Gilmore did not have any weapon at all in his hand.
> Q. What about anybody else at the barricade?
> A. There was no weapons or any form of people have mentioned nail bombs or petrol bombs, there was nothing of that sort. All I saw was stones." (emphasis added) Day 151/145/1 to Day 151/145/7.

18.4.2.26 The witness went on to recall a number of Army vehicles speeding towards the Barricade. He remembered four to five soldiers jumping out of the lead pig via the back doors and beginning to fire immediately Day 151/148/2. When pressed on this matter he acknowledged he may have been mistaken about the timing of the arrival of the vehicles Day 151/148/23 to Day 151/149/13. However along with Geraldine Richmond the witness was adamant that the soldiers fired as soon as they emerged from the vehicles.

18.4.2.27 In relation to the location and timing of the bullet which struck Hugh Gilmore, the witness claimed that as he reached the Rubble Barricade that he heard two high velocity shots. He believed that he was on the southern side of the Barricade and that Hugh Gilmore was about three feet in front of him. He describes the event in the following way:

> "When I heard the two shots Hugh Gilmore was running fast, directly in front of me looking straight ahead. He was about three feet or so in front of me and had just got over the Rubble Barricade. The second shot hit him and as it did so he jumped up with the force, grasped his right side and said "I've been hit". He kept on running: it was the momentum that kept him going." AM 399.4 paragraph 17

18.4.2.28 The witness further recalled examining Hugh Gilmore at the south end of Block 1 and observing a small hole on the right of his upper torso. During his attempt to provide artificial respiration the deceased exhaled a large quantity of blood into the witness' mouth. This event caused Geraldine Richmond to scream hysterically. AM 399.4 paragraph 18

Mr Mellon went on to describe in graphic and distressing detail the full extent of Hugh Gilmore's injuries and his attempts to treat them. AM 399.4 paragraph 18 Surprisingly it is only at this point that the witness recalls his friend Sean MacDermott being present.

18.4.2.29 The witness was very properly questioned by Mr Clarke QC about the fundamental differences in the accounts offered by him and Sean MacDermott. The witness dealt with this line of enquiry in the following way:

"Q. The very fact Hugh Gilmore is shot beside you really predicates the whole of your recollection preceding it, does it not?

A. Not of itself. I do have a recollection, prior to Hugh Gilmore, of coming through that and over the barricade. So it is not that Hugh Gilmore places me in that context; I place myself there. But taking into account what you have just suggested and what Mr McDermott has suggested, there are possibilities and variations on the theme given the timescale, and I would not want to say or suggest that that was 100 per cent categorically sure, anything is possible. But I would equally not want, because of a lack of clarity, for it to detract from the real issue when I am speaking about Hugh Gilmore.

But I simply say, purely on the basis of logic, the fact that I was in that position meant I came across Rossville Street and ended up behind Hugh Gilmore. The other suggestion does not make sense to me. It would not make sense to me, simply from that point of view. But I do believe I came through that way, more than that I cannot give you really." Day 151/204/14 to Day 151/205/10

The weight to be attached to this explanation is further enhanced by the fact that when asked whether he had discussed his evidence with Mr MacDermott, unlike the military witnesses, Mr Mellon immediately admitted that such discussions had taken place and that they had agreed to disagree. It should be noted that these two men prior to these discussions had not seen each other for ten years. Day 151/197/25 to Day 151/198/12

18.4.2.30 It is important to recall that Mr Mellon was an eighteen year old student nurse attempting to describe a deeply traumatic event which was sudden, brief and extremely violent. Others have described the incident as "the most terrifying experience they had ever encountered."

Mr Mellon remains as consistent today as he was in 1972 in respect of the principal issue as it relates to Hugh Gilmore, viz:

> "I did not see anyone at all with nail bombs or petrol bombs that day. Hugh Gilmore was not carrying a weapon. He had nothing in his hands or his jacket.
>
> Hugh Gilmore's death really upset me because I knew him. We were not friends but not enemies. I was glad it was me who was with him when he died as I said a lot to him. I saw people killed that day and I have never seen death like a saw in such a short time. I have not been back in Derry since 1974." AM399.6 paragraphs 31 to 32

18.4.2.31 These sentiments were never challenged or questioned and therefore must be allowed to stand as a guiding beacon which highlights the truth of what really happened to Hugh Gilmore.

18.4.2.32 Geraldine Richmond AM45 gave oral evidence to the Tribunal on Day 145 and Day 146. She can be seen in photographs P818 and P820. She too was eighteen on Bloody Sunday. She recalled meeting Hugh Gilmore (who she did not know at the time) at the corner of William Street and Rossville Street. She went on to describe how along with Hugh Gilmore and another young man she ran in a southerly direction as the Army vehicles approached from Little James Street AM45.2 paragraph 9, Day 145/148/18 to Day 145/149/2.

She stated that the deceased and the other youth stopped and threw a single stone in the direction of the vehicles which were at this point stationary Day 145/146/20 to Day 145/147/13.

18.4.2.33 She recalled how three soldiers emerged from one of the vehicles, possibly the Ferret car. Day 145/151/21 to Day 145/152/3. As they fired, people began to run and shortly before they reached the Barricade Hugh Gilmore exclaimed "The bastards are killing us". People who were already on the Barricade were either throwing stones or standing idly around. Day 145/154/15 to Day 145/155/23.

The witness confirmed that before reaching the doors of Block1 she heard two distinct shots Day 145/155/24 to Day 145/156/5. She stated that as she crossed the Barricade the shooting was very fierce.

18.4.2.34 Geraldine Richmond had a clear recollection of the deceased stating "I'm hit" Day 145/158/12 to Day 145/158/21 The witness accepted in her oral evidence to this Inquiry that Hugh Gilmore could have cried out on two separate occasions that he was hit Day 146/6/10 to Day 146/6/16. This would be consistent with what she told Lord Widgery WT6.49E to WT 6.50B. She failed to see any sign of the deceased being hit before this point Day 145/156/6 to Day 145/156/8.

18.4.2.35 Her testimony before Lord Widgery in relation to the location which she believed Hugh Gilmore to have been initially shot, namely north of the Rubble Barricade differed from her Eversheds statement insofar as she now believed that the deceased was shot whilst running in a southerly direction between the Barricade and the entrance to Block1. It may be recalled that Counsel to the Inquiry suggested that this confusion could have arisen from the fact that Hugh Gilmore may have been shot twice, one before reaching the barricade and once afterwards. In fact the witness accepted the possibility that the deceased could have been struck both before and after Day 146/21/25 to Day 146/22/25.

18.4.2.36 Position of Soldier Who Shot Hugh Gilmore

Geraldine Richmond told the Tribunal she thought that the two bullets may have come from a position to the right. Day 145/158/12 to Day 145/158/20. She went on to say in her oral evidence that she believed the shots came from the vicinity of Glenfada Park North AM45.4 paragraph18; Day 145/159/4. It is submitted that the witness is mistaken in this regard due to the fact that no soldiers would have entered the Glenfada Park area at this stage. When asked in 1972 about the likely location from where the fatal shot came from the witness in her NICRA statement was inclined to the view that it had been discharged by one of the soldiers, possibly the one in the kneeling position, in Rossville Street AM45.23. In her Treasury Solicitor statement and her oral evidence to Lord Widgery she appeared to express no view as to where the shot came from AM45.24, WT6.61D - E. It submitted that Geraldine Richmond was an impressive and truthful witness but whose recollection of the likely source of the shot fails to provide any real assistance to the Tribunal. However her importance in respect of the principal issues remains untouched.

18.4.2.37 In light of her evidence we submit that Geraldine Richmond was clearly a truthful witness who had been significantly traumatised by the events of the day. This has been independently demonstrated by the descriptions of her reaction to the deaths of Hugh Gilmore and Barney McGuigan. The Tribunal will recall that the horror of this moment has been graphically recorded on the Grimaldi / North tape counter reference 37 minutes 53 seconds to 39 minutes M35.58, E3.0059. The hysteria of this witness as recorded requires no words or description and its effects remind the listener of the collective panic which enveloped the civilians at that location[5].

18.4.2.38 The integrity of this witness can be measured by her frank description of Hugh Gilmore throwing a stone before he reached the Barricade Day 145/31/14 to Day 145/31/25. It is worth noting that it was never suggested to her by anyone that the deceased was a gunman or that he was carrying anything such as a weapon.

18.4.2.39 It will be recalled that she categorically confirmed that the deceased was not carrying any weapons, that she saw nobody else with any form of weapon and that she did not hear any nail bombs explode. AM45.8 paragraph 39

PIRA 14, who on Bloody Sunday was "a very senior member[6]" of the PIRA attached to the command in Dublin, gave evidence to the Inquiry under subpoena on Day 421. His statement is found at APIRA 14.1.

18.4.2.40 PIRA 14 was in the area of Free Derry Corner along with his brother PIRA 26 and Colm Keenan. All three men were members of the Provisional IRA. He then approached the area of the Rossville Flats after hearing shots from the William Street end of Rossville Street. He assumed that these were rubber bullets and that something was happening in Rossville Street. Out of curiosity, Colm, his brother and PIRA 14 ran south towards the Rossville Flats to see what was going on.

---

[5] Voice authentication in oral evidence of Susan North Day 130/71/4 to Day 130/71/16

[6] Day 421/17

18.4.2.41 When he got to the barricade he was told that people had got shot although the witness did not see anyone who had been shot at that stage. He saw armoured vehicles at the William Street end of Rossville Street and soldiers moving towards Kells Walk APIRA 14.3 paragraph 16. He was also aware of other soldiers at the north end of Block1. APIRA 14 moved north of the Rubble Barricade whilst his brother and Colm Keenan stayed on the southern side of the Barricade APIRA 14.3 paragraph 17. All these men stayed on the eastern side of Rossville Street.

18.4.2.42 The witness confirmed that neither he, his brother or Colm Keenan were armed nor on active service and that he saw no other armed civilian at the Barricade or anywhere else APIRA 14.4 paragraph 22. Moreover there was nothing that could be mistaken for a gun Day 421/35/7 to Day 421/35 21. At no stage was it suggested to PIRA 14 by any of the Soldiers' Counsel that either he or any of his group was carrying or using weapons of any type.

There had been some stone throwing from the Rubble Barricade at the soldiers at the north end of Block1.

The witness said in his statement that there were about 50-60 people in the general area of the Barricade but in his oral evidence he said that he could not be sure although there were "upwards of 30" persons present Day 421/34/22 to Day 421/ 35/3.

18.4.2.43 Position of Soldier Who Shot Hugh Gilmore

PIRA14's brother drew his attention to one soldier in particular Day 421/42/21to Day 421/42/22. This soldier, who was near the ramp at Kells Walk, fired his rifle in the direction of Free Derry Corner from a position out in the open. Other soldiers were close by APIRA 14.3

paragraph 19. This same soldier then turned his rifle "in an arc" so that it pointed in the witness' general direction. The soldier's gun recoiled and the witness' impression was that the same soldier fired two shots in rapid succession. At this time PIRA 14 was standing on part of the Rubble on the northern side of the Barricade, close to Block 1 Day 421/40/16 to Day 421/40/25. Suddenly, Hugh Gilmore, who was slightly in front of the witness and to his left[7], clutched his stomach in a spasm. The witness' recollection was that Hugh Gilmore was facing towards the soldiers at the north end of Block1 when he was shot Day 421/48/25 to Day 421/49/17.

18.4.2.44 The witness thought that Hugh Gilmore had been shouting at the soldiers at the north end of Block1 and that he may have been throwing a stone at them although he could not be absolutely sure about this. He was standing either on the barricade itself, or just on the northern side standing on some rubble when he was hit APIRA14.4 paragraph 23. As soon as he was shot turned and ran southwards along the western side of Block1 APIRA14.4 paragraph 21. PIRA14 saw Hugh Gilmore stumble as he got to the end of Block 1 and he was then pulled around the corner.

18.4.2.45 As Hugh Gilmore ran off further bullets were fired that struck around and south of the Barricade APIRA14.4 paragraph 21;Day 421/50/19 to Day 421/ 51/21. PIRA14 was able to point out Colm Keenan in photographs EP23.9 and EP23.9A as being the man with his back to the camera, just to the right of Hugh Gilmore.

18.4.2.46 PIRA14 next saw Hugh Gilmore near the telephone box at the southern side of Block1. The witness provided a graphic and accurate account of Gilmore's stomach wound APIRA14.4 paragraph 24.

[7] PIRA14's Eversheds statement recorded that Gilmore was to his right but in oral evidence he said that this was incorrect and that he was in fact positioned to his left Day 421/45/4

It was not suggested by any of the interested parties that PIRA14 was giving untruthful or inaccurate evidence in respect of any of the events he described near the area of the Rubble Barricade.

Arguably the most confident description of the solder who fired the fatal shots was provided by this witness and his brother who gave evidence under the cipher PIRA 26. Surprisingly, neither witness was challenged about the very dramatic and thoroughly unjustified circumstances, which their description of the event disclosed.

18.4.2.47 PIRA 26 gave evidence on Day 425. He estimated that around 30 people were present in the area of the Rubble Barricade when soldiers opened fire. These civilians were generally milling about. The only person he saw throw a stone was Hugh Gilmore. He saw no-one in the vicinity of the Barricade who was armed with a weapon or anything which might be mistaken for a firearm such as a piece of wood or metal Day 425/62/8 to Day 425/62/19.

The witness could not recall seeing any army vehicles, however he did have a vivid recollection of seeing a soldier standing at the south end of Kells Walk by the pram ramp. This soldier appears to have already occupied this position when the witness arrived at a location just north of the Barricade Day 425/62/20 to Day 425/63/21.

18.4.2.48 He saw the soldier fire an estimated two to three shots Day 425/24/24 to Day 425/24/25. He was unable to say what this soldier was firing at. He then saw soldiers at the north end of Block1 Rossville Flats, it was at this group that he believed Hugh Gilmore "fired" a stone Day 425/65/8 to Day 425/65/20. This description was probed at some length by Counsel to the Soldiers however, it was difficult to identify the justification for this approach given that the expression enjoyed popular use among a number local witnesses[8].

18.4.2.49 He was directly asked if Mr Gilmore was armed with a weapon. He was also asked if Hugh Gilmore had any sort of weapon and the witness replied that he had not Day 425/65/25 to Day 425/66/3.The witness claimed that he was unable to see where the stone landed. However he did recall that as Hugh Gilmore threw the stone the soldier whom he had observed at Kells Walk and who was now standing with his rifle at his shoulder swung around in an arc and began shooting at their position Day 425/69/1 to Day 425/69/16.

PIRA 26 gave evidence to the effect that he did not see anyone other than Hugh Gilmore being shot Day 425/70/25 to Day 425/71/4.

18.4.2.50 Questions put on behalf of the Soldiers tended to focus upon general matters concerning the IRA rather than events of the day. The witness was never challenged in respect of his account outlining the circumstances in which Hugh Gilmore was shot. It was never at any time suggested to him that the size of the stone, shape or otherwise could have been mistaken for a more lethal device. It was never suggested that there were people in the vicinity of the Barricade brandishing weapons or items or objects which could have been mistaken for weapons. It was never suggested that nail bombs, blast bombs or petrol bombs were thrown or handled by anyone in the vicinity of the Barricade. Finally no attempt was made to justify the circumstances which led to a soldier or soldiers who fired the fatal shots at Hugh Gilmore.

18.4.2.51 Thomas Eamon Melaugh AM397 gave evidence on Day 143. This witness recalled the Army debussing in Rossville Street and in particular two rubber bullets being fired at him. He stated that he saw

[8] Day 135/126/22 evidence of Danny Craig; Day 135/126/22 evidence of Frankie Boyle

Hugh Gilmore walking down Rossville Street towards Free Derry Corner in a group of between two and five people. He stated that Hugh Gilmore appeared to suddenly bend over and touch his elbow at a location to the north of the Barricade on the eastern footpath running the length of Block1 AM397.4 paragraph 39. He recalled that Hugh Gilmore had not reached the level of the Rubble Barricade Day 143/37/14 to Day 143/37/24.

18.4.2.52 Although in his contemporaneous account which was a recorded interview that the witness listened to and confirmed that it was his own voice that could be heard, he placed Hugh Gilmore at the Barricade facing the Army when he was shot and that he heard two shots rang out. Hugh Gilmore then lurched forward from the waist AM397.70.

18.4.2.53 During the course of his evidence before this Inquiry he agreed that his 1972 account might be more accurate Day 143/39/10 to Day 143/39/22.

The witness confidently confirmed that as he was standing only a matter of feet from the deceased when he was shot, Hugh Gilmore at the time of impact was not involved in stone throwing, petrol bombing or shooting Day 143/36/13 to Day 143/36/22.

Eamon Melaugh stated that after being shot the deceased called out that he had been hit AM397.4 paragraph 41; AM397.70.

18.4.2.54 James Greene AG45 gave evidence to the Inquiry on Day 149.This witness confirms that he was at the Rubble Barricade when the soldiers first entered Rossville Street. He frankly admitted throwing stones in the direction of the soldiers in Rossville Street. He alleged that although the soldiers were safely out of range from stone throwers they nevertheless opened fire with high velocity weapons upon the group from which the stones were being thrown. He believed that there was approximately twenty to thirty people at the Rubble Barricade when Hugh Gilmore was shot Day 149/7/14. He stated that Hugh Gilmore was standing next to him facing north when he turned and said that he was "hit". Both of them immediately began to run southwards down Rossville Street. At some time the witness overtook Hugh Gilmore. He did not notice whether the deceased was a second time although he accepted it was possible that this may have happened when he was running ahead of him and before he looked back from the area of the entrance to Block1 Day 149/20/25 to Day 149/21/8.

This witness was unable to say which soldiers were firing Day 149/4/2 to Day 149/4/18 and did not specifically see the soldier who shot the deceased Day 149/17/1 to Day 149/17/8.

18.4.2.55 In keeping with the other witnesses, Mr Greene did not see any civilian with guns or nail bombs. He went on the express the very positive opinion that Hugh Gilmore was unarmed:

> "I did not see any nail bombs or guns during the day, other than the guns carried by the soldiers. I do not believe that Hugh Gilmore could have been mistaken as someone who was about to throw a nail bomb at the army when he was shot." AG54.4 paragraph 20

18.4.2.56 Michael McCusker AM160 gave evidence to the Tribunal on Day 148. He stated that he entered Rossville Street via the gap between Block1 and 2 and made his way to the Rubble Barricade where there was approximately ten to twelve people standing around. He briefly engaged John Young in conversation and was advised that a mutual friend, Michael Bradley had been shot in the Rossville Flats car park and had been moved to a house in Joseph Place. The conversation was interrupted when he heard live Army fire from the northerly direction in Rossville Street. He ran southwards along Block1 and in accordance with his Eversheds statement he saw a youth resembling the description of Hugh Gilmore place his right hand to his back, stagger and fall forward at a point short of the south west corner of Block1. He then watched the youth being grabbed by four or five man who carried him around the corner. Medical assistance was unsuccessfully rendered and the youth appears to have died. AM 160.2 paragraphs 9 to 11. His description of the location and circumstances in which the youth appears to have been shot is arguably undermined by its omission or absence from the interview he apparently conducted with Kathleen Keville in 1972 X2.35.48.

Significantly, this witness positively stated the following:

> "I did not see anyone on the march with a gun with a gun or with a nail or petrol bomb save for those throwing stones" AM160.3 paragraph 15

The witness was never challenged in respect of this issue nor in respect of any other matter attaching to the circumstances in which Hugh Gilmore met his death.

18.4.2.57 Margaret Patterson AP2 gave oral evidence on Day 185. Margaret Patterson provided a detailed outline of how she and her husband had attended the march and then made their way to the vicinity of the southwest corner of Glenfada Park North. From this position she observed hundreds young people running in a southerly direction ahead of what she estimated to be five Army vehicles. When the shooting started she decided to run across Rossville Street to Block1 as she believed it would be safer within that location. Her husband assisted her across the street and at some point told her that they were firing live rounds AP2.3 paragraph 18.

18.4.2.58 During the course of her evidence she claimed to have seen ten to twenty young men at the Barricade as she ran across Rossville Street. She did not see anybody lying down or shot Day 185/77/5 to Day

185/77/15, she conceded that some of the young men had previously been throwing stones Day 185/93/14 to Day 185/94/9.

When she arrived at the south west corner of Block1 her attention was drawn to a young man who was approaching from the direction of the Rubble Barricade, just as she thought he was about to over take her and her husband she saw him spin around and start to fall although she did not actually see him hit the ground. She described what happened next in the following way:

> "As he spun around I saw green matter coming out of him which I thought was his insides. I knew he had been shot by the way he fell, but I did not see anything actually hit him. He was wearing a denim jacket and a shirt. I cannot remember very much what he looked like but I remember he was young and not particularly tall. I felt terror then because I knew for certain that live bullets were being fired. I know I was screaming my brains out." AP2.3 paragraph 19

18.4.2.59 In reply to questions during the course of the Inquiry the witness confirmed that she saw nobody with weapons at the barricade. When pressed by Counsel for most of the Soldiers about whether this was a matter she was likely to provide an honest account upon the witness dealt with the suggestion in a spontaneous and highly credible manner:

"Q. No, of course not. On Bloody Sunday when you got to Rossville Street you again very candidly said that you saw about 20 young men standing on the rubble barricade or around the rubble barricade?
A. Yes.
Q. Again very candidly you said they were probably stoning?
A. Well, I think there is pictures around somewhere that proved they were stoning.
Q. I am not criticising; insofar as it is proper for me to say so, I commend your candour. But you believe they were probably stoning because that is what you would have expected, without any criticism, because they were protecting the area?

A. (Witness nodding).
Q. Doing precisely what they did in the Creggan -- I do not say the same men.
A. No, no, no.
Q. But they were standing on a barricade at a no-go area, doing their best to protect it?
A. Probably, yes.
Q. Did you actually see what was being thrown or what they were doing or when you say to the Tribunal honestly "they were probably stoning," is that just because you imagine, perfectly sensibly, that is probably what they were doing?
A. No. I was standing at the wall at Glenfada Park.
Q. Yes?
A. With a number of other people.
Q. Yes?
A. And you think that I would have been standing -- I had a child three weeks before Bloody Sunday and do you think I would have been standing on a barricade with people throwing nail bombs or anything else?
Q. My own question was --
A. These young fellas were standing and when the Army came in they were throwing stones.
Q. When you say they were probably stoning, all I wanted to know was whether you actually saw them throwing stones or you just sensibly assumed that was --
A. No, they were throwing stones. There were some of them throwing -- there were some of them in front of the barricade and some of them at the back of it and they were throwing stones.
Q. My last question is this: if in fact you had seen any more sinister activity, if you had seen anything other than stones thrown or if you had seen weapons, you would not have spoken about that any more than you would have spoken about it in the Creggan when the defenders were defending your area, would you?
A. Do you mean if I had a seen somebody standing at the barricade shooting?
Q. Yes?
A. Well, I took an oath, I am telling you the truth, yes, I would.
Thank you very much." Day 185/94/24 to Day 185/95/10.

18.4.2.60 Robert White AW11 gave oral evidence to the Tribunal on Day 137, to the effect that he was an amateur photographer and that he was on the march that day. He took a series of photographs attached to his statement at AW11.23 which run from P27 to P29. These photographs show the passage of the first two Saracens up Rossville Street. Mr White confirmed that these photographs were taken in fairly quick succession. He believed they would have been taken within a few seconds of each other. Day 137/86/25 to Day 137/87/23. He confirmed that he then ran into Glenfada Park North up to the pram ramp and took his photographs there which are EP32.1, EP32.2 and EP32.3. He recalled it did not take him very long to get to the pram ramp, because he was afraid of missing something. He did not think the distance was as far as sixty yards. He thought he was standing at the pram ramp for a matter of seconds, but less than a minute, before he took the photograph we know as EP32.1. This is the photograph that shows Michael Kelly lying on the ground at the Rubble Barricade. He did not see anyone at the Rubble Barricade with a rifle or a pistol or throwing nail bombs. Day 137/90/16 to Day 137/91/8. Mr. White was asked about the time lapse between taking EP32.2 and P32, which is his photograph of Hugh Gilmore running holding his side along Block 1 of Rossville Flats. He thought it would have been a very short time, even less than a minute, but he did not honestly know. Day 137/81/16 to Day 137/82/1.

18.4.2.61 The witness did not see what happened to Hugh Gilmore after he took the picture. However after taking the picture he looked to see if he could observe the soldier who had fired what he thought was a rubber bullet at the deceased. The only soldier he saw was standing behind the north gable end of Block1 Day 137/82/17. He believed that this soldier was responsible for shooting the Hugh Gilmore as he was unable to see any other soldiers in the vicinity Day 137/111/19

An indication of the anarchic and reckless behaviour of these soldiers is illustrated by what happened next:

> "I saw him put his rifle up to his shoulder and aim in my direction. Instantly Mr McAteer and I both dropped down below the wall so that the soldier could not see us. As soon as we had got down I heard the whine of a bullet as it passed straight above me. It was unmistakably the sound of a bullet passing close by. I have no doubt that if I had been standing up I would have been killed." AW11.5 paragraph 24

18.4.2.62 The conclusions to be drawn in respect of this evidence are that:

i) Photograph P32 / EP23.9A confirms that Hugh Gilmore was unarmed and that if he was shot at a point between the Rubble Barricade and the entrance to Block1, it was whilst he was running for the safety of the gable end.

ii) The witness confirmed during the course of his evidence that he saw nobody throwing nail bombs or carrying weapons Day 137/90/1 to Day 137/91/17

iii) Hugh Gilmore is very much likely to have been shot at the Rubble Barricade after Michael Kelly as Michael Kelly is already lying on the pavement in Rossville Street in EP32.1 before Hugh Gilmore is pictured at P32 /EP23.9/ P662 / P663

18.4.3 Removal to Hospital

18.4.3.1 Hugh Gilmore was carried or dragged around the southwest corner of Block1 from Rossville Street. He was there treated by a student nurse Frank Mellon AM 399.4 paragraphs 17 to 21 and Knight of Malta Paul McLaughlin AM350.14 paragraphs 25 to 29. He died in Rossville Street. Some time after 4.28pm, he was taken to Altnagelvin hospital in an ambulance VRM 5986 UZ manned by Harry Wray (driver) and John Gilchrist (attendant) AG65.1 to AG65.15, D500.26, D500.27. Others present in the same ambulance were Patrick Doherty, Michael Bradley, Alexander Nash, Patrick McDaid and Father O'Gara.

18.4.4 Injuries Sustained

18.4.4.1 The post mortem examination was carried out by Dr Carson at 11pm on 31st January 1972. The report of Dr Shepherd and Mr O'Callaghan appears at E2.005, E2.006 with the accompanying diagram at E2.0082. The morgue photographs are in Bundle P2 TAB6.

18.4.4.2 Hugh Gilmore sustained four gunshot wounds. He received an entry and an exit wound to the left arm. He also received two gunshot wounds to the chest. According to Dr Shepherd and Mr O'Callaghan it is "much more likely than not" that Hugh Gilmore was shot twice.

18.4.4.3 Gunshot wounds were present as follows on the trunk:
An elliptical 2.0 x 1.2 cm defect in the right side of the chest 14 cm below and 7 cm behind nipple. E2.005, P99, P103

18.4.4.4 A gaping wound on the left side of the chest 13 cm below nipple and measuring 6 x 5 cm. E2.005, P98, P100, P105

18.4.4.5 Gunshot wounds were present as follows on the left arm:
The entry wound bearing an abrasion ring lay on the ulna side (little finger) side, 12 cm from the wrist. It was 6mm in diameter. E2.0058,E2.0059, D0180, P98, P100

18.4.4.6 The exit wound lay on the front surface slightly lower than the entry wound. This injury was ragged and measured 2.0 cm x 1.1 cm. E2.0059. "It was surrounded by an irregular rim of abrasion 2-3mm. wide and lay within a vague zone of bruising 5 cm. x 2 ½ cm. There was a fracture of the underlying ulna." D0180, P101, P102

18.4.4.7 No track for the chest injury was given by Dr Carson who performed the autopsy in either the note or report. Nor were any X- rays taken which could have indicated the direction of the track in the chest and abdomen.

18.4.4.8 The cause of Hugh Gilmore's death was stated to be laceration of the diaphragm, left lung, the liver, spleen and stomach due to the gunshot wound to the trunk. "The liver injury was particularly extensive. Massive bleeding into the chest and abdominal cavities would have caused rapid death." D0184 D0164

18.4.4.9 Doctor Carson was of the opinion that all the holes were consistent with the path of the same bullet. D0184 However in his statement to this Inquiry he conceded that he cannot "entirely rule out the possibility that the wound in the right chest was an entrance wound" though he still stood by his conclusions of 1972.

18.4.4.10 In summary, this is the opinion of the Inquiry's experts:

"It is our opinion that the injury to the right side of the chest is, more likely than not, an entry wound and that the injury to the left side represents an exit wound... However the injury to the left side of the chest is not photographed clearly and in the absence of X rays that might have given information about the direction of fragmentation of the ribs this cannot be stated with certainty... it is therefore much more likely than not that Hugh Gilmore was struck by two bullets; one striking the right side of the chest and the other the left forearm... Clearly the shot to the chest, if we are correct in the orientation of this shot, has come from a point to the right of the chest at the moment of discharge." E2.0061

18.4.5 Forensic Evidence

18.4.5. In respect of clothing, lead particle density on the anorak was within the normal range D0169. Swabs were taken from Mr Gilmore's hands and tested for the presence of lead. No lead was detected D0169. Dr Martin concluded that "the absence of significant numbers of lead particles on the hand swabs and clothing indicates that the deceased had not been using a firearm" D0169.

18.4.6 Conclusions

18.4.6.1 It is submitted on behalf of the Family of Hugh Gilmore:

i) Hugh Gilmore was shot without any weapon or any other item in either of his hands.

ii) Hugh Gilmore never presented as a perceived or real threat to the Parachute Regiment soldiers in Rossville Street or its environs, iii) The behaviour of the Hugh Gilmore did not exceed the standards of teenage defiance normally demonstrated during military confrontations or incursions at the time.

iv) No other person was shot in the vicinity of Hugh Gilmore at or around the time he was struck.

v) There was no firing from the Rossville Flats at the soldiers.

vi) There was no-one at or around the Rubble Barricade with a firearm, nail-bomb, petrol bomb or any other weapon.

vii) No weapons were taken or carried away from the Rubble Barricade.

viii) There was nothing being thrown apart from some stones.

ix) No civilian at or around the barricade was carrying a nail-bomb or a petrol bomb.

x) Hugh Gilmore was the victim of a capricious and random act, deliberately committed by an unnamed member of the Parachute Regiment.

xi) If the Tribunal accept the unchallenged expert testimony of Messrs Shepherd and O'Callaghan, then such evidence should be viewed, as highlighting a concerted level of determination, which is more consistent with a deliberate act as opposed to a tragic accident.

xii) There is no evidence capable of justifying the circumstances in which Hugh Gilmore was murdered.

xiii) Hugh Gilmore was the victim of a military mindset, which, for the purposes of operational considerations on Bloody Sunday, failed to make any proper distinction between politician, civil rights marcher, defiant teenager or perceived gunman.

xiv) No challenge to the unlawful circumstances surrounding the death of Hugh Gilmore was made on behalf of any of the interested parties.

xv) Those responsible for Hugh Gilmore's murder have had numerous opportunities over the last 32 years to step forward and say "I am responsible and this is why..." The Tribunal must ask itself why this opportunity has never been seized.

18.5 Michael McDaid and John Young

18.5.1 Michael McDaid Personal Details & Background

18.5.1.1 Michael McDaid was 20 years old when he was murdered on Bloody Sunday. He was killed alongside John Young and William Nash, only a matter of seconds after the shooting of Michael Kelly. The image of Michael McDaid unarmed and bewildered and moments from death, walking through the Rubble Barricade, as those nearby attended to the dying Michael Kelly, is one of the poignant images of Bloody Sunday. EP32.2

18.5.1.2 Michael left school in 1967 at the age of 15 and began working for John Bradley immediately. John Bradley ran a grocery shop and a bar. Michael started in the grocery shop as a messenger boy and over the years worked his way up to the position of barman. He had been in full-time employment since leaving school and up until his death on Bloody Sunday.

18.5.2 John Young Personal Details & Background

18.5.2.1 John Young was 17 years old when he was murdered on Bloody Sunday. He was killed alongside Michael McDaid and William Nash, only minutes after the shooting of Michael Kelly.

18.5.2.2 John was born in May 1954, the youngest of the 6 children of Thomas and Lilly Young. He went to Rosemount Primary School and successfully sat the Qualifying Examination for the Municipal Technical College in Derry, although he subsequently decided to attend St. Joseph's Secondary School in Derry. He was considered to be bright and intelligent, a description ascribed to him by a former English teacher of St. Joseph's, John Anthony Dunne, in his statement to this Tribunal. AD174.3 paragraph 14

18.5.2.3 John left school in 1969 at the age of 15 and began full-time employment at 'Tailorfit' a men's outfitters in Shipquay Street, he had been working there on a part-time basis since the age of 14. He remained in this employment until he was killed on Bloody Sunday.

18.5.2.4 However John's family did not only have to deal with the distress of John's death on Bloody Sunday. That evening his older brother Leo was still missing. Leo who had gone to the assistance of Gerard Donaghy was arrested along with Raymond Rogan when the car taking the dying Gerard Donaghy was stopped by the Army. Leo had been arrested and was taken to Ballykelly.

18.5.2.5 During his detention at Ballykelly Leo was questioned about his family and in the early hours of the morning while those who had arrested and detained him knew that his brother was lying dead made him made to brush the floor of the alleyway before releasing him. As he was leaving he was asked by a police officer how many brothers he had and answered two. The police officer in response said 'you only have one now'. When Leo arrived home he discovered John was dead.

18.5.3 Civilian Evidence re Shooting of Michael McDaid and John Young

Introduction

18.5.3.1 This section looks at the civilian testimony about the circumstances in which John Young and Michael McDaid were shot and killed.

18.5.3.2 As will be seen below, the circumstances in which John Young and Michael McDaid were killed, after the shooting of Michael Kelly and while a sustained volley of gunfire came over the Rubble Barricade has contributed to immense confusion about how these young men came to die.

18.5.3.3 The confusion has been added to by the failure of soldiers from the Parachute Regiment to account for their deaths. Not one soldier who accounts for the firing of live rounds over the Rubble Barricade on Bloody Sunday, with the possible exception of Soldier 027 has sought to give a truthful account of the circumstances in which these young men died. That issue is addressed in section 18.7 below.

18.5.3.4 However, while at the outset of this Inquiry the picture was one of complete confusion, the conclusion of the oral evidence has served to illustrate the truth about the circumstances in which these young men died.

18.5.3.5 In that respect it should be noted at this stage that it is our contention that Soldier P came close to making an admission to the killing of John Young and Michael McDaid in the course of his oral evidence. It will be alleged that Soldier P was guilty of the murder of John Young and Michael McDaid. See Section 18.7 below.

18.5.3.6 It is our submission that the civilian testimony, when considered with: the photographic and video evidence, the forensic, medical evidence and the ballistics evidence demonstrates the following:

i) Michael McDaid and John Young were shot and killed by a member of the Parachute Regiment, shooting down Rossville Street.

ii) The circumstances in which the soldiers of the Parachute Regiment fired were unjustified.

iii) Contrary to the conclusion of the Widgery Tribunal, John Young and Michael McDaid were unarmed when shot. Neither John Young, nor Michael McDaid handled, nor were in close proximity to someone handling a weapon when they were shot and killed.

iv) At no time were there nail bombs thrown from or shots fired from the Rubble Barricade at soldiers. There were no weapons of any description at the Rubble Barricade.

v) John Young and Michael McDaid were shot and killed, probably within seconds of each other and in close physical proximity to each other.

vi) They were probably located at the edge of the broad footpath on the Glenfada Park side of the Rubble Barricade when shot and killed, not far from the location where Michael Kelly was shot and killed.

vii) They were shot and killed after Michael Kelly had been shot and in all probability while he was being attended to by Frs. Bradley and O'Keefe at the southern gable end of the eastern block of Glenfada Park North.

viii) After they were shot and killed civilians at the gable end tried but could not go to their aid because the gunfire over the Rubble Barricade was so sustained. The people at the gable end were subsequently arrested by soldiers from the Parachute Regiment who entered Glenfada Park North.

ix) The bodies of John Young, Michael McDaid and William Nash were removed from the Rubble Barricade by soldiers of Mortar Platoon. The manner in which they were removed was disrespectful and contemptuous. They were denied access to spiritual or medical aid and were eventually taken to Altnagelvin Hospital after a considerable and unexplained delay.

Shooting from the City Walls

18.5.3.7 At the outset of this Inquiry, there was an issue about whether John Young and Michael McDaid, along with William Nash, had in fact been shot by soldiers from the City Walls, as opposed to soldiers from the Parachute Regiment firing down Rossville Street.

18.5.3.8 In 1997 the Breglio Report was published by the Bloody Sunday Justice Campaign in New York City. The Report drew on the written testimony from eye-witnesses collected by NICRA and the NCCL in 1972 in which almost 30 witnesses testified to the belief that there had been shooting at the crowd by soldiers positioned on the City Walls. TmpD17.6

18.5.3.9 The Breglio Report which followed was the professional opinion of one of New York City's most experienced and highly qualified ballistics experts. Mr Breglio also concluded that:

> "After examining the autopsy and medical reports of William Nash, John Young and Michael McDaid and noting the similarities and consistencies of the angle of the trajectories of the fatal wounds sustained by these three young men, I will further concluded that, in my professional opinion, the projectiles that struck William Nash, John Young and Michael McDaid originated from an area high up in the vicinity of Derry's Walls and were fired by a high powered weapon using telescopic sights."

18.5.3.10 The Inquiry's experts, Doctor Shepherd and Mr O'Callaghan were asked to consider the likelihood that John Young and Michael McDaid were shot from the City Walls because of the downward track of the injuries.

18.5.3.11 Doctor Shepherd and Mr. O'Callaghan had the benefit of assistance from the Northern Ireland Ordnance Survey in determining the distances and angles from Rossville Street to various points on the walls. It was determined that whether shot from the City Walls or from ground level on Rossville Street, the Deceased "would have had been bending forward for the shots to have caused the tracks that were found." E2.0065 paragraph 11.1

18.5.3.12 Their conclusion was that:

> "nothing in the pathology of the wounds lends greater weight to this proposition then that the shots were fired [from] ground level." E2.0065 paragraph 11.1

18.5.3.13 They went on to state that:

> "it is clear from the injuries that all three men were facing in the general direction from where the shots came. It follows that if the shots originated from the City Walls the deceased would have had their backs towards Kells Walk at the time they were shot. Conversely if the shots originated from the Kells Walk side of the barricade they would have to have been facing in that direction. Witness testimony and not pathology or ballistics is therefore the key to resolving this matter." E2.0065 paragraph 11.1

18.5.3.14 Michael McDaid and John Young were shot dead south of the Rubble Barricade. In light of the forensic medical evidence it is clear that they were bent over when shot.

18.5.3.15 This Inquiry has had the benefit of hearing extensive civilian testimony in relation to the events of the Rubble Barricade. As a body of evidence the civilian testimony demonstrates that:

i) They were shot by soldiers positioned on Rossville Street because that is where firing was coming from; and

ii) They were facing in the direction of the soldiers on Rossville Street when shot.

18.5.3.16 The witness testimony before this Tribunal establishes that John Young and Michael McDaid were shot and killed by soldiers firing down Rossville Street. They were therefore shot and killed by a member of the Parachute Regiment.

Timing and Location of Shooting

18.5.3.17 As a body of evidence the civilian evidence also suggests that the Deceased were shot within a very short time of each other, possibly a matter of seconds, and in close proximity to each other and to William

Nash. A number of civilians who witnessed this shooting speak of three young men falling together.[9]

18.5.3.18 In terms of timing, they were undoubtedly shot after Michael Kelly as evidenced by the photograph which shows Michael McDaid walking through the Rubble Barricade, as people tended to the fatally wounded Michael Kelly. P636 & P637

18.5.3.19 They were probably shot as Michael Kelly's body reached the gable end of the eastern block of Glenfada Park North and was being anointed by Frs. Bradley and O'Keefe. As Denis Bradley testified:

> "I had been dealing with, I believe, Michael Kelly, but after he had been taken away it was the first time I saw the bodies" H1.12 paragraph 29

18.5.3.20 There are no photographs of Michael McDaid and John Young after they were shot at the Rubble Barricade. It is difficult, therefore, owing to the lack of objective evidence to pinpoint with precision the exact point where they fell. However, overwhelmingly the civilian evidence suggests that they were shot close together.[10] Alex Nash can be seen on Video 48 at V48/10.35 to 11.35 tending his son. The Tribunal's attention is also drawn to Michael Rodgers' cine-film at V52/1.00 to 2.00. This shows blood stained pieces of rubble on the Barricade. It would appear that this area of rubble is on the western side of the Barricade.

18.5.3.21 It is our submission, relying upon the video evidence, which finds support in the civilian evidence, that John Young and Michael McDaid were shot close to the edge of the footpath that can be seen in P428 on the Glenfada Park North side of the Rubble Barricade.

[9] See for example, Brian Rainey Day 132/112/9 to Day 132/112/17 "a group seemed to fall at the one time." Bernard Feeney AF8.4 paragraph 22 "All three fell together, or at least within a few seconds of each other." James Patrick McNulty AM377.11 "the next thing I see was the three of them falling. They lay with no movement at all, they were dead an all,. . ."

[10] See above

Sequence of Shooting at the Rubble Barricade

18.5.3.22 Michael McDaid and John Young were certainly shot after Michael Kelly was murdered by Lance Corporal F. In P636 and P637 Michael Kelly can be seen lying on the footpath, having been shot. Michael McDaid can be seen walking in a southerly direction through the Rubble barricade. In EP27.11, Michael Kelly is seen being carried by several persons in a northerly direction along the western side of the eastern block of Glenfada Park North. John Nash, the brother of William Nash, positively identified his brother in that photograph, standing with his back against the southern gable of the eastern block of Glenfada Park North, apparently facing in a southerly direction. Day 097/89/11 to Day 097/89/20

18.5.3.23 It is not entirely certain if Michael McDaid, John Young and William Nash were shot dead before, or after, Hugh Gilmore. However none of the witnesses who saw Hugh Gilmore murdered on the eastern side of Rossville Street were conscious of one or more bodies in very close proximity to each other on the southern side of the Barricade at the time when Hugh Gilmore was shot.

18.5.3.24 Also Robert White, who photographed Hugh Gilmore as he ran, apparently wounded towards the main doors of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats, was not aware of dead bodies on the Barricade. Mr White gave evidence that a "short time" (Day 137/81/16 to Day 137/81/22), (anything up to a minute Day 137/81/23 to Day 137/82/1), had elapsed between taking photographs of Michael Kelly lying prostrate on the pavement of Rossville Street and taking the photograph of Hugh Gilmore on Rossville Street. Mr White's evidence is that a bullet then passed close over his head as he made his way to safety via Glenfada Park South. It seems probable that if there were a number of dead bodies on the Rubble Barricade at that stage, Mr White would have sought to capture that image.

18.5.3.25 It does seem certain that Kevin McElhinney was the last person shot dead near the Rubble Barricade. This is clear from the evidence of a number of witnesses, including Fergus McAteer[11] and Barry Liddy[12], who were aware of the bodies on the Barricade when they saw Kevin McElhinney crawling for his life in a southerly direction along Rossville Street towards the safety of the Rossville Flats.

Wounds Sustained

18.5.3.27 Michael McDaid was shot through the left cheek. The bullet exited through the right side of his back D0089. His injuries are discussed in more detail below.

18.5.3.28 John Young and Michael McDaid were taken to Altnagelvin Hospital in the rear of a Mortar Platoon pig. They left the Rossville Street area at approximately 4.45 pm, arriving at the Hospital at approximately 5.30pm. The issue of the removal of the bodies is addressed in detail below.

Relevant Photographs

18.5.3.29 There are a number of photographs showing both Michael McDaid and John Young a short period before their death.

18.5.3.30 Michael McDaid is photographed both in the general William Street area and subsequently on Rossville Street.

18.5.3.31 The sequence of photographs showing Michael McDaid in William Street near Barrier 14 appears to be as follows:

[11] AM42.8 paragraphs 23 to 26
[12] AL13.7 to AL13.8

P645: Photograph taken by A Brown of the RUC, showing Michael McDaid in the centre of William Street, just to the east of the junction with Chamberlain Street.

P644: Photograph taken by R Simpson of the RUC, showing Michael McDaid side on to the camera, linking hands with Joseph Martin Gallagher (AG19).

P646: Photograph taken by A Brown of the RUC, showing Michael McDaid close to Barrier 14 on William Street.

P647: Photograph retrieved from the Sunday Times Archive showing Michael McDaid on waste ground in the proximity of persons sheltering behind sheets of corrugated tin.

18.5.3.32 Michael McDaid was then photographed in Rossville Street. Two of those photographs were taken by Liam Mailey. They are photographs EP23.5 and EP23.6.

18.5.3.33 According to Mr Mailey's evidence, EP23.5 is the first in the sequence. It is a heavily foreshortened photograph in which the outline of Michael McDaid's face can be seen. He is on the footpath on the eastern side of Rossville Street, just south of Pilots Row. EP23.5 also shows the armoured command vehicle, the ferret car and the soft skinned lorries of Composite Platoon. The Pigs of Anti Tank Platoon are further to the north, close to the junction with William Street. There are perhaps a dozen or more soldiers on the western side of Rossville Street in the vicinity of the derelict buildings, other evidence suggests that these were soldiers from Anti-Tank Platoon.

18.5.3.34 EP23.5 was soon followed by EP23.6. This shows Michael McDaid, again on the eastern side of Rossville Street, but probably just on the road, rather than the footpath. He would appear to be looking north towards the soldiers on the footpath on the western side of Rossville Street in the vicinity of Kells Walk.

18.5.3.35 The last picture which shows Michael McDaid alive is the photograph taken by Robert White at P650 showing Michael McDaid walking through the gap in the Rubble Barricade in a southerly direction, and looking in a south westerly direction at the fatally wounded Michael Kelly.

18.5.3.36 There are no photographs of John Young on Rossville Street before he was shot. He was however photographed by the RUC while at Barrier 14. Those photographs can be found at P657 and P658. In P659 John Young appears to be throwing a stone at the troops behind the Barrier.

18.5.3.37 P660 is taken from the western side of Barrier 14 by Fulvio Grimaldi. John Young appears to have a stone in his right hand. In each of these photographs, John Young is wearing a hat. [13] This hat was not handed over for forensic analysis by the RUC Scenes of Crime Officer, and it is not clear if he was wearing it when he was shot, although Matthew Connolly described John Young was wearing a "combat hat" when he went out onto the Rubble Barricade from the gable wall. AC76.15

18.5.3.38 None of the photographs taken of people at or about the Rubble Barricade show civilians in possession of weapons. The Tribunal has received a Booklet of Enhanced Images (Copy No.6) from Network International Forensic Sciences Division.

18.5.3.39 Photograph EP27.6 has been significantly enhanced to zoom into sixteen separate objects in the possession of persons on Rossville Street and the area to the south of the Rubble Barricade at its western end.

18.5.3.40 Photograph EP27.8 has been enhanced to zoom into a similar number of objects in the hands of civilians standing on top of the Rubble

[13] Jerry Mallett, an acquaintance, describes this as "an Australian khaki coloured combat hat, of a type which was all the rage at the time" AM21.1 paragraph 4

Barricade, or on Rossville Street to the eastern side of the gap in the Rubble Barricade.

18.5.3.41 Photograph EP27.9 has been enhanced to consider four further objects in the hands of three civilians to the south of the Rubble Barricade.

18.5.3.42 Finally EP35.9 and EP35.10 focussed on objects in the hands of persons in or about the vicinity of a fatally wounded Michael Kelly.

18.5.3.43 Network International have been unable to confirm the presence of anything more sinister than a stone in the hand of anyone in the vicinity of the Rubble Barricade on Bloody Sunday.

Movements of John Young and Michael McDaid

18.5.3.44 In this section we seek, via the civilian testimony and the photographic evidence to create some picture of the movements of John Young and Michael McDaid before they reached the Rubble Barricade. The photographic evidence shows both of them on the Civil Rights March, both are also seen at Barrier 14, John Young was undoubtedly throwing stones and it is accepted that Michael McDaid may also have been throwing stones at soldiers at the Barrier.

John Young

18.5.3.45 John Young had gone on the march on Bloody Sunday with, among others, Eugene Roddy[14] and Brian McCay.[15] However, he had become separated from his friends by the time he reached the eastern end of William Street. Little is known of John Young's movements from when he left Barrier 14 on William Street to his arrival at the Rubble Barricade on Rossville Street.

---

[14] Eugene Roddy was last with John Young at the eastern end of William Street. In the time he had been with John Young, he had not thrown any stones, and had obviously become separated from him by the time P659 was taken. AR17.2 paragraph 9

[15] Brian McCay was last with John Young on Lecky Road AM100.1 paragraph 4

18.5.3.46 Jerry Mallett was also 17 years on Bloody Sunday. He has a recollection of messing around with John Young near Free Derry Corner. AM21.1 paragraph 4 It is not clear, however, at what point in the day this occurred.

18.5.3.47 Michael McCusker spoke to John Young on Rossville Street. He recalls that after making his way through the gap between Blocks 1 and 2 of the Rossville Flats, he went onto Rossville Street:

> "I stayed at the Rubble Barricade for about five minutes. A man I knew, John Young, who was a tailor whose services I had used, tapped me on the shoulder and told me that two people had been shot. He went on to say that he thought one of them was my friend Michael Bradley. I asked him whether he had been killed and Young told me that he had not but that he had been taken to the first, that is the northern most, house in Joseph Place..." AM160.2 paragraph 10

18.5.3.48 Mr McCusker gave oral evidence to the Tribunal. His evidence was that John Young had come towards the Barricade from the direction of Free Derry Corner.[16] This would lend some support to the evidence of Jerry Mallett, who did not give oral evidence, that John Young was at Free Derry Corner area at some point in the afternoon.

18.5.3.49 Matthew Connolly knew John Young. He saw John Young at the junction of Rossville Street and William Street but left him there and did not know where John Young went after that. AC76.2 paragraph 11. It is not clear whether this was before or after John Young was at Barrier 14. Matthew Connolly later saw John Young again when he was at the southern gable of the eastern block of Glenfada Park North and was a witness to his murder. AC76.4 paragraph 26.

[16] Day 148/54/3 to Day 148/54/23

Michael McDaid

18.5.3.50 Donal Moran has given evidence to this Inquiry. In his written statement, he stated that he had been on the march with Michael McDaid. AM421.1 paragraph 5 In his oral testimony he stated that he had met Michael McDaid somewhere on William Street. Day 153/50/4 to Day 153/50/9

18.5.3.51 Martin McGilloway has also given evidence to the Tribunal. He had been in William Street and made his way to Rossville Street via the courtyard of the Rossville Flats and the gap between Blocks 1 and 2:

> "I was stood at the position marked C on the map (grid reference J16) [map is at AM236.4] Here I could see about a dozen people to the south of the Rubble Barricade, including Michael McDaid. He was crouched down on one knee behind the barricade. I knew Michael as I worked with his brother, Kevin. Michael was well dressed and did not look like he was going to riot. I did not know him to be a rioter. He was just talking to people around him. He did not have a weapon." AM236.2 paragraph 9

Conduct of Crowd and Casualties at the Barricade before the Shooting

18.5.3.52 Before dealing with the shooting of John Young and Michael McDaid, it is proposed to deal with a number of discrete issues which have arisen in the course of the written evidence received and oral testimony heard by this Tribunal. In particular:

i) The question of whether Michael McDaid was arrested and escaped from a saracen prior to being shot and killed.

ii) The issue of whether there was a 'foray' over the Rubble barricade prior to the shooting from soldiers, and the significance, if any which should attach to that fact.

iii) The question of whether youths were throwing stones from behind the Rubble Barricade.

"Arrest" of Michael McDaid

18.5.3.53 There is a body of evidence before the Tribunal that Michael McDaid was arrested on Bloody Sunday, but somehow managed to escape from the back of an armoured personnel carrier on Rossville Street, before being shot. At least three witnesses attest to having witnessed this event.

18.5.3.54 John Begley stated in 1972, in both his NICRA statement AB30.1 and the statement made by him to the RUC on 23rd February, 1972 AB30.2 that he saw Michael McDaid arrested and placed in a Saracen on Bloody Sunday. He has in his evidence to this Tribunal distanced himself from those statements stating that he was drunk when he made the statements and that he does not seek to stand over their contents AB30.5.

18.5.3.55 Frankie Boyle, was a near neighbour of Michael McDaid and claims to have spoken to him at Barrier 14. (AB48.2 paragraph 8) He has given evidence that Michael McDaid was throwing stones on Rossville Street at soldiers, who had entered Rossville Street from the alleyways and side streets from William Street, Kells Walk, Columbcille Court and Glenfada Park. (AB48.2 paragraph 13) He recalls that Michael McDaid wiped his hands on a handkerchief after throwing stones on Rossville Street (AB48.3 paragraph 14) and then went towards soldiers on the waste ground in the area between Pilots Row and the northern gable of Block 1. According to Frankie Boyle, Michael was then arrested by three soldiers, and thrown into the back of an armoured vehicle positioned on waste ground facing the Rossville Flats. He claims that two or three others were also in the Saracen and that a soldier fired CS gas into the back of it when the civilians 'kicked up'. Michael and one or two others then escaped, rubbing their eyes from the effects of the gas. (AB48.3 paragraph 14)

18.5.3.56 He then claims that Michael McDaid ran away from the Saracen in towards Rossville Street and the Rubble Barricade. Day 127/63/2 to Day 127/63/9 When he had got 20 yards away from the Saracen Michael McDaid was shot in the back by a soldier. Frankie Boyle believed that at that stage Michael McDaid was on Rossville Street near the Rubble Barricade. AB48.3 paragraph 15

18.5.3.57 In oral evidence Mr. Boyle gave evidence that he was at Kells Walk when he saw Michael McDaid being arrested. Day 122/61/20 to Day 122/61/22 He stated that there were no soldiers in or around Kells Walk at the time Michael McDaid was arrested. Day 122/63/21 to Day 122/63/23 He also stated that the Saracen into which Michael McDaid was placed, and from which he escaped, was on the south side of the Rubble Barricade. Day 122/62/2 to Day 122/62/7

18.5.3.58 Significantly according to Frankie Boyle Michael McDaid was in his continuous sight from the point at which he was arrested to the point at which he was shot. Day122/65/8 to Day122/65/17

18.5.3.59 Mr. Boyle's evidence is demonstrably unreliable for the following reasons:

i) Fundamentally Mr. Boyle's evidence must be wrong given that he states that Michael McDaid was in his sight from the point at which he was arrested until he was shot. We know from P650 that Michael McDaid walked through the Rubble Barricade alive, and that he did so when there were soldiers at Kells Walk. Mr Boyle's description is therefore completely inconsistent with objective photographic evidence which he cannot explain.

ii) It is evident from P650 that Michael McDaid is not suffering from the effects of CS gas having been fired at him within the confines of an armoured vehicle.

iii) Contrary to Mr. Boyle's evidence, Michael McDaid was not shot in the back. AB48.3 paragraph 15

iv) The only time a Saracen went behind the Rubble Barricade was to pick up the three bodies, one of whose was Michael McDaid.

v) The other arrestees who allegedly escaped, have never come forward and never been identified by anyone.

vi) No handkerchief was recovered from the clothing of Michael McDaid or handed over by the RUC Scenes of Crime Officer for forensic analysis. D0072

18.5.3.60 It will also be our case that Mr. Boyle's evidence about his dealings with Patsy O'Donnell is at best confused and is certainly unreliable. In those circumstances, the Tribunal ought to find that this witness' account of Michael McDaid's arrest is inherently unreliable[17].

18.5.3.61 Liam Lynch also gives evidence about Michael McDaid's arrest. He did not personally know Michael McDaid, but knew him from being around the district. The youth who he described as having been being arrested, had long hair, wore a brown jacket AL26.2 paragraph 13, and stood approximately five feet, nine inches tall. AL26.2 paragraph 15.

18.5.3.62 The description that Mr. Lynch provides does not fit Michael McDaid, who was five feet five inches, and wore a green checked sports jacket. It is apparent from the photographs available to the Tribunal that Michael McDaid did not have long hair.

18.5.3.63 Mr Lynch rejected a suggestion from Arthur Harvey QC that what he had in fact witnessed was William John Dillon being arrested by two soldiers on the waste ground, as depicted in EP2/7, Day 145/16/18 to Day 145/19/23. It is submitted however, that Mr Lynch is mistaken and that the person he saw being arrested by two soldiers was either John Dillon, James Charles O'Doherty or Charles Canning, all of whom were arrested and escorted across Rossville Street to the corner of William Street and Rossville Street.

[17] The Tribunal will also recall that Mr Boyle gave an account of the removal of a substantial amount of armaments involving a not inconsiderable number of persons on 29th January which has not been supported by any other witness before the Tribunal or by any Intelligence in the possession of the Security Forces.

18.5.3.64 Eamonn Melaugh also gave evidence to this Tribunal. Mr Melaugh was a local amateur photographer and he gave evidence about a photograph which depicted Michael McDaid alive and well, and clearly not injured, standing in the middle of the Rubble Barricade, after the shooting had ended. AM397.8 paragraph 72 He maintained that this photograph was given to John Lloyd of Time Out Magazine and never returned to the owner.

18.5.3.65 Mr Melaugh continued: "A couple of weeks after Bloody Sunday I was on the street in the Bogside area talking with a friend and showing him the photographs that I'd taken on Bloody Sunday when 2 members of Sinn Féin came up uninvited and listened in." AM397.8 paragraph 77

> "When I came to the photograph of Michael McDaid the 2 men became very excited, saying that he was still alive when I took the photo. They then told me that he was one of the men that had been shot on Bloody Sunday. The penny still didn't drop and they went on and then I finally understood that there was a real question over how Michael McDaid had died that day. This was because when I took the photo I thought that the shooting had stopped and for the time thereafter that I stayed in the vicinity I can't recall hearing any further shooting.
> Although John Lloyd failed to return the photograph of Michael McDaid to me I believe that I have seen it recently, so there may be a copy of it still around. I will make some inquiries and if I manage to get a print of it I will supply it to the Inquiry." AM397.8 paragraphs 78 to 79

18.5.3.66 It is our contention that the evidence of Mr Melaugh in this regard is clearly mistaken. Mr Melaugh is the source of a number of invaluable photographs of Bloody Sunday. His photographs can be found from P600 to P612 inclusive. Such a photograph has never been supplied to the Inquiry and no further evidence has ever come to light about the existence of such a photograph.

18.5.3.67 When he gave oral evidence to the Tribunal he stated that it was his belief that this photograph was taken: after the shooting had stopped; after he had photographed the fatally wounded Hugh Gilmore, Paddy Doherty and Barney McGuigan; and, after he had spoken to and photographed Patsy McDaid in Joseph Place. Day 143/51/13 to Day 143/52/19

18.5.3.68 Mr. Melaugh confirmed that he did not actually see Michael McDaid being shot on Bloody Sunday, nor did he see his body. Day 143/54/10 to Day 143/54/16 Mr Melaugh also believes that he photographed Michael McDaid from much the same position as the position from where Mr Robert White took P650. It is submitted that Mr Melaugh is essentially confused in his belief that he took such a photograph, particularly since all the evidence suggests that Michael McDaid was shot well before Paddy Doherty and Barney McGuigan were killed in Sector 5. It should also be noted that Mr Melaugh gave a lengthy interview to the Sunday Times Insight Team in 1972, "within days" of Bloody Sunday. (Day 143/23/22 to Day 143/24/1) The interview spanned some twelve pages of notes and at no stage during that interview did Mr. Melaugh state that he had photographed Michael McDaid alive, and on top of the Rubble Barricade. AM397.19 to AM397.30

18.5.3.69 As Counsel to the Inquiry has pointed out, the photograph described has never been published in any newspaper or journal since Bloody Sunday. Day 143/59/14 to Day 143/60/2

18.5.3.70 Few witnesses have been asked about this issue in the negative, so to speak but Brendan Harley was asked whether he had seen anyone arrested to the north of the barricade and subsequently escape from a Saracen and rejected the notion. Day 121/150/2 to Day 121/150/6

18.5.3.71 It is apparent in our submission that upon consideration of the above evidence and the photographs available to the Tribunal there is no sensible or objective basis upon which it could be concluded that Michael McDaid had been arrested and escaped from custody on Bloody Sunday, prior to being shot.

"Foray" over the Rubble Barricade

18.5.3.72 A number of civilian witnesses have been questioned about 'forays' over the Rubble Barricade. In effect whether groups of youths advanced, either once or repeatedly, onto or over the Rubble Barricade and down Rossville Street, throwing stones at soldiers. There were also suggestions that this group of youths were chanting "Hey, hey IRA" at the soldiers. It has also been specifically suggested to witnesses that Michael McDaid may have been a participant in such a foray. Day 127/54/16 to Day 127/56/15

18.5.3.73 The suggestion has generally been put in the context of the arrest of William John Dillon on the waste ground, as seen in photos P486, P487. The suggestion being that the crowd became enraged at the manner of his arrest and advanced with the intention of rescuing him. Day 127/57/12 to Day 127/60/6 However, it is clear that while in the course of questioning, reference is made to the arrest of William John Dillon, the issue is being put because of evidence given by Soldiers P and 017. Day 127/73/14 to Day 127/74/2

18.5.3.74 It should be noted that this was also a feature of the case put on behalf of the soldiers in 1972. A number of witnesses were asked by Mr. Gibbens whether they had seen relays from the Rubble Barricade, groups of 40 to 50, "coming up to the barricade and throwing missiles at the troops, then going back and bringing more missiles and coming up again and throwing them at the troops".[18] WT4.62F

18.5.3.75 It is our submission that this issue is something of a 'red herring' as regards the conduct of civilians. It was put apparently because of the case being advanced on behalf of Soldiers P and 017, however:

i) The soldiers involved in the arrest of William John Dillon, Soldiers 006 and 037 were unaware of what was happening at the Rubble Barricade. (Day 334/20/12 to Day 334/20/15 and Day 357/133/6 to Day 357/133/9)

ii) Soldiers P and 017 had no involvement in the arrest of William John Dillon, which was taken place some distance away.

iii) No civilian witness has suggested that any advance from the Rubble Barricade was directed at Soldiers P and 017.

18.5.3.76 However, the most significant reason why this issue is a 'red herring' is because what has been suggested to witnesses is entirely inconsistent with the case advanced by Soldiers P and 017.

18.5.3.77 It is necessary in relation to this issue to refer briefly to the evidence of soldiers about this matter. Soldiers P and 017 have given evidence of soldiers coming under attack from stone-throwing rioters while they were positioned on Rossville Street. Their evidence is addressed in more detail in Section 20.7.1 below.

18.5.3.78 However the following points about their evidence should be noted at this juncture:

i) In P's first RMP statement he refers to 20 rioters who advanced towards Soldier P and his companions, immediately upon their debussing, throwing stones and missiles constantly as they approached. It was from this crowd of rioters that P's first target, who he claims was a nail bomber was identified and at

[18] The issue was also raised with James Chapman, who gave evidence at Widgery and Fr. O'Keefe at WT5.17E-F whom P fired 2 shots. B577 From his description these rioters must have been advancing from Kells Walk across Rossville Street.

ii) In his statement to the Treasury Solicitor Soldier P claims that along with 017 he took cover along-side the east-facing wall at the Kells Walk pram-ramp, a group of people came along an alleyway leading to Columbcille Court, throwing stones and bottles at them. Soldier 017 fired a number of baton rounds into the crowd, splitting them up. According to his Treasury Solicitor statement it was from this crowd of rioters that P's first target, who he claims was a nail bomber was identified and at whom P fired 2 shots. B592

iii) In his evidence to Lord Widgery Soldier P could see people behind the Barricade who were either throwing stones or moving towards Free Derry Corner. WT13.46A There is no description of forays over the Rubble Barricade. Then a group of people came out from the Columbcille Court alleyway and began throwing stones and bottles at the soldiers. Soldier 017 again fired baton rounds and dispersed the crowd. It was from this crowd of rioters that P's first target, who he claims was a nail bomber was identified and at whom P fired 2 shots. WT13.46C

iv) P subsequently fired 4 shots at a man who he claimed was a gunman, positioned behind the Rubble Barricade, hitting him 3 times. Soldier P fired 4 live rounds, 1 hit the Rubble Barricade and the others hit the man who fell back. WT13.50A-E

v) Finally Soldier P stated that after he had shot and killed a man at the Rubble Barricade, he fired a further 5 rounds over the heads of rioters in an attempt to disperse them. B578 Soldier P then went on to make a second RMP statement on the 1st February 1972 in which he claimed that instead of having fired 5 rounds over the heads of rioters he had in fact only fired 3, because he had only fired 9 rounds in total. B588

18.5.3.79 Soldier P now claims to have no independent recollection of the events of the day and invites the Tribunal to accept his 1972 accounts.

18.5.3.80 In summary Soldier P's evidence amounts to the following:

i) There were no forays from the Rubble Barricade;

ii) In his first account rioters advanced upon him from Kells Walk B577, in his subsequent account from an alleyway leading to Columbcille Court. B592

iii) He describes rioters behind the Rubble Barricade, but does not allege that they advanced on him or his colleague, either once or repeatedly. WT13.46A

iv) He does claim that a crowd advanced upon him from the Rubble Barricade, B578 but only after, on his own account, he had fired two sets of shots over the Rubble Barricade, the first two at a nail bomber WT13.46C and the next 4 at a gunmen. WT13.50A-E

18.5.3.81 It cannot therefore be correct to suggest that on P's evidence he fired shots over the heads of the crowd before firing at targets with the aim of killing them.

18.5.3.82 Soldier 017 also gave a number of accounts of events, it is not proposed to deal with his RMP statements as they are dealt with in greater detail below. In his statement to the Treasury Solicitor at the relevant portions he stated as follows:

i) There was a crowd of about 50 people in front of the Rubble Barricade, they rushed towards Soldier 017 so he fired 1 round which split them up. B1482 paragraph 3

ii) Soldier P then warned Soldier 017 to look out as he had seen a man come from behind the crowd, Soldier 017 then goes onto describe Soldier P shooting someone who he claimed to believe was a nail bomber. B1482 paragraph 3

iii) The crowd then went behind the Rubble Barricade and continued to throw bottles and stones in the direction of the soldiers. B1482 paragraph 4

iv) People were also running in and out of an alleyway which led to Columbcille Court, throwing bricks, bottles and stones at the soldiers. Soldier 017 then describes firing rubber bullets at a man with a pistol/revolver. B1482 paragraph 4

18.5.3.83 Soldier 017 has also given evidence to this Tribunal, in his statement prepared for Eversheds, dealing only with the relevant portions he stated as follows:

i) There were thousands behind the Rubble Barricade and he was showered with bricks and stones from there. B1484.004 paragraph 22

ii) A group broke away from the crowd behind the Rubble Barricade and made approaches towards Soldier 017, he stated that the crowd "would have ripped me to pieces if they had got me. Crowds had killed soldiers before. I felt very vulnerable there on my own." B1484.004 paragraph 23

iii) Soldier 017 fired 2/3 rubber bullets at the crowd and was then joined by Soldier P. B1484.004 paragraph 24

iv) 40 – 50 people came out from an alleyway leading to Columbcille Court, they ran south to join the main group of rioters and Soldier 017 fired rubber bullets at them. B1484.004 paragraph 27

v) Soldier P then shouted a warning about a nail bomber, who was in the midst of a crowd just north of the Rubble Barricade. Soldier 017 goes on to describe Soldier P shooting an alleged nail bomber. B1484.004 paragraph 27

vi) Shortly after that Soldier 017 looked down an alleyway immediately to his right, he could see rubble, 4/5 youths were throwing bottles or bricks towards Soldier 017 and he went forward to arrest someone, when he saw a man with a pistol at whom he fired his rubber bullet gun before making his escape. B1484.005 paragraph 29 and B1484.005 paragraph 31

18.5.3.84 Thus Soldier 017 does give evidence of rioters advancing from the Rubble Barricade. B1484.004 paragraph 23 That incident is followed by a crowd advancing from an alleyway leading to Columbcille Court. He does not describe the incident which apparently resulted in Soldier P firing rounds over people's heads.

18.5.3.85 It has been necessary to go through that evidence in some little detail because of the case which was put by Counsel acting on behalf of Soldiers P and 017 to civilian witnesses.

18.5.3.86 During the course of Ronald Wood's evidence to the Tribunal the following photos were put to Ronald Wood EP32.1, EP 32.2, P648, EP35.04, EP23.04, EP23.07 and EP21.02. The following suggestion was then put to Ronald Wood:

"Q. I want to suggest that there was firing of high velocity rounds from the north of where you were, but none of those rounds hit anyone at the barricade at all?

A. You are suggesting it.

Q. Is it your recollection that when Michael Kelly is hit, he is hit by one of the very first high velocity rounds?

A. Yes.

Q. Do you remember witnessing arrests or an arrest happening in the wasteground north of you?

A. No, I never saw anybody arrested.

Q. Do you remember a lot of people at the barricade getting very angry at that arrest?

A. No, I do not remember that.

Q. Do you remember any shouts or chants of "Hey, hey, IRA"?

A. I said in my statement that they were shouting obscenities at the army when they came in, yes." Day 127/57/3 to Day 127/57/22

18.5.3.87 Mr. Clarke QC who represented Soldiers P and 017 then stated that:

"What I am suggesting, while you were at the barricade, for whatever reason, you have missed or forgotten a whole episode in where everyone at the barricade gets incredibly angry at what the army were doing and surged forward over the barricade?

A. No, I do not recall that." Day 127/59/24 to Day 127/60/6

18.5.3.88 Mr. Clarke was then asked to clarify what case was being made in relation to the high velocity rounds purportedly fired before the killing of Michael Kelly and stated:

"What I hope we made clear a few days ago is that Soldier P in his statement has said he fired shots over the heads of a crowd of people who came out of Glenfada Park North, the northeast corner, and 017 says that from those people emerged a man with a handgun who fired towards 017. 017 fired a baton round and fled and P discharged high velocity rounds over the head of that crowd.

Now, it is that discharge of shots that I have put to Mr. Wood, and I hope made clear, was not responsible for the deaths of any people on the barricade." Day 127/73/14 to Day 127/74/2

18.5.3.89 The difficulty is of course, that this is an attempted amalgamation of different aspects of the evidence of Soldiers 017 and P and is not consistent with the case they have ever made, either collectively or individually for the following reasons:

i) Soldier P claims to have fired over the heads of a crowd after he had killed two people, one of whom was positioned behind the Rubble Barricade, and the other positioned according to his trajectory photograph P22 on Rossville Street. Thus, regardless of where the shooting of Soldier F fits into the sequence, this firing took place after, on his evidence, two people had been shot and killed on Rossville Street, one in front of and one behind the Rubble Barricade.

ii) The crowd from which 017 claims the gunmen he saw came from, was a crowd which came from an alleyway leading to Columbcille Court. In his evidence to this Inquiry he maintains that this gunman never made it onto Rossville Street, moreover, Soldier P did not fire at this gunman. In fact reading any of Soldier P's accounts, he neither saw, nor was made aware of this gunman.

18.5.3.90 On Soldier 017's evidence the attack or 'foray' described by him, did not result in any response from soldiers other than the firing of baton rounds. On Soldier P's account, the attack or 'foray' described by him occurred after at least 2 men had been shot and killed by him. Moreover this evidence ignores the fact that at this time, soldiers from Anti-Tank Platoon were also positioned behind the Kells Walk Wall and on the evidence it would appear had fired live rounds over the Rubble Barricade before Soldier P left the area.

18.5.3.91 It therefore appears that the entire premise upon which this line of questioning was conducted is flawed. The issue is not without significance however, as will be seen below when dealing with civilian evidence about the conduct of soldiers on Rossville Street, there is evidence which suggests that the first two shots fired at the Rubble Barricade were fired by Soldier P. They were fired from his hip, they were not fired at a nail-bomber and they did not in fact result in any casualties. That fact is however inconsistent with the evidence which has been given by Soldier P about the circumstances in which he fired live rounds.

18.5.3.92 There is certainly evidence of at least one move from a group of youths over the Rubble Barricade, throwing stones at soldiers. Inasmuch as there has been evidence about this, it appears to relate to the arrest of William John Dillon. It would also appear from the photographic evidence that when the Saracens came into Rossville Street some youths were positioned in advance of the Rubble Barricade and may have been throwing stones. EP23.4, EP27.6, EP27.7, EP27.8

18.5.3.93 Other witnesses, who can be regarded as reliable have rejected this account. It is our submission that while there was in all probability, some slight advance made by a small group of youths over the Rubble Barricade and some stone-throwing from the Rubble Barricade, the incident was of a relatively minor nature and went unnoticed even by people at the Rubble Barricade.

18.5.3.94 In any event, this incident took place at an early stage, prior to the shooting of Michael Kelly and neither put soldiers under threat, nor provided any basis or justification for the firing of live rounds, either at civilians, or over their heads.

18.5.3.95 Ronald Wood was asked about this issue, not only in the course of this Inquiry, but also when he gave evidence in 1972 to Lord Widgery. While Mr Wood accepted that there had been stone-throwing from the Rubble Barricade he rejected the suggestion that 40 or 50 youths were running back and forward throwing stones. (AW24.21E-F) It should be noted that in 1972 it was not being suggested that these persons advanced forward of the Rubble Barricade.

18.5.3.96 Ronald Wood has also given evidence to this Inquiry. On his own account he was present at the southern gable of the eastern block of Glenfada Park North when the soldiers took up position on Rossville Street. He witnessed Michael Kelly being shot and then saw two further people shot and killed by the soldiers. AW24.12 paragraphs 11 to 12

18.5.3.97 He has always acknowledged that there was stone-throwing from the Rubble Barricade at soldiers and that people shouted obscenities at soldiers. AW24.2 paragraph 9 As can be seen from the extract of the transcript of his evidence quoted above, he rejected the suggestion of a foray put to him by Peter Clarke QC. Day 127/5712 to Day 127/57/22

18.5.3.98 It is our submission that, given that he was at the Rubble Barricade when the soldiers arrived and remained there until after Michael Kelly was shot, had this incident been of any significance he would not have missed it. Day127/59/23 to Day 127/60/6

18.5.3.99 George Downey gave evidence that he saw people advance south of the Rubble Barricade and that:

> "A. The reason why they done this, there were some fella got arrested that was on the waste ground and I think it was a rioter that jumped over, started throwing stones and stuff like that, you know, and they were swearing at them, you know, but no-one ever got up that far, you know." Day 123/15/21 to Day 123/16/5

18.5.3.100 He went on to state that

> "A. . . . there were three or four guys, and they got about, say, five or six foot over the barricade, that is about as far as they got, and they started to throw stones at them." Day 123/18/24 to Day 123/19/7

18.5.3.101 He subsequently confirmed that this occurred before the first live rounds were fired. Day 123/24/3 to Day 123/25/1

18.5.3.102 Having, after detailed questioning by Mr. Clarke QC on behalf of the tribunal, given evidence that the sequence of events was first the foray and then the shots, including the one which killed Michael Kelly, it was put to him by Peter Clarke QC

"Q. But if there was that short sally over the barricade, would it have happened after the shot at the high?

A. Aye, yes, it happened after that.

Q. Do you remember how that abortive attempt to help the man who was being arrested, do you remember how that stopped and how it ceased?

A. The man getting arrested was actually too far away from the barricade . . . I think there was just . . . a gesture of their anger . . . but they were not up far enough . . . to do any damage." Day 123/65/21 to Day 123/66/10

18.5.3.103 George Downey also gave evidence that he never saw any incident involving rioters and Soldiers P and 017. Day 123/68/20 to Day 123/69/4

18.5.3.104 In relation to the issue of sequencing of events, it is clear that Mr Downey's evidence is confused. It is submitted that, if witnessed by George Downey, this incident could only ever have occurred prior to the shooting of Michael Kelly because of Mr. Downey's involvement in removing Michael Kelly from the Rubble Barricade. In any event, after the shooting of Michael Kelly such an incident would simply not have occurred.

18.5.3.105 What is being described is a relatively minor incident, involving a small number of youths, it did not justify the firing of live rounds by any soldier.

18.5.3.106 Gavan Duffy, who was accompanied by his friend Paul McGeady, describes a similar incident. He witnessed a youth running away, being assaulted by soldiers and falling to the ground. People behind the Barricade surged forward to help, some throwing stones. AD155.2

paragraphs 10 to 11 He then witnessed Michael Kelly being shot. AD155.2 paragraphs 12

18.5.3.107 Mr Duffy, estimated that this event prompted around 80 persons to surge forward in an effort to rescue the boy, although must of those moved forward towards the Rubble Barricade, with 20-30 crossing the Barricade. Day 126/144/7 to Day 126/144/10 and Day 127/145/2 to Day 127/145/8 Some of them threw missiles at the soldiers, more of whom were now visible at the waste ground, around the Flats, and at Kells Walk. However, none of those persons actually approached the soldiers to rescue the boy. Day 127/145/9 to Day 127/145/17

18.5.3.108 While this incident certainly appears more significant than that described by George Downey, it must be remembered that this incident occurred just prior to Michael Kelly being shot, and the photographic evidence, showing Michael Kelly, at EP27.6, EP27.7 undermines the suggestion of a significant move across the Barricade as described by the witness. Again the incident appears to bear no relationship to Soldiers P and 017, focused as it is on the waste ground and again it is apparent that people did not advance any significant distance, or pose any real threat.

18.5.3.109 Paul McGeady had been on Rossville Street, south of the Rubble Barricade with his friend, Gavan Duffy. Mr. McGeady's evidence was that he saw a youth stumble across the waste ground on the east of Rossville Street and then saw a soldier strike the young man on the left hand side of the face with his rifle, causing the man to fall at the feet of the soldier. AM219.3 paragraph 19 He then witnessed three to four youths, of about 20 years old, south of the Rubble Barricade say that they would go out and try to rescue the young man from the soldier. AM219.4 paragraph 20

18.5.3.110 In oral evidence he recalled that 'several dozen' surged towards the Rubble Barricade from the south Day 137/128/1 to Day 137/128/4 and that between six to twelve persons crossed the barrier to the north. Day 137/128/10 to Day 137/128/12

18.5.3.111 Mr. McGeady also describes the shooting immediately afterwards of Michael Kelly. While this witness was somewhat confused about Michael Kelly's location and actions prior to being shot, it is nonetheless our view that the person he saw shot was Michael Kelly.

18.5.3.112 Mr. McGeady and Mr Duffy were in each others company at this time. While Mr. McGeady's original statement spoke of 3/4 youths advancing towards the Rubble Barricade, on having Mr. Duffy's account put to him, he increased it to several dozen. It is submitted that the incident was, as per Mr. McGeady's evidence of a more insignificant nature than that described by Mr. Duffy. Again the incident appears to bear no relationship to Soldiers P and 017, focussed as it is on the waste ground and again it is apparent that people did not advance any significant distance, or pose any real threat.

18.5.3.113 Alphonsus Oliver Cunningham in the transcript of his Keville tape stated that at the time of the arrest on the wasteground about 'ten or fifteen' went over the barricade. AC125.11

18.5.3.114 A witness who has not come to give evidence to this Tribunal Brendan Carlin has made a statement to the effect that two soldiers, on his account, probably soldiers P and 017 were being stoned by a crowd coming out of an alleyway eastwards from the north of Glenfada Park North. According to this witness the soldier with the rubber bullet gun, (Soldier 017) was "loading his gun as fast as he possibly could and was firing at the youths who were coming back and forth from the alley." He claims that the other soldier, Soldier P fired a live round "with his right elbow at the hip but with the gun pointing over the heads of the youths." AC30.7 paragraph 12

18.5.3.115 According to this statement the soldiers were attacked, not from the Rubble Barricade, but from an alleyway leading on to Rossville Street and in response (Soldier P) fired a live round, in breach of the yellow card and more seriously, from the hip. His account is inconsistent with the soldiers' version of events, it is also uncorroborated by civilians. In the absence of seeing the witness give oral testimony it is difficult to make an assessment as to the reliability of this account. We are unaware of the reason for his failure to come forward and invite the Tribunal to draw an adverse inference from his failure to give oral testimony in the event that no good reason for his non-attendance has been advanced.

18.5.3.116 A number of witnesses also reject the suggestion of a 'foray' over the Rubble Barricade, a few are dealt with below. These witnesses are discussed, not to suggest that the witnesses above are lying, but because it demonstrates that whatever the nature of the incident, it was relatively insignificant in that it went largely unnoticed by a significant number of civilian witnesses.

18.5.3.117 Charlie Lamberton, who is in fact the only witness to contend that people behind the Barricade were chanting "Hey, hey IRA" rejected the suggestion that there people had advanced north of the Rubble Barricade. Day183/111/22 to Day183/112/11

18.5.3.118 Brian Rainey (AR3) was also questioned about this matter. Brian Rainey was standing on a small wall which ran around the gardens on the south east side of Glenfada Park South, from where he had a good view of the Rubble Barricade and down Rossville Street. Day 132/106/17 to Day 132/106/19 From that location he could see a number of youths throwing stones. Day 132/107/2 to Day 132/107/10

18.5.3.119 Brian Rainey had a specific recollection of the two arrests conducted in the waste ground and was asked:

"Do you remember, did that have the effect of thoroughly annoying and infuriating particularly the young men at the rubble barricade?

A. I could not say that it had any more that they had seen this sort of thing before. I do not think this in particular would infuriate them." Day 132/154/3 to Day 132/154/8

18.5.3.120 There are also other witnesses who make no reference to any such incident and were not asked about it. The photographic evidence, showing the crowd behind the Rubble Barricade before the shooting of Michael Kelly and in particular, photographs P635A also undermine the suggestion that this was a major incident.

18.5.3.121 In our submission, while an incident may have occurred in that youths advanced north of the Rubble Barricade in response to the arrest of William John Dillon, it was of a relatively insignificant nature and posed no threat to any soldiers. None of the witnesses lend support to Soldier 017's suggestion that he believed that the crowd "would have ripped me to pieces if they had got me. Crowds had killed soldiers before. I felt very vulnerable there on my own." B1484.004 paragraph 23 In fact consistently the witnesses speak in terms of the actions of civilians as amounting to a gesture, rather than posing any threat. Moreover, on their account it was not directed at Soldiers P and 017.

18.5.3.122 None of these witnesses lend support to the soldiers' case that there were nail bombs thrown from, or gunfire coming from the Rubble Barricade, which was the basis upon which soldiers claimed that they used lethal force. All of them give clear evidence that the persons they saw shot and killed were unarmed and were posing no threat to soldiers. Moreover, all of the witnesses testify to the fact that no one at the Rubble Barricade was posing a threat to soldiers.

18.5.3.123 The issue has been elevated by those acting for the soldiers into a major issue out of all proportion to its importance and, while it lends support to the evidence that people at the Barricade were engaged in stone-throwing and were hostile to the soldiers, it tells us little more. However, the incident is not insignificant given the evidence dealt with below in relation to Soldier P which suggests that, unprovoked by any significant attack or threat, Soldier P fired off 2 rounds from his hip prior to the firing of the round by Soldier F which killed Michael Kelly. This firing, while it did not in fact, claim any casualties was completely unjustified.

Stone throwing at the soldiers from the Rubble Barricade

18.5.3.124 There is evidence, not merely from the witnesses identified above, but from other civilian witnesses that some youths were involved in stone-throwing at soldiers from behind the Rubble Barricade.

18.5.3.125 Father O'Keefe can be seen in P412 and P413, with his back to the camera, surveying the scene on Rossville Street. He recalled that there were perhaps 35 people in the general area of the Rubble Barricade. His recollection was that a

> "small group of youths, about 7 or 8, towards the middle of the barricade on the Free Derry Side...clearly intended to confront the soldiers. As the soldiers dispersed, I have a vague recollection of these youths waving their arms and yelling at the soldiers. I do not remember actually seeing them throwing stones – I was watching the Saracens – but I had the impression that stones were being thrown. The boys were calling out to other people in the area to join them. I assume that they must have been thinking that the soldiers were not going to come right in and that there could be another confrontation." H21.46 paragraph 11

18.5.3.126 Matthew Connolly, who was at the southern gable of Glenfada Park North, also recalled about 20 to 30 people throwing stones at an armoured vehicle on the waste ground AC76.2 paragraph 13, and some people throwing stones in the general direction of the soldiers, although there was nothing close enough to throw stones at. He also recalled the crowd shouting obscenities at the soldiers. AC76.2 at paragraph 16

18.5.3.127 Margo Harkin recalled that at least one youth was to the north of the Rubble Barricade, throwing stones Day 416/7/10 to Day 416/7/18. She also remembers that a young man with long shoulder length hair, which may have been dirty fair, stood slightly to the north of the Rubble Barricade and entertained the crowd at the Rubble Barricade by putting on a show of bravado AH 23.13 paragraphs 21 to 22. She went on:

> "A few of the younger lads were throwing stones at the army, which they were picking up from the ground and from the Rubble Barricade. It was nothing unusual to see fellas of this age throwing stones in Derry at this time and on this occasion, at this point; it wasn't on any great scale. They would have been between say 14 and 18 years old." AH23.14 paragraph 24.

18.5.3.128 In her oral evidence to the Tribunal, she suggested that there could have been anything from 5 to 15 people gesticulating or throwing stones from the Barricade area. Day 416/9/15 to Day 416/9/22

18.5.3.129 George Roberts candidly admits to throwing stones[19] from the Rubble Barricade towards soldiers who, he says, were coming in their armoured cars. He says that maybe 15 to 20 people were throwing stones, but that the soldiers were too far away for his stones to reach. Day 151/69/20 to Day 151/70/4

[19] See also James Quinn AQ10.5 paragraph 24

18.5.3.130 It is not in dispute that there was stone-throwing and some name-calling from youths behind the Rubble Barricade. While, as will be seen below, there is evidence from some of the persons who witnessed the shooting of John Young and Michael McDaid that one or more of those shot may have been throwing stones, or were part of a group throwing stones. There is no evidence before the Tribunal to establish conclusively that either of these deceased were involved in stone-throwing. In any event, stone-throwing did not pose a threat to soldiers and could never have justified the use of lethal force by soldiers on Bloody Sunday.

Presence of Guns and Nail Bombs behind the Rubble Barricade

18.5.3.131 The soldiers' case to this tribunal is dependent on demonstrating that there were lethal weapons behind the Rubble Barricade, even if not used by the Deceased. On the military evidence, Soldiers P, F and J were firing at nail bombers, Soldier P also fired at a gunman, Soldier E fired at a sniper, Soldier U fired at a pistol man. Other soldiers give evidence of gunfire coming from behind the Rubble Barricade, including Soldier 028 who states that there was a man with a machine-gun firing live rounds.

18.5.3.132 Not one civilian lends support to the case made by the soldiers. The issue of civilian evidence about civilian gunmen and bombers in Sector 3 is dealt with separately. Here it is proposed to deal briefly with some of the evidence, representative of the body of civilian evidence, from people positioned behind the Rubble Barricade and at the gable end of the eastern block of Glenfada Park North. That evidence demonstrates conclusively that there were no weapons behind the Rubble Barricade, at the time that Michael Kelly, John Young, Michael McDaid and William Nash met their deaths.

18.5.3.133 Terence O'Keefe who gave evidence to both the Widgery Inquiry and this Tribunal was asked about the case being made by the soldiers:

"You may or may not know that the case which has been made by the soldiers before this Tribunal is that in and around the southern side of the rubble barricade, there were as many as three persons with rifles; there were two persons with pistols; there was one person with a sub-machine gun; and there were three people with nail bombs; did you see any of that?

A. I saw none of that and I think it would have been impossible for that to have happened without me having noticed." Day 127/150/11 to Day 127/150/20

18.5.3.134 Denis Bradley was also asked about this issue:

"It is also their [the soldiers'] evidence that there was something like 13 gunmen and 3 blast bombers operating out of Rossville Street between Rossville Flats and Glenfada Park. Did you see or hear any of that?

A. No, that I will give evidence about very definitely. From the view from Glenfada Park was a very panoramic of Rossville street right across into Joseph Place; there were no gunmen on Rossville Street; there were no petrol bombers on Rossville Street by the time I got there to that gable end, which was within 30 seconds of Michael Kelly having been anointed by me and me being aware of bodies on --- at the barricade on Rossville Street; there were certainly no gunmen on Rossville Street; there were no bombers in Rossville Street; there was no-one responding to fire out of that Rossville Street area." Day 140/181/17 to Day 140/182/8

18.5.3.135 Ciaran Donnelly a photographer for the Irish Times on Bloody Sunday witnessed Michael Kelly fall, having been fatally wounded by Soldier F. he was questioned in the following terms at the Widgery Tribunal:

"Q. It may be suggested here that shots were fired from the area where this man fell – from the people behind the barricade? A. No.

Q. What would you say to such a suggestion? A. I was there, and if I was 15 yards at the most from these people I would know if someone was shooting near me, and the first thing I would do would be to run away, because I would not want to be caught in it.

Q. Have you any doubt about that? A. None whatever.

Q. Did you see anything from that crowd behind the barricade which would justify anyone in shooting that man? A. No. That man at the time, he might have thrown stones, but he did not seem to be doing anything at all. He was not even throwing stones at that time." WT2.84E-G

18.5.3.136 Ciaran Donnelly was also questioned in the course of this Tribunal about this issue and confirmed that he had not seen any weapons behind the Barricade. Day 71/27/7 to Day 71/27/16

18.5.3.137 Matthew Connolly who witnessed the murder of John Young stated that:

"Nobody was shooting from the Rubble Barricade at the army. I was not aware of any civilians at the barricade with guns. If I had seen a civilian gunman, I would have remembered." AC76.5 paragraph 29

and he went on to say that

"At no time during the day did I see any civilians with firearms or petrol or nail bombs. I only saw some civilians throwing stones, bottles or bricks. Similarly, I do not think I heard any explosions." AC76.7 paragraph 47

18.5.3.138 Albert Faulkner a former member of the Royal Navy, who gave evidence at the Widgery Inquiry and made a statement to this Tribunal stated that:

" . . . I heard no sound which could have been an explosion. The only guns I saw were those carried by the army. Whilst I would not necessarily have been able to distinguish between the sound of an army rifle and a civilian rifle or small hand gun, I do believe that the sharp cracks I could hear all came from army rifles." AF4.4 paragraph 18

18.5.3.139 Hugh Anthony Duffy stated in the account given by him in 1972 to NICRA that "None of us had any signs of arms, nail bombs or petrol bombs. The truth is those people who so easily could have included myself were gunned down unnecessarily . . . For them to say they were met by a hail of bullets is a lie. They opened fire indiscriminately, they hit everybody. There was no nail bombs, no petrol bombs and nobody opened fire at them. I swear that". AD157.9

18.5.3.140 Hugh Duffy of the same name, stated to the same effect:

"I swear that, apart from he British soldiers, I saw no other person with a gun that day, neither did I see or hear any nail bombs or petrol bombers." AD156.5 paragraph 28

18.5.3.141 The truth of the matter is, as it was so eloquently put by Bishop Daly, when being questioned about the IRA in Derry:

"I would point out to you that the men of violence were not just civilians.

Q. No?

A. And men of violence on that particular day, certainly were those in uniform." Day 75/72/2 to Day 75/72/9

18.5.3.142 It is not proposed to identify every civilian witness who gave evidence about the fact that, not merely were the deceased unarmed, but those around them, on the Rubble Barricade were unarmed and posing no threat, real or imagined to the soldiers. The civilian testimony demonstrates without more that those killed behind the Barricade were gunned down mercilessly without justification or excuse and that what happened to John Young and Michael McDaid was murder.

Conclusion

18.5.3.143 In relation to the conduct of the crowd at the Rubble Barricade, it is our submission that the civilian evidence can be summarised as follows:

(i) None of the deceased had a weapon, or was near any person who had a weapon.

(ii) There is no evidence, photographic, or otherwise, before the Tribunal (including the expert analysis of photographs) to support the conclusion that the civilians at the barricade were armed.

(iii) No lethal weapons were used against the army.

(iv) None of the civilians saw a lethal weapon in the vicinity of the Rubble Barricade.

(v) A number of civilians threw stones in the direction of the army on Rossville Street.

(vi) The stone throwers could have involved up to a maximum of thirty persons.

(vii) Only stones and pieces of rubble were thrown at the army.

(viii) A small number of civilians may have advanced towards, onto or over the Rubble Barricade, throwing stones and shouting at soldiers, at the time of the arrests in the waste ground.

(ix) Because of the distance between the Rubble Barricade and the soldiers, the stones were never going to reach soldiers and posed no appreciable threat.

(x) The soldiers on Rossville Street were never under threat from the crowd at the Rubble Barricade, nor could they have perceived themselves to be under threat.

Civilian Evidence about Soldiers Firing at Rubble Barricade

18.5.3.144 While civilians came under live fire within a short time of the arrival of soldiers on Rossville Street, some civilians have been in a position to assist the Tribunal as to the actions of those soldiers, both in terms of their positions on Rossville Street, how they fired and whether they took cover. What follows is a brief review of that body of civilian evidence.

18.5.3.145 Fr. O'Keefe gave a very vivid account of the soldiers dismounting from their Saracens and getting into firing positions almost immediately. Such evidence sits uneasily with the suggestion that the soldiers were there to conduct an arrest operation.

18.5.3.146 "As the Saracens stopped and I stopped, and I turned to look north back up Rossville Street, I saw groups of soldiers jumping out of the Saracens and taking up positions. They were all carrying rifles. Some moved swiftly to my left (their right) and took up positions at Kells Walk. Others took up positions across Rossville Street, in front of the Saracens. Some of those soldiers kneeled in firing positions, others stood in firing positions with one foot in front of the other. All the soldiers were holding their rifles to their shoulders. I could not see whether any soldiers went behind the Saracens. It was like a movie scene – men silhouetted against the backdrop, moving very fast with rifles. As the soldiers ran towards their positions, they had their rifles pointing up in the air, but as they adopted their positions, they pointed their rifles down Rossville Street towards the barricade.

18.5.3.147 Very quickly after the soldiers had got into position, the shooting started. The shots were coming from the soldiers I had seen adopting firing positions. I assumed, at first, that the soldiers were firing rubber bullets to drive the crowd further back. It never occurred to me that the soldiers might be firing live ammunition as the crowd had done nothing to justify that."

H21.45 paragraphs 10 to 12

18.5.3.148 When questioned by Counsel to the Inquiry Professor O'Keefe felt that EP23.8 resembled the group he saw running between the two vehicles. He believed that by the time EP23.9 was taken the firing had started and along with other people he had begun to take shelter at the gable wall. In an image preserved as H21.141 the pink arrow depicts the direction in which soldiers were running, while the turquoise arrow depicts other soldiers coming around to stand in front of their vehicles. The blue arrow represents the vehicles. Day 127/98/7 to Day 127/98/12

18.5.3.149 Ronald Wood, also gives an account of the soldiers actions as they debussed:

18.5.3.150 "The doors of the Saracens were thrown open and soldiers disembarked and took up positions . . . One or two soldiers stayed near the vehicles, while a few soldiers took up kneeling positions at a small wall at the north east corner of Glenfada Park North [the witness later identified the wall as "the higher brick wall running parallel to Rossville Street" Day 127/11/9 to Day 127/11/18] . . . using the wall as cover. The remainder positioned themselves between the vehicles and the small wall in kneeling positions facing southwards towards the Rubble Barricade, with their rifles held in an aiming position at their shoulders. . . ." AW24.1 paragraph 7

18.5.3.151 While Ronald Wood's evidence refers to soldiers apparently taking cover, there is a substantial body of evidence that many soldiers got into firing positions without cover.

18.5.3.152 Alphonsus Oliver Cunningham describes the conduct of one soldier in particular, at about the time that soldiers were involved in the arrest of William John Dillon:

"I then noticed a soldier standing in front of a ramp on the southern end of Kells Walk . . .The soldier was standing in full view. There may have been other soldiers near him but I did not notice any. He was wearing a helmet – I cannot say whether it had a visor, and I don't remember any other details about his appearance or what he was wearing. He raised his rifle casually to his shoulder and fired a shot in the direction of the rubble barricade. . . " AC125.2 paragraph 7

18.5.3.153 Under questioning the witness remained clear that the soldier was standing in front of the wall of the ramp leading through to Columbcille Court, close to the end of the gable and that he had fired the first high velocity shot the witness heard that day, fired within a few minutes of the arrival of the Saracens. Day 150/9/16 to Day 150/11/23

18.5.3.154 Liam Mailey took photographs EP23.6, EP23.7, EP23.8, EP23.9 in all of which Soldiers P and 017 can be seen. Liam Mailey was asked about EP23.7 in the course of his evidence to the Widgery Tribunal and was asked about Soldier P, who is the soldier with the rifle in that picture:

"Q. When you saw him what was he doing? A. He was holding a gun about his hip and pointing it towards the barricade.

Q. Was he doing anything with the gun as far as you could see? A. My attention was attracted to him by the sound of two shots and I imagine that he being the only one there with a rifle, he was the one who fired them.

Q. Was that what caused you to attempt to take his photograph. A. Yes.

Lord Widgery: You mean he fired them down the entry? No, he fired them towards the barricade. He had just turned round at this stage.

Mr. Hill: As a result of his having fired these two bullets at the barricade did you then try to take his photograph? A. Yes.

Q. So the time the photograph was taken was he in the position he is in photograph 7, just turned and looking down the entry? A. Yes.

Q. Did he then give any signal to other soldiers who were in the background and not shown in photograph 7? A. He gave me that impression, that he was signalling other soldiers, yes.

Q. As a result of that did a number of soldiers come round the wall towards him, and have you shown them in photograph No. 8 (EP23.8) A. Yes.

Q. In photograph No. 9 (EP23.9) is it clear that the soldiers who have come forward in apparent order and have failed to gain entry to the back of Kells Walk have gone back again and between the two walls in order to go up the ramp towards the back of Kells Walk? A. Yes.

Q. Did some of the second group of soldiers appear already to have taken up a firing position at the back of the wall? A. That is right." WT7.36A-G

18.5.3.155 Liam Mailey no longer has a clear recollection of the events of the day, but his evidence to the effect that Soldier P fired two shots from the hip is consistent with the evidence of two other witnesses to this Inquiry.

18.5.3.156 Eamonn Melaugh in the account he gave to the Sunday Times also refers to a paratrooper firing two rounds from the waist:

"There were three troopers who came the furthest up Rossville St. One was a rubber bullet man who was at the front and he was shooting his rubber bullet gun almost as quickly as he could load it. Immediately behind him and slightly further away because they were standing tight into the brick wall one of the troops I know now to be a paratrooper fired two rounds. He didn't take aim. He fired from the waist. . . " AM397.23

18.5.3.157 On Soldier P's account the first two shots he fired were at a nail bomber. According to his statement to the Treasury Solicitor and the Trajectory Photograph prepared for the Widgery Tribunal P22 Soldier P was at the east facing wall of the Kells Walk pram ramp, as depicted in EP23.7 and the nail bomber was on the same side of the road, on the footpath adjacent to the alleyway leading to Glenfada Park North. Thus on his Treasury Solicitor's account he fired straight down Rossville Street in the direction of the Rubble Barricade as described by Liam Mailey. The distinction is of course that there was no nail bomber and he fired from the hip.

18.5.3.158 Brendan Carlin also describes soldiers in the positions of Soldier P and 017, one with a rubber bullet fun. On his description the soldiers were being stoned by rioters coming from an alleyway "eastwards from the north of Glenfada Park North . . . These two were under pressure and the other soldier with a rifle fired a live round. He did this with his right elbow at the hip but with the gun pointing over the heads of the youths." AC30.7 paragraph 12

18.5.3.159 This witness did not give oral evidence to this Inquiry and we are not aware of the reason for his non-attendance. No civilian corroborates his account of these two soldiers being stoned, and the photographs do not tend to support that account. Nonetheless he also gives an account of Soldier P firing two shots from the hip.

18.5.3.160 Ciaran Donnelly's account of the sequence of shooting lends support to the proposition that the first two shots fired were fired by Soldier P and that this was followed by the shot from Soldier F which resulted in the death of Michael Kelly. He was questioned about the shooting over the Rubble Barricade in the course of the Widgery Tribunal:

> "Q. ... It is not true to say that you heard any quantity of firing going on after the troops came in? A. Not immediately after they came in.

Q. Until that one shot at the barricade. A. there were first of all two shots and no-one fell and then about a minute later another shot and one man fell." WT3.8D-E

18.5.3.161 His account to this Tribunal was the same, he heard two shots, nobody fell and then he saw Michael Kelly and possibly Hugh Gilmore fall. Day 71/ 28/7 to Day 71/28/14

18.5.3.162 He also suggests that photograph EP27.7 which is the photograph in which people behind the Rubble Barricade begin to crouch, was taken at the time he heard the two shots. Day 71/32/7 to Day 71/32/18

18.5.3.163 A number of witnesses also give an account of firing from soldiers at the northern gable end of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats, where Soldier U was positioned. Given that soldier U is the prime candidate for the shooting of Hugh Gilmore it is not proposed to address that evidence in this section.[20]

18.5.3.164 A number of witnesses describe sustained firing from the soldiers positioned in and about Columbcille Court and behind the Kells Walk Wall. However once the firing started in earnest people took cover and the evidence about the volume of firing after the shooting of Michael Kelly and at the time of and after the shooting of Michael McDaid and John Young is dealt with below.

Shooting at the Rubble Barricade

18.5.3.165 The shooting of John Young and Michael McDaid at the Rubble Barricade took place in the immediate aftermath of the shooting of Michael Kelly. Broadly speaking witnesses to their shooting fall into two categories: those sheltering at the southern gable of the eastern block of Glenfada Park North; or, those observing from the windows of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats. Others witnessed it from Joseph Place.

[20] Don Mullan AM448.4 paragraphs 29 to 33, Ciaran O'Somachain AO70.3 paragraph 14

18.5.3.166 The fact that they were shot just a short time after Michael Kelly was shot has added to the confusion in the evidence about the circumstances in which they were shot. The reaction of those around him, to the shooting of Michael Kelly was one of shock. In its initial aftermath, many people had difficulty in believing that he had been shot with a live round, and there was some confusion.[21] Inevitably many people panicked and tried to get way from the Rubble Barricade as quickly as possible.[22]

18.5.3.167 A number of people became involved in moving Michael Kelly from the Rubble Barricade to the relative safety of the gable end of the eastern block of Glenfada Park North, while others looked on. The evidence would tend to suggest that as Michael Kelly was being tended to at the gable end wall, Michael McDaid, John Young and William Nash were shot and killed[23].

18.5.3.168 Because of the conditions under which it occurred, with people panicking, running for shelter, or either assisting in or watching the removal of Michael Kelly, the evidence provided by the civilians in respect of the events at the Rubble Barricade is confused and often mistaken.

18.5.3.169 Many witnesses also testify to a sustained volley of shooting over the Rubble Barricade in the aftermath of the shooting of Michael Kelly, this operated to prevent people from watching what was happening and

[21] See for example, Fr. O'Keefe at WT5.6G See also AW 24.16E-F
[22] See Charlie McLaughlin AM321.4 paragraph 12; Day 177/86/10 to Day 177/86/15
[23] See Denis Bradley H1.9 paragraph 23 to H1.10 paragraph 24; also Terence O'Keefe H21.46 paragraph 14

also prevented people from going to the assistance of those shot and killed at the Rubble Barricade[24]. Day127/22/20 to Day 127/23/8

18.5.3.170 An additional problem for witnesses to the murders at the Rubble Barricade is that absent personal knowledge of the victims, it would have been difficult for witnesses to distinguish one youth from another. Under conditions of sustained live fire, where the victims were close to each other in age, in terms of the location at which they were shot and given the proximity of the times of their shooting, understanding what had happened was difficult for those involved.

Photographic Evidence

18.5.3.171 It is apparent from P638 that the body of Michael Kelly was taken to the relative safety of the entrance to Glenfada Park North. It is also clear from the demeanour of some persons at the southern gable of Glenfada Park North that their attention has been drawn to an incident to the east. Two persons can be seen pointing towards the Rubble Barricade, and Mr Barry Liddy, who can be seen in the cream raincoat and hat kneeling close to the body of his fatally wounded nephew, is also watching the Barricade.

18.5.3.172 P639 was taken before P638 and shows a similar scene. Christopher Doherty can be seen at the western edge of the southern gable of Glenfada Park North. He has a white handkerchief tied around his neck, covering his mouth and nose from gas. In P640, Mr. Doherty can be seen walking in an easterly direction, towards the Rubble Barricade, closely followed by Fr Denis Bradley[25], who has just anointed the body of Michael Kelly. Professor Terence O'Keefe, his back to the camera, can be seen standing on the cobble stones, comforting Denis McLaughlin, who was in a distressed state. He is the youth in the camouflaged jeans.

[25] Christopher Doherty says that he had drawn Father Bradley's attention to the bodies on the barricade. Day182/137/22 to Day 182/138/4

18.5.3.173 Matthew Connolly's evidence has been looked at briefly in this section in regard to his meeting with John Young at the corner of William Street and Rossville Street (AC76.2 paragraph 11) and in respect of the stone throwing from the Rubble Barricade. (AC76.2 paragraph 13) It is Mr Connolly's evidence, however, that when the shooting began towards the Rubble Barricade, there was no stone throwing immediately before the troops opened fire. AC76.4 paragraph 23

18.5.3.174 As Mr. Connolly stood behind the Rubble Barricade, close to Glenfada Park North, a small boy in front of him jumped and screamed as if he had been shot. Matthew Connolly initially did not believe he had been shot. Mr. Connolly, was unable to identify the person but was later advised that the person may have been William Nash or Michael McDaid AC76.3 paragraph 17.

18.5.3.175 He gave a description of a youth of 15 or 16 years old, wearing a shirt (which may have been light blue in colour) but no jacket. He believes his hair was dark and of average length. He was shot high up in the left hand side of the chest and it took the witness a couple of minutes to see blood. (In his oral evidence he confirmed that this was just his impression of what the youth was wearing; he couldn't be sure. Day 151/13/7 to Day 151/13/10) There were two or three people around him. He was still screaming. The group stayed around the boy for about two minutes, during which time there was no shooting AC76.3 paragraph 18. In his deposition to the Coroner, he said that the youth was wounded high up on the left hand side of his chest. It should be noted that Denis McLaughlin's evidence was that the first person he recalled shot, was also screaming. (AM326.5 paragraph 17)

18.5.3.176 In his interview with Peter Pringle and Peter Jacobsen on March 14, 1972, he said:

"I was standing on the Glenfada Park side of the barricade on the pavement when I heard a single rifle shot a young fellow of about 16 or 17 fell in front of me. He had been shot in the chest on the left side. I learnt after that it was Willie Nash. I could see the bullet hole in his light coloured shirt. The shot appeared to come from the soldiers who were about 40 yards away up Rossville Street on the same side crouched behind the door of a pig. Nash squealed. He was not dead. He was moaning AC 76.14.

The Tribunal will be aware that William Nash was wearing a light coloured shirt.[26]

18.5.3.177 After this youth was shot at the barricade, the witness saw about four soldiers at the low wall at Kells Walk. There was a Saracen almost level with them. He could see that its back doors were open as they projected beyond the sides of the Saracen. The soldiers were aiming their guns south down Rossville Street. He could not say whether they had shot the boy. He described a soldier standing behind the left-hand (as witness looked at it) door of the Saracen. AC76.3 paragraphs 19 to 21 In a deposition for the Inquest, he said he had the impression that this soldier at the rear of the Saracen had fired. AC76.26.

18.5.3.178 The Sunday Times account suggests he then saw John Young for the first time that day. This conflicts with his evidence to this Tribunal at AC76.1 paragraph 9, which suggests that he had met John Young earlier in the day before the Army came in.

18.5.3.179 There was then a volley of automatic shots and the impression that these shots were very close to him. The impact sounded as if it was hitting stones, perhaps the stones in the Rubble Barricade. He believed that there were more than ten or fifteen shots. (In his deposition provided to the Coroner, he estimated that 12 – 15 shots rang out AC 76.26)

"Immediately, I got down flat on the ground. Nobody had been throwing stones immediately before these shots. The soldiers near the Saracen were too far away to throw stones at. Although there had been ten or fifteen of us behind the Rubble Barricade before these shots, it is my recollection that there were only four or five of us lying down behind the barricade after these shots. The others must have moved away, perhaps south down Rossville Street, although I do not know." AC76.3 paragraphs 22 to 23

18.5.3.180 Mr Connolly then gave a detailed account of the shooting of John Young:

"...I think I was about ten or twelve feet south from the end gable wall but I am not very sure how far east or west along the gable wall I was. I heard someone in the crowd shout "come back in". I saw somebody on his honkers move out from the gable end of the wall where we were sheltering towards the Rubble Barricade. I thought that the person who had shouted "come back in" had shouted at this man. There was also another man behind him and slightly to his left as I was looking at them and I will describe him later. The first man who I had seen then fell over. He was between the gable wall and the Rubble Barricade, to the south of the Rubble Barricade, approximately at the point marked 2...[almost in centre of Barricade]. He fell to his right. He had been crouched down with his left side towards the Rubble Barricade and he fell to the south away from the barricade onto his right side, facing east. I then saw him plainly and I saw that he was John Young. He had been shot in the head. The wound was in the left hand side of the head. He lay on his side with his feet towards the Rubble Barricade, still in a crouched position. He did not move. Although I heard shots at the time, there was no specific shot which I could say hit him. At no time had I seen John Young throw stones." AC 76.4 paragraph 26.

18.5.3.181 In his deposition to the Coroner, he said that John Young was about two foot from the end of the garden wall. AC 76.26 This garden wall is best captured in P502. Although Mr. Connolly said in oral evidence he could not be sure about that exact position Day 151/22/3 to Day 151/22/8, in his NICRA statement, Connolly stated his belief that John Young crawled out and was about a yard from the shot youth, when he too was shot. AC 76.13 John Young wore a combat hat and jeans AC 76.15 and the witness confirmed that John Young's hands were empty Day 151/20/24 and he was making no attempt to call to the soldiers, to signal or wave a white handkerchief. Day 151/21/5 to Day 151/21/8

'There had been sporadic shooting ever since the first boy had been shot. Occasionally, there would be clusters of heavier shooting too. John Young fell during the sporadic shooting as did the man who was behind him when he was shot'. AC 76.5 paragraph 30

18.5.3.182 He also confirmed that he had heard a single shot and saw John Young fall Day 151/25/20 to Day 151/25/22, and just before he had heard that single shot, there was no shooting going on. Day 151/25/23 to Day 151/26/1

18.5.3.183 Mr. Connolly believed that John and the second person who had fallen, fell "either on the pavement or very close to it". Day 151/25/1 to Day 151/25/4

18.5.3.184 Counsel for the Families questioned Mr. Connolly as to the timing between the different shootings and the identity of the first person he saw shot and killed. Mr. Connolly said that he believed, but could not swear to it, that five or ten minutes had elapsed before

John Young went out to the first body. Day 151/44/7 to Day 151/44/9

18.5.3.185 Mr. Connolly was also questioned about the accuracy of his identification of the first person he saw shot. Specifically it was suggested to him that the first person he had seen shot was Michael Kelly but that he had seen John Young go to the aid of William Nash, lying shot on the Rubble Barricade. Matthew Connolly accepted that this was possible. Day 151/40/11 to Day 151/40/19 He also accepted that the first casualty might have been Michael Kelly when this was suggested to him by Counsel to the Inquiry. Day 151/13/3 to Day 151/13/6

18.5.3.186 Mr Connolly then gave evidence about the possible shooting of a third person:

> "Immediately after this, the second man who had been behind John Young and to his left, that is nearer to the Glenfada Park North side of Rossville St, seemed to stumble. He was approximately at the point marked 3 [south of the barricade, almost near the gap] ... I think, therefore, that he was further out on the road than the first boy marked 1 I had seen shot. I would say this man was about eighteen or nineteen years old. I think that he wore something dark, maybe jeans, although I am not sure. He was not tall (average height, 5'4" or 5'5" (Day 151/23/17)) and I cannot recall what his hair was like. After I saw him stumble someone then blocked my view and I never saw him again. I do not know what happened to him, but assumed he had been shot. I did not know who he was, but afterwards have discovered that he may be either William Nash or Michael McDaid, because I learned that they, too, were shot there." AC76.4 paragraph 27.

18.5.3.187 In his NICRA statement at AC76.13, witness says this youth was shot, stumbled back towards the wall and taken onto a house (sic).

When this second man went out he did not appear have been carrying anything that looked like a weapon. Day 151/23/21

18.5.3.188 It is clear that Mr Connolly is unable to give a reliable account of what happened to the third person that he saw "stumble". He told Counsel to the Inquiry that he was not 100% sure, but that he did not think that he saw this person again. Day 151/24/6 to Day 151/24/10 He accepted that in relation to this aspect of his evidence he is reliant upon information that he received after Bloody Sunday, based upon which he made an assumption that it must have been Michael McDaid or William Nash. Day 151/24/3 to Day 151/24/5

18.5.3.189 It was Matthew Connolly's belief that the shooting he had heard had been coming south down Rossville Street from where he had earlier seen the soldiers at Kells Walk. He accepted that he could not tell the difference between a high or low velocity shot, but could tell the difference between the sound of a rubber bullet and live shots. AC76.5 paragraph 28

18.5.3.190 Mr Connolly could not state conclusively whether John Young and the second man had gone out towards the Rubble Barricade to help the boy he now believes to be William Nash, or not. As stated above John Young and William Nash had been classmates at St Joseph's school. In addition, William Nash lived at Dunree Gardens, which was a street leading off the street where John Young lived, Westway and was probably therefore known to John Young.

18.5.3.191 It is clear that having witnessed more than one person shot at the Rubble Barricade, and only recognising one, the evidence of Matthew Connolly in relation to the casualties, other than John Young behind the Rubble Barricade is confused. His account has also undoubtedly been influenced by what he was told about the identities of the casualties in the aftermath of the shooting. However his evidence about the circumstances of John Young's shooting is clear and in our submission reliable. John Young was shot and killed while going to the aid of another person shot and killed at the Rubble Barricade, in all probability William Nash. That submission finds some support in the testimony of Denis McLaughlin below.

18.5.3.192 Denis Mc Laughlin is an important witness to the shooting of John Young, Michael McDaid and William Nash. He was 16 years old on Bloody Sunday and has identified himself as the youth wearing the distinctive camouflaged or bleached jeans in P640. He had run through Glenfada Park North and stopped at the gable wall where he estimates that 20 or 30 people were already gathered. He describes a scene of panic at the entrance to Block 1 of the Rossville Flats and stated that he could hear high velocity shots coming from the northern end of Rossville Street. AM 326.4 paragraph 15 Mr McLaughlin did not witness any soldier shooting towards the Rubble Barricade. Day 159/32/12 to Day 159/32/14

18.5.3.193 According to Denis McLaughlin's evidence William Nash was the first person he witnessed being shot at the Rubble Barricade. If his evidence is correct, William Nash must have left the position in which his brother John had identified him in EP27.11, because Denis McLaughlin recalled that William Nash was running over the loose stones of the barricade at a point he has marked as '10' on the plan attached to his statement at AM326.23.

18.5.3.194 Mr. McLaughlin has provided an accurate description of the clothing worn by William Nash on Bloody Sunday, of a brown suit. William Nash was crossing the Rubble Barricade in a southerly direction towards Free Derry Corner, and was approaching the Barricade from the direction of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats. "He was not holding anything in his hands and did not look as if he was about to pick anything up. He was in a brisk walking posture but crouching from the shoulders with his head slightly bent, as if to make himself smaller to avoid the firing. He was running towards Free Derry Corner." AM326.5 paragraph 16

"As I caught sight of him he fell back and rolled over on his mouth and nose, on the Free Derry side (southside) of the Rubble Barricade. He lay no more than three to four yards from me and closer to the Glenfada Park pavement side. There is no doubt that he was unarmed. He began to start screaming, at which point I realised that he had been shot." AM326.5 paragraph 17

18.5.3.193 According to Denis McLaughlin, George Roberts, who is the long haired person on his hands and knees, slightly to the north east of Michael Kelly in P418, wearing jeans and a denim jacket, threw himself to the ground and began to crawl over to see if he could do anything for the man. Mr. McLaughlin then described how he "threw himself on to the ground and out into the Rubble Barricade over to the side of the man in the brown suit who had been shot. Just as I reached him the screaming died away to a moan. I began talking to him hysterically, telling him, "Don't worry, you'll be alright; we'll get you in". I cannot remember seeing a wound anywhere on his body. I looked at George and he told me the man was dead."' AM326.5 paragraph 18.

"Since Bloody Sunday I have seen pictures of the men who were killed that day, and can confirm that William Nash is the man I saw in the brown suit on the Rubble Barricade. I still have a clear picture of his face today." AM 326.6 paragraph 20

18.5.3.196 In oral evidence, he said he was sure that George Roberts was running with William Nash Day 159/14/7 to Day 159/14/20 and that Nash was facing Free Derry Corner when he fell face down Day 159/15/17 to Day 159/15/25. At the time that witness and George Roberts went out to the aid of the man, he recalls that no other casualties were at or near the Barricade and is certain that both he and Roberts went to the aid of the same person. Day 159/16/11 to Day 159/16/17 The position where the witness believes he saw William Nash fall was on the left hand side of what is shown in photograph E14.12 (Day 159/21/1 to Day 159/21/16) and the body was on the Glenfada Park North side of the gap in the barricade. Day 159/21/17 to Day 159/21/25

18.5.3.197 Mr. McLaughlin described the shooting which followed the death of William Nash in the following terms:

"After a brief moment everything happened very suddenly. As I turned away in fear from the man in the brown suit, I saw another person fall and I later found out he had been shot dead. He was four or five yards away lying on the road while I lay on the wide pavement. Another person walked out slowly and cautiously to this second person who had been shot. More shots rang out and he fell on top of me. People over at the flats were calling out and roaring "There's men dead", meaning us. I also heard someone saying "They're shooting from the Derry Walls". I then turned on my back and saw a person's head burst open and blood was pouring out. All I saw was red. This person fell on my side and blood came all over me and covered my hands. At no time did these people have anything in their hands. At this point I became totally hysterical and began roaring at George "Look at the blood". He replied "There's nothing we can do, we'll get in out of the road". I cannot remember anything about the position in which those bodies fell, from where they were shot, where they were shot in their bodies, what they were wearing or anything about their appearance. I can only say that they were shot very close to me." AM 326.5 paragraph 19

18.5.3.198 Mr. McLaughlin was not able to remember where the second person he saw shot was before he fell save that he was on the Free Derry Corner side of the Rubble Barricade. Day 159/23/15 to Day 159/23/24 McLaughlin places himself in the area of the photograph marked with a block, which can be found at AM326.36, but he could not remember exactly where the person fell. (Day 159/26/14 to Day 159/27/7) His statement at AM326.5 at paragraph 19 states that he was four or five yards away, and on the road. He did not see from where this person came but presumes he walked out from the Glenfada Park side. Day 159/29/8 to Day 159/29/15

18.5.3.199 He did not see any sign of injury on the third man but knew he was shot by the way he fell. Day 159/30/7 to Day 159/30/12

18.5.3.200 Mr. McLaughlin then goes onto describe the volume of fire coming over the Barricade:

> "At this point it was total chaos and shooting was really heavy. The bullets were bouncing off the barricade above our heads. George started crawling back towards the gable wall. A man who at the time I knew only as [redacted] was crouching at the gable end. He grabbed George's feet, and George grabbed my hands and pulled us to safety. I sat down with my back to the gable wall at the point marked 8 on the map (grid reference I15). Emotionally, I was in a real state.
>
> . . . I noticed Father Bradley about to head out to the bodies at the barricade, but the people at the gable wall held him back. I pulled him down towards me and said, "Father forgive me", as by that stage, I thought that I was going to be shot and killed too. Father Bradley said, "Don't worry, I'm here". There is a photograph of me near the gable end wall attached to this statement marked A. I was wearing bleached jeans and a denim jacket, and had long hair." AM 326.6 paragraphs 21 to 22

18.5.3.201 In summary, on the account given:

i) William Nash was shot, and then 2 young men who went to his assistance were also shot, one in the head.

ii) All of these people were unarmed.

iii) People at the gable end were confused about what was happening and some believed that both he and George Roberts had also been shot.

iv) They were eventually assisted from the Rubble Barricade by PIRA 1.

v) He became hysterical and had to be assisted by Fr Bradley.

vi) Because of the volume of firing none of the three persons he described was removed from the Rubble Barricade.

18.5.3.202 Mr. McLaughlin gave an account of events in 1972 which is slightly different account to that given to this Inquiry;

"I was hit with a rubber bullet and I fell and two men dragged me up. I went on down to see what was happening and I saw a body on the barricade. There was another fellow along with me and he was over with the body. I went over along with him and this boy came out and he was shot in the stomach. (He can no longer recall the wound to the stomach but stands by the account given in 1972. Day 159/34/13 to Day 159/34/17) He fell. Then this other man came out and he was shot and he fell. A boy came out and he was shot in the head. None of them were armed at all. They just came out to help this boy who had been shot. They thought we were shot also as we were lying beside him because we didn't want to get up. He was hit in the head. The blood came over my hand. There was a boy come over and he dragged this boy by the feet in order to get him out of the road. He said for us to get out of the road as we would only get shot. We said, what about these bodies. He said, you'll have to get over here or you'll get shot. He grabbed this first boy by the feet and he grabbed me by the hands and dragged me across. We were all against the wall with Fr Bradley...' AM326.24.

18.5.3.203 He clarified the latter part of the above account. PIRA 1 grabbed George Roberts by the feet and started to pull him towards the gable. Day 159/36/8 to Day 159/36/14

18.5.3.204 This account can be summarised as follows:

i) He saw a body and went to give assistance and one of the persons who accompanied him was shot.

ii) Two more persons went to the aid of the person who had been shot and both were shot, one in the head.

iii) Again, none of these people were removed from the Rubble Barricade.

18.5.3.205 Mr. McLaughlin was questioned by Counsel to the Tribunal about the sequence of events:

> Q. To summarise this so far: you saw first of all a man fall who you believed to be William Nash. Then a second man fell four or five yards away; that is right?
>
> A. Yes.
>
> Q. Another man came out, you thought, to assist that man and fell on top of you?
>
> A. Yes.
>
> Q. You turned away and a fourth person came and fell on you again; is that your recollection?
>
> A. The only recollection of a fourth person is the red at this time now sitting here today, yeah.
>
> Q. Are you certain that is a different person from the one who first fell on you?
>
> A.Yeah." Day 159/31/22 to Day 159/32/11

18.5.3.206 Mr McLaughlin can offer no details regarding the sex, age or clothing about this fourth person. Day 159/32/20 to Day 159/33/6

18.5.3.207 Counsel to the Tribunal raised the suggestion that the first person shot behind the Rubble Barricade was not in fact Michael Kelly and that "the bullet might have gone through one and into the second man, Michael Kelly." Day 159/22/12 to Day 159/22/15 and that it was this first man who was attended by Denis McLaughlin.

18.5.3.208 Mr. McLaughlin, rejected the suggestion that two men fell at about the same time and stated that he did not see anyone else in the area. Day 159/22/17 to Day 159/23/2

18.5.3.209 Counsel for a majority of the soldiers questioned Mr McLaughlin relating to the Barricade and suggested that if a person was removed from the area of the Barricade, while McLaughlin was at the gable, then it must have happened either before witness arrived in that area or after he had left it. Day 159/80/22 to Day 159/81/5 The witness did not see anyone carried away from the Rubble Barricade and he is photographed at that gable end wall and was later arrested there.

18.5.3.210 On his evidence before the Inquiry, therefore it seems that he accepts that:

i) He may have seen 4 people shot, one of whom was shot in the stomach and one to the head. Michael Kelly was shot in the stomach, William Nash in the chest and both John Young and Michael McDaid in the head.

ii) It is not in fact entirely clear that he did see 4 persons shot, because given the live fire coming over the Rubble Barricade, it does not follow that the fact that someone had fallen meant that they had been shot and killed. His account becomes very vague in respect of the supposed third and fourth man, in that he can only say that two men fell on top of him and one was shot in the head. He can give no other description. Moreover his considered recollection prior to hearing the Keville tape was that he had only seen three men shot.

iii) The men were shot in sequence and there was not a shoot-through as suggested to him, because the second man shot had gone to the attendance of the first man and could not therefore have been shot and killed at the same time as the first man.

iv) Again none of the bodies were removed from the Rubble Barricade.

18.5.3.211 It is our submission that the evidence of Denis McLaughlin amounts to the following: he witnessed three people shot and killed behind the Rubble Barricade. He must also have seen the body of Michael Kelly, probably at the Rubble Barricade and certainly by the time he got to the gable wall.

18.5.3.212 Denis McLaughlin has candidly accepted that the event was extremely traumatic and that he had blocked parts from his mind. On his own account:

"I was not in – I was not in full mind at that particular time."

Day 159/29/22 to Day 159/29/23

18.5.3.213 Given the traumatic events witnessed by him, there is undoubtedly room for confusion. In essence his evidence is reliable. He was at the Rubble Barricade at a time when we know four young men were shot. He did not see the first man shot, but saw the body, but he did witness the shooting of the other three. The confusion caused by a traumatic event and a gap of 30 years should not be used to justify the suggestion that he witnessed the killing of someone whose body was somehow, spirited away and the fact of whose death has been kept hidden for the last 30 years.

18.5.3.214 There are moreover a number of difficulties with the proposition that the person who Denis McLaughlin saw first, was a missing casualty.

i) While he witnessed the shooting of the missing casualty and then the shooting of William Nash, John Young and Michael McDaid, he managed to completely miss the shooting of Michael Kelly who, on the case being suggested to him, was shot and killed with the same bullet as the missing casualty.

ii) It is the consistent evidence of the civilians at and about the Rubble Barricade that the first person to fall at the Rubble barricade was Michael Kelly. If there was a shoot-through, all of these witnesses have to be wrong and a substantial body of them must be lying.

iii) He has consistently stated that the people he saw shot were not removed from the Rubble Barricade. In those circumstances they must have been the three people picked up by Mortar Platoon.

iv) According to his evidence there was no 'shoot-through', this means that the alleged missing casualty was not killed with the bullet fired from Soldier F's gun. However as it is the soldiers' accounts cannot account for all of those killed behind the Rubble Barricade. The question thus arises how could they have killed yet another person, when they cannot even account for the known deceased.

v) Moreover the suggestion put to him, that the 'missing casualty' was a person shot before Michael Kelly implies that the person shot was F's actual target. However on the evidence of both Denis McLaughlin and George Roberts the person was unarmed. The entire premise of the soldiers' case with regards to missing casualties is dependent on the missing casualties having been persons engaged in the use of lethal force.

18.5.3.215 There are other difficulties with the suggestion. If the shoot-through theory were to be accepted it means either that: one of William Nash, Michael McDaid or John Young was the first person shot on the Rubble Barricade, or that the person shot was a 'missing casualty' and the person identified by Soldier F as his nail bomber. However, this extra casualty went unnoticed by those who went to the aid of Michael Kelly, with the possible exception of George Roberts.

18.5.3.216 There is a large volume of evidence to the effect that after the removal of Michael Kelly from the Rubble Barricade, no one was able to gain access to the other bodies. This means that this 'missing casualty' had to have been removed at or about the same time as Michael Kelly. Alternatively this 'missing casualty' is in fact one of the three persons removed from the Rubble Barricade by Mortar Platoon.

18.5.3.217 If the body was removed at the same time as Michael Kelly, then despite the extensive photographic coverage of the Rubble Barricade and Glenfada Park North before and after the shooting this person was brought from the Rubble Barricade unnoticed. The removal was also unnoticed by the people at the gable wall of Glenfada Park North. Alternatively witnesses like Fr. Bradley, Barry Liddy and Fr O'Keefe have participated in a massive conspiracy, which has included the unidentified people who removed the body, a conspiracy which went into motion within minutes of this man's death and which has gone uncovered for 32 years.

18.5.3.218 George Roberts was 23 years old on Bloody Sunday. His evidence is that he was at the southern gable of the eastern block of Glenfada Park North with [redacted] He amended this when he gave oral evidence, to say that this person was PIRA 1. Day 151/69/14 to Day 151/69/15

18.5.3.219 In 1972 George Roberts' evidence seems to be to the effect that he had witnessed at least 3 people being shot:

> "...I was standing at the barricade and the army started shooting and the fellow standing beside me fell. He was hit and I got down beside him to try and pull him into the gable house. I called to the crowd and 6 of them ran forward to help us and 3 of them were shot. They fell towards me and another boy. I crawled behind the barricade behind this small wall. This person pulled me behind the wall and the shooting continued." AR13.8

18.5.3.220 However in his evidence to this Tribunal, he has stated in relation to referring to 3 people being shot:

> "I had probably heard this after, only the next day that three were shot at the barricade" Day 151/81/8 to Day 151/81/9

18.5.3.221 In his evidence to this Tribunal he has given an account of the shooting of a young man, slightly in front of him, and to his left. He describes him as wearing an arran sweater and states that he was shot below the eye. AR13.1 paragraph 7

18.5.3.222 Mr Roberts then identifies himself in EP 27.6, EP 32.1 and EP 32.2 EP 32.1 and EP 32.2 show Mr Roberts kneeling on the ground, over the person he believes was shot in the eye. To the rear of Mr Roberts' position is Michael Kelly who has been shot.

18.5.3.223 Mr Roberts stated that at the time Robert White took P637, showing the body of Michael Kelly, he was kneeling over the body of the other young man: "I was focusing on the other young fella, my head was away from that area there." Day 151/72/17 to Day 151/73/1

18.5.3.224 He rejected the possibility that he could have been simply kneeling in that position when P637 was taken, but rather he only went down because of the young man being shot. Day 151/73/7 to Day 151/73/14

18.5.3.225 However Mr. Roberts changed his position in relation to that issue over the course of his evidence. He confirmed that he had only a recollection of one person being shot behind the Rubble Barricade and that, the person had been shot below the eye. Day 151/97/4 to Day 151/97/11

18.5.3.226 When questioned by Mr Harvey QC on behalf of the Families he was asked in reference to John Young who was shot below the eye, on the Rubble Barricade:

"Q. Could it be that is the person that you have seen shot but it is in a later sequence than in the photograph on which you can be seen crouching?

A. Very possible.

Q. And that simply because of the shock you were in, you have missed quite a considerable number of events that went on before the person was shot in the eye?

A. Quite possible, yes." Day 151/97/16 to Day 151/97/24

18.5.3.227 When questioned by Mr Glasgow the witness was clear, as he had been with Mr. Harvey, Day 151/91/10 to Day 151/91/20 that the person he saw shot in the eye was not the first person shot, but was the first person he had seen shot. Day 151/106/15 to Day 151/106/18

18.5.3.228 However when the witness was re-examined he was shown photograph E14.12, an enhanced copy of P636. He was asked which of the two persons which he appeared to be kneeling over was the person who had sustained the wound to the eye. His answer was that "it could be neither of them" Day 151/117/8 to Day 151/117/10, and that he could not be sure if it was either of the two. Day 151/117/16 to Day 151/117/23 At the conclusion of his evidence he was asked:

"Q. Do you think the person you saw fall might be off this photograph?

A. I am not too sure now, I could not say, looking at it at that time, you know, a split second on a photo, it could be moved back or forward, whatever you know.

A. (Pause) Well, I could not be sure after all this time, you know. It does not look as though any of the two is the young fella was shot, you know what I mean." Day 151/118/17 to Day 151/119/11

18.5.3.229 The witness recalls sheltering behind the rubble and puffs of smoke from rounds hitting the Barricade. He suggests that there were perhaps an interval of a few seconds between the rounds hitting the barricade. AR13.2 paragraph 9 He then describes how he crawled to the safety of the gable wall, urged on by PIRA 1, and apparently oblivious to what was happening behind him at the Rubble Barricade.

18.5.3.230 Mr. Roberts accepted that when he had returned to the safety of the gable wall, he was "in shock" and "could not believe what was happening". Day 151/77/14 to Day 151/77/15

18.5.3.231 Denis McLaughlin has given evidence that he was with George Roberts when he witnessed a person shot in the head. Both have also given evidence of George Roberts being assisted from the Rubble Barricade by PIRA 1.

18.5.3.232 It seems probable that both witnesses witnessed one or more of John Young, Michael McDaid and William Nash being shot. It is also clear that the conditions under which they witnessed the incident were frightening and distressing and life-threatening for both of them and confusion in relation to the accounts is understandable. One issue upon which both witnesses are absolutely clear is that they did not see anybody at the Rubble Barricade with a weapon and none of the people behind the Rubble Barricade were armed. The people who they saw shot and killed were shot without justification.

18.5.3.233 Ronald Wood, gave evidence to Lord Widgery that after Michael Kelly, who was the first person murdered at the Rubble Barricade, had been hit, people continued for a few seconds to stand in amazement until they collected their wits about them. "The shooting started and two more went down." AW 24.16E to F

18.5.3.234 Mr Wood sought to make his way to assist the two but states that there was further live fire, "a bullet passed close to my head . . . I therefore retreated. It was evident that if anyone tried to help the two youths who had fallen they would also be shot. . . no-one managed to get out to the two youths who had fallen because of the continuous shooting." AW24.3 paragraph 18

18.5.3.235 Mr Wood gave clear evidence that he saw no weapons on the deceased or around their bodies and was clear that there had been no firing from the barricade. AW24.12 paragraph 12 He was quite clear that:

> "not only did you not see anything at that barricade which would have justified live rounds being fired, but neither have you ever heard anyone tell you that there was anything at the barricade which would have justified that?
> A. That is correct." Day 127/26/2 to Day 127/26/7 (See also Day 127/43/1 to Day 127/43/7)

18.5.3.236 Brian Rainey has also given evidence to this Tribunal about the shooting behind the Barricade, as has been seen above he was standing on a small wall which ran around the gardens on the south east side of Glenfada Park South, from where he had a good view of the Rubble Barricade and down Rossville Street. Day 132/106/17 to Day 132/106/19

18.5.3.237 He states that he heard a shots or shots before he heard the shots over the Rubble Barricade, he recognised them as live rounds and got down from the wall. Day 132/111/2 to Day 132/111/9 Then he heard further shots ring out and saw three or four young lads fall at the rubble barricade. AR3.2 paragraph 14 He was of the view that they fell behind the Rubble Barricade, rather than on it. Day 132/112/23 to Day 132/113/3 He had stated in his statement that they had all been throwing stones and stated in relation to the youths he had seen at the barricade that "Most of them, I feel, were throwing stones, but I could not say all of those who were shot were throwing stones." Day 132/113/12 to Day 132/113/17

18.5.3.238 Mr. Rainey was specifically asked about whether the youths were engaged in any offensive action, other than stone-throwing and replied:

"None whatsoever. That was the surprising thing about it. In fact, if there had been any form of either petrol bombs or nail bombs, I certainly would not have been standing where I was. The only thing I can say is, with my hand on my heart is, yes, there was some stone throwing taking place, but nothing else." Day 132/149/19 to Day 132/150/2

Bodies on the Barricade

18.5.3.239 A number of witnesses missed the shooting of the three young men but saw the bodies on the barricade in the aftermath. There is a consistent body of evidence about the inability of those at the gable end of the eastern block of Glenfada Park North to get to the bodies, because of the firing over the Rubble Barricade.

18.5.3.240 Fr. Denis Bradley (as he then was) has given evidence that he administered the last rites to Michael Kelly and therefore did not see Michael McDaid or John Young being shot at the barricade.

18.5.3.241 Having anointed Michael Kelly, Denis Bradley can be seen walking along the southern gable of the eastern block of Glenfada Park North in P435. Denis McLaughlin can be seen in this photograph, in the bleached or camouflaged jeans, having returned to the safety of the gable wall.[27] However, both Fr Bradley and Fr O'Keefe were unable to go out to the bodies on the Rubble Barricade because of the continuous firing over the Barricade by the soldiers. Bradley recalls:

"As people started to lift him [Michael Kelly] up, I started to walk beside him, and I became aware of something behind me, in the direction of Rossville Street. It was pure panic. People were shouting, running. There was shooting and the penny was beginning to drop. I began to understand that something terrible was happening out there in Rossville Street.

[27] Professor O'Keefe also believes that he had, by this time, also seen the bodies on the Barricade Day 127/107/22 to Day 127/108/24

I looked over towards the Barricade from the edge of the wall and saw bodies on the Barricade. They were on the road south of the Rubble Barricade. It was really not much of a barricade at that stage, more a pile of rubble about 1 ½ - 2 feet high, perhaps a bit more. It obviously had been a barricade at one stage but there was more rubble then. I remember seeing three bodies although there may have been four. I remember their contorted positions. I drew the conclusion that they had been shot because they were not lying behind the barricade as if taking cover. They were in different contorted positions. There was certainly an older man and two others. The older man called out. He was obviously alive. He may have put up his arm. The others were not making any movement and were more likely dead. They were only 15 to 20 feet away. I was very close. The Barricade was slightly north up Rossville Street from the gable end in the direction of William Street. I have the strongest memory of wanting to go out to these men. I had just anointed a young boy. I wanted to do the same to these bodies. I made as if to step out from the gable end but was very conscious of firing down Rossville Street as I looked left. H1.9 paragraph 23 to H 1.10 paragraph 24

18.5.3.242 Fr Bradley's recollection was that the bodies were at the middle of the barricade. Day 140/119/12 to Day 140/120/15

"I was aware of the dead boy nearest to me on the barricade. I did not see anything in his hands. He was only a few yards away but it was just not possible for anyone to have taken away a weapon he might have had. I knew that if I got out there I would be dead. No-one went out there. There was too much firing. The gunfire was intensive. That was definitely its heaviest period that afternoon." H1.12 paragraph 28.

18.5.3.243 Fr O'Keefe (as he then was) gives similar evidence. He was with Fr Bradley as he attended Michael Kelly. He then saw the bodies of three young men on the Barricade although his memory of the positions of these bodies is no longer clear. He then witnessed the shooting of Alex Nash. O'Keefe then recalls:

> "Father Bradley and I were anxious to go out to the three boys and the older man to anoint them, but the shooting was still continuing. I would describe the shots as single shots, being fired relatively continuously. It was not automatic gunfire. I could hear the whining of bullets as they whizzed by. It was just too dangerous to go out..." H21.47 paragraph 16.

18.5.3.244 He estimated to Mr Clarke that in the region of 20 – 40 shots were fired Day 127/113/4 to Day 127/113/15 and there was nothing which would remotely justify the discharge of those shots by the Army. Day 127/114/3 to Day 127/114/8 Fr O'Keefe did not see any soldier actually fire at the Barricade but assumes that the shots he heard came from the soldiers whom he had seen adopt firing positions, earlier on. Day 127/100/1 to Day 127/100/13

18.5.3.245 Frank Lawton gave evidence that he "saw three young men lying still on the southern side of the Rubble Barricade." AL6.26 He states that two were identified to him as John Young and William Nash and he recognised the third young man as Michael McDaid. AL6.4 at paragraph 17 He gave evidence that none of the young men had anything in their hands as they lay on the barricade and they were not approached by anyone other than Alex Nash. AL6.4 paragraph 19

18.5.3.246 There is a large volume of evidence about the bodies at the Barricade, some of it inconsistent and much of it confused. What emerges is a consistent picture of three young men, eventually tended to by an older man, Alex Nash, who was then shot and injured. It is not proposed to deal with the circumstances of the shooting of Alex Nash in these submissions, save to say that it is our submission that he was shot by soldiers and that his location on Video 48 pinpoints as closely as possible the location at which John Young and Michael McDaid were shot and killed.

Conclusion

18.5.3.247 It is submitted that the civilian evidence taken as a body demonstrates that, contrary to the conclusions of Lord Widgery, the shooting of John Young and Michael McDaid was entirely without justification. In fact, the shooting of unarmed civilians behind the Rubble Barricade: some of whom may have been throwing stones: none of whom posed a threat to any soldier: was an act of gratuitous violence and wilful murder.

18.5.3.248 It is clear as will be seen from the testimony of soldiers, that no soldier admits to the shooting of these men and the reasons for this failure is their knowledge that the shooting over the Rubble Barricade was unjustified. It is clear, from the fact of the deaths alone, that more shots were fired over the Rubble Barricade than have been admitted. The issue in Sector 3 is not a question of Missing Casualties, but a surplus of casualties for which soldiers have refused to account. The testimony of civilians about the level of firing over the Rubble Barricade at and after the shooting of John Young and Michael McDaid and their consequent inability to reach these bodies, demonstrates that there was more live fire over the Rubble Barricade than has ever been admitted and that soldiers fired more that 108 live rounds on Bloody Sunday.

18.5.3.249 The actions of the soldiers who fired live rounds over the Rubble Barricade on Bloody Sunday constituted murder and attempted murder and was without justification.

18.5.4 Removal to Hospital of John Young and Michael McDaid

18.5.4.1 Uniquely the bodies of John Young, Michael McDaid along with William Nash, were removed from the southern side of the Rubble Barricade on Rossville Street by members of 1 Para and placed in the rear of one of the Mortar Platoon pigs. The bodies were eventually brought by soldiers from Mortar Platoon to Altnagelvin Hospital.

18.5.4.2 The manner in which the bodies were removed, kept in the Pig on Rossville Street for a period, denied access to medical or spiritual aid and eventually and belatedly removed to Altnagelvin Hospital has been the source of great distress for the families of the deceased.

18.5.4.3 After the shooting of Michael Kelly civilians were unable to gain access to the bodies because of the ferocity of the shooting over the Rubble Barricade. Eye-witnesses who saw the bodies being removed from the Rubble Barricade believed that they were treated with disrespect bordering on contempt, a frequent description is that they were thrown into the rear of the Pig like sacks of potatoes. Nobody who picked up the bodies was medically qualified and no attempt appears to have been made to obtain medical assistance, in the eventuality that one or more of these young men was still alive. The bodies were removed from the Rubble Barricade and then left in a Pig on Rossville Street and initially Catholic priests and the Knights of Malta were denied access to the bodies and denied the opportunity of rendering medical or spiritual aid. There was a significant delay in these bodies being removed from the Bogside and they were the last to arrive at Altnagelvin Hospital. No explanation for the delay has ever been given.

Evidence of Mortar Platoon soldiers

18.5.4.4 In his statement to the RMP on the 31st January 1972 Lieutenant N stated that he had been ordered forward by his Company Commander, Major Loden:

"I took the Humber to the Barricade and drove through it. There were five members of Mortar Platoon section and all were armed. I caused the vehicle to be stopped and reversed towards 3 bodies which were lying on the south side of the barricade. I dismounted from the Humber and looked at the bodies. They were all huddled together. They were all young men. 1 was aged about 16 yrs the other two about 20 yrs. One of these youths I saw with a wound to his head on the left side. The other two appeared to have body wounds. Their complexion was very pale ... I supervised the section loading those bodies on to my vehicle.

I caused the Humber with the 3 bodies to return to the Coy location at the north end of the Rossville Flats. There 15 minutes later I gave the Humber with the bodies to 'O' and 5 members of his section. He was instructed to deliver the bodies to the Altnagelvin Hospital." B384 to B385

18.5.4.5 It appears from the evidence given by members of Mortar Platoon that those who played an active part in lifting the bodies were Soldier 006 (B1377.006 paragraphs 27 to 33) and Soldier 013 (B1408.004 paragraphs 20 to 28). Soldier 162 claims to have provided cover to his colleagues (B1962.004 paragraphs 24 to 26) and Soldier 112 remained in the Pig in order to 'help' bring the bodies in, despite his faulty recollection that only one body was collected from the Rubble Barricade (B1732.006 paragraph 27).

18.5.4.6 It is not clear who drove the Pig to the south side of the Barricade. Soldier S drove Lieutenant N's Pig into the Bogside but claims to have no recollection of being involved in the incident involving the bodies Day 332/101/16 to Day 332/102/14. However, he also claims to have recollection of little else. Soldier 006 recalls, however, that S was the driver for this task. Lieutenant N believes that the soldier who drove the Pig into the Bogside ought also have been the soldier who drove the Pig forward to collect the bodies. Day 322/104/23 to Day 322/105/14 Sergeant O, on the other hand, told the Tribunal that it need not necessarily have been one of the regular drivers who performed this task, and that up to ten members of the eighteen-man platoon were capable of driving the Pig. Day 335/99/5 to Day 335/99/19.

18.5.4.7 Neither of the other two regular drivers in Mortar Platoon, INQ 1579 or INQ 768 claim to have driven N's Pig south of the Rubble Barricade, although INQ 768 does admit to having driven the bodies from the Company location at the northern end of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats to Altnagelvin Hospital. C768.3 paragraph 22

18.5.4.8 It seems probable therefore, that Soldier S, fresh from having fired a dozen rounds at one or more alleged gunmen in the gap between Blocks 1 and 2 of the Rossville Flats then drove Lt. N's Pig forward to the Rubble Barricade to pick up the bodies.

18.5.4.9 Sergeant O was also involved in the task of retrieving the bodies from the Barricade. He did not however arrive at the Barricade in Lieutenant N's Pig. He chose instead to walk close by the Pig as they were under fire at the time. Consoled by his notion that the IRA 'hard men' were in the Creggan and that only 'second raters' with low grade weapons were in the Rossville Flats (B1575.122 paragraph 87), he would prefer to walk in the open, in unfamiliar territory, rather than have the benefit of travelling in an armoured vehicle, while 'under fire'. Day 335/99/25 to Day 335/100/8

18.5.4.10 The expert evidence makes it clear that John Young and Michael McDaid were dead by the time that the soldiers picked up their bodies. The autopsies of John Young and Michael McDaid were conducted by Doctor Press on 31st January, 1972 and in his conclusions on both deaths, he found that death would have been rapid due to the injury to their spinal cords (D0154 (John Young) and D0092 (Michael McDaid)).

18.5.4.11 Both Lieutenant N and Sergeant O observed the bodies before they were lifted. Sergeant O took the view the bodies had been moved after they had been killed. All their heads were facing north towards 'Aggro Corner' Day 335/98/4 to Day 335/98/14. Lieutenant N recalls that they were heaped together, almost lying on top of each other. Day 322/105/23 to Day 322/105/24.

18.5.4.12 Soldier 162, who it would appear also approached the Barricade on foot, has described the position of the bodies in the following terms:

> "I saw three bodies on the southern side of the rubble barricade. They were lying side by side on their backs with their hands on their chests. They had definitely not fallen in that position. I believe that they were all men but I cannot remember anything else about them." B1962.004 paragraph 25.

18.5.4.13 It is noteworthy, that despite the soldiers' collective case that the only people shot at were gunmen, the soldiers sent to remove the bodies did not search them for weapons. Neither did they search the Rubble Barricade for weapons, nor did they see any weapons en route to the Barricade or on their way back from the Barricade. Day 323/38/19 to Day 323/39/2. Soldier 006 confirmed that he had received no orders to search the bodies, and went further suggesting that there would be no point in searching their bodies, despite the fact that army firing was supposedly at armed men and bombers, the result of which was three dead youths at the Barricade. Indeed, he did not even think it would be interesting to search them (Day 334/65/17 to Day 334/66/14) which leads one to the inescapable conclusion that he did not expect to find anything of significance.

18.5.4.14 Soldier 112 who was inside the Pig as the bodies were put inside, confirmed in oral evidence that he did not search the bodies as he did not expect to find weapons or nail bombs. Day 320/146/20 to Day 320/147/10 Not one soldier involved in the retrieval of the bodies of John Young, Michael McDaid or William Nash has given evidence, either in 1972 or to this Inquiry, of finding or seeing any expended cartridges at or near the Rubble Barricade. This in circumstances where soldiers claim to have been under sustained attack from gunmen operating under the cover of that Barricade.

18.5.4.15 If the soldiers' case that soldiers only fired at identifiable targets was true then the failure of Major Loden, or Lieutenant N to order the soldiers to search for weapons, and the failure of the soldiers themselves, including the Platoon Sergeant to search for weapons, is inexplicable. It is not of course inexplicable because contrary to the case made to the Widgery Inquiry and this Tribunal, there was no expectation that weapons would be found because the soldiers from the Parachute Regiment knew they had not been under fire and did not believe that they had fired at gunmen or bombers.

Civilian Evidence

18.5.4.16 In respect of the civilian evidence, there is some confusion with regard to the position of the Pig when it stopped. Some civilians have said that the Pig stopped to the north west of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats,[28] others have said that the Pig stopped to the north of the Barricade,[29] while still others describe the Pig as having driven south through the Barricade and reversing back up towards the bodies, a description consistent with the evidence of Lt. N.[30]

18.5.4.17 Despite this apparent confusion, however, there is a plethora of evidence that the soldiers handled the bodies of John Young, Michael McDaid and William Nash, in a manner which can be described at best as with complete and utter contempt. Residents of both Glenfada Park North and Block 1 of the Rossville Flats had a panoramic view of this

[28] See Ann Gallagher AG1.3 paragraph 10 and Dolores MacFarland AM8.4 paragraph 20
[29] For example, Albert Edward Faulkner AF4.3 paragraph 13, who says that the Pig came to a halt about a foot or so to the north of the Rubble Barricade event as if unfolded. Those witnesses included a number of former British servicemen.
[30] See Margo Harkin AH 23.18 paragraph 47

18.5.4.18 Frank Lawton was visiting his mother-in-law in Block 1 of the Rossville Flats. He was 33 years old on Bloody Sunday and had previously served for 10 years in the Royal Navy. From a window of her flat, he observed the following:

> "The three bodies were thrown, unceremoniously, into the Saracen by two of the soldiers. They were lifted one by the leg and either the armpit, scruff of the neck or clothing on the upper body. I did not see any of the bodies lifted by the hands or hair. The soldiers who lifted them did so with one arm; they carried their rifles in the other...All three were thrown head first, but I cannot remember in what order they were thrown. There was no sign of movement from any of them and there was no sign of life in them as far as I could see. It did not take very long for the soldiers to lift them and throw them into the Saracen." AL6.5 paragraph 23

18.5.4.19 Albert Faulkner served with the Royal Navy during World War II. He witnessed the deaths of Young and McDaid and then described the removal of their bodies from the Barricade, witnessed from his flat in Garvan Place, Block 1, in the following terms:

> 'The next thing I remember is that a Saracen came out on to Rossville Street and drove south towards the Rubble Barricade. It stopped on the Glenfada Park side (the west side) of Rossville Street, adjacent to the pavement and a foot or so north of the Barricade. . . . There were, however, about four soldiers following it on foot down Rossville Street. . . . The soldiers grabbed the bodies of the three youths who had fallen and slung them in back of the Saracen, as if they were sacks of potatoes. I distinctly remember that each body was lifted by two soldiers, each of which was holding it by a leg and an arm. I cannot remember exactly where the soldiers had hold of the bodies, specifically whether it was directly by the limbs or through the clothing. I think that each body was carried face down and, therefore, that they must have been slung in the back of the Saracen face down. The soldiers didn't appear to take any notice of the fourth man who was still alive – I do not know what happened to him. It appeared to me that the soldiers wanted to get the bodies and themselves away from the area as quickly as they could. I saw no sign of movement from any of the three bodies." AF4.3 paragraph 13

18.5.4.20 George McGinley was 14 years old on Bloody Sunday and observed the bodies being removed from the Rubble Barricade by the Paras:

"The two Paras took one arm and one leg each and threw the body into the back of the Saracen like a sack of coal." AM238.4 paragraph 23

18.5.4.21 He saw this repeated once or twice and the Saracens then left the barricade. AM238.4 paragraphs 24 to 25

18.5.4.22 The one aspect of all the civilian evidence that is constant, regardless of where the civilians say the incident took place, is that the bodies were treated with appalling disrespect.[31] It should be noted that those opinions are not exclusive to civilian witnesses. Indeed, two military witnesses have given evidence to the Tribunal that the bodies were handled in an unsatisfactory manner. This shall be explored further below. Taken together, the eye-witness accounts demonstrate conclusively that the bodies were handled with disrespect and that the soldiers' evidence to the contrary should not be accepted.

[31] See also the evidence of Ann Gallagher AG1.3 paragraph 11; Marie Kopiak AK39.11; Olive Mottram AM441 paragraph 38 and AM441.13; Letty Donnelly AD125.2 paragraph 15; William McDonagh AM192.4 paragraph 24; John Barrett AB21.1; Kevin McGonagle AM254.11 paragraph 18; Lila Fleming AF21. 3 paragraph 17

18.5.4.23 Of the two soldiers who have admitted handling the bodies, Soldier 006 gave evidence on Day 334. Soldier 013 also attended at the Inquiry on Day 334, as scheduled, but apparently an issue suddenly arose in respect of his health and at the last minute the parties were informed that he would not give oral evidence. The Solicitor to the Inquiry, in correspondence dated 9 July, 2003, informed Madden & Finucane Solicitors of the Tribunal's refusal to provide more information in respect of this sudden turn of events.

18.5.4.24 Soldier 006 recalls that:

> "I definitely picked up one or two of them. With another soldier I grabbed them by their ankles and he grabbed them under their armpits and put them in the Pig. We did not touch their hands/forearms. I am not sure if there was a soldier already in the Pig who helped to pull their bodies in. They were placed one on top of the other, although I cannot say exactly how; I was outside the vehicle.' B1377.006 paragraphs 27 to 33

18.5.4.25 Soldier 006 told the Tribunal that he can not explain how an onlooker could have formed the impression that the bodies were treated in a disrespectful way. His evidence is that the bodies were 'lifted' in, rather than thrown, and in giving oral evidence he casually recalled:

> "...we just picked 'em up and pulled 'em in..." Day 334/32/15 to Day 334/32/21

18.5.4.26 Unlike Soldier 006, who was very keen to point out the fact that he did not touch the hands of the victims at the Barricade, Soldier 013 recalled:

> "I could not carry the bodies with one hand. I needed both. I put my SLR on my back and used both hands. I was worried about getting shot from the flats, but no one was shooting at us. Together with one of the others (who I do not wish to name), we picked them up by their hands/wrists and put them in the Pig. We did not check their pulses but there was no movement from the bodies in the Pig. I am sure that they were dead." B1408.004 paragraph 22

18.5.4.27 Soldier 013 has not provided any explanation for his failure to name the other soldier concerned with these events. If, as the soldiers contend, the bodies were not treated with disdain, there should be no reason why 013 need be reluctant about identifying his colleague.

18.5.4.28 Soldier 118 was an observation specialist in the 22nd Light Air Defence Regiment posted on observation duties on the Embassy Ballroom. He recalled the bodies being lifted from the Barricade. In his statement to the Inquiry, he recalled that the bodies were carried across the waste ground to a three tonne army lorry. When he gave oral evidence on Day 359/181/16 to Day 359/181/21 he confirmed that he had no recollection of seeing an army vehicle drive south through the Rubble Barricade but was prepared to concede that it may have done. He described the event as follows

"It looked pretty callous from where I was. They were throwing the bodies in like bits of wood. I remember I was shocked and could not work out how the bodies could have been killed. I was sure it had not been by Army fire because the bodies had been on the south side of the rubble barricade." B1752.004 paragraph 23

18.5.4.29 Soldier 028 was a Captain in 22 LADR. He was also their press officer. He did not see the bodies being lifted from the Barricade, but was present later in Rossville Street and witnessed the bodies in the Pig. He described what he saw as:

"I went over and looked into the Pig. What I saw was an horrific scene; bodies piled on top of each other, heads, arms and legs at strange angles and blood all over the bodies and the walls of the Pig." B1582.4 paragraph 15

18.5.4.30 By virtue of the way the bodies were placed in the Pig Soldier 028 concluded that:

> "I didn't see the bodies being put into the Pig but at the time, my impression was that the bodies must have been thrown in to the Pig very hurriedly whilst the soldiers were under live fire and that is why they hadn't been laid in an orderly manner or their limbs arranged neatly. I knew that if any of the press did start taking photographs it would look terrible in the papers the next day. Consequently, I pushed the priest to one side and slammed the doors shut, saying that no one was allowed to take pictures." B1582.4 paragraph 15

18.5.4.31 While the scene he saw suggested to him that the troops who placed the bodies in the Pig must have been under live fire, in fact no soldier claims to have been under live fire when the bodies were thrown into the Pig. Soldier 028, whose evidence will be dealt with in more detail below when dealing with the military evidence in relation to Sector 3, was in our submission a witness whose bias in favour of the army and against the citizens of Derry was remarkable even by military standards. Nonetheless even he recognised that the manner in which the bodies were in the Pig would create an unfavourable impression should it go into the public domain.

18.5.4.32 It is clear that after the bodies had been loaded into the Pig that the Pig then returned to the area of the northern gable of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats. Lieutenant N's Pig can be seen in P774. The Pig has reversed into Glenfada Park North. Alexander Nash can be seen in the flat cap and dark coat at the southern gable of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats.

Fr Mulvey and Fr Irwin's Attempts to administer spiritual aid

18.5.4.33 Fr Irwin gave written evidence to the Tribunal (H9.1 to H9.30) and gave oral evidence on Day 153. His evidence is that, while inside

Block 1 of the Rossville Flats attending to the body of Kevin McElhinney, he was approached by Ms Eileen Gallagher and asked to go to the Pig containing the bodies. (Ms. Gallagher's handwritten, contemporaneous statement can be found at AG10.1.) In his written statement prepared for the Widgery Tribunal he stated as follows:

> "When I came out onto the corridor of the flats a woman in a very distraught state told me that she had seen three bodies being thrown into a Saracen. I rushed down the backstairs of the flats which led into Rossville Street. I was accompanied by a member of the Knights of Malta. At the entrance of the backstairs there was a soldier standing with a gun. I asked him if there were three bodies in one of the Saracens and he said he did not know." H9.5
>
> "I asked him who was in charge and he nodded towards a group of soldiers a few feet away. I shouted to this group 'Who is in charge here?', and an Officer, I presume, wearing a red beret, came forward. I asked him if he had any dead or injured in a Saracen. He answered that none of his soldiers was injured. I said 'I didn't ask you about your soldiers; I am asking you if you have any dead or injured bodies in one of the Saracens, as I wish to anoint them.' He said 'No we haven't'."
> H 9.6
> "The Knights of Malta member and myself, believing the officer to be telling the truth, returned up the backstairs again. We again met the lady who had told us about the three bodies. She asked us if we had got to the bodies. When I told her the officer had denied that there were any bodies in a Saracen, she brought me into a flat, went to the window looking onto Rossville Street, and pointed out the Saracen. The Knights of Malta member and myself rushed out and ran down the backstairs again. I shouted to the Army officer that there were three bodies in a Saracen. I saw Father Anthony Mulvey of Pennyburn a little beyond the officer. I shouted at him 'Father, there are three bodies in a Saracen that need anointing.' He shouted 'Come on'. Father Mulvey, the Knights of Malta member and myself ran towards the Saracen. The Army officer followed and when we all reached the Saracen the lady in the flats had pointed out, the officer flung open the door and there were three bodies piled one on top of the other. I climbed into the Saracen and anointed the two bodies. I then held up these two bodies to enable Father Mulvey to anoint the bottom body. The bottom body, that of John Young, was lying facedown in his own blood, and even if he had been living would have been smothered; the middle body was that of Michael McDaid, who was lying face outwards; and the top body was that of Nash. From the way the bodies were lying in the Saracen it was obvious that they had been flung into it like bags of potatoes. When I climbed out of the Saracen again I said to the Army officer 'You deliberately lied to me' and he just shrugged his shoulders and smirked. Just as I and the others were leaving the Saracen, one of the top officers in the Knights of Malta came running towards the Saracen to examine if any of the three were living, but the door of the Saracen was slammed shut, and an Army officer said 'You can't go in there'." H9.6

18.5.4.34 The Order of Malta volunteer who accompanied Father Irwin is Bernard Feeney. He has provided a statement to the Inquiry at AF8.1 to AF8.18 and has given oral evidence. His account of the incident corresponds broadly with that provided by Father Irwin:

"Father Irwin and I went to speak with him. At this stage there was no shooting at all. We asked him whether there were any bodies in the back of the Saracen. He said 'There is no fucking way there are any bodies'. We asked him if he was sure and he repeated his comment. We therefore went back into block 1 of the Rossville flats." AF8.5 paragraph 25

18.5.4.35 Sergeant O denied that he was the soldier who had smirked at the priest. When the evidence of Leo Day in 1972 was put to him, of the soldier wearing three stripes and a crown on his uniform, he confirmed that was the insignia on the uniform of a Colour Sergeant. Day 335/108/1 to Day 335/108/24 Three colour sergeants from Guinness Force, INQ 1318, INQ 147 and Soldier 002 were present on Rossville Street on Bloody Sunday.

18.5.4.36 Like Fr. Irwin, Feeney also recollects that John Young was on the floor of the Pig and Michael McDaid was the body in the middle. William Nash lay on top of both Michael McDaid and John Young. AF 8.5 paragraph 27

18.5.4.37 Father Mulvey gave evidence to Lord Widgery, he is now deceased. His evidence was also that John Young lay face down on the floor of the Pig, in a pool of his own blood. He recalls that Father Irwin anointed the man on top, who Fr. Mulvey was later told was Michael McDaid while he himself tried to get the body on the floor. He had to grope to find the head of the body on the floor in order to administer the last rites of his church. Fr. Mulvey could not positively say if any of the three were dead but was of the opinion that the boy on the bottom – John Young – would have suffocated bearing in mind his own injuries and weight of the bodies on top of him. WT4. 29 A-E

Denial of Access to Medical Attention

18.5.4.38 There is no evidence to suggest that any of the soldiers involved in the removal of the bodies from the Rubble Barricade was medically qualified. Lieutenant N, in his statement to the Widgery Tribunal at B 400, said that he asked a corporal in the Royal Medical Corps, to look at the bodies. That corporal was Soldier 221, attached to C Company and held a first class qualification as a paramedic. He gave evidence that the bodies were side by side in the rear of the Pig, in such a way that each would have been able to breathe freely. Ms McGahey pointed out to him the evidence of Irwin and Mulvey that the bodies had to be manhandled in order to facilitate their anointing. Day 361/132/6 to Day 361/132/24.

18.5.4.39 Soldier 221 was in no doubt that the bodies were dead when he examined them. Day 361/133/14 to Day 361/133/19 It is also his recollection that about 2 to 3 minutes after he had examined them that the Pig drove off with the bodies inside B 2164. If this evidence and the evidence of Lieutenant N is correct, this means that the bodies remained in the Pig for some 10 to 12 minutes after arriving back at the Company location at the northern end of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats and prior to receiving any medical attention. There is thus no evidence that any urgency was attached to the request for medical attention, despite Soldier 221's confirmation that in any operation involving a 300 strong battalion, it would have been normal practice for a full medical team, including doctors to be present. Day 361/139/13 to Day 361/139/21 In addition, 221 confirmed that the bodies ought to have been treated before their bodies were moved. Day 361/139/22 to Day 361/139/25

18.5.4.40 It has been seen above that as well as refusing Fr Irwin and Fr Mulvey access to the Pig to render spiritual assistance, Bernard Feeney of the Knights of Malta was also denied access to the Pig.

18.5.4.41 Moreover as Fr Irwin stated:

> "Just as I and the others were leaving the Saracen, one of the top officers in the Knights of Malta came running towards the Saracen to examine if any of the three were living, but the door of the Saracen was slammed shut, and an Army officer said 'You can't go in there'." H9.6

18.5.4.42 Fr Mulvey told Lord Widgery that he called to Leo Day, who in 1972 was the most senior member of the Order of Malta in Derry to have a look at the bodies:

"...I went with him to the armoured car. The soldier had half opened the door to admit him, when one helmeted soldier who said he was in charge – he may have been an NCO – called to him to close the door and not to open it again. So that by that time no medical attention was permitted to be given to the dead men inside or to the men inside if they were dead." WT4.29 F-G

18.5.4.43 This evidence is broadly corroborated by Mr Day, who is also deceased. His evidence is that a sergeant opened the door and he could see a tangle of bodies lying on each other and blood all over the floor. As he was about to climb inside the Pig the sergeant said 'Nobody is allowed inside' and pushed the door closed again. AD13.3

18.5.4.44 Therefore having failed to administer medical attention at the Rubble Barricades, or even carry out anything more than a cursory check, having failed to seek immediate and urgent medical attention when the vehicle was parked near Block 1, soldiers from the parachute Regiment denied the three young men access to medical attention from medically qualified civilians. No medical attention was afforded John Young, Michael McDaid or William Nash, save that provided by Bernard Feeney, a seventeen years old member of the Order of Malta who was not professionally qualified and who managed to check Michael McDaid's ankle for a pulse and to check John Young, who in his view was clearly dead. AF8.5 paragraph 28.

18.5.4.45 Alice Doherty, who on Bloody Sunday was known as Alice Long, was also a member of the Order of Malta. She is one of a number of witnesses[32] who suggest that at least one of the bodies may have been alive while in the rear of Lieutenant N's Pig. AD50.12 paragraph 15 It is not our case that either John Young or Michael McDaid were alive and we rely upon the expert evidence that both would have suffered a rapid death. (D0154 (Young) and D0092 (McDaid))

18.5.4.46 Neither is it our case that Alice Doherty's evidence is reliable when she states that soldier fired three live rounds into the rear of the Pig. AD50.13 paragraph 18 There is a preponderance of evidence that the 3 bodies placed in the Pig had already been shot, and in the absence of any of them having sustained more than one bullet wound, we do not consider the account reliable and we do not invite the Tribunal to accept her account about this issue. It should also be noted that she herself admitted an element of doubt in respect of live rounds being fired in to the rear of the Pig. Day 135/171/10 to Day 135/171/19.

18.5.4.47 With regard to the evidence which states that John Young would have suffocated had he been alive. We do not make the case that John Young suffocated or that either John Young or Michael McDaid were alive when placed in the Pig.

18.5.4.48 However: none of the soldiers who picked up the bodies was medically qualified; no attempt was made to get the bodies medically examined; and, a member of the Knights of Malta was refused access to the bodies. What is clear is that the soldiers of the Parachute Regiment did not care to establish whether the lives of one or more of those young men could in fact have been saved, demonstrating an attitude towards the lives of three young men, murdered by their colleagues, which was nothing short of callous.

18.5.4.49 It was not only that the bodies of these young men were treated with disrespect and contempt, but that the soldiers involved simply did not care whether they were alive or dead.

Removal to Altnagelvin Hospital

18.5.4.50 Sergeant O was ordered by his platoon commander, Lieutenant N to take the bodies to Altnagelvin Hospital. Soldier 112 says in his RMP statement at B1732.013 that withdrawal from the Bogside happened at approximately 4.45pm.

18.5.4.51 The Pig was driven by INQ 768, in what he has described as his most vivid recollection of the day. Day 323/165/20 to Day 323/166/7 Sergeant O was in the passenger seat. Day 335/104/18 to Day 335/104/21 It is not entirely clear if Sergeant O is the person described by Bernard Feeney, the Knight of Malta, when Feeney was attempting to aid the bodies at the Company location at the northern end of Block 1:

> "I remember that there was a soldier sitting in the passenger seat of the Saracen (there was no division between the front and back of the vehicle). He was sitting sideways across the seat with his back to the passenger door and his legs stretched out very casually into the back of the Saracen. His legs would have been very close to the head of the middle body." AF8.5 paragraph 29

18.5.4.52 Soldier 112 who 'helped' lifted the bodies in to the Pig also travelled to Altnagelvin. He thinks that Corporal P and INQ 768 took one of the bodies out of the Pig when they reached there. B1732.006 paragraph 27

18.5.4.53 INQ 1918, Lieutenant N's radio operator was also involved. He made his statement to the Inquiry on 3 July, 2000. When he gave evidence on 10 June, 2003 he claimed that he could no longer recollect the incident, save for some tiny recollections in what was the first and only time in which he has assisted in transporting several dead bodies in a Pig to a mortuary. Day 342/119/25 to Day 342/123/22

18.5.4.54 Soldier P, who is the most likely person to have murdered Michael McDaid and John Young was also a rear seat passenger as the bodies were taken to Altnagelvin Hospital. B593 He claims not to have been involved in taking them out of the Pig at hospital. B623.002 paragraph 15

18.5.4.55 Soldier 006, one of those who threw the bodies into the rear of the Pig gives an insight into the manner in which the soldiers coped with the limited room in the rear of the Pig:

> "We then got in the back and had to sit with our feet on top of them, it was the only way we could get in because of the lack of space." B1377.007 paragraph 33

18.5.4.56 Not one of those soldiers offers a satisfactory explanation for the wholly unjustified delay in getting these bodies to hospital. It is apparent from the evidence of SOCO McCormac at ED40.6 that the bodies of John Young, Michael McDaid and William Nash did not arrive at Altnagelvin Hospital until around 5.30pm.

18.5.4.57 There is also evidence before the Inquiry that the bodies were then removed from the Pig in similar fashion to the manner in which they were thrown in. Ivan Cooper, the MP for Mid Derry was at Altnagelvin Hospital:

> "The soldiers carried each of the bodies in the same way. No stretcher was used. There was a para taking each end of each body. A para took hold of each body by the palm of the hands or the wrists and another para took hold of each body by the ankles. The bodies were all handled as if they were "stuck pigs". The arms of each body were stretched out above the head and the body was sagging. I was standing close to the Saracen just watching without saying a word. It seemed to me that arrangements must have been made over the radio between the army and the hospital staff for the paras to bring the casualties to the hospital through the rear entrance.

As the bodies were lifted out of the Saracen each soldier who was doing the carrying handed his weapon to a soldier who was not doing any carrying. The soldiers were joking with each other and laughing and were talking about the events of the day as the bodies were carried from the Saracen. The soldiers were jubilant and gave me the impression that they were thinking that they had busted an IRA unit in the Bogside. I could hear some of the soldiers talking about how they had shot people and that there had been people carrying nail bombs...

The bodies were taken into the hospital and then quickly brought back out again and thrown back into the Saracen. The whole operation of carrying the bodies into the hospital and back out of the hospital was conducted by the soldiers in a very matter of fact way with the soldiers acting throughout in a jubilant manner.

The soldiers got back into the Saracen with two soldiers in the front and the other soldiers in the back. The Saracen was driven away. I assumed that the Saracen was being driven to the hospital mortuary. I made this assumption as I had taken it that whoever in the hospital had looked at the bodies as they were brought in by the soldiers had certified the young men dead and had directed the soldiers to take the bodies to the mortuary. My memory of the Saracen driven away is, however, hazy." KC12.27 paragraphs 81 to 85

18.5.4.58 There appears to be some confusion about the timing in which the bodies were received at the mortuary. The mortuary register is at D500.20, D500.21 and states that Michael McDaid's body was received at 9.30pm but that the bodies of John Young and William Nash were received at an earlier unspecified time. Father Irwin, however, checked his watch when the Pig arrived at the morgue, his evidence is that it was 6.15pm. WT5.37 E-F

18.5.4.59 INQ 768 has described what he calls a detailed memory of what happened when they reached the morgue. He claims the soldiers were conscious of finding a 'quiet moment' in order to take the bodies out:

> "I went to the back of the PIG and opened the doors. There was a body facing me with it's head towards the doors. I cannot now describe this body in any detail. I grabbed the body under the arms to slide it out. As I was doing this, a soldier told me that someone was coming, so I immediately pushed the body back so as not to upset anyone. As I pushed the body back into the PIG and shut the door I heard the head hit the back of the doors and I remember subsequently seeing blood at the bottom of the PIG doors which I believe came from this incident." C768.4 paragraph 24

18.5.4.60 William McDermott made a statement to the Inquiry, but passed away before giving oral evidence. He was at the morgue and observed the following:

> "The last body to have been pulled out of the Saracen was lying on his stomach on the floor of the morgue. I stood near his head. I turned the body onto his back. Father O'Gara was standing nearby as the body was turned over and said "Jesus Christ." I said as he walked out "I don't think his mother would even recognise him". The young man's tongue was protruding from his mouth and was swollen and blue. His eye was a mess and was also blue. I think he had been shot in the eye, because I didn't see any other wound on his body but I thought he had been suffocated rather than shot because his tongue was blue. The other priest, Father Irvine, asked me if I recognised him. I said I thought he looked like one of the O'Hagan's from Rosemount. They searched his pockets. From his pocket, they took out a rubber bullet and a one pound note and a sixpence. They also took out a payslip from his pocket which was from John Collier tailors. It showed them that the man's name was Young. He was actually a cousin of the O'Hagan family. I then got a lift from the hospital." AM189.7 paragraph 34

18.5.4.61 The manner in which the bodies were removed from the Rubble Barricade, kept in a Pig and eventually transported to the Hospital and then the morgue, is of course an issue which undoubtedly contributed to the findings that positive findings for lead on the clothing and bodies of John Young and Michael McDaid. That aspect of the evidence is addressed in more detail in the Forensics Section below.

18.5.4.62 The manner in which the bodies of John Young and Michael McDaid were treated was disrespectful. The soldiers involved demonstrated a level of callousness which for many people was as distressing to witness as the wilful murder of these young men. The issue is important in demonstrating the lack of concern felt, not merely by the individual soldiers but their officers, about the men shot and killed on Bloody Sunday.

18.5.5 Michael McDaid - Injuries Sustained

18.5.5.1 The post mortem examination on Michael McDaid was carried out by Dr Press at 12.00 noon. (E2.68) The report of Doctor Shepherd and Mr O'Callaghan appears at E2.24, E2.25 with the accompanying diagram at E2.71. Photographs taken in the mortuary can be found at P2.55 to P2.68.

18.5.5.2 In summary, a single bullet which entered his left cheek struck Michael McDaid. The bullet penetrated his neck and right chest before exiting the right side of his back. There were no other apparent injuries.

18.5.5.3 Assuming the Normal Anatomical Position, the initial track passed from downwards, backwards and from left to right. The most significant aspect of the injury is the downward track of 45°. It was this angle and the fact that John Young and William Nash, killed alongside Michael McDaid both had injuries with a downward track of 45°, which resulted in the opinion of some commentators that Michael McDaid along with John Young and William Nash had been shot by a sniper from the City Walls.

18.5.5.4 There were undoubtedly points from the City Walls and Naylor's Row from where shots could have been fired at the Rubble Barricade. However as Dr Shepherd and Mr. O'Callaghan have pointed out, if shot from the Walls the Deceased would have to have bent forwards at a 40° angle while if shot from ground level, from either Rossville street or the Kells Walk Wall, the deceased would have had to have been bent forwards at a 45° angle. In those circumstances "nothing in the pathology of the wounds lends greater weight to this proposition then that the shots were fired [from] ground level." E2.0065

18.5.5.5 What is however beyond dispute is that to sustain the injuries he did, Michael McDaid would have had to have been facing in the direction from where the shots had come from. It is our submission that the preponderance of civilian evidence supports the conclusion that Michael McDaid was shot from Rossville Street or the Kells Walk Wall as he faced in the direction of the soldiers from 1 Para who had entered the Bogside.

18.5.5.6 Michael McDaid's injuries are consistent with his having taken cover behind the Rubble Barricade as soldiers from Rossville Street and the Kells Walk Wall fired shots over the Rubble Barricade. His injuries do not directly correspond with any of the accounts of the soldiers who admit firing from Rossville Street or the Kells Walk Wall, however it is clear that if the accounts of the soldiers were to be accepted, Michael McDaid was not killed on Bloody Sunday. His injuries could correspond with the following account put to Soldier P who fired shots over the Rubble Barricade on Bloody Sunday:

"Q. You are a good enough shot, if someone was crouching behind the barricade, you are a good enough shot to pick them out and hit the target; are you not?

A. Yes.

Q. Even if the target was just the head?

A. Not necessarily, no.

Q. But not necessarily, but you believe you could; do you not?

A. Yes.

Q. What happened in fact was that three young boys were crouching behind this barricade and they were, two of them, hit in the face. You are a good enough shot to have done that; are you not?

A. Um, no, I – well, yes.

Q. That is what you did do; is it not?

A. No, it was not." Day 353/117/14 to Day 353/117/20

18.5.6 John Young - Injuries Sustained

18.5.6.1 The post mortem examination on John Young was carried out by Dr Press at 2.20pm. E2.68 The report of Doctor Shepherd and Mr O'Callaghan appears at E2.28, E2.29 with the accompanying diagram at E2.73. Photographs taken in the mortuary are in P2.81to P2.93

18.5.6.2 In summary, a single bullet which entered his left cheek at the inner corner of the left eye struck John Young. The bullet penetrated his neck and right chest before exiting the left side of his back.

are also consistent with his having fallen but may have been caused by other blunt trauma.

18.5.6.4 Assuming the Normal Anatomical Position, the initial track of the bullet passed from downwards, backwards with only slight deviation to the left. As with Michael McDaid the most significant aspect of the injury is the downward track of 45°.

18.5.6.5 As with Michael McDaid and for the reasons set out in Sections 20.6.3.

> "nothing in the pathology of the wounds lends greater weight to this proposition then that the shots were fired [from] ground level." E2.0065

18.5.6.6 It is our submission that the preponderance of civilian evidence supports the conclusion that John Young was shot from Rossville Street or the Kells Walk Wall as he faced in the direction of the soldiers from 1 Para who had entered the Bogside.

18.5.6.7 As with Michael McDaid, John Young's injuries are consistent with his having taken cover behind the Rubble Barricade as soldiers from Rossville Street and the Kells Walk Wall fired shots over the Rubble Barricade. His injuries do not directly correspond with any of the accounts of the soldiers who admit firing from Rossville Street or the Kells Walk Wall, however it is clear that if the accounts of the soldiers were to be accepted, John Young was not killed on Bloody Sunday. His injuries could also correspond with the account put to Soldier P during the course of his evidence to this Inquiry. Day 353/117/14 to Day 353/117/20

18.5.7 Michael McDaid - Forensic Evidence

18.5.7.1 As appears from the table in Dr Lloyd's report at E1.30 setting out details of Dr Martin's tests, the tests for lead were positive in that one particle was found on swabs from the right hand, 17 on the jacket surface and 15 on the trouser surface. None was found on the left hand.

18.5.7.2 Inasmuch as any weight could ever have been attached to Dr Martin's tests, the absence of particles on Michael McDaid's left hand is significant. The evidence of Michael McDaid's former employer to the Widgery Tribunal was that Michael McDaid was left handed. AB60.2(C-D)

18.5.7.3. During his testimony at the Widgery Tribunal, Dr. Martin said the results were consistent with Michael McDaid having been handling firearms. He also gave evidence that it would not make any difference to his conclusion if he were told that Michael McDaid were left handed, although he did acknowledge that "the absence of lead on the left hand is unusual if he had been firing with the hand uncovered." (WT9.12D-E)

18.5.7.4 As a general observation Dr Lloyd noted that "it is profoundly disturbing that a single particle of lead on a hand swab should have been considered as significant evidence that a person had been handling a firearm or been in the vicinity of a discharging firearm." E1.0027 (8.2.c) In the course of his evidence to this Inquiry Dr. Martin accepted that the adverse conclusion reached by him in relation to Michael McDaid on the basis of one spot was "pushing interpretation to the limit." Day 226/88/15 to Day226/88/21

18.5.7.5 Moreover he concluded that the absence of controlled testing nullified any evidential significance that Dr Martin's results might have had E1.25 (8.1.g). Bearing in mind the likelihood of spurious contamination, he considered that Dr Martin's results were "worthless". E1.52 (g)

18.5.7.6 In any event as has been seen, Michael McDaid was transported to Altnagelvin Hospital on the floor of a Pig, having first been thrown into the Pig by soldiers and having been removed from the Pig by soldiers. Without reference to either the soldiers or the Pig as potential sources of contamination Dr Lloyd was of the view that the "result from the hand could well be due to contamination from the clothing, and does not support the use of a firearm by McDaid or his being a bystander". E1.0044 to E1.0045 (8.7.3.a)

18.5.7.7 However in his view the results of the testing of Michael McDaid were explicable solely on the basis that Michael McDaid had been transported in a military vehicle which was likely to have been "heavily and continuously contaminated with firearms residue." E1.0045 (8.7.c)

18.5.7.8 In his evidence to this Tribunal Dr Martin was asked whether he agreed with this proposition to which he replied "Oh, entirely, yes." Day 226/98/5 to Day 226/98/11

18.5.7.9 Thus, contrary to the conclusion reached by Lord Widgery, there is not a shred of evidence to support his conclusion that Michael McDaid was "in close proximity to someone firing."

18.6.8 John Young Forensic Evidence

18.6.8.1 As appears from the table in Dr Lloyd's report at E1.30 setting out details of Dr Martin's tests, the tests for lead were positive in that 4 particles and 1 smear were found on swabs from the left hand, 15 particles on the jacket surface and 34 on the trouser surface. No particles were found on the left hand.

18.6.8.2 During his testimony at the Widgery Tribunal, Dr. Martin said the results were consistent with John Young having been handling firearms. (WT9.13A)

18.6.8.3 The basis upon which Dr Martin came to this conclusion is not without significance. In the course of the Widgery Tribunal Dr Martin was questioned about the possibility that firearms discharge could have resulted in contamination leading to the presence of lead particles. In response to questions from Mr. McSparran he stated:

> "A. It could possibly happen. But the amounts on the hands here rather suggest that they are in fact nearer the source in all cases than the clothing is. It is more consistent with the hands being in the forefront of the contamination. .
>
>
> LORD WIDGERY: Could you say that in these cases the hands indicate that they were nearer the source than the clothing?
> A. Yes." WT9.19D

18.6.8.4 However, as is clear from John Young's results, the opposite was in fact the case, and the number of particles on his clothing, far exceeded those on his hands.

18.6.8.5 As was pointed out to Dr Martin in the course of this Tribunal:

> "Q . . . You appear to have been telling Lord Widgery that the results showed that the hands were nearer the source of the particles than the clothing. Was not the precise opposite the case?
>
> A. Yes, if you take the trousers into account, that is true.
>
> Q. Do you know how you came to the say the opposite of what was correct to Lord Widgery?

A. I am afraid I cannot remember, it does seem odd.

Q. You simply cannot help us as to how you came to make an important error?

A. I just cannot remember." Day 226/84/17 to Day 226/84/25

18.6.8.6 During the Widgery Tribunal Dr Martin was specifically questioned by Mr. McSparran QC about the possibility that, given that John Young had been "in a situation near to where guns were being discharged or bullets fragmenting" could have caused a higher lead particle density than normal. In response Dr Martin stated:

> "So far as contamination to the clothing is concerned. I think his hand level is rather too high. His left hand level is too high to be consistent with exposure which covered the clothing as well." WT9.30F

18.6.8.7 However, when Dr Martin was questioned about this aspect of his evidence in the course of this Inquiry, given the number of particles on the jacket surface, Dr Martin was unable to explain his evidence in this respect.

> "Q . . . the hand level for Young was 4. If you take the jacket surface it was 15, which is over three times the hand. I do not quite understand what you were meaning by saying that the hand level was too high?
>
> A. No, I do not either, not at this time."
>
> Day 226/100/16 to Day 226/100/22

18.6.8.8 Mr. Read, followed on from Mr McSparran's questions as to the possibility that bullet fragmentation in the area of the Rubble Barricade had resulted in the positive readings, in response to which Dr Martin stated:

> "In the case of Young there is rather too much on the hand. It would imply that the hand for some reason for a dense pocket of lead specks from within the general discharge, the probabilities must be very remote." WT9.35E-F

18.6.8.9 He went on to say:

> 'The trousers were in fact examined [for surface particles] but much after the original report was prepared. The trouser levels are within the same range as the coat levels . . . Yes, they do not contradict or add to the coat evidence.' WT9.36A

18.6.8.10 However the opposite was in fact the case, in that there were a significantly higher number of lead particles on John Young's trousers, than on his jacket or his hands. As Dr Lloyd pointed out

> "The statement is at odds with Dr. Martin's own results. On Young's trousers for example, the number of particles was nearly twice the number on the jacket, although whether Dr. Martin would have considered this to be within the same range is uncertain." E1.0033, E1.0034 (8.4.1.e):

18.6.8.11 Consequently Dr. Martin's evidence to the Widgery Tribunal in relation to the conclusions which ought to have been drawn from the presence of lead particles on John Young's hand, jacket and trousers was, at best misleading and contributed directly to the conclusion that John Young had either handled a gun or been close to someone firing a weapon. In circumstances where "The distribution is not consistent with Young's use of a firearm or his role as a bystander." E1.0049 (8.7.9.a)

18.6.8.12 In any event as has been seen, John Young, as with Michael McDaid was transported to Altnagelvin Hospital on the floor of a Pig, having first been thrown into the Pig by soldiers and having been removed from the Pig by soldiers. Dr Lloyd has stated that his conclusion that

Michael McDaid's results were "explicable solely on that basis" E1.0045 (8.7.3.c) were equally pertinent to John Young. E1.0050 (8.7.9.c) This has now been accepted by Dr. Martin Day 226/98/5 to Day 226/98/11

18.6.8.13 Thus, not only is there not a shred of evidence to support Lord Widgery's conclusion that John Young had been handling firearms, it is at least questionable whether, if Dr Martin had not given misleading evidence to Lord Widgery, that conclusion would ever have been arrived at.

18.6 Kevin McElhinney

18.6.1. Personal Details and Background

18.6.1.1. Kevin McElhinney was 17 when he was murdered on Bloody Sunday. He was single and lived with his parents. He was the middle child in a family of three sisters and one brother. He was the youngest boy. He had no criminal record or political affiliations.

18.6.1.2. Kevin's father, Laurence McElhinney worked as a Fitter in the Ulster Transport Company, a job that he occupied for over 50 years. The family would have been known as quiet, industrious and trustworthy. They had no interest in politics and would not have been perceived as having any Republican or Nationalist sympathies or associations. Kevin was born and reared in Philip Street near Fort George, which was a religiously mixed area at the time. When he left school, Kevin secured a job in Lipton Supermarket on the Strand Road directly opposite the RUC Station. He would travel to and from work approximately four times per day six days a week. Kevin's youth, easy going and kindly manner made him popular with the rest of the workforce. His enthusiasm and willingness enabled him to gain the rapid respect of his employers and the appreciation of his fellow employees Catholic and Protestant alike. He would be equally happy stacking shelves, filling customers bags or conducting casual security checks at the doors. At the time of his death Kevin had been learning to drive and indeed had arranged a driving lesson with his father later that afternoon.

18.6.1.3. It should be noted that at no time prior to his death or afterwards was the McElhinney household subjected to any form of security intrusion. This fact alone reflects the very neutral attitude that this family enjoyed. The tarnished reputation and lingering doubts which were created by the findings of Lord Widgery are not only confined to Kevin but have for over 30 years placed the McElhinney family in a position where they must defend the innocence of their brother in respect of the events of Bloody Sunday. For this reason the controversial circumstances surrounding the death of Kevin McElhinney have created an ongoing burden for his immediate family.

18.6.1.4. Relevant Photographs

The following are photographs of Kevin McElhinney taken on Bloody Sunday:

In addition to these photographs, Kevin McElhinney can be seen walking on the march in his brown suit on Michael Rodgers cine film V52/40 to 49.

18.6.2. Civilian Evidence in relation to shooting

18.6.2.1. Summary

It has been established throughout the relevant civilian and military evidence that Kevin McElhinney either alone or together with at least one other person left the vicinity of the Rubble Barricade for what was undoubtedly perceived as the greater safety of the entrance to Block 1.

Only two witnesses recalled seeing Kevin McElhinney at the Rubble Barricade prior to the soldiers opening fire. The first, Liam Lynch who at the time did not know the deceased but who later identified him from newspaper photographs stated that he had not seen him throwing stones but had remembered him standing in the middle of the Rubble Barricade Day 145/9/4.

18.6.2.2. Daniel Morrison however admitted that both he and Kevin had been throwing stones at soldiers from the Rubble Barricade Day 143/149/17, despite having said the exact opposite in a statement to the Inquiry at AM 429.5 paragraph 9. It is also worth noting that this witness stated that he had a "fleeting memory of Kevin McElhinney bending down and picking up a rubber bullet somewhere in the vicinity of the Rubble Barricade" somewhere on the southern side AM 429.5 paragraph 9. The witness highlights the "fear" and "pandemonium" which he experienced once the shooting had started. This response compelled him to run towards the safety of the entrance to Block1 Rossville Flats. He at all times assumed that the deceased had followed him. Moments later he confronted the body of Kevin McElhinney but did not immediately recognise him, however when he realised who it was he became completely traumatised and recalls very little of what actually occurred subsequently apart from his overwhelming desire to go home. The witness remained traumatised for weeks thereafter AM429.5 paragraphs 11 to 15.

18.6.2.3. Sean Eugene O'Neill, aka "The General", a witness whose credibility and standing remains in serious doubt provided a statement to the effect that the deceased was "a regular rioter" but was not a member of the IRA AO65.9 paragraph 44, AO65.10 paragraph 45. This description was corroborated to a degree by Kevin's friend Paul Coyle in an interview he gave to Maureen Shiels which later featured in Eamon McCann's book "Bloody Sunday in Derry: What really happened." Paul Coyle told the Inquiry he had seen Kevin at the beginning of the march with a paint bomb, which he intended to throw at an Army vehicle AC105.5 paragraph 2. Counsel for the Soldiers attempted to confirm that in fact the paint bomb was an acid bomb. Mr Coyle denied any such suggestion Day 152/90/7 to Day 152/91/14, as did Paddy Kelly in his statement who described the deceased in the following way:

> "Kevin was not the sort of boy who carried guns and nail bombs... he might have thrown a bottle or a stone in a riot but he would not have carried any guns." AK20.2 paragraph 12

18.6.2.4. In any event, whether or not Kevin was engaged in low level rioting on Bloody Sunday it is, in our respectful submission, beyond doubt that he was not engaging in behaviour that would have justified being shot.

18.6.2.5. Location Where Kevin McElhinney was Shot

All of the fourteen civilian witnesses who saw Kevin McElhinney make his way from the Rubble Barricade to the entrance of Block1 claim that he was crawling on the ground, (a fact which has not been disputed by the military witnesses). The majority of civilian witnesses, along with all the military witnesses suggest that he was crawling on his stomach, although three of the civilian witnesses claim that he was on his back or in a sitting position.

18.6.2.6. Of those who witnessed his arrival in Block1, James Norris of the Knights of Malta is the only civilian who stands by the suggestion that Kevin McElhinney was upright as he crashed through the doors Day 147/95/14 to Day 147/95/18. Curiously, it may be recalled that Colour Sergeant 002 of Composite Platoon adopted a similar description in his Eversheds (but not his RMP) statement B1363.005 paragraph 35.

18.6.2.7. Liam Mailey changed his evidence on the stand and accepted that it was more likely that Kevin McElhinney crawled to the entrance of Block1 than ran Day 163/127/8.

Evidence surrounding this issue is further confused by the recollections of Gerard Grieve who it will be recalled, made had his way from the Barricade ahead of Kevin. He believed that he was shot whilst running, and then he had crawled to the entrance, although the witness did not actually see him shot Day 147/24/2 to Day 147/25/7.

18.6.2.8. All the witnesses who actually saw Kevin McElhinney shot agree that he had almost reached the entrance of Block1 when the bullet struck. Three of those who saw him crawling Robert Devine, Christopher Doherty and Fergus McAteer thought that he had already been shot when they first saw him. By inference in other words suggesting that he was already wounded or injured in some way when hit by the bullet that killed him or alternatively of course that they only saw him after he was shot. Father O'Keefe and Helen Johnston maintained the opinion that he was shot twice, the latter actually claiming to have seen two bullets strike, the first when he was mid-way between the Rubble Barricade and the end of Block1 and the second as he reached the doorway. Messrs Shepherd and O'Callaghan in their reports and evidence to the Inquiry remain unconvinced that he was struck by two bullets.

18.6.2.9. The Table below highlights the various descriptions which relate to the manner in which Kevin McElhinney made his way from the Rubble Barricade to the entrance of Block1:

[8] Statement is not detailed, but says he was 'crawling', presumably on his front

18.6.2.10. Of the twelve people who saw him crawling from the Barricade to the entrance of Block1, six claim that the deceased was alone when he was shot. Both Paul Coyle and Helen Johnston however refer to seeing two men crawling while Clifford Lancaster spoke of three men in total. Gerard Grieve claimed in 1972 to have been at the Rubble Barricade and was one of a group of five young men 'who crawled from the Barricade to the entrance of Block1, although his evidence before this Inquiry was to the effect that Kevin McElhinney was crawling on his own at the time he was shot being one of the last, if not the last to make his escape from this location in this manner.

18.6.2.11. It should be noted that representatives for the Soldiers made no attempt to suggest to any of these witnesses that there was an armed man crawling next to, behind or in front of Kevin McElhinney at the time he was shot. The Table below illustrates in summary form the evidence of all the witnesses in respect of this aspect of the circumstances surrounding the death of Kevin McElhinney:

18.6.2.12. Who shot Kevin McElhinney?

Kevin stands almost uniquely among all the victims of Bloody Sunday because the circumstances surrounding his death serve to provide a corresponding account to that offered by three of the soldiers who have confessed to firing shots that day. These have been dealt with in our submissions concerning Soldiers K, L and M. In relation to the civilian evidence, only two of the witnesses claim to have seen the soldier who shot Kevin. Gerard Grieve was shown photograph P261 gave evidence to the effect that it was one of three soldiers who were positioned at the Kells Walk wall Day 147/19/25 to Day 147/24/2. Margaret Healy claims to have seen the soldier fire from the north western end of Block1 AH51.4 paragraph 21.

18.6.2.13. Repeated Fire

Some of the most significant evidence concerned the descriptions of repeated fire in the direction of Kevin McElhinney, James Barry Liddy AL13.8 and Christopher Doherty Day 182/140/10 to Day 182/141/25. It is clear that deliberate and sustained gunfire was directed at Kevin as he crawled down Rossville Street.

18.6.2.14. Bullet Striking the Doorway Entrance of Block1

Both Liam Mailey WT7.39.E-F and Gerard Grieve spoke of a bullet striking the doorway of the entrance to Block1 as Kevin McElhinney was being dragged into the building. The latter goes so far as to say that he believed the shots were being fired by the same soldiers positioned at Kells Walk:

> "I pulled him into the Flats. As I did so, more shots rang out and a bullet hit the doorway. I thought and still think that those shots were fired by the soldiers at the wall near Kells Walk." AG55.4 paragraph 17

18.6.2.15. The Issue of Weapons

Not one of the twenty one witnesses who saw Kevin McElhinney's body or attended to him in any way was questioned by the Soldiers' legal representatives or by Counsel to the Tribunal as to whether there were any weapons on his person though the Tribunal should be reminded that no less than five offered this evidence independently and voluntarily (see table below). This included Patrick Friel who searched Kevin's body at the request of Father O'Doherty H17.2 paragraph 14, H17.8 and found only a rubber bullet AF32.24 paragraph 27; Day 118/142/23 to Day 118/143/9.[33]

[33] It will be recalled that there is evidence to show that rubber bullets were collected routinely by young people either as momentos or to be sold to foreign journalists.

[2] Smaller ticks indicate that witnesses did not discuss weapons specifically in relation to Kevin McElhinney, but made a blanket statement that they had seen no civilians with weapons on the day; those with crosses did not say they saw weapons, but merely made no reference to weapons in their statements or oral evidence.

18.6.2.16. Despite the differences shared amongst the fourteen witnesses who saw Kevin McElhinney making his way from the Rubble Barricade to the entrance of Block1, all of them are unanimous in relation to the point that he was not carrying any weapons. In addition, seven of the ten witnesses who gave evidence about seeing Kevin crawl towards Block1 categorically state that the way in which he was moving made it impossible for him to have been carrying a weapon (See Table below).

18.6.2.17. Clifford Lancaster described Kevin using his hands to pull himself along the pavement AL4.4 paragraph 17. Both Paul Coyle Day 152/104/10 to Day 152/105/3 and Margaret Healy claimed to have clearly seen both his hands the latter stating that they were flat on the pavement and therefore could not have been holding anything AH51.4 paragraph 20.

18.6.2.18. Fergus McAteer was clear that Kevin could not have passed any weapons to those in the doorway of Block1 AM42.9 paragraph 27. Liam Mailey was adamant that Kevin McElhinney had no weapon when he carried him up the stairs and there was no-one present who could have removed the gun from him M50.5 paragraph 28. It will be recalled that the only witness who was asked about a weapon in the possession of the deceased was Paul Coyle Day 152/90/7 to Day 152/91/14 and this was confined exclusively to whether the paint bomb that Kevin had at the start of the march could have been an acid bomb.

18.6.2.19. Key Witnesses

Civilians in the Area of Rossville Street / Block1 Rossville Flats

Margaret Healy AH51 did not give oral evidence to the Tribunal. This witness was a 37 year-old married woman who along with her sister had joined the march at Bishops Field. She later described how she was making her way southwards along Rossville Street towards Free Derry Corner when the soldiers approached in armoured vehicles. In her panic she ran to a flat at the north eastern end of Glenfada Park North, where she was admitted by the occupant. From this position she was able to observe a young man who "seemed to be frightened" crawl along the pavement with his hands flat out in front of him AH51.4 paragraph 20.

18.6.2.20. She immediately observed two soldiers positioned at the north western end of Block1. One of the soldiers was kneeling holding his rifle as if ready to shoot. The second was standing behind him holding a baton and smoking a cigarette. This soldier appeared to instruct the kneeling soldier to fire at the young man who was crawling southwards towards the entrance of Block1. The soldier rose to his feet and fired at the young man who appeared to jerk. The witness concludes by saying she was horrified by what she saw and cried out to other people in the flat although she could not recollect their response AH51.4 paragraph 21.

18.6.2.21. Margaret Healy appears to be suggesting that the fatal shot which killed Kevin McElhinney was fired by a soldier at the north-western end of Block1. Regrettably the Inquiry was prevented from testing the reliability of her account in evidence. The issues of restrictive sight lines, the presence or absence of the injured or deceased within the vicinity of the Barricade and the overall timing of the incident continue to remain uncertain and untested.

18.6.2.22. It is acknowledged that at least one soldier, namely Soldier U has admitted to discharging a weapon at this location, around this time, and in the same direction albeit at an allegedly different target. It may well be that given the traumatic impact of the events that she has witnessed that she has somehow transposed her recollection of one incident onto another.

18.6.2.23. Alternatively, her recollection may be entirely accurate albeit in a limited sense because her position within the room prevented her from seeing the Composite Platoon soldiers in the vicinity of the low wall at Kells Walk. The fact that no such description is contained in either of her statements might well support this approach. It is accepted however that in the absence of an opportunity to question the witness about these matters then her evidence must be approached with caution.

18.6.2.24. Gerard Grieve AG55 gave evidence to the Tribunal on Day 147. He alleged that he had been standing at the northern end of the Rubble Barricade on the footpath adjacent to Block1 Rossville Flats. He heard a heavy burst of gunfire coming from the direction of Pilot Row. The witness lay flat on the ground. The shooting continued for some time. After discussions with an unidentified males lying in the same vicinity the witness along with other people took advantage of a lull in the firing and individually made their way to the safety of the entrance of Block1 Day 147/19/15 to Day 147/20/14. When Mr Grieve's opportunity to move arose he noticed a number of soldiers at the low wall at Kells Walk, in particular a third soldier who occupied, a position in Rossville Street, and who appeared to be aiming his rifle directly at him Day 147/20/14 to Day 147/23/25. The witness ran for the safety of the doorway and as he entered, he heard a thud. He was aware that there was another civilian running behind him although he did not know his identity at the time. It later transpired that this was the deceased Kevin McElhinney AG55.3 paragraphs 16 to 17. In his oral evidence before the Inquiry the witness confirmed that he pulled the deceased into the entrance of the doorway and remained with him for some time before going up to the second floor of Block1 where he found a Knight of Malta who attended to Kevin Day 147/29/5 to 147/30/17.

18.6.2.25. The witness assumed at all times that Kevin McElhinney was running rather than crawling when he was shot AG55.4 paragraph 17; Day 147/24/2 to Day 147/24/13. However he did acknowledge that he actually saw Kevin McElhinney crawling towards the entrance calling out to him for help and that he was on his stomach using both hands to drag himself along Day 147/25/19 to Day 147/26/5.

18.6.2.26. An element of support for the accuracy of this account can be derived from his 1972 interview with Kathleen Keville where the witness said that he saw Kevin McElhinney "creeping into the doorway" AG55.7. Significantly this witness was not asked by Counsel to the Tribunal or the Soldiers whether Kevin McElhinney was at any time carrying a weapon.

18.6.2.27. In light of his evidence we respectfully submit the following:

i. It would appear that he was the last person to leave the vicinity of the Barricade and make to it safely, to the entrance to Block1 in front of Kevin McElhinney.

ii. If there is a grain of truth in the evidence of the Composite Platoon soldiers positioned at the Kells Walk low wall and who stated that two men crawled towards the entrance to Block 1, it is respectfully submitted that on the evidence before the Tribunal, Mr Grieve must have been the man in front.

iii. If this is so, then Mr Grieve was also demonstrably unarmed.

18.6.2.28. Liam Mailey M50 gave oral evidence to the Tribunal on Day 163. This witness was an amateur photographer who submitted photographs to the Widgery Inquiry. They can be found at EP23. They are also attached to his Eversheds statement M50.11 to M23.

18.6.2.29. The series of photographs EP23.4, EP23.5, EP23.6, EP23.7, EP23.8, EP23.9, EP23.10, EP23.11 and EP24.12 were taken by him. His photographs cover the Rubble Barricade, the deployment of troops on Rossville Street, movement of troops at the low wall at Kells walk and a group tending to Michael Kelly in Glenfada Park North.

18.6.2.30. In 1972 he said that after he took these photographs a number of people ran into the doorway of the flats and the witness went back to the stairwell. He was on the stairs for about a minute when Kevin McElhinney collapsed in the face down on the ground in the doorway. Mr Mailey then assisted in carrying him up to the first landing.

M50.58 In his oral evidence to this Inquiry he said that the reference to "a minute" should perhaps not be taken literally as he would only have to run up and down a short staircase. Day 163/123/14 to Day 163/124/20

18.6.2.31. In his statement to this Inquiry he said that he heard a shout that someone had been injured and this caused him to go back down the stairs. The witness pointed out that it was not necessarily in reference to Kevin McEhinney and agreed with the possibility that it might have been someone talking about Hugh Gilmore Day 163/124/21 to Day 163/125/4.

18.6.2.32. The witness' recollection is that as he made his way down the stairs he saw Kevin McElhinney fall forwards towards the entrance door and a fresh splinter of wood flew from the doorpost causing a "very slight graze" to the ankle of a man called Paddy O'Hagan WT7.39.E-F, EP23.9A. The witness pointed out in oral evidence to this Inquiry that he did not know Paddy / Pat O'Hagan and that this was something that he had been told later Day163/148/11 to Day 163/148/25.

18.6.2.33. He believed that he saw Kevin McElhinney actually being shot just as he arrived at the door. Kevin McElhinney was "very close to the ground" "or possibly on the ground" as he came down the stairs Day 163/125/13 to Day 163/125/25; Day 163/126/6 to Day 163/128/6

18.6.2.34. The witness then carried Kevin up the first flight of stairs into the small landing, half way up to the first floor. He sat with his back to the wall with Kevin's head resting on his left hand. There was a lot of blood. He assisted a Knight of Malta who arrived (Jim Norris). Mr Mailey recalled that an old man called Artie Orr stayed with him and did not want to leave M50.4 paragraphs 19 to 27 According to his Widgery testimony, Kevin "died about four minutes after he was shot" WT7.33 E.

18.6.2.35. Mr Mailey stayed with the body until the ambulance arrived outside Block1. Although he did not carry Kevin McElhinney, he followed behind the group who were when suddenly there was a burst of further shots which caused everyone to fall to the floor M50.5 paragraphs 34 to 36.

18.6.2.36. In respect of the issue of whether Kevin McElhinney was armed the witness said the following in his Eversheds statement:

> "I do not believe that the wounded men was carrying a weapon of any sort. I did not search him but I did not see a weapon around him when I picked him up. There was no-one around him with a gun or who could have moved a gun, and I did not notice one about his person. If he had a gun it was well concealed but my impression was that he did not and that he had been running to get away from the firing." M50.5 paragraph 28; See also WT7.39 G

18.6.2.37. If this witness is to be believed, and Counsel for the Soldiers did not challenge his honesty in any way, a number of consequences follow:

i. Only one wounded person came into the doorway of the Block1;
ii. This person was Kevin McElhinney;
iii. Kevin McElhinney was shot very close to the doorway and was clearly unarmed;
iv. No Lee Enfield rifle or Thompson SMG was brought into the flats via this entrance;
v. There was no firing from the doorway of Block1 while this witness was there
vi. There was no-one around Kevin McElhinney either with a gun or who could have moved a gun.

18.6.2.38. Alan Harkens AH8 gave oral evidence on Day 96. Whilst not directly concerned with the circumstances surrounding the murder of Kevin McElhinney, he did come across his body in the Rossville Flats afterwards. Curiously the witness claims to have seen two bodies in the stairwell of Block1, the first on the landing between floors one and two, lying flat on the ground, covered with a coat, with his shoes next to him AH8.4 paragraph 15. He alleged that the second body was propped up against a wall with his boots on in the foyer entrance AH8.4 paragraph 16.

18.6.2.39. Although it is virtually certain that one of these bodies was that of Hugh Gilmore (given the fact that his shoes were removed), the witness refused to acknowledge that he might be mistaken though he was prepared to concede that he was in a state of shock at the time and broke down when he returned home Day 96/29/9 to Day 96/29/19. It is also worth recalling that this witness did not make a statement in 1972 and therefore was denied the assistance of a contemporary document when drafting his statement for this Inquiry. Whilst we do not challenge the witness' honesty in any way we respectfully submit that his recollection is mistaken and should not be relied upon.

Civilians at Glenfada Park South

18.6.2.40. Robert Devine AD42 in his 1972 account he was one of a group of about six men taking cover behind the ramp leading up to the upper level of the Glenfada Park Flats AD42.7. In his Eversheds statement he elaborated on his positioning and confirmed that it was at the bottom of the pram ramp at Glenfada Park South AD42.2 paragraphs 15 to 16. He described how he was able to look across to the entrance to Block1:

> "...I saw a youth with dark hair who seemed to have been wounded in his lower body, lying on the ground. He looked distressed as he was pulling himself into the doorway of Block1 of the Rossville Flats and others grabbed him and pulled him to the doorway." AD42.3 paragraph 18

18.6.2.41. Clifford Lancaster AL4 was from Norwich and had been living in Derry since 1956. He did not give oral evidence to the Tribunal. He was positioned under the stairs at the Glenfada Park South pram ramp AL4.4 paragraphs 14 to 15, AL4.12.

In his 1972 statement he said that at no time was anybody firing from the Rubble Barricade AL4.8. He attached a diagram to his 1972 statement at AL4.11 and described what he saw in the following terms:

> "I saw three young fellows lying alongside the flats hugging the ground for cover.
> I saw A crawl into the flats door, a few moments later B started to crawl to the same door but was struck in the back or lower part of the body while still trying to belly crawl to the door. I saw the bullet strike him and he was unarmed. A second shot splintered the doorway of the flats.
> He managed to crawl nearer the door and I saw A grab his hands and drag him in his white shirt was covered in blood and the blood was running out of the doorway." AL4.9

18.6.2.42. His account to this Inquiry in respect of the shooting can be found at AL4.4 paragraphs 16 to 17. In that account the witness remarked:

> "I could see that the man that I had just seen shot had nothing in his hands. He was using his hands to pull himself along the pavement and was also grabbed by his hands by other people inside the doorway." AL4.4 paragraph 17

Civilians at the Glenfada Park North Gable

18.6.2.43. Paul Coyle AC105 gave oral evidence on Day 152. At the material time this witness occupied a position in the vicinity of the southern gable end of Glenfada Park North. He saw between six and twelve boys on either side of the Rubble Barricade. They appeared to be exchanging abuse with the soldiers who had arrived in Rossville Street. This scene was interrupted by "a sudden hail of SLR shots" AC105.2 paragraph 10.

18.6.2.44. The witness then saw a man crawling in a southerly direction along the pavement on the eastern side of Rossville Street towards the entrance to Block1. His first thought at the time was that this man had foolishly given up the cover of the Barricade itself. AC105.3 paragraph 11. He could clearly see that he was not carrying anything in his hands and was unarmed. During the course of his evidence he stated that he recalled two men as described in a Praxis interview in 1991 O5.16, Day 152/70/20 to Day 152/71/24.

18.6.2.45. The witness confirmed that he did not see any civilian with a gun, petrol bomb or nail bomb AC105.4 paragraph 17.

18.6.2.46. Even though he had spoken to Kevin McElhinney, who was a close neighbour and friend, at the Creggan roundabout earlier that day he had failed to recognise him as one of the men that he later saw crawling towards the safety of the doorway of Block1. It will be recalled that Counsel for the Soldiers attempted to cast doubt on whether the deceased's possession of a paint bomb earlier that day was not in fact an acid bomb. The witness however remained resolute in his recollection that Kevin McElhinney was unarmed Day 152/90/7 to Day 152/91/14.

18.6.2.47. Patrick Joseph Norris AN24 gave oral evidence to the Inquiry on Day 167. Whilst looking from the south gable end of Glenfada Park

North he saw another man shot. He said that the man was crawling on his belly for the entrance to Block1. The witness did not hear the shot but saw the man's body jerk and jump off the ground a little. "When he was shot, he had almost reached the door of Block1, and some brave people came out and dragged his body into the doorway." AN24.4 paragraph 19.

18.6.2.48. In our submission that this account is consistent with the description of events as provided by him in 1972. When questioned before his Tribunal the witness confirmed that he saw the deceased crawl on his stomach from the Rubble Barricade and no-one else was near him when he was shot Day 167/123/12 to Day 167125/6. The witness was not asked in the course of his evidence whether the deceased was carrying a weapon of any sort.

18.6.2.49. John McLaughlin provided an interview to the Sunday Times Insight Team AM340.12. He is deceased. It records that he witnessed "the youth McElhinney crawling towards the doorway of the flats and I saw him shot." Again the witness made no mention of the deceased having any weapon at all.

18.6.2.50. Eugene Bradley AB113 gave evidence on Day 169. He can be seen in EP23/12. He was positioned at the area of the south gable wall at Glenfada Park North. The witness recalled how he looked out east across Rossville Street towards the southwest entrance of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats. He saw a man crawling backwards on his hands and feet towards the entrance. The man was looking towards William Street. There was nothing in the man's hands and he could not have moved in the way that he was moving if he had been carrying anything. As Mr Bradley watched, the man was knocked backwards and stopped. AB113.2 paragraph 12

18.6.2.51. Eamon McAteer AM41 gave oral evidence on Day 135. In his Eversheds statement he described what he saw whilst positioned at the Glenfada Park gable:

> "I also saw a man close to the west wall of Block1 of the Rossville Flats crawling south towards the safety of the flats approximately at the position marked "E" (see map AM41.34)... He was very close to the edge of the flats. He was making a long painful crawl on his elbows pressing himself low down. He was moving quite slowly and then he stopped. I could see the chips and bullets coming off the pavement around him. I was sure that he was being shot at. It was heart rending to see. I do not know whether he remained there or what happened him. I was caught between what was happening to him, what I had seen on the Rubble Barricade and what was going on in Glenfada Park. I cannot describe this man in detail. I was 17 and he seemed older. I felt he was well dressed in a blazer or jacket, something like that. He was obviously trying to get away. I could not see any weapon, and again, if I had seen one I would say so. These images are like snapshots to me. There are gaps but they are truthful images. There was shooting going on all the time..."
> AM41.4 paragraph 26

18.6.2.52. In his oral evidence he conveyed the feeling of helplessness that enveloped the civilians at the Glenfada Park North gable who saw Kevin McElhinney crawling towards the entrance to Block1:

> "Is the recollection that you record in that paragraph 26 of a single man crawling along a clear mental picture that you have today?
> Yes, that is the person I focused in on because of the -- I mean I was at the gable end of -- the gable of Glenfada and he was on the opposite side of Rossville Street and there was that feeling of helplessness that you could not do anything. People were shouting to other people not to run out because of the -- bullets were still coming down Rossville Street." Day 135/40/14 to Day 135/40/23

18.6.2.53. When asked why he did not include this in his statement that he drafted in 1972 AM41.33 he explained that he did not write it down because he was concerning himself with civilians who he knew were shot dead. As he saw Kevin McElhinney still crawling he did not think that he was actually shot Day 135/41/14 to Day 135/41/21.

18.6.2.54. Fergus McAteer AM42 gave oral evidence to the Tribunal on Day 168. He can be seen in photographs EP2/11; EP3/5; EP27/11. This witness stated he arrived at Glenfada Park North just as Michael Kelly's body was carried into that location. He believed that about ten minutes later he had a clear and uninterrupted view of a man crawling south along the footpath next to Block1. The man was approximately ten yards from the entrance when he first saw him Day 168/54/7 to Day 168/54/14. In his Eversheds statement he recorded that the man was on his own and was crawling in a painful way AM42.8 paragraph 25.

18.6.2.55. In his 1972 statement he recorded that the man had no weapon and that he used both hands to manoeuvre himself through the door of Block1. His impression was that he was shot in the right side or leg AM42.17.

Significantly, Mr McAteer was never challenged in respect of his assertion that the deceased was not carrying any weapons.

18.6.2.56. Helen Johnston AJ11 gave oral evidence to the Inquiry on Day 228. She can be seen in photographs EP23/10 and EP23/11. It will be recalled that having run down Rossville Street she took up a position on the south eastern end of Glenfada Park North. From there she could see three young men lying on the Rubble Barricade along with Mr Alex Nash who was waving a white hanky.

18.6.2.57. She described in her contemporaneous account a sustained level of fire coming from a northerly direction towards her position[34]. At this point she saw two boys leaving the relative safety of the Barricade and start to crawl southwards along the western side of Block1. She recorded the incident in the following way:

> "The fire continued. On the opposite side of the street two boys were crawling along the road. The first one made it up to the doorway. The second one appeared to get shot he was jerking and when he got to the door he stopped altogether. We were all screaming to the boy inside the doorway to reach out and pull the other lad in, which he did." AJ11.1

18.6.2.58. The witness was not asked about the issue of weapons although it should be noted that she stated that it would have been impossible for either of the men saw to have been carrying anything given the manner in which they were crawling AJ11.4 paragraphs 13; Day 228/42/14 to Day 228/43/24.

18.6.2.59. The witness however made the following remark:

> "The young lads were scrambling with their hands out in front of them. I not believe there was any possibility of them having a weapon. I certainly saw none. Someone must have been a good shot that day. I do not know how you shoot someone on the ground so effectively." AJ11.4 paragraph 11

[34] Although Helen Johnston's 1972 statement bears the names Helen and Margaret Johnston (sister of the witness) she makes clear in her Eversheds statement that the 1972 statement is her own. AJ11.6 paragraph 27

What the witness did not know at the material time was that one of the soldiers responsible for firing at Kevin McElhinney was the Regimental marksman and also a Bisley Champion.

18.6.2.60. Christopher Doherty AD58 gave oral evidence to the Tribunal on Day 182. This witness although originally occupying a position in Rossville Street ran for the cover of Glenfada Park North when the Army opened fire AD58.19 paragraph 20. From this location he observed a number of bodies lying dead near the Rubble Barricade along with Mr Alex Nash.

> "I then noticed another fellow, lying beyond Mr Nash and the two fellows near Block1 of Rossville Flats. The fellow was trying to crawl on his back towards Block1. He was moving very slowly. I could see bullets bouncing off the ground around him. He was pushing himself with his feet and was making a lot of effort to move himself while all the time being shot at. I cannot say how many bullets were fired towards him but there were several. I thought he must have been shot because he was on his back and therefore had to be injured. I cannot now recall what he looked like or what he was wearing. He was close to the entrance to the Flats and he managed to pull himself around the pole supporting the canopy at the door of Block1 of the Rossville Flats. I think he may have been on his side as he pulled himself around. My last memory of him is being half inside and half outside the door. I could see the man clearly and could not see any weapon on or close to him." AD58.19 paragraph 22

This witness was never questioned about the issue of weapons and gave evidence consistent with the description outlined above which was in turn equally consistent with his evidence in 1972 AD58.1.

18.6.2.61. Father (now Professor) Terence O'Keefe AH21 gave oral evidence to the Tribunal on Day 127. After witnessing Father Bradley anoint Michael Kelly and then observing Alex Nash on top of the three bodies (Michael McDaid, John Young and William Nash) on the southern side of the Barricade the witness related to the Treasury Solicitor how:

> "During all this time there had been shots and the whine of bullets going past. All the shots seemed to come from the position of the soldiers down Rossville Street. My impression was that they were all single shots.
> Looking across towards Rossville Flats there was a young man pulling himself along the ground towards the doorway at the southern end of the wing closest to Rossville Street. As he got to the doorway he seemed to jerk as though he had been hit by a bullet. He twitched. He nevertheless managed to get inside the doorway." H21.80

18.6.2.62. The Tribunal will note that on this account the witness only appears to have seen Kevin McElhinney twitch once as if struck by a bullet. This is completely consistent with what he told Lord Widgery on oath:

> "Q. Going away from the barricade in the line of Rossville Street and in the direction of Derry Corner? A. Yes, but there was a doorway. He was obviously heading for a doorway there which was open – I think a metal doorway.
> Q. Going for a doorway in that westerly flank of the high rise? A. Yes
> Q. What happened? A. I got the impression he was dragging himself on his back and I thought he may have been hit in the leg. When he reached the door he was half way hauling himself in the inside, and he twitched; his body jerked once and he disappeared in the doorway then.
> He got inside? A. He got inside, yes." WT5.8.F-G, WT5.9A-B

18.6.2.63. The witness' impression thirty years later was that Kevin McElhinney was already wounded and was then a second time at the doorway. In our submission this is an honest mistake due to the passage of time but the sentiments expressed in his Eversheds statement appear to sum up the desperate poignancy of Kevin McElhinney's final moments:

> "His movement was very odd and awkward and he was making very slow progress. I and the other people at the gable wall were urging him on, willing him to get into cover. Just as he got to the doorway and seemed to heave himself up over, I assume, a little step, he seemed to twitch and jerk and then lie still. It seemed to me that he had been shot a second time. Some people who were taking cover in the doorway dragged him in. It was a tragic moment. He was almost there, but didn't quite make it." H21.47 paragraph 17

Issue of the "Leopard Crawl" and whether Two Males crawled towards the doorway

18.6.2.64. The Tribunal will recall that by the time the members of Composite Platoon came to make their statements to the Treasury Solicitor they were all describing Kevin McElhinney's crawl from the Barricade towards the doorway as being a "leopard crawl" in an obvious attempt to imply that the deceased was employing some type of military technique that he had been trained in to adopt whilst under fire. (This reasoning of course is inherently flawed, insofar as if Kevin McElhinney had received any sort on military training, then it is hard to understand why he would have left the cover of the Barricade at all.)

All of the relevant Composite Platoon soldiers had also told the RMP that two men had crawled from the Barricade.

18.6.2.65. These issues were raised when Mr Gibbens QC at the Widgery Tribunal was examining Father O'Keefe. In our submission the answers to Counsel's questions are very important:

> "Q. You saw a man crawling down from the barricade to a doorway in the block of flats? A. Not crawling so much as dragging himself.
> Q. Do you know what a leopard crawl is? A. No, I do not.
> Q. It is crawling with your posterior rather higher in the air because of being on your hands and using your legs to crawl along, rather in the form of a four-footed animal.
> A. No, this is not my impression of the way it was. He was dragging himself rather more on the side and back.
> Q. Did you not in fact see two men crawling along the way to that doorway? A. No, I only saw one man.
> Q. If that were so, of course, it may have happened while you were giving the last rites to this man down here. A. My impression is only of one man very definitely.
> ....
> Q. At any rate, I am suggesting to you , and there will be evidence, that two men crawled along there dragging guns – I use the word loosely, it may be rifles, an implement of that kind – towards the door in the Rossville Flats.
> My impression is one man who was dragging himself, as I say, on his back or side rather.
> Q. Even allowing that you saw him on his back, did you see him dragging something as it were along with him with his feet or with his hands?
> Not with his feet. I could only see one hand clearly, that is the hand towards me. There was certainly nothing in that hand. I got the impression as he was levering himself up from the door he certainly did not seem to have left anything behind. So I would deduce from that that he was not carrying anything.
> Q. He was the only man you saw crawl along? A. He was, yes." (emphasis added) WT5.18 D-F; WT5.19 A 18.6.2.66. This is consistent with what he told this Inquiry namely that it would not be accurate to describe Kevin McElhinney's movements as a "leopard crawl" and that Kevin was on his own when he was shot Day 127/180/5 to Day 127/184/22.

We respectfully submit that the Tribunal should draw a number of conclusions from this evidence, viz:

i. That Kevin McElhinney was unarmed and obviously so;

ii. That Kevin McElhinney was not crawling in a "leopard crawl" or performing any similar type of military manoeuvre;

iii. That he was isolated, to a degree, from other civilians on the east side of Rossville Street as he crawled for the doorway;

iv. That the "descriptions" of his movements provided by the military witnesses are untruthful;

v. The expression "leopard crawl" as adopted by soldiers when supplying statements to the Treasury Solicitor, raises the issue of collusion between them, and provides a clear indication of the recognition that the justification for firing required enhancement.

Inside the Stairwell of Block 1

18.6.2.67. Jim Norris AN20 gave oral evidence to the Tribunal on Day 147. He can be seen in EP26/10. Mr Norris had been on the second floor of the Block1 where he had been treating a man who had been hit in the face with a gas canister. His 1972 statement said that when he reached the bottom stair he saw a photographer (who must be Liam Mailey) and just at that point a youth fell in the doorway. The boy was bleeding profusely. Both he and Liam Mailey dragged and carried him upstairs where he applied a gunshot wound to side. AN20.25.

Mr Norris' current recollection is of a boy crashing through the doors from Rossville Street as though in full flight. Mr Norris caught the boy as he fell. He said that he does not recall the boy being dragged in. Mr Norris said that he is not mistaken in thinking that the boy was wearing a green suit. (Kevin McElhinney was in fact wearing a brown suit with a green pullover.) He searched Kevin and did not find anything in his pockets. AN20.9 paragraphs 13 to 14.

The witness' current recollection is that Mr McElhinney's body was in the foyer when he left him. He does not remember anyone carrying Mr McElhinney up the steps Day 147/101/11 to Day 147/101/18.

18.6.2.68. Mr Norris's 1972 account states that whilst he was treating Kevin McElhinney, a man told him that someone had been injured in the head AN20.25. He does not now know which block he went to in order to treat the man. Day 147/108/16 to Day 147/109/1.
By the time he came back to Kevin McElhinney he was dead and a coat or a blanket was placed over him AN20.10 paragraph 18, AN20.25

As Kevin lay on the stairwell of Block1 Patrick Friel searched him at the request of Father Irwin who anointed him. Mr Friel found a rubber bullet in Kevin's pocket. A number of other witnesses saw him there including Greg Doherty, Bernard Feeney, Don Carlin and John Barrett.

Susan North and Fulvio Grimaldi also passed his body on the stairs and Mr Grimaldi took a photograph which can be found at P674.001.

18.6.3. Injuries Sustained

18.6.3.1. Kevin McElhinney was shot from behind as he crawled for his life from the Rubble Barricade towards the relative safety of the entrance to Block1 Rossville Flats.

The post mortem examination was carried out by Doctor Marshall, State Pathologist, at 8pm on 31st January 1972. The report of Dr Shepherd and Mr O'Callaghan appears at E2.0051 to E2.0055. The addendum report appears at E2.0084. The morgue and X-ray photographs are in Bundle P2 TAB7.

18.6.3.2. Kevin McElhinney sustained one entry wound and four other wounds. The entry wound was in the left buttock and measured 0.3cm in diameter P111, P115, P116. The four other wounds lay above each other on the left side of his trunk P112, P113, P114, P117.

18.6.3.3. Gunshot wounds were present as follows on the trunk:

Wound 1: An oval split measuring 7 x 4 cm. No abrasions were recorded. P110, P112, P113, P114, P115

Wound 2: 2.5 cm above Wound1 was a circular laceration 0.4cm with an area of "abrasion" measuring 1.2 x 0.4cm at its upper border. P112, P113, P114, P115

Wound 3: 8 cm above Wound 2 was a circular laceration 0.4cm with an arch of abrasion of the left upper border 0.4cm wide. P112, P113, P114, P115

Wound 4: 3.5cm above Wound 3 was a laceration 0.5 x 0.4cm. P112, P113, P114, P115

18.6.3.4. In addition to these injuries there also was an abrasion 6 x 1cm on the outer left thigh which was thought to represent the track of the bullet before it struck the buttock. D0218 This injury was not photographed. The Inquiry's experts were of the view however that as Dr Martin recorded the damage to the left trouser leg as being a "tear" and the drawing indicating a right angled defect, "these features do not indicate that the damage was due to the passage of a bullet, they are more in keeping with contact by or against a point." E2.0053

The track of the bullet was upwards and from back to front at 45 and slightly from right to left.E2.0054, D0215

18.6.3.5. The bullet which killed Kevin McElhinney passed into the left side of the pelvic cavity causing "considerable laceration of muscle, fracturing of bone and a tear in the bladder. It had then divided a segment of large intestine, lacerated the artery supplying the left leg and torn open two segments of small intestine before entering the left side of the abdominal wall." D0218

18.6.3.6. Kevin McElhinney's death was precipitated by the bleeding into the abdomen from the lacerated artery. D0218

18.6.3.7. Dr Marshall was of the opinion that the bullet fragmented and the four wounds on the left side of the truck were caused by exiting bullet fragments. D0218

18.6.3.8. Dr Shepherd and Mr O'Callaghan were of the view for reasons stated in E2.0054 to E2. 0055 that the bullet did not in fact fragment and that it exited through Wound 2 then re-entered via Wound 3 and finally left via Wound 4. After leaving Wound 4, the bullet did not pass through the jacket or its lining until it exited through the hole near the shoulder.

18.6.3.9. In conclusion, this is the opinion of the Inquiry's experts:
"Dr Marshall formed the opinion that all of the injuries were caused by one bullet and we would concur with that conclusion; we differ only in the behaviour of the bullet at the time of exit and in our opinion that it did not fragment.

Assuming the Normal Anatomical Position it is clear that the track of the bullet was from below upward and from right to left.

The same track could be achieved if Kevin MCELHINNEY was bending over or on all fours and the shot was fired from behind and to his right." (Emphasis added) E2.0055

18.6.4. Removal to Hospital

18.6.4.1. Some time after 4.51pm Charlie Downey AC 133.5 paragraph 26 to 29; EP19/2.001,EP4/49, EP5/23 and Jim Norris of the Knights of Malta AN 20.3 paragraphs 13 to 15, AN 20.4 paragraphs 18 to 19 put Kevin McElhinney in an ambulance VRM 7689 EZ which was parked in Rossville Street near the entrance to the Rossville Flats P674.3. Also placed in the same ambulance were Barney McGuigan, Alana Burke and Patsy Brolly. The ambulance was manned by John Rafferty (driver) and Samuel Hughes (attendant). It arrived in Altnagelvin Hospital at 5.15pm. ED39.6; D500.26, D500.27; D948

18.6.5. Forensic Evidence

18.6.5.1. Dr Martin said in 1972 that the lead particle density on the back of Kevin McElhinney's jacket was "significantly above the range normally encountered." D0201 Two lead particles and a smear were also found on the back of his left hand. Notwithstanding this Dr Martin said in evidence that was not safe to conclude that this was positive evidence of handling firearms as a fragmenting bullet may have been the cause of the lead. WT9.15B-E

18.6.5.2. It is further submitted a possible source for the lead on Kevin McElhinney's jacket may have been due to the bullets that according to the witness Christopher Doherty were "bouncing around" him as he crawled towards Block1.

18.6.5.3. The Inquiry's own expert, Dr Lloyd who described Dr Martin's work as "worthless" concluded in his report that "the particles on the hand could have been derived from the clothing and, therefore, are not acceptable evidence of McElhinney's use of a gun." E1.0046

18.6.5.4. Dr Lloyd in oral evidence amplified his opinion in this regard. He said that if Kevin McElhinney was crawling on a surface which was contaminated with fragmentation debris, then this also could account for the presence of lead on his jacket. Day 227/46/25 to Day 227/47/2

18.6.5.5. Conclusions

i. It is submitted on behalf of the Family of Kevin McElhinney:

ii. Kevin McElhinney was shot without any weapon or any other item in either of his hands.

iii. Kevin McElhinney never presented as a perceived or real threat to the Parachute Regiment soldiers in Rossville Street or its environs

iv. No other person was shot in the vicinity of Kevin McElhinney at or around the time he was struck.

v. There was no firing from the Rossville Flats at the soldiers.

vi. There was no-one at or around the Rubble Barricade with a firearm, nail-bomb, petrol bomb or any other weapon.

vii. No weapons were taken or carried away from the Rubble Barricade.

viii. Not even stones were thrown at the soldiers in Rossville Street when Kevin McElhinney was shot.

ix. Kevin McElhinney was the victim of a capricious and random act, deliberately committed by an unnamed member of the Parachute Regiment.

x. There is no evidence capable of justifying the circumstances in which Kevin McElhinney was murdered.

xi. The forensic evidence does not support the allegations of the military witnesses.

xii. The civilian evidence overwhelmingly confirms, that Kevin McElhinney was unarmed at the time he was murdered. The inconsistent and contradictory nature of the military evidence could not with reason be relied upon for the purposes of supporting any other conclusion.

xiii. There is no evidence to suggest that the deceased behaved in an unlawful or provocative manner either immediately prior or at the time of his death.

xiv. The likelihood is that Kevin McElhinney was driven from the comparative protection of the barricade by an overwhelming fear for his safety and that this decision almost certainly cost him his life.

xv. Kevin McElhinney was the victim of a military mindset, which, for the purposes of operational considerations on Bloody Sunday, failed to make any proper distinction between politician, civil rights marcher, defiant teenager or perceived gunman.

xvi. Kevin McElhinney was subjected to an ill-disciplined fusillade of sustained gunfire, in circumstances were no perceived or actual risk to the Paratroopers in Rossville Street existed.

xvii. No challenge to the unlawful circumstances surrounding the death of Kevin McElhinney was made on behalf of any of the interested parties.

18.7 Military Evidence

18.7.1 Introduction

This section deals with the evidence of the soldiers in (i) Mortar Platoon, (ii) Anti-Tank Platoon, (iii) Composite Platoon, (iv) the Observation Posts overlooking the sector and (v) Soldier 028 a 'witness' to events in Sector 3. In each sub-section, we first provide an overview of the soldiers' accounts and then examine the activities of the most relevant soldiers in each category.

Mortar Platoon

18.7.2 The deployment of Mortar Platoon is dealt with in section 17.8 and it is not proposed to re-visit that evidence in detail. The Mortar Platoon Pigs were the first two Pigs from Support Company to enter the Bogside. The second of those Pigs, commanded by Sergeant O stopped briefly on the roadway at the North end of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats, before turning into the waste ground at Pilot's Row. A number of soldiers from Sergeant O's Pig debussed at that point, Soldiers P, U and R armed with SLRs and Soldiers 017 and 006 both armed with baton guns.

18.7.2.1 These soldiers can be seen debussing on V48/12.14 to 12.30 which shows that prior to debussing a rubber bullet was fired from inside the Pig and that soldiers then debussed to the right and left side of the Pig.

18.7.2.2 Of these soldiers, Soldiers R and 006 joined the rest of their Platoon in the waste-ground and the car park of the Rossville Flats, while Soldiers P, U and 017 moved down Rossville Street. Their actions on the day are relevant to the events in Sector 3, rather than Sector 2 and will be dealt with below.

Individual Soldiers in Mortar Platoon

Soldier P

18.7.2.3 Soldier P was a Corporal on Bloody Sunday and was one of the soldiers in Mortar Platoon who debussed from Sergeant O's Pig at the North end of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats. Accompanied by Soldier 017, Soldier P moved across Rossville Street towards Kells Walk.

18.7.2.4 Soldier P is one of only a small number of soldiers who admit to having fired live rounds over the Rubble Barricade. In the evidence given by soldiers to Lord Widgery in 1972 he is one of only two soldiers, the other being Soldier J, whose firing of live rounds could account for the deaths of John Young, Michael McDaid and William Nash. His firing could also account for the death of Hugh Gilmore.

18.7.2.5 On Soldier P's own account he shot and killed 2 men in Rossville Street, one at a location in front of the Rubble Barricade and the other man behind the Rubble Barricade. While soldiers U, K, L and M admit to having fired rounds over the Rubble Barricade and claim to have hit their targets, the targets they claim to have hit were not at the Rubble Barricade. Other soldiers, such as Soldier J and E claim to have fired live rounds over the Barricade but to have missed their targets. Thus with the exception of Soldier F, who eventually admitted to having shot and killed Michael Kelly, Soldier P is the only soldier who admits to having shot and killed a man at the Rubble Barricade.

18.7.2.6 Soldier P admits to having fired at least 9 live rounds down Rossville Street, although in the first account he gave to the RMP he accounted for firing a total of 11 shots. B576, B577, B578. Of the shots fired by Soldier P, all were fired down Rossville Street and over the Rubble Barricade.

18.7.2.7 With the exception of the account given by Soldier 027, this Tribunal has heard no account from any soldier which explains how Michael McDaid, John Young, William Nash and Hugh Gilmore came to be shot and killed behind the Rubble Barricade.

18.7.2.8 On the evidence before this Tribunal, Soldier P remains, along with Soldier J, the prime suspect for the murder of Michael McDaid, John Young and William Nash. He is also a possible suspect for having shot and killed Hugh Gilmore, although the evidence would suggest that Soldier U is the most likely person to have killed Hugh Gilmore.

Soldier P's Memory Loss

18.7.2.9 A feature of this soldiers' evidence, and a particular feature of the evidence of soldiers who under grave suspicion of murder is their inability to recollect anything about the events of Bloody Sunday.[1] In both his written and oral evidence to this Tribunal Soldier P claims to have virtually no recollection of the events of the day.

18.7.2.10 In his written statement to this Inquiry Soldier P stated:

> "I have had a look at some statements which are in my name and the evidence I gave to the Widgery Tribunal . . . However, they did not bring anything back to me. It all went in a blur and I do not recall anything else about it. It is like it disappeared. . . .
>
> I have no recollection of firing my weapon or of seeing or hearing others firing weapons. I do not recall hearing any other, non military, types of rifle discharge. I must have been fired at, but I do not remember it at this time."." B623.002 paragraphs 11 to 12

18.7.2.11 This despite the fact that, on his own admission, he killed at least two people on Bloody Sunday and this was the only occasion, in a 14 year

[1] See for example, Soldier F who has admitted killing Michael Kelly, William McKinney, Bernard McGuigan and Patrick Doherty, as well as having probably caused the injuries of Joseph Mahon, Patrick Campbell and Danny Magowan and Soldier S who is the main candidate for having shot and killed Jackie Duddy.

career in the army,[2] that he had ever fired live rounds.[3] Day 353/3/2 to Day 353/3/4

18.7.2.12 It is submitted that Soldier P suffers not from a failure of memory but a "failure of conscience". Soldier P came to this Tribunal, unprepared to tell the truth about the events of Bloody Sunday because he is guilty of unlawful killing and he took "refuge in a failure of memory as being the easiest way to cope with the difficult situation and questions" that he knew he would have to face. Day 353/120/1 to Day 353/120/10

18.7.2.13 By claiming that he had no recollection of the events of Bloody Sunday Soldier P was able to avoid having to deal with:

i) The discrepancies as between the various accounts given by him in 1972.

ii) The discrepancies between the accounts given by him and the objective photographic and video evidence available to this Tribunal.

iii) The fact that his account of the circumstances in which he fired live rounds is uncorroborated by soldiers who were in the perfect position to witness his actions on that day.[4]

iv) The fact that, although positioned close by soldiers who fired live rounds over the Rubble Barricade, he claims neither to have seen nor heard those rounds, nor seen the alleged targets who, on the account of these soldiers, were positioned directly in front of him.

18.7.2.14 Claiming to have no recollection of the events of the day was the most effective way in which Soldier P could obstruct this Tribunal's search for the truth about Bloody Sunday, a truth which would identify Soldier P as being guilty of murder.

[2] B623.001 paragraph 1

[3] Other than on a range.

[4] The only exception to this is that corroboration is offered by Soldier 017 to Soldier P's shooting of a nail-bomber, although, it is our submission, for reasons developed below, that this corroboration was the result of dishonest collusion.

18.7.2.15 Because of what was in effect, a refusal by Soldier P to co-operate with this Tribunal, the focus of a consideration of Soldier P's evidence relates to the accounts given by Soldier P in 1972, which he has invited this Tribunal to accept as truthful.

18.7.2.16 It is our submission that none of the accounts given by Soldier P in 1972 were truthful. There are significant discrepancies as between these accounts, discrepancies which are explicable by reference to Soldier P's need to provide an explanation of how he came to fire live rounds, without incriminating himself.

Soldier P's deployment into the Bogside

18.7.2.17 The first account given by Soldier P about the events of Bloody Sunday was in a statement made to the RMP at 22.30 hours on the 30 January 1972.

18.7.2.18 According to his RMP statement at the time of his deployment a riot, involving 4,000 people, was taking place at the junction of Rossville Street and William Street. B576

18.7.2.19 In his statement to the Treasury Solicitor Soldier P stated that, on crossing Barrier 12, there was a crowd of approximately 2,000 in the area of the open ground between William Street and Prince Arthur's Street and the car park on the other side of Little James Street. This crowd began to run away towards the general area of the Rossville Flats. B591

18.7.2.20 When questioned by Counsel for the Inquiry about his estimate of 4,000 Soldier P accepted the explanation offered to him that the number of 4,000 would have been an estimate of "the people that were in the march." Day 353/15/9

18.7.2.21 However, Soldier P's RMP statement is unambiguous in its assertion that at 16.10 hours "a riot was taking place at the junction of Rossville Street and William Street, Londonderry. There were about 4,000 people involved in the riot and comprised both men and women of all ages." B576

18.7.2.22 Yet, as Soldier P acknowledged himself, "[m]y vision was very limited at this time owing to the fact that I was at the back of the vehicle." B591 Soldier P could not on any account have witnessed the scenes of rioting depicted in either his RMP or his Treasury Solicitor statement. Nonetheless in both statements Soldier P willingly provided dishonest accounts tending to depict scenes of thousands of civilians engaged in unlawful and violent behaviour and posing a real threat to the security forces who entered the Bogside.

18.7.2.23 Soldier P's picture of riotous civilians and soldiers under attack was developed in his statement to the Treasury Solicitor wherein he states that, as the vehicles deployed into the Bogside, "we could hear stones bouncing off our vehicles." B591 No such reference can be found in his RMP statement. Moreover Video 48 which shows the Pig in which Soldier P entered the Bogside, demonstrates clearly, that contrary to Soldier P's evidence "there was no continuous stream of people throwing bricks or stoning you or your platoon in that vehicle." Day 353/74/11 to Day 353/74/15

18.7.2.24 Soldier P then describes what happened upon debussing from the Pig. The descriptions of what happened vary from account to account and are briefly summarised below.

18.7.2.25 According to the account given in his RMP statement:

i) Soldier P accompanied by 2 other soldiers debussed to the right of the vehicle and "immediately came under heavy stoning and bottling from rioters." B576, B577

ii) 20 rioters then advanced towards Soldier P and his companions, throwing stones and missiles constantly as they approached. B577

18.7.2.26 According to the accounts given for the purposes of the Widgery Inquiry:

i) When soldiers debussed there was a crowd of people around the waste ground at Eden Place and Pilot's Row and another crowd across Rossville Street, both sets were rioting, throwing stones, bottles and other missiles. WT13.45F-G

ii) The crowd across Rossville Street would appear to have been located at or about the east-facing wall of the Kells Walk pram ramp.[5] This crowd were throwing missiles in the direction of troops on the ground. B592 In oral evidence to Lord Widgery Soldier P stated that this crowd numbered about 50-70 people throwing stones and bottles. WT13.46B

18.7.2.27 Quite apart from the discrepancies as between the accounts it is in our submission quite clear from Video 48 that the scenes described by Soldier P, simply did not occur. The Tribunal is referred to V48/12.14 to 13.01 which demonstrates that:

i) While a small number of people threw stones at the outset, there were not two rioting crowds, and certainly nothing like the 50 to 70 people claimed by Soldier P in his evidence to Lord Widgery. WT13.46B

ii) When Soldier P de-bussed he encountered, not rioting civilians, as he claimed in each of his statements, nor civilians advancing on soldiers, B577 but fleeing civilians.

Cocking his Rifle

18.7.2.28 Another issue which arises is the admission contained in Soldier P's RMP statement that his rifle was cocked with a round in the breach and the safety catch on. B576 This admission was retracted in his statement to the Treasury Solicitor wherein he stated that he did not cock his rifle until after debussing. B592

[5] It seems clear from Soldier P's RMP statement, his evidence to Lord Widgery and his clarification of matters to this Tribunal, as well as the photographic evidence that this was the location of the crowd he initially claims to have seen, as well as his location for most of the operation, until he decided to return to his vehicle. Day 353/55/14 to Day 353/55/22

18.7.2.29 While it is our submission that the evidence points to the fact that Soldier P had cocked his rifle prior to debussing, even if he cocked his rifle after debussing, there was no justification for this action. On Soldier P's own account, the first occasion upon which he came under fire was when he reached the east-facing wall of the Kells Walk pram ramp, after he had crossed Rossville Street. B592 This of course is an account which is not contained in his RMP statement and appears for the first time in his statement to the Treasury Solicitor. In those circumstances, even if Soldier P did not cock his rifle until after debussing, his action was a breach of the Yellow Card which stated:

> "...Unless you are about to open fire no live round is to be carried in the breech and the working parts must be forward. Company Commanders and above may, when circumstances in their opinion warrant such action, order weapons to be cocked, with a round in the breech where appropriate, and the safety catch at safe."[6]

18.7.2.30 In the course of evidence to this Tribunal Soldier P was unable to explain why there was a difference between the two accounts given in 1972. Day 353/16/5 to Day 353/16/7

18.7.2.31 Sergeant O gave evidence that he cocked his rifle in the Pig before going through Barrier 12 and that he believes the rest of the men followed suit, B757.110 paragraph 23. In our submission Soldier P did cock his rifle while in the Pig and prior to debussing.

18.7.2.32 That Soldier P had cocked his rifle prior to debussing is also consistent with the evidence of Sergeant Major Lewis at B2111.013 paragraph 86, albeit the timing is different, in that according to Sergeant Major

[6] Yellow Card (November 1971 Revision) ED71.1. See general rules no. 4

Lewis Soldier P had cocked his rifle, even prior to getting into the vehicle.

18.7.2.33 It is our contention that Soldier P cocked his rifle prior to debussing. He retracted that admission in his Treasury Solicitor statement because he realised that the admission was: a breach of the Yellow Card; and given his subsequent discharge of at least 9 live rounds, tended to point to a willingness to use lethal force, in circumstances which were unjustified.

18.7.2.34 However, regardless of which account is accepted, Soldier P's actions in cocking his rifle was a breach of the Yellow Card and did demonstrate his willingness and eagerness to fire live rounds on Bloody Sunday. A willingness which probably resulted in the deaths of one or more of John Young, Michael McDaid and William Nash.

Soldier P's Nail-Bomber

18.7.2.35 While Soldier P has consistently asserted that the first two live rounds fired by him were fired at a man whom he believed to be a nail-bomber. That is probably the height of the consistency as between the different versions given by Soldier P about this issue. In his statement to the RMP, Soldier P stated that:

i) 20 rioters advanced towards Soldier P and his companions, they were throwing stones and missiles constantly as they approached. B577

ii) One of the soldiers with Soldier P was armed with a baton gun and fired rubber bullets at the rioters in an attempt to disperse them. Having come under fire from a rubber bullet gun, the rioters split up. B577

iii) As the rioters split Soldier P saw a man, aged about 23-25 years, wearing a light coloured jacket behind the crowd. Soldier P saw this man light an object in his hand and saw the object fizzle and saw sparks coming from it. B577

iv) Soldier P shouted a warning to the soldiers with him and then fired 2 aimed shots at the man. He saw the first round strike the ground near the man's feet and the second struck the man on the chest and he fell to the ground. B577

v) The crowd pulled back, the nail bomb failed to explode and the crowd moved forward again removing the man's body. B577

18.7.2.36 In his statement to the Treasury Solicitor, Soldier P dealt with the incident as follows:

i) After debussing Soldier P signalled to Soldier 017 to advance towards the crowd at the east-facing wall at the Kells Walk pram-ramp in order to make arrests. B592

ii) As Soldier P and Soldier 017 moved across Rossville Street the crowd dispersed up an alleyway into Columbcille Court and another alleyway to the left of Columbcille Court. Upon reaching the wall the crowd had dispersed. Soldier P and 017 then came under fire from the direction of the Rubble Barricade. Soldier P could not see who was firing at them, but he heard 2 shots which he believed to be high velocity and which appeared to go over the soldiers' heads. B592

iii) Soldiers P and 017 took cover along-side the wall, and noticed a group of people coming along the alleyway throwing stones and bottles at them. Soldier 017 fired a number of baton rounds into the crowd, splitting them up and Soldier P noticed a man taking cover behind the crowd lighting an object which "I would describe as an explosive missile and which seemed to me to be a nail bomb which began to fizz." B592

iv) Soldier P told Soldier 017 to watch out and fired 2 aimed shots at the man. The man fell, dropping the object which did not explode. B592

v) Soldier P's direction was diverted but when he looked again, the body had been removed and he could not see the object on the ground. B592

18.7.2.37 Soldier P also gave evidence to Lord Widgery about this incident, in the following terms:

i) Soldier P and 017 advanced across the road towards Kells Wall and as the crowd was stoning them Soldier 017 fired 1/2 baton rounds and dispersed the crowd. WT13.46D

ii) Shortly after Soldiers P and 017 reached the wall they came under fire from the direction of the Rubble Barricade. WT13.46E Soldier P could see people behind the Barricade who were either throwing stones or moving towards Free Derry Corner. WT13.47A

iii) Then a group of people came out from the Columbcille Court alleyway and began throwing stones and bottles at the soldiers. Soldier 017 again fired baton rounds and dispersed the crowd. When they split up Soldier P noticed a man standing behind the crowd and attempting to light an explosive missile, which Soldier P identified as a nail bomb. WT13.47C

iv) Soldier P shouted a warning to his companion and fired 2 aimed shots. WT13.47E Soldier P then identified himself in EP23.7 as the soldier looking up the alleyway and explained he was looking up the alleyway because a person had come out from the alleyway at Kells Walk. WT13.48D It appears from Soldier P's evidence that EP23.7 was taken almost immediately after he had fired the 2 live rounds.[7] WT13.48B

18.7.2.38 There are significant discrepancies as between these accounts.

i) In his RMP statement Soldier P describes a crowd of rioters coming from the Kells Walk direction advancing towards himself and Soldier 017. B577 By way of contrast in both his Treasury Solicitor statement and his evidence to Lord Widgery, it was P's decision that Soldier 017 and P should move towards the rioters in order to make arrests. B592, WT13.46C-D This is significant because in the face of advancing rioters in the [7] This is consistent with the evidence of the photographer Liam Mailey as will be seen below.

RMP statement, Soldier 017 fires a baton round which disperses the crowd, exposing the nail bomber to Soldier P. B577 In his Treasury Solicitor statement it is the decision of Soldier P and Soldier 017 to move towards the crowd in order to make arrests which results in the crowd dispersing and there is no reference to Soldier 017 firing baton rounds. B592 While, in the version given to Lord Widgery Soldier 017 does fire baton rounds which disperse the crowd, albeit the nail bomber does not appear at this juncture. WT13.46D-E

ii) This discrepancy is the result of a significant change as between Soldier P's RMP account and the statement and evidence given to Lord Widgery. In the account given by Soldier P to both the Treasury Solicitors and Lord Widgery, after crossing Rossville Street, Soldiers P and 017 came under fire from the direction of the Rubble Barricade, prior to any incident involving a nail bomber. B592, WT13.46E-F Soldier P's RMP statement contains no reference to coming under fire from the direction of the Rubble Barricade as Soldiers P and 017 reached Kells Walk. It was because of the inclusion of this incident, apparently forgotten when Soldier P made his RMP statement later that night, and when he made his second RMP statement on the 1st February, that other aspects of Soldier P's accounts had to be adapted to accommodate this change.

iii) In both his Treasury Solicitor statement, and his evidence to Lord Widgery, it was as Soldier P and 017 took cover from this live fire, that a second group of rioters advanced on them. Soldier 017 fired his baton round in response, splitting up the crowd, and exposing the nail bomber to Soldier P. B592, WT13.47C-D

iv) In an attempt to blend the two accounts, Soldier P's evidence to Lord Widgery contains references to Soldier 017 firing baton rounds on two occasions, prior to the arrival of the nail bomber, while the RMP statement and the Treasury Solicitor statement, each contain only one such reference, albeit at different times and locations. In Soldier P's evidence to Lord Widgery the first account of Soldier 017's shooting of baton rounds, occurs, as it does in his RMP statement, B577 as Soldier P and 017 cross Rossville Street, albeit the nail-bomber does not appear. WT13.46D-E The second shooting by Soldier 017 occurs, as it does in Soldier P's Treasury Solicitor statement, B592 when a second group of rioters attack the soldiers and Soldier 017 shoots down Rossville Street. WT13.47C-D

v) That the two accounts are significantly different in terms of location is demonstrated by the Plan appended to Soldier P's RMP statement and the Trajectory Photograph prepared for the Widgery Tribunal. The Plan appended to Soldier P's RMP statement places Soldier P at a location on the footpath beside Glenfada Park North with the nail-bomber positioned further down Rossville Street on the Rossville Flats side of the road. B623.008 By way of contrast the aerial photograph marked by Soldier P, P22 places Soldier P at the east facing wall of the Kells Walk pram ramp and places the nail bomber on the same side of the road, on the footpath adjacent to the alleyway leading to Glenfada Park North. The trajectory of these shots is quite different. On Soldier P's RMP account he would have fired down and across Rossville Street in the direction of the Rossville Flats, while on his Treasury Solicitor's account he fired straight down Rossville Street in the direction of the Rubble Barricade.

18.7.2.39 There are in consequence very significant differences in the accounts given by Soldier P of shooting a nail bomber. Soldier P's location changes, that of the nail bomber changes, the trajectory of the shot changes, and in his later accounts he suddenly recollects an incident of coming under fire, which he apparently forgot, not once but twice, when being interviewed by the RMP.

18.7.2.40 It is submitted that the discrepancies, render his account both unreliable and incredible.

18.7.2.41 Soldier P was questioned in some detail about his shooting of the nail bomber by Mr. Hill acting on behalf of the Families of the Deceased and the Wounded in the course of the Widgery Inquiry:

> "Q. This nail bomb, was it fizzing at the time when the man had it in his hand? A. Yes sir.
>
> Q. How did he light it? A. Well, he just held it down, struck a match.
>
>
> Q. Did he have the match in his right hand? A. I believe so.
>
> Q. Did he strike it on a box. A. I couldn't be certain.
>
> Q. If he did not strike it on a box, what did he strike it on? A. I could not be certain, sir.
>
> Q. Could you show me know how you think the man with the nail bomb in his left hand lit it with his right? A. Well, he had the nail bomb and, as I say, I don't know how he struck the match. He just lit the fuse.
>
> Q. Would you just go back? Two seconds before you see a lighted match in this right hand. Can you tell me how that match materialised in his right hand? A. No, I couldn't say, sir.
> Q. Did it appear as if by magic? A. I shouldn't think so, sir." WT13.58C-F

18.7.2.42 Although Soldier P then appeared to suggest that the nail bomber may have struck the match off a wall, he accepted under further questioning that, given the location at which he had placed the nail bomber, apparently some remove from any wall, the nail bomber could not have struck the match off a wall. WT13.58F-G

18.7.2.43 Significantly, Soldier P was re-examined by Mr. Gibbens, acting on the Army's behalf on this very issue, he told Mr. Gibbens that:

> "I did not see the match being lit. I just seen the object spluttering and a certain amount of smoke coming from it." WT13.71A-B

18.7.2.44 As is clear from the exchange between Soldier P and Mr. Hill, Soldier P gave evidence that he had witnessed the nail bomber actually light the fuse of the nail bomb before he fired his two rounds. However, when pushed about the matter Soldier P was unable to explain how he could have seen this. When re-examined by Counsel for the Army, Soldier P changed his evidence. In the course of his evidence to this Tribunal it was pointed out to Soldier P that: "You appear both to have said that you did see the match being lit and that you did not see the match being lit . . ." Day 353/42/22 to Day 353/42/24 Soldier P was unable to assist the Tribunal as to this discrepancy.

18.7.2.45 In our submission, Soldier P's account of shooting a nail bomber is a complete fabrication. When Soldier P's account was subject to scrutiny by Mr. Hill the account fell apart, because the incident had never happened. Then realising the mess he had gotten himself into, when given the opportunity by Mr. Gibbens, Soldier P simply changed his evidence.

18.7.2.46 Another aspect of Soldier P's testimony in relation to the shooting of the nail bomber which fails to stand up to scrutiny is his account of what happened the body of the nail bomber and the nail bomb itself, after he had shot and killed the man. In his statement to the RMP, Soldier P describes a scene in which he witnessed the crowd of rioters removing the man's body. B577 By way of contrast, neither his statement to the Treasury Solicitors, nor his evidence to Lord Widgery, provide an account of the crowd removing the man's body. Rather Soldier P claimed that his attention was diverted by the actions of persons at Kells Walk, and that when he looked back both the body and the object had been removed. B592

18.7.2.47 However, the discrepancies between these accounts are not the only matters which undermine Soldier P's account. As Mr. Hill, pointed out to Soldier P in 1972, despite the fact that the nail bomb, which he had seen fizzing had fallen to the ground, Soldiers P and 017 did not withdraw. WT13.59G to WT13.60A

18.7.2.48 Moreover, if Soldier P's account were to be believed it would mean that:

> "people who had witnessed you kill a man at a distance of approximately 12 to 15 yards . . just came back out and took the body and nail bomb away without [Soldier P] doing anything about it . . . Without [Soldier P] advancing, firing another shot over their head, and retrieving the nail bomb."
> Day 353/102/2 to Day 353/102/13

18.7.2.49 The evidence given by Liam Mailey who took photographs EP23.6, EP23.7, EP23.8, EP23.9, to the Widgery Tribunal is relevant in this respect. Liam Mailey was asked about EP23.7 and the conduct of Soldier P. He described him as having fired two shots from the hip towards the Rubble Barricade, from the location at which he is seen in EP23.7, Soldier P then turned around immediately after those shots had been fired. WT7.36A-F There is other civilian evidence that lends support to this testimony and it is our submission that the first two shots fired by Soldier P were fired from his hip at the Rubble Barricade and did not in fact claim any casualties.

18.7.2.50 Soldier P's account of his shooting of a nail bomber does not bear scrutiny of any kind because it is a complete fabrication. It is moreover submitted that the evidence of Soldier 017 about Soldier P's shooting of a nail bomber tends to further undermine, rather than corroborate in anyway, Soldier P's testimony on this issue.

18.7.2.51 Soldier 017 made a statement to the RMP in the early hours of the 31st January at 1.30am. B1472, B1473 During the course of that statement, he makes no reference to Soldier P having shot a nail bomber, in circumstances where when this incident occurred, according to Soldier P, Soldier 017 was 5 metres ahead of him. WT13.58B-E In fact Soldier 017's first statement makes no reference to Soldier P having fired any live rounds. This in circumstances where we know that EP23.7, which shows both soldiers, was taken almost immediately after Soldier P had fired live rounds. WT13.49B Moreover, a whole series of photographs, show Soldiers P and 017 as they accompanied each other on the Kells Walk side of Rossville Street, demonstrating that they were in each other's company for a substantial period. P1118, P1119, P1120, P1121 and EP24.6

18.7.2.52 Soldier 017 made his second RMP statement on the 4 February 1972. We would refer the Tribunal to Sections 5 of these submissions wherein we make the case that a significant number of soldiers made statements on that date which were expressly designed to corroborate and justify the use of lethal force by other soldiers.

18.7.2.53 In our submission that was precisely the purpose of Soldier 017's second statement. In his second RMP statement Soldier 017 inserted a completely new incident, not referred to at all in his previous statement, that of Soldier P shooting a nail bomber. B1479, B1480

18.7.2.54 The discrepancies, as between the various accounts of this incident given by Soldier 017 will be dealt with in more detail when dealing with the evidence of Soldier 017.

18.7.2.55 It is our submission at this stage that the reason Soldier 017 did not give an account of Soldier P firing at a nail bomber on the 31st January 1972 was because he never witnessed any such incident. According to Soldier P the nail bomber appeared as a direct result of Soldier 017 having fired baton rounds at a rioting crowd. This man, who had been exposed by the crowd, was positioned only a short distance from Soldier 017, closer to him than he was to Soldier P and was about to throw a nail bomb. The only thing which prevented the man from throwing the nail bomb, with potentially fatal consequences for Soldier 017, was Soldier P's swift action in shooting and killing the man. The suggestion by Soldier 017 that he neglected to account for Soldier P shooting at a nail bomber because he "thought seeing the gunman was more important so that is what I mentioned", B1484.008 paragraph 47.5 is in our submission, both ludicrous and untrue.

18.7.2.56 It should also be noted at this juncture that Soldier 017's accounts in relation to Bloody Sunday are also significant in terms of what has been left out with regard to Soldier P. According to the accounts Soldier P has given, he was accompanied by Soldier 017 at all significant events, and specifically, when he came under fire from the Rubble Barricade, resulting in his firing live rounds, B592, B593, and when he came under attack from people coming from the Rubble Barricade, resulting in his firing live rounds over the heads of the crowd. B593 Yet neither of these incidents was apparently witnessed by Soldier 017, the soldier to whom he was giving cover and the soldier with whom he was paired throughout this part of the incident. Specifically:

i) Soldier 017 has no recollection of hearing any shots fired from the Rubble Barricade, and never gave any account of shots fired from the Rubble Barricade in any statement made by him. Day 358/165/18 to Day 358/165/21

ii) Soldier 017 has no recollection of any bullets striking a wall just above his head and P's head, nor did he ever make any reference to any such incident in any of the statements he gave about Bloody Sunday. Day 358/166/3 to Day 358/166/5

iii) Soldier 017 never saw a man fire shots from the Rubble Barricade, nor did he see Soldier P fire shots in the direction of the Rubble Barricade. Day 358/166/9 to Day 358/166/13

iv) Soldier 017 has no recollection of being attacked by a crowd who advanced upon himself and Soldier P as they made their way across Rossville Street towards their Pig, nor did he ever give an account of any such incident in any of the statements he has made about Bloody Sunday. Day 358/167/12 to Day 358/167/17

18.7.2.57 It is our allegation that, whether with the active assistance of the RMP or not, Soldier 017 colluded with Soldier P in trying to justify at least some of the rounds fired by Soldier P and by failing to account for Soldier P's other live rounds, knowing as he did that they had resulted in the deaths of innocent civilians.

Soldier P's Shooting at the Rubble Barricade

18.7.2.58 Soldier P claims that he fired 4 further shots at a gunman behind the Rubble Barricade. He claims that one shot hit the Barricade and that the other three shots hit the gunman.

18.7.2.59 These shots are arguably the most significant shots fired by soldier P given his admission that he shot and killed a man behind the Rubble Barricade. Moreover, in the course of his evidence to this Inquiry about this incident, Soldier P came close to accepting responsibility for the killing of John Young, Michael McDaid and William Nash.

18.7.2.60 In his statement to the RMP Soldier P gave this account:

i) Soldier P and the 2 soldiers accompanying him advanced towards the Rubble Barricade.[8] As they advanced they came under fire, Soldier P believes the fire came from a pistol but could not be certain. 2 bullets struck the wall just above the soldiers' heads. B577, B578

[8] In his RMP statement Soldier P constantly refers to having been accompanied by two soldiers. This is changed in his Treasury Solicitor statement and his evidence to Lord Widgery to one soldier, who has been identified as Soldier 017.

ii) The soldiers then went to ground and while lying down Soldier P saw a man get up from behind the Rubble Barricade with "what appeared to be a pistol in his hand. He held it like a pistol and he pointed it in our general direction." B578

iii) Soldier P fired 4 aimed shots at this man, he saw 1 shot strike the barricade and the following 3 shots hit the man with the pistol, who fall backwards behind the Rubble Barricade. B578

iv) Soldier P then saw a group of people run to where the man had fallen and some of them bent down and picked something up. Soldier P assumed that they picked up the weapon. B578

v) Soldier P and the soldiers accompanying him stayed at that location until the rioters dispersed.

18.7.2.61 In his statement to the Treasury Solicitor Soldier P stated as follows:

i) Several shots came close to Soldiers P and 017 from the direction of the Rubble Barricade. Soldier P observed a man crouching behind the barricade. "He was holding something which I took to be a pistol. He then stood up and pointed the region (sic) down Rossville Street and fired a number of shots, although I cannot say how many." B592, B593

ii) Soldier P knelt down and fired 4 shots at the gunman, one of which hit the Rubble Barricade. The man fell to the ground. B593

iii) Soldier P claims that at the time he fired the shot there were no other people in his line of fire. B593

iv) A group of people then came from Glenfada Park and ran across Rossville Street. One of them bent down and Soldier P saw him pick something up, although he could not be sure what he picked up, and saw him run across the road. B593

18.7.2.62 Soldier P gave evidence to Lord Widgery about this incident in the following terms:

i) Soldier P and 017 came under fire from the Rubble Barricade and several shots passed them. WT13.50A

ii) Soldier P saw the gunman who was crouched down and aiming a pistol at the soldiers. WT13.50A-C "He stood up before [I fired my 4 rounds] and pointed the pistol again and fired another couple of shots, not particularly in my direction, but I believe in the direction of Guinness Force." WT13.50D-E

iii) There were 5/6 people at the barricade at the time, positioned on either side of him, who were throwing stones. WT13.50A-C

iv) Soldier P fired 4 live rounds, 1 hit the Rubble Barricade and the others hit the man who fell back. WT13.50E

v) Then a crowd of people came out from Glenfada Park and ran across the road towards the Rossville Flats, as they crossed they picked something up, which P believes to have been the pistol and carried it towards the Rossville Flats. WT13.51A

18.7.2.63 There are significant discrepancies as between the various accounts given by Soldier P about the circumstances in which he fired 4 live rounds at the Rubble Barricade.

i) In his RMP statement two shots hit the wall above the soldiers' head. B577, B578 In the accounts given to the Treasury Solicitor and the Widgery Inquiry, while the soldiers came under fire, the suggestion that the shots hit a wall above the soldiers' heads did not appear. B592, WT13.50A-C When questioned about that discrepancy by Counsel to this Inquiry, Soldier P was unable to provide any explanation. Day 353/47/13 to Day 353/47/19

ii) In Soldier P's RMP statement Soldier P saw a man with what appeared to be a pistol which he pointed in the direction of the 2 soldiers. It was based upon this sighting that Soldier P fired 4 live rounds, killing the man. B578 When he came to give an account to the Treasury Solicitor and to Lord Widgery the gunman stood up and fired a number of rounds down Rossville Street, and it was in response to coming under fire from the gunman that Soldier P fired live rounds. B592, B593, WT13.50D-E Again when questioned about this discrepancy, in the course of his evidence to this Tribunal, Soldier P was unable to provide any explanation. Day 353/47/20 to Day 353/47/23

iii) In Soldier P's RMP statement, as a result of coming under fire, Soldiers P and 017 "went to ground" and Soldier P was lying down when he saw the gunman and fired his 4 rounds. B578 In his statement to the Treasury Solicitors and Lord Widgery, it is apparent that Soldier P was initially standing and it was only after Soldier P saw the man fire live rounds that Soldier P knelt down and fired 4 shots at the gunman. B592, B593, WT13.50F

iv) In both his statement to the Treasury Solicitor and in his evidence to Lord Widgery, Soldier P was anxious to assert that there were no other people in his line of fire. B593, WT13.50F-G There is no such assertion in his RMP statement. It is submitted that this is because by the time he came to make his statement to the Treasury Solicitor and to Lord Widgery Soldier P was aware that he was the prime candidate for having shot and killed the people behind the Rubble Barricade and was anxious to distance himself from the unjustified shooting of unarmed men.

18.7.2.64 Thus there are discrepancies as to the shots fired before Soldier P saw the gunman, the gunman's actions, and Soldier P's position when firing at the gunman. Of most significance is the discrepancy as between Soldier P's RMP statement where he sees what "appears" to be a pistol and his subsequent accounts where he saw the gunman fire live rounds. In our submission this progression in his evidence was a firming up of his evidence, in order to justify his firing of live rounds.

18.7.2.65 While Soldier P asserted throughout his evidence that he had no recollection of any of the shooting incidents he was involved in on Bloody Sunday, it is alleged that he lied about this in order to avoid any effective scrutiny by this Tribunal of the truthfulness of his version of events. It is further submitted that Soldier P does have a clear and vivid recollection of the events of Bloody Sunday and that he specifically remembers the shots he fired over the Rubble Barricade, shots which killed one or more of Michael McDaid, John Young and William Nash.

18.7.2.66 Soldier P was questioned by Counsel for Michael McDaid and John Young about the fact that given that he had fired at least 9 shots across the Rubble Barricade he could not have failed to hit a target:

"Q. You are a good enough shot, if someone was crouching behind the barricade, you are a good enough shot to pick them out and hit the target; are you not?

A. Yes.

Q. Even if the target was just the head?

A. Not necessarily, no.

Q. But not necessarily, but you believe you could; do you not?

A. Yes.

Q. What happened in fact was that three young boys were crouching behind this barricade and they were, two of them, hit in the face. You are a good enough shot to have done that; are you not?

A. Um, no, I – well, yes.

Q. That is what you did do; is it not?

A. No, it was not." Day 353/117/14 to Day 353/117/20

18.7.2.67 What the transcript fails to capture, but what in our submission, anyone present at the testimony of Soldier P could not have failed to capture, was that in answering "Um, no, I – well, yes." Soldier P came as close to facing up to his responsibility for the murder of John Young and Michael McDaid as he was capable of doing.

18.7.2.68 In his statement to the RMP Soldier P stated that after he had shot and killed a man at the Rubble Barricade, he fired a further 5 rounds over the heads of rioters in an attempt to disperse them. B578

18.7.2.69 Soldier P then went on to make a second RMP statement on the 1st February 1972. He now claimed that instead of having fired 5 rounds over the heads of rioters he had in fact only fired 3, because he had only fired 9 rounds in total. B588

18.7.2.70 When he made a statement to the Treasury Solicitor about this issue he gave a fuller account of this incident. Soldier P maintained that he had noticed that his vehicle was on the waste ground in front of the North end of the Rossville Flats and told Soldier 017 to move back across the road to cover the vehicle. Soldier P followed Soldier 017. When he was halfway across a group of people came out from Glenfada Park and started coming down the road towards the Rubble Barricade. They were throwing missiles at Soldiers P, 017 and the vehicle. Soldier P took the view that the crowd was too close and fired 3 shots over the heads of the crowd in an attempt to disperse them. Again he asserts that there was no one in his line of fire. B593

18.7.2.71 Soldier P's account to Lord Widgery was in broadly similar terms. He stated that the group which came from Glenfada Park were attempting to cross the Rubble Barricade WT13.51G and that they numbered 50-60. WT13.52D He stated that he was justified in firing at them because he believed their actions were "endangering a lot of life", specifically his life and the lives of the soldiers at the vehicle. WT13.50C-D

18.7.2.72 However when questioned by Mr. Hill on behalf of the Deceased and Wounded about this incident, Soldier P's account of events appeared to fall apart. Soldier P accepted that when he fired shots over the head of the crowd that there were soldiers positioned on the west side of

Rossville Street and that this was a "Heaven-sent opportunity for those men to arrest rioters if this was an arrest operation?" WT13.66C-D

18.7.2.73 Mr. Hill went on:

"Q. So between you and the hostile crowd, although slightly to your side, there was a group of soldiers? A. Yes.

Q. So when you fired three rounds at this hostile crowd you were not in fact alone and unprotected, but between you and them there was a group of soldiers? A. I was on my own, so I count that as being alone and unprotected.

Q. With nothing between you and this hostile crowd but a group of armed soldiers? A. That is possible.

Q. Some of whom would have had baton guns? A. That is possible.

Q. All of whom would have had batons? A. No, sir.

Q. All of whom could have used their rifles as batons?

A. Yes.

Q. Those soldiers, according to your evidence, were there for the specific purpose of arresting rioters? A. In the beginning, yes, sir." WT13.67F to WT13.68B

18.7.2.74 Our primary submission is that this incident is a fabrication, designed to account for the firing of live rounds without giving a true account of the circumstances in which they were fired. As it was put to Soldier P in the course of his evidence to this Inquiry:

"can you account for the fact that if anyone was behind that barricade . . . they would have witnessed you killing two people using your SLR rifle and up to this point, according to you, having discharged six shots. Why do you think they would come forward throwing bottles and stones at you. Knowing what you were capable of?

A. I do not know

Q. It would be a form of communal insanity, would it not?

A. Yes." Day 353/112/16 to Day 353/113/1

18.7.2.75 Nonetheless the incident is significant in a number of different respects. Firstly, because if true, it is a further example of a breach of the Yellow Card. Secondly because of the issues it raises about ammunition checks and the availability of extra ammunition. Thirdly because if true, as Mr. Hill's questioning demonstrates, the account raises serious questions about the genuineness of the arrest operation. The alternative, is of course that the incident is, like so much of Soldier P's evidence a complete fabrication, and simply another attempt to explain away the firing of live rounds and to avoid having to make an admission of murder.

18.7.2.76 In relation to the first issue it is our submission that Soldier P's account, true or otherwise, evidences a complete disregard by soldiers within Support Company of 1 Para for the Yellow Card. We state true or otherwise, because, even if Soldier P fabricated this account in order to explain away 3/5 of the rounds fired by him, the fact that Soldier P would advance a breach of the Yellow Card, as an explanation to the RMP demonstrates that this was not a matter in respect of which he expected censure.

18.7.2.77 It is not without significance that Soldier P was a Corporal on Bloody Sunday. Given the reliance which has been placed by more senior officers on the Yellow Card as controlling the circumstances in which lethal force would be used by soldiers on the ground, Corporal P's disregard for the Yellow Card, on two separate occasions raises major issues. On the evidence before this Tribunal Corporal P had already interpreted the Yellow Card as authorising him to cock his rifle in circumstances where he was not so authorised, possibly following the lead given by his Sergeant, Sergeant O. He also claims to have fired shots over the heads of unarmed civilians, in circumstances which were unjustified, yet which are analogous to the circumstances in that his Lieutenant, Lieutenant N fired 2 live rounds. Clearly, the Yellow Card, carried little weight within Mortar Platoon, and as will become clear, carried as little, if not less weight in Anti-Tank Platoon.

18.7.2.78 If ranked soldiers within a Regiment blatantly disregard the Yellow Card it is rendered ineffective as a method of preventing the unlawful use of force. Moreover, as became apparent during the questioning of Soldier P by Mr. Hill in 1972 Soldier P's claim that his life, and the lives of other soldiers, were endangered by the crowd, was entirely without substance.

18.7.2.79 The second reason why this issue is of importance is because of the discrepancy between Soldier P's first RMP statement in which he claims to have fired 5 rounds and his second RMP statement in which he claims to have fired only 3, reducing the total number of rounds fired from 11 to 9.

18.7.2.80 While Soldier P claimed that this was simply a mistake in the total, the mistake is more fundamental than that. Soldier P, not only claimed to have fired a total of 11 rounds, after he had conducted his own ammunition check, he also accounted for firing 5 rounds in circumstances where he now claims to have fired only 3. If proper ammunition checks had in fact been carried out, as has been claimed by Company Sergeant Major Lewis, then it is submitted that this error could not have occurred.

18.7.2.81 The issue raises questions about whether Soldier P had access to excess ammunition and in fact fired 2/more rounds in excess of the 9 eventually claimed. It also raises a real query about the accuracy of the ammunitions checks conducted by Company Sergeant Major Lewis.

18.7.2.82 Thirdly, as demonstrated by Mr. Hill's questioning of Soldier P in 1972, if this was a genuine arrest operation, then the incident raises questions about the failure of the soldiers to carry out arrests of unarmed civilians, as opposed to resorting to the use of lethal force to control the crowd.

18.7.2.83 It should also be noted in relation to Soldier P's account of shooting over the heads of the crowd that as with the rest of his evidence (with the exception of Soldier 017 and the nail bomber) Soldier P's account is uncorroborated by any other soldier.

Actions of Anti-Tank Platoon

18.7.2.84 The final issue in respect of which Soldier P's evidence is relevant is in terms of how his evidence completely undermines the accounts of soldiers from Anti-Tank Platoon and also Soldier U of Mortar Platoon about civilian gunmen or bombers, at either the Rubble Barricade or the Rossville Flats.

18.7.2.85 Soldier P arrived at the Kells Walk side of Rossville Street before Anti-Tank Platoon arrived at the Kells Walk Wall and was positioned in front of that wall. It would appear that he remained at this location for some considerable time, at least until his vehicle moved position.

18.7.2.86 On the account given to the Widgery Tribunal by Liam Mailey, soldier P just after photograph EP23.7 was taken Soldier P signalled to the group of soldiers who were behind him, but were not visible in that photograph. Then:

> "Q. As a result of that did a number of soldiers come round the wall towards him, and have you shown them in photograph No. 8 (EP23.8) A. Yes.
>
> . . .
> Q. In photograph No. 9 (EP23.9) is it clear that the soldiers who have come forward in apparent order and have failed to gain entry to the back of Kells Walk have gone back again and between the two walls in order to go up the ramp towards the back of Kells Walk? A. Yes.

Q. Did some of the second group of soldiers appear already to have taken up a firing position at the back of the wall? A. That is right." WT7.36C-G

18.7.2.87 Soldier P fails in any account given by him to explain his contact with Anti-Tank Platoon or to deal with their actions in any way.

18.7.2.88 On his own account he was observing the Rubble Barricade located directly in front of him. Soldier P accepted that if a shot was fired at a target behind the Rubble Barricade that target would have been in his view and that he would have been completely exposed to anyone with a weapon behind the barricade. WT13.63A-B As it was pointed out to Soldier P, the people who were in the greatest danger from any threat posed by persons behind the Rubble Barricade were Soldiers 017 and P. WT13.63B Yet Soldier P never saw any of the targets identified by soldiers from Anti-Tank Platoon at the Rubble Barricade, nor did he experience any threat from those targets. He never saw the nail bombers identified by Soldiers F or J, nor did he witness any of the exploding nail bombs described by Soldiers J and E.

18.7.2.89 Despite the fact that Soldier P appears to have been observing the Rubble Barricade, as opposed to the Rossville Flats, Soldier P's evidence also completely undermines the suggestions that there was civilian fire directed at soldiers from the Rossville Flats at the time he was located at the Kells Walk side of Rossville Street.

18.7.2.90 Soldier P accepted in his evidence to the Widgery Inquiry that in EP23.9 he is not looking at either the Rubble Barricade or the Rossville Flats. Although he asserted that the Rossville Flats were "always a source of danger" he accepted that that they were not sufficiently dangerous to warrant either himself or his colleagues either looking up at the Flats or taking cover. WT13.61D-F

18.7.2.91 Soldier P was then questioned further about the Rossville Flats as a source of danger:

> "Q. From this part of Rossville Flats that is the part which looks west – you were in an extremely exposed area as you stood there at that time? A. Yes.
>
> Q. And you had no reason to take cover? A. No, sir.
>
> Q. So nothing was happening in that block of flats at that time which presented any danger to you? A. I am not saying nothing was happening, but I could not be certain.
>
> LORD WIDGERY: Was there cover available? A. Not from that side of the wall, no, sir.
>
> Mr. HILL: Would there not have been cover if you were to go about two or three yards back to [the Kells Walk Wall] . . . A. Yes.
> Q. Would that not have presented cover to you, that small wall? A. Yes." WT13.61F to WT13.62C

18.7.2.92 For the entire period when he was positioned at the Kells Walk side of Rossville Street Soldier P was completely exposed to any hostile fire from the Rossville Flats. In our submission this demonstrates, without more, that the accounts given by soldiers of civilian fire directed from the Rossville Flats towards soldiers on Rossville Street are completely untrue. Not only did Soldier P and Soldier 017, not take cover, nor feel the need to take cover, they neither of them, give any account of any fire or threat coming from that location.

18.7.2.93 Soldier P also fails to give any account of having heard firing from soldiers located right behind him, at the Kells Walk Wall, despite the fact that we know soldiers from Anti-Tank Platoon fired from that location.

18.7.2.94 While Soldier P sought refuge in the device of memory loss in 2003 when he gave evidence to this Tribunal, even in 1972, Soldier P never gave:

"evidence as to any other deaths at that barricade or any other soldier firing at that barricade. . " Day 353/68/12 to Day 353/68/16

18.7.2.95 In 1972, Soldier P had no choice but to account for his firing of live rounds, the option of memory loss was not available to him in such close proximity to the incident. However, even in 1972, Soldier P recognised, that in respect of the actions of soldiers other than himself, whose actions he could not have failed to witness, silence was preferable to telling the truth about what happened on Bloody Sunday.

18.7.2.96 In 1972, Soldier P lied about his actions on Bloody Sunday in order to justify his use of lethal force in circumstances which were unjustified and unlawful. He was also part of a conspiracy of silence designed to prevent the Widgery Inquiry from establishing the truth about the deaths of 6 young men murdered by soldiers from his Platoon, Anti-Tank Platoon and Composite Platoon behind the Rubble Barricade.

18.7.2.97 In 2003 Soldier P, went one step further, in refusing to give this Tribunal any assistance in establishing the truth about the events of Bloody Sunday. Nonetheless it is submitted the evidence available to this Tribunal is more than sufficient to justify a finding of murder in respect of one or more of John Young, Michael McDaid and William Nash.

Soldier 017

18.7.2.98 Soldier 017 is one of the members of Mortar Platoon armed with a rubber bullet gun on Bloody Sunday. Although Soldier 017 did fire his rubber bullet gun on Bloody Sunday, his primary importance is as a witness to the actions of Soldier P who appears to have accompanied him throughout his deployment on Rossville Street.

18.7.2.99 In relation to Soldier 017 it is our submission that when reading the written statements made by Soldier 017 one witnesses a process of evolution. As he progresses through the statements, new incidents are added and earlier ones embellished. The ultimate outcome of this evolution is a statement and testimony which bear only a passing resemblance to the truth. Soldier 017's testimony is dishonest both by reference to what is included and what is omitted.

18.7.2.100 Soldier 017's willingness to lie is in our submission motivated by a desire to lend credibility to the soldiers' case that their use of lethal force was justified, coupled with an unwillingness to testify to the killings he must have witnessed from his vantage point on Rossville Street. This willingness is particularly evident in relation to his attempts to bolster the evidence of Soldier P as to his use of lethal force against an alleged nail bomber. An issue which is dealt with in more detail below.

18.7.2.101 It is alleged that Soldier 017 was involved in collusion with Soldier P and/or members of the RMP and/or members of the Treasury Solicitors to provide an account of events consistent with that of Soldier P, particularly with regard to his evidence about Soldier P's having shot a nail bomber. It is noteworthy that while the first accounts given by these two witnesses bear little, if any resemblance to one another, as further statements and accounts are taken from them, the parallels in their evidence increase, demonstrating a continuing attempt on the part of Soldier 017 to lend support to the actions of his colleague. It is submitted that the ever-increasing correlation between their two accounts could not have been achieved without the active assistance of members of the RMP and personnel within the Treasury Solicitors.

18.7.2.102 Leaving that issue aside it is our contention that it can be demonstrated that Soldier 017's evidence progressed from his first statement to the RMP through to his statement to the Treasury Solicitor and then to the account given to Eversheds. Each statement witnessed a further embellishment of his evidence and further lies, all aimed at supporting the military case. When Soldier 017 came to give oral evidence to this Tribunal, there was some retraction of what were demonstrable inaccuracies, albeit, not very many.

18.7.2.103 Soldier 017 made three statements in 1972, two statements to the RMP and a statement to the Treasury Solicitor. He was not called to give evidence at the Widgery Inquiry.

18.7.2.104 Soldier 017 made his first RMP statement in the early hours of the 31 January 1972 in which he stated as follows:

i) Soldier 017 armed only with a rubber bullet gun, debussed from his vehicle near the Rossville Flats and took up a position to the North-West of a block of flats near a low wall. B1472

ii) He could see the Rubble Barricade some 60 yards in front of him and there were rioters behind the Rubble Barricade who were stoning troops "deployed around the flats." B1472

iii) Soldier 017 fired a number of rubber bullet rounds at the crowd behind the Rubble Barricade who stoned him in response. B1472

iv) A group of 4/5 rioters came close to Soldier 017 from around the corner of a wall to his right and stoned him. Soldier 017 decided he could make an arrest from this group and prepared to advance. As he did so he saw a man walking around the corner, who had "a black object I recognised as a hand weapon; either a pistol or a revolver." B1472

v) Soldier 017 fired a baton round at the man but did not hit him and he then turned and ran away. He heard 2 small calibre weapon shots behind him as if the man had fired his weapon twice. B1472, B1473

18.7.2.105 Soldier 017 made a further statement on the 4 February 1972. This statement refers to an entirely new incident not dealt with in his first RMP statement. Specifically Soldier 017 states:

i) He was positioned behind a brick wall about 10 metres from 2 Columbcille Court. There was a crowd of about 50 people milling around in front of the Rubble Barricade and they rushed towards Soldier 017 so he fired 1 round which split them up. B1479

ii) A man appeared from behind the crowd and was "carrying in his hand what I took to be a nail bomb. It was lit as I could see the smoke coming from the fuse. As he raised his arm to throw the bomb towards us 'P' who was located" behind Soldier 017 fired 1 round. The man fell and was surrounded by the crowd, the nail bomb did not go off and "the crowd carried away the injured man." B1479

18.7.2.106 Soldier 017 then made a statement to the Treasury Solicitor in which he deals with both incidents, Soldier 017 stated:

i) His Platoon debussed at the north end of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats. B1482 paragraph 2

ii) While they were in the vehicles "we could hear stones continuously hitting our armoured vehicle and on leaving the vehicle we were surrounded by a large crowd who were milling about the area of the front of the flats and in Rossville Street." B1482 paragraph 2

iii) On debussing Soldier 017, along with Soldier P, crossed Rossville Street and took up position by the side of a wall in front of Columbcille Court. Shortly after taking up position he heard 2 high velocity shots which he believed came from around the area of Rossville Flats, he could not tell the direction of fire. B1482 paragraph 3

iv) There was a crowd of about 50 people in front of the Rubble Barricade, they rushed towards Soldier 017 so he fired 1 round which split them up. B1482 paragraph 3

v) Soldier P then warned Soldier 017 to look out as he had seen a man come from behind the crowd, Soldier 017 saw a man "carrying in his hand an object which I could see had a smoking fuse which I took to be a nail bomb." He was raising his arm to throw the object, Soldier P fired at the man and he fell. The crowd then surrounded the man and Soldier 017 was unsure as to whether or not the man had been hit. The object did not explode and he did not see the man again. B1482 paragraph 3

vi) The crowd then went behind the Rubble Barricade and continued to throw bottles and stones in the direction of the soldiers. B1482 paragraph 4

vii) People were also running in and out of an alleyway which led to Columbcille Court, throwing bricks, bottles and stones at the soldiers. Soldier 017 decided that he could arrest one of these rioters and went to move towards the alleyway. A man walked around the corner towards Soldier 017 and was holding either a pistol or a revolver. Soldier 017 fired one round and then ran back to where he had come from. He heard 2 small calibre shots behind him as if the man had fired. B1482 paragraph 4

18.7.2.107 Soldier 017 gave a statement to this Inquiry in which he states as follows:

i) He heard the drain-pipe shot while at the Presbyterian Church. B1484.002 paragraph 9

ii) He heard the sound of bricks and bottles hitting the sides of his Pig as they entered the Bogside. B1484.002 paragraph 12

iii) He was in Lieutenant N's Pig, although he identifies Soldier 013 and Soldier P as being in that Pig. B1484.002 paragraph 14

iv) He was positioned by the back door of the Pig facing Soldier P. B1484.003 paragraph 15

v) There were thousands of people in the waste ground and when they debussed they saw rioters all over the place. B1484.003 paragraph 18

vi) Soldier 017 fired a rubber bullet and chased the crowd. B1484.003 paragraph 20

vii) He made his way across Rossville Street towards the Rubble Barricade, initially he found himself isolated and then he moved to a position near Columbcille Court. B1484.003, B1484.004 paragraph 21

viii) There were thousands behind the Rubble Barricade and he was showered with bricks and stones from there. B1484.004 paragraph 22

ix) A group broke away from the crowd behind the Rubble Barricade and made approaches towards Soldier 017, he stated that the "would have ripped me to pieces if they had got me. Crowds had killed soldiers before. I felt very vulnerable there on my own." B1484.004 paragraph 23

x) Soldier 017 fired 2/3 rubber bullets at the crowd and was then joined by Soldier P. B1484.004 paragraph 24

xi) 40 – 50 people came out from an alleyway leading to Columbcille Court, they ran south to join the main group of rioters and Soldier 017 fired rubber bullets at them.

xii) Soldier P then shouted a warning about a nail bomber, who was in the midst of a crowd just north of the Rubble Barricade. He was crouched down "with a dark object in his hand, which I took to be a nail bomb, He had his arm back as if he was ready to throw." Soldier 017 heard a shot and saw the man fall, "he was engulfed by the crowd and that was the last I saw of him. When the crowd went back he had gone. The device did not go off." B1484.004 paragraph 27 xiii) Shortly after that Soldier 017 looked down an alleyway immediately to his right, he could see rubble, 4/5 youths were throwing bottles or bricks towards Soldier 017 and he went forward to arrest someone, when he saw a man with a pistol. Soldier 017 fired a rubber bullet at the man and he "shied away. Soldier 017 was not sure whether the man actually fired at him. He states that he told Soldier P about the incident. B1484.005 paragraph 29 and B1484.005 paragraph 31

xiv) Soldier 017 did not see Soldier P fire any shots other than the shot at the nail bomber. B1484.004 paragraph 32

xv) Soldier 017 returned to his Pig to get his rifle and then stayed in that area. B1484.005 paragraph 33-34

18.7.2.108 Soldier 017 also gave an interview to Max Arthur in the mid/late 1980's the results of which can be found in the second paragraph of an extract from a book published by Max Arthur at B1484.027. While Soldier 017, accepts that he was interviewed, he does not accept that the account is entirely accurate and stated in oral testimony that Max Arthur had made various aspects of the account up. Day 358/108/8

18.7.2.109 Soldier 017 gave a Supplementary Statement dealing with this interview, which can be found at B1484.023 and gave a further Supplementary Statement dealing with photographs which he took on Bloody Sunday at B1484.029

18.7.2.110 At this juncture it is only proposed to refer to one aspect of his interview with Max Arthur in which he describes "odd little riots in the side streets". B1484.027 In his Supplementary Statement he stated that "whilst I do not recall the words I used, I do not believe this can be accurate. I had been facing a very violent riot on the rubble barricade . . . it was life threatening, if the rioters had caught me they would have killed me. As I watched the surge of the crowd back and forward towards me from the rubble barricade and they surged six or so times, I was genuinely in fear for my life." B1484.0124 paragraph 4.2

Soldier 017's Embellishment of his Evidence

18.7.2.111 Soldier 017's statement to the Treasury Solicitor can to some extent be regarded as an amalgam of his 2 earlier statements to the RMP, combining as it does his account of witnessing a civilian gunman with his account of witnessing a nail bomber. Soldier 017's account to this Inquiry is more detailed again.

18.7.2.112 Nonetheless Soldier 017's Treasury Solicitor statement departs significantly from the earlier statements made by Soldier 017 to the RMP. The same can be said of his Eversheds statement.

18.7.2.113 It is proposed to deal below with some of the discrepancies as between his various accounts, which it is submitted, demonstrate Soldier 017's tendency to exaggerate aspects of his evidence in a manner which grossly exaggerates the level of threat posed by civilians and encountered by soldiers.

18.7.2.114 The first time Soldier 017 ever gave an account of the drain-pipe shot was in the statement he prepared for this Inquiry. B1484.002 paragraph 9 While the fact of the drain-pipe shot is not in dispute, the manner in which it makes its appearance in the statement of so many soldiers from 1 Para is. Very few of the original RMP statements contain references to the drain-pipe shot, as further RMP statements were taken and statements were prepared for the Treasury Solicitors the incident appeared in the statements of more and more soldiers. It is our contention that this occurred, not because soldiers had witnessed this incident, but rather because either: having learnt of the shot subsequently, soldiers decided dishonestly to insert it into their evidence; or, it was suggested to soldiers by the RMP that they should insert this into their statements. Evidence about the shot had the advantage of being incontrovertible, because unlike virtually all of the other allegations of coming under live fire made by soldiers, it was in fact true. It is also not without significance that few of the soldiers who refer to it refer to the 5 shots fired by members of Machine-Gun Platoon in Sector 1.

18.7.2.115 Soldier 017 gives an account, for the first time, in his statement to the Treasury Solicitor, of stones continuously hitting the vehicle as it entered the Bogside. B1482 paragraph 2 This account is not contained in either of his 2 RMP statements. Moreover, no other soldier in Sergeant O's Pig gives any account consistent with Soldier 017's evidence on that issue, with the exception of Soldier P. In our submission this account is a gross exaggeration, as was suggested to Soldier 017 in the course of his oral evidence, Day 358/137/1 to Day 358/138/25 and is demonstrative of a willingness to embellish his evidence in order to create the impression of soldiers being under fierce attack from the moment they entered the Bogside.

18.7.2.116 The insertion of this detail into his Treasury Solicitor account is not without significance in terms of the allegation which is being made that Soldier 017 colluded with Soldier P to justify at least some of his live rounds. We say this because Soldier P, also for the first time in his statement to the Treasury Solicitor states that as the vehicles deployed into the Bogside "we could hear stones bouncing off our vehicles." B591

18.7.2.117 In our submission this is just one of a number of parallels which can be found between the development of Soldier 017's testimony and that of Soldier P, from Soldier 017's second RMP statement through to his statement to the Treasury Solicitor.

18.7.2.118 In his statement to the Treasury Solicitor Soldier 017 also refers to being surrounded by a large crowd as they debussed, again this is not referred to in either of his statements to the RMP. B1482 paragraph 2 This account is also contained in his statement to Eversheds wherein he states that there were thousands of people in the waste ground and when they debussed they saw rioters all over the place. B1484.003 paragraph 18 This account is contradicted by the Video evidence which shows Soldier 017 debussing from the second Mortar Platoon Pig. V48/12.14 to 13.01 The video clip shows that rather than surrounding the soldiers, the people near the Pig ran away from the soldiers, as they debussed. While Soldier 017 in oral testimony reduced his thousands to a 100 or so people, Day 358/46/15 the video evidence would tend to suggest that there were only a handful of people near the Pigs Day 358/135/16 to Day 358/135/17 and that they were running away. Day 358/136/6 to Day 358/136/10

18.7.2.119 The video clip also shows a soldier firing his rubber bullet gun as he de-busses. Only two soldiers in Soldier O's Pig, Soldier 017 and Soldier 013 carried rubber bullet guns. Soldier 017 accepted that he was the soldier who fired the rubber bullet gun immediately on debussing. Day 358/135/20 to Day 358/136/1 This was a fact he neglected to mention in any of the statements made by him in 1972. Although it is mentioned in his Eversheds statement it is mentioned in the context of the thousands of people in the waste ground. In fact, as the Video demonstrates Soldier 017 fired his baton round at people who posed no discernible threat to soldiers and who were rapidly dispersing. Day 358/136/6 to Day 358/136/10

18.7.2.120 Soldier 017's depiction, in his statements to Eversheds, of the riot encountered behind the Rubble Barricade is blood-curdling stuff. According to his Eversheds statement there were also "thousands" behind the Rubble Barricade, B1484.004 paragraph 22 this was reduced to a 100 or so in oral testimony. Day 358/53/13 to Day 358/53/20 He maintained that on arrival he was "showered" with bricks and stones thrown by the rioters at the Rubble Barricade. B1484.004 paragraph 22 While he accepted he had not been hit by any of the bricks and stones thrown at him from the Rubble Barricade he nonetheless maintained that they came within 2-3 feet of him. Day 358/59/15 to Day 358/59/24 He also described groups of youths from this crowd who were repeatedly advancing on his position, and according to Soldier 017 who "would have ripped me to pieces if they had got to me". B1484.004 paragraph 23 To like effect in his Supplementary Statement the riot behind the Rubble Barricade was described as "life threatening, if the rioters had caught me they would have killed me." B1484.014 paragraph 4.2

18.7.2.121 Soldier 017's description of the rioting, depicts a scene of mayhem, in which soldiers lives were threatened, even by unarmed rioters. In our submission Soldier 017's description is grossly hyperbolic and is contradicted by the photographic evidence depicting people at the Rubble Barricade, at the time soldiers arrived, EP27.6, EP27.7, EP27.8, EP27.9. In relation to his suggestion that bricks and stones were falling within 2-3 feet of his location it is submitted that unless Soldier 017 was far in advance of the locations in which he is seen in photographs, for example EP23.7, persons throwing bricks and stones from the Rubble Barricade could not come within 2-3 feet. These descriptions are in our submission further examples of Soldier 017's propensity to exaggerate matters out of all proportion.

18.7.2.122 Probably most significantly, in terms of providing a justification for the use of lethal force by soldiers, Soldier 017 refers, for the first time in his Treasury Solicitor's statement, to hearing high velocity fire from the area of the Rossville Flats, after he had crossed Rossville Street. B1482 paragraph 3 If Soldier 017 is telling the truth then this was the first significant incident to occur, yet he completely neglected to mention it in either of his RMP statements.

18.7.2.123 This incident does however have clear parallels with the statement of Soldier P to the Treasury Solicitor where he for the first time gives an account of 2 high velocity shots being fired. In Soldier P's statement however the shots were fired from the Rubble Barricade and went over his head. B592

18.7.2.124 It is our submission that the discrepancies identified above, some of which are demonstrably false, demonstrate a tendency to gross hyperbole on the part of Soldier 017. An incident which involves isolated youths throwing stones from behind a Rubble Barricade, in circumstances where those stones posed no threat to soldiers, becomes, in Soldier 017's testimony a life-threatening situation. Soldier 017's flights of fantasy are not however the results of a hyperactive imagination, Soldier 017's evidence is given with a clear agenda, that of exculpating the actions of his colleagues on Bloody Sunday who used lethal force. In our submission little, if any weight can be attached to evidence given by Soldier 017 of attacks on soldiers by civilians, given his demonstrable willingness to lie.

18.7.2.125 There are also some parallels between the lies told by Soldier 017 and those told by Soldier P, and the changes made by the soldiers when they come to give their Treasury Solicitor statements. These parallels are significant in view of the allegation made about the circumstances which gave rise to Soldier 017's second RMP statement.

Soldier 017's RMP Statement of the 4 February

18.7.2.126 In relation to this statement it is our allegation that Soldier 017 was guilty of collusion, whether directly with Soldier P or with the assistance of the RMP, in order to provide some corroboration for Soldier P of the circumstances in which he fired live rounds.

18.7.2.127 The most manifest discrepancy as between the various accounts given by Soldier 017, and the most crucial, in that it seeks to justify the use of lethal force on Bloody Sunday, is the inclusion by Soldier 017 in his second RMP statement, of an incident which involved witnessing Soldier P firing a live round at a nail bomber.

18.7.2.128 If Soldier 017's second RMP statement is to be believed then in the early hours of the 31 January 1972 he neglected to mention an incident in which:

i) 50 rioters advanced from the Rubble Barricade towards the two soldiers.

ii) This resulted in Soldier 017 firing his rubber bullet gun for the first time.

iii) His action in firing his rubber bullet gun resulted in the crowd splitting up and a man emerged with a nail bomb.

iv) This man who was about to throw a nail bomb at Soldier 017 and Soldier P was shot by Soldier P as he raised his arm to throw the nail bomb.

v) This man was subsequently removed by the crowd. B1479

18.7.2.129 The explanation advanced by Soldier 017 for failing to mention this in this first RMP statement is because "I thought seeing the gunman was more important so that is what I mentioned seeing. I think that was what I was specifically asked about." B1484.008 paragraph 47.5

18.7.2.130 His explanation became more contradictory when giving oral evidence:

"Q. Was that [the incident with the nail-bomber] not something sufficiently important to be included in your first statement to the Military Police?

A. Maybe, but they were not interested in it.

Q. How do you know they were not interested in it?

A. They were only interested on the gunman.

. . . .

Q. How could you tell whether [the RMP were] interested in the nail bomber if you had not told them that there was a nail bomber?

A. I took it that Corporal P was dealing with that."

Day 358/65/12 to Day 358/66/25

18.7.2.131 Soldier 017 does not seek to suggest that he had forgotten the incident with the nail bomber when he spoke to the RMP on the first occasion, simply that he decided, not to mention it. Day 358/67/7 to Day 358/67/9 Thus Soldier 017 now advances two contradictory explanations for his failure to tell the RMP. Firstly, that he determined that the incident with the gunman was insufficiently important to tell the RMP and secondly that the RMP were not interested in hearing about the nail bomb. As was pointed out to him the RMP could not show disinterest unless he actually told them, and he accepted that he never told them.

18.7.2.132 It is our submission that neither explanation stands up to scrutiny. There can be no reason for regarding a gunman as more important than a nail bomber where both apparently threatened Soldier 017's life, particularly when the first incident involved the use of lethal force by one of Soldier 017's colleagues. In relation to the explanation advanced for the first time to Mr. Roxburgh in oral testimony, Day 358/65/12 to Day 358/65/16 for the reasons set out above, the RMP could not express disinterest about that of which they were unaware.

18.7.2.133 On Soldier 017's own account the purpose of his second statement "was to back up what Soldier P had said". Day 358/68/11 to Day 358/68/13 It is our submission that Soldier 017's second RMP statement was a complete fabrication, designed exclusively to lend support to the justification advanced by Soldier P for his use of lethal force.

18.7.2.134 It is noteworthy in this respect that there are discrepancies as between Soldier 017's first account of this incident and his statement to the Treasury Solicitor.

i) In the account given by Soldier 017 to the RMP he claims to have seen the object in the man's hand as he appeared behind the crowd. B1479 However in his account to the Treasury Solicitor he states that he saw the nail bomber after Soldier P shouted a warning. B1482 This change is significant in that it means that Soldier 017's statement to the Treasury Solicitor is now more consistent with the accounts given by Soldier P about the incident. B577, B592, WT13.47E-F In our submission producing a statement consistent with Soldier P's statement was the whole purpose of the exercise.

ii) In his RMP statement he was unable to state that the man was hit, merely that he fell, while in his statement to the Treasury Solicitor he refers to the man being hit. B1479 and B1482 paragraph 3 There are also differences in Soldier P's accounts as to whether or not the man was hit. In his RMP statement he stated that the man was hit B577. While his statement to the Treasury Solicitor he simply stated that the man fell. B592

iii) Also in his RMP statement Soldier 017 claims that "the crowd carried away the injured man." B1479 This is the same account as that given by Soldier P in his RMP statement. B577 However in Soldier 017's statement to the Treasury Solicitor he states that "the crowd surrounded the man and I am not sure where he was hit . . . I did not see the man who had been hit again or what happened in him." B1482 paragraph 3 Again this is paralleled in Soldier P's statements, in that he changes from a position in which the man was removed by the crowd to a position in which his attention was diverted as a result of which he did not see what happened the man. B592, WT13.48D

18.7.2.135 It is our submission that the discrepancies between Soldier 017's second RMP statement and his Treasury Solicitor statement are part of the process of trying to produce an account consistent with that of Soldier P.

18.7.2.136 However, the major difficulty with Soldier 017's account as corroboration is the fact that in terms of location, his account on the 4 February 1972 and subsequently, consistently describes a crowd advancing upon him from the Rubble Barricade and a nail bomber positioned just north of the Rubble Barricade on Rossville Street. B1479, B1482 paragraph 3, B1484.004 paragraph 27, Day 358/123/1 to Day 358/123/2 As Soldier 017 himself acknowledges that is totally at variance with the account given by Soldier P in his Treasury Solicitor statement and evidence to Lord Widgery. Day 358/122/24 to Day 358/123/2, P22

18.7.2.137 Significantly however it is not at variance with Soldier P's original account to the RMP, as B579 attached to his first RMP statement demonstrates. In Soldier P's original account to the RMP, as with Soldier 017's account to the RMP, the nail bomber came from the direction of the Rubble Barricade in front of Soldier P on Rossville Street. Soldier P changed the location of the nail-bomber in all of his subsequent statements, Soldier 017, however failed to do so.

18.7.2.138 The fact that Soldier 017's second RMP statement was taken on the 4 February 1972 is not without significance. We have previously submitted that a significant number of soldiers, of whom Soldier 017 is one, made statements on the 4 February 1972 for the express purpose of corroborating and justifying the use of lethal force by other soldiers. Those statements, whether manufactured by the RMP, the individual soldiers, or a combination of both, were untrue. We would refer the Tribunal to Section 5 of these submissions wherein we make that case.

18.7.2.139 In our submission Soldier 017's statement of the 4 February:

> "was not made recording a proper or genuine recollection, but it was made to corroborate the evidence that Soldier P had already given to the Royal Military Police." Day 358/128/20 to Day 358/128/23

18.7.2.140 It is our submission that this was precisely the purpose of Soldier 017's second statement and that the statement was a fabrication is the only logical explanation for:

i) His failure to mention the incident in his first RMP statement;

ii) The discrepancies between his RMP statement and the Treasury Solicitor statement and the nature of those discrepancies.

iii) The discrepancies between Soldier 017's account and the accounts given by Soldier P.

Soldier 017's Civilian Gunman

18.7.2.141 In the first statement made by Soldier 017 he gives an account of having seen a civilian gunman, who fired 2 rounds at Soldier 017. From the first description given of this incident it appears that this incident occurred on Rossville Street with the man emerging from "round the corner towards me." B1472, Day 358/81/22 to Day 358/81/25

18.7.2.142 That also appears to be the case with his statement to the Treasury Solicitor. He describes a situation in which rioters are emerging from an alleyway to throw stones at the soldiers, Soldier 017 decided to go forward to make arrests. "As I did so I saw a man walk around the corner towards me." B1483

18.7.2.143 Of relevance to this issue is the fact that in the mid/late 1980's, Soldier 017 was interviewed by Max Arthur. Soldier 017 accepts that the second paragraph entitled 'Private, 1 Para' on B1484.027 relates to this interview. He does not accept that the account is entirely accurate and stated in oral testimony that Max Arthur had made various aspects of the account up. Day 358/108/8

18.7.2.144 The interview is difficult to decipher because there are no references to street names, and it is not proposed to deal with every aspect of the interview. The interview is however relevant to the incident in which Soldier 017 claims to have seen a gunman. Reading the interview, in conjunction with the Supplementary Statement made by Soldier 017 to address this interview, B1484.023, B1484.024 it appears to state as follows:

i) Contrary to what appears in his earlier statements, he suggests that he actually went into the alleyway, in order to arrest rioters, when the gunman appeared. B1484.027, B1484.0123 paragraph 4.2

ii) He also suggests that the gunman fired a shot which hit the wall above him and that then, both himself and Corporal P, chased the gunman. B1484.027 He now disputes this stating that "I ran out of the alleyway having I believe been fired at and told Corporal P who then went back to the alleyway buy when the man with the pistol had gone." B1484.0124 paragraph 4.2

18.7.2.145 Thus in both his interview with Max Arthur and his evidence to this Tribunal, and contrary to what is contained in his 1972 accounts, Soldier 017 is adamant that the gunman was down the alleyway which led to Columbcille Court, rather than as appears from his earlier accounts on Rossville Street. B1484.027, B1484.005 paragraph 29

18.7.2.146 Also of significance is the fact that in both his interview with Max Arthur and his testimony to this Tribunal Soldier 017 makes it clear that that he told Soldier P about the incident at the time, to the extent that Soldier P went to look down the alleyway to investigate whether the gunman was still there. B1484.005 paragraph 31. Yet in all the statements Soldier P has made about Bloody Sunday, he has never referred to this incident, nor corroborated Soldier 017's account in anyway.

18.7.2.147 In our submission the lack of corroboration by Soldier P, or any other soldier, of this incident, completely undermines the credibility of Soldier 017 in this regard. It is submitted that the moving of the gunman from Rossville Street to the alleyway was because Soldier 017 recognised that the incident he described could not have occurred on Rossville Street without other soldiers having witnessed the incident, given the proximity of soldiers from Anti-Tank Platoon.

18.7.2.148 The account is also undermined by Soldier 017's lack of credibility as a witness, his propensity for exaggeration and his willingness to fabricate accounts. In those circumstances no weight can be attached to Soldier 017's testimony on this issue.

18.7.2.149 It should also be noted at this juncture that on Soldier 017's own account no other soldier witnessed this gunman. Day 358/79/22 to Day 358/79/24 Moreover no soldier corroborates this incident. Thus even if the Tribunal were to conclude that in relation to this aspect of his evidence Soldier 017 were telling the truth, the actions of this gunman played no part in the use of lethal force by the soldiers of Mortar Platoon or Anti-Tank Platoon on Rossville Street on Bloody Sunday.

Anti-Tank Platoon & Fatalities behind the Rubble Barricade

18.7.2.150 In our submission photographs EP23.7, EP23.8, P1119, EP23.9, EP33.6 and EP33.7 all show Soldiers P and 017 in various positions alongside against the east facing wall of the Kells Walk pram ramp. Soldier 017 accepted that he could identify himself in EP23.7 and EP23.8. In relation to P1119 and EP23.9 he did not confirm his identity but accepted that it was possible that he was the man with the riot gun. Day 358/150/12 to Day 358/152/17 It is our contention that each of the photographs identified above shows the same two soldiers, (in some cases alongside other soldiers) one armed with a rifle and one with a rubber bullet gun and that the soldier with the riot gun can be none other than Soldier 017.

18.7.2.151 It is thus evident from the photographic evidence that, within a short time of the arrival of Soldier P and 017 at the Kells Walk side of Rossville Street:

> "there is a very substantial group of soldiers who appear to have joined you very quickly" Day 358/150/24 to Day 358/150/25

18.7.2.152 Yet Soldier 017 now claims to have no recollection at all of Anti-Tank Platoon on the day. Day 358/59/9 to Day 358/59/14

18.7.2.153 It is our submission that the assertion that he was unaware of the soldiers of Anti-Tank Platoon on Bloody Sunday is undermined, in the first instance by his first statement to the RMP. B1472 His RMP statement refers to the rioting crowd at the Rubble Barricade "stoning troops who deployed around the flats." In our submission this is a direct reference to the soldiers from Anti-Tank Platoon who were located at the Kells Walk Wall behind Soldier 017 virtually from the outset of his positioning himself on the west side of Rossville Street. His assertion that he was unaware of Anti-Tank Platoon is also contradicted by P1120 and P1121 which show the soldiers from Anti-Tank Platoon speaking directly with Soldiers P and 017 and demonstrate conclusively that Soldiers P and 017 were aware of their presence.

18.7.2.154 Despite this Soldier 017 gives no evidence about the actions or conduct of soldiers from Anti-Tank Platoon on Bloody Sunday. We know that soldiers from Anti-Tank Platoon fired live rounds over the Rubble Barricade on Bloody Sunday, yet we are invited to believe that these live rounds went unnoticed by Soldier 017, as with Soldier P. To like effect, none of the targets identified by soldiers in Anti-Tank Platoon were seen by Soldier 017 despite his proximity to the Rubble Barricade. Soldier 017 claims to have seen nothing of the movement of soldiers from Anti-Tank Platoon into Glenfada Park North, despite the fact that this would inevitably have occurred before he returned to his Pig.

18.7.2.155 Ever more extraordinary than his failure to witness the actions of soldiers from Anti-Tank Platoon was his failure to witness the actions of Soldier P. Taken at its height Soldier 017 witnessed Soldier P fire 1 shot, when we know Soldier P fired at least 9 and that he claims to have done so while accompanying Soldier 017.

18.7.2.156 Finally, and of most significance, Soldier 017 failed to witness the shooting and killing of Michael Kelly, Michael McDaid, John Young, William Nash and Hugh Gilmore who were undoubtedly shot and killed while he was on Rossville Street looking over the Rubble Barricade. As has been alleged, one or more of Michael McDaid, John Young and William Nash were shot and killed by Soldier P with whom Soldier 017 was paired during the time he killed one or more of those young men. Moreover if any of them were not killed by Soldier P, they were killed by soldiers from Anti-Tank Platoon, while Soldier 017 was positioned on Rossville Street.

18.7.2.157 As was put to Soldier 017 in the course of his evidence:

> "basically what you suffer from is wilful blindness; you have made a determined effort to see nothing in relation to the deaths that you must have witnessed of at least five people at that barricade and the movements of Anti-Tank Platoon into Glenfada Park where they carried out further murders" Day 358/169/9 to Day 358/169/16

18.7.2.158 Soldier 017 as with the other soldiers positioned on Rossville Street on Bloody Sunday, claims to have seen nothing of the shooting from the Kells Walk Wall, missed virtually all of Soldier P's shots over the Rubble Barricade and failed to see even one of those shot and killed behind the Rubble Barricade as they fell. More than any other aspect of his evidence, this shows Soldier 017 to be a liar, unwilling to give true testimony to the murder of innocent civilians by his colleagues. In those circumstances no credibility can be attached to any aspect of Soldier 017's evidence.

Private U

18.7.2.159 Whilst Private U was a member of Mortar Platoon, his actions relate mainly to the events in Sector 3 and in the area of the Rubble Barricade. He provided statements to the RMP, one to the Treasury Solicitor, gave evidence to Lord Widgery and gave oral evidence to this Tribunal on Day 369.

18.7.2.160 When asked by Eversheds how he felt about Bloody Sunday when it was over he said the following:

> "Frankly I felt elated. Everyone was on a high. We had been in, had engaged gunmen and had shot them. That is how we honestly felt and I still believe, hand on heart, that we did a good job. When we got back to barracks, people all around were saying "well done". It was like a mutual appreciation society... I believe one of the main reasons why I am having to give a statement today for this new Inquiry is that no paras were shot and killed that day. I have described how we came under fire. After the day, we were puffing out chests out and congratulating each other on our terrific fire and movement but, really, it was pure luck that none of us were shot. I now feel that we are being punished for not remembering all the details." B787.009 paragraphs 47 to 48

18.7.2.161 The witness confirmed that he has always been clear in his mind that he killed someone on Bloody Sunday Day 369/121/16, B787.006 paragraphs 31 to 33. When examined by Counsel for the Families, the following exchange ensued:

> "Q. Perhaps you are prepared to assist me in trying to establish at least who it is likely that you shot dead on that day?
> A. (Pause). Could you repeat the question?
> Q. Are you prepared to assist in trying to establish who the person was you shot dead that day?
> A. I have to be honest?
> Q. Yes, be honest.
> A. I am not interested." Day 369/124/9 to Day 369/124/17

In our submission it is against this background that this witness' evidence should be viewed.

Briefing

18.7.2.162 Private U's recollection of the briefing he received from Lieutenant N before going to Derry was that although the Mortar Platoon were to conduct an arrest operation, this time there would be no "safety valve" i.e. where persons who were innocently caught up in the riot would be able to escape. No such tactic was to be employed in Derry so that everyone could be arrested. B787.001 paragraph 2. It is difficult to reconcile this soldier's understanding of the plan with the emphasis Senior officers have made on the need for "separation" between innocent bystanders, marchers and rioters.

Like many of his colleagues, his understanding and knowledge about the No-Go area in Derry and reports of gunmen being able to walk freely appears to have come mainly from news reports that he saw on television B787.001 paragraph 5.

Presbyterian Church

18.7.2.163 In relation to the events which took place at the Presbyterian Church, Soldier U maintains a consistent pattern of recollection in keeping with all military witnesses, namely, that he has no recollection of hearing any SLR weapons being fired in that vicinity.

18.7.2.164 The witness however, provides a detailed recollection of hearing a single high velocity shot ring out and strike the building, which he occupied at the time. In fact at B787.003 paragraph 13 of his Eversheds statement:

> "I was not aware of any of the boys having shot at anyone in that area. I heard no SLR fire whilst I was around in this area."

By way of comment, Soldier U makes no reference to hearing any nail bombs explode in this area. The witness points out that the single high velocity shot enabled all the soldiers to make a decision that they would go in with SLRs. The significance of this event at the time however was not regarded by Soldier U or any of his colleagues in the Mortar Platoon as important enough to include in their statements made to the RMP on the evening of 30th January or early hours of 31st January 1972.

Going in / Level of Fire

18.7.2.165 The witness records that the original plan of entry i.e. driving a pig through a brick wall had to be significantly altered because of difficulties on the ground B787.003 paragraph 15. He entered the Bogside under the command of Sergeant O.

The inconsistent nature of U's recollection of event is particularly highlighted through the provision of various accounts concerning the level of fire which he experienced and was subjected to as he made his way into Rossville Street. It is worthwhile summarising his recollections in the following way:

18.7.2.166 First RMP statement 0:00 31st January 1972:

i) In his first RMP statement he describes hearing automatic gunfire as the vehicles advanced down Rossville Street.

ii) When he reached the vicinity of Eden Place and Rossville Street he cocked his SLR and put a round into the breech. He then arrested a man who was throwing stones, ascertained his identity and handed him over to the RMP.

iii) When he returned to the corner of the Rossville Flats he came under fire from the waste ground at the far end of Rossville Street. He estimated that he heard approximately thirty gunshots at this point. He identified a man with a pistol firing two shots and he returns one shot, which he claimed, struck the target B748.

18.7.2.167 Treasury Solicitor Statement dated 5th March 1972:

i) As the pigs drove down Rossville Street he heard a long burst of automatic fire. U debussed from the vehicle and ran forward towards the Rossville Flats being struck several times by stones.

ii) As he faced the flats he heard the sound of four or five low velocity automatic shots. At this point he was struck by a bottle by a man whom he later arrested. During the arrest, three or four low velocity automatic shots struck the ground in his vicinity.

iii) The witness then said that having handed his arrestee over to other soldiers, he returned back along Rossville Street where he observed a number of soldiers at the entrance to the Rossville Flats Courtyard firing at a gunman. It was only at this point that U cocked his rifle.

iv) The witness requested cover from a colleague and made his way in the direction of the flats. As he ran he saw four or five automatic shots land near the Company Commander's vehicle which was directly ahead of him in the direction of the flats.

v) Private U eventually took up a position at the northwest end of the north end of the Rossville Flats and it was from here that he shot the man who was firing a pistol. The witness then related the event that he omitted completely from his initial RMP statement, viz, the circumstances in which Alex Nash was shot B767.

18.7.2.168 Private U's oral evidence to Lord Widgery can be summarised as follows:

i) During his sworn evidence before Lord Widgery the witness confirmed that he heard a long burst of automatic fire as the pig drove along Rossville Street WT13.94 F.

ii) According to him as he debussed from the vehicle he was struck by two bottles and several stones WT13.95 B.

iii) He described how he arrested one man and when asked by Counsel whether he heard any firing at this point he replied that he could not remember although he did recall hearing and seeing the fall of shots WT13.96 C.

iv) When asked directly if he cocked his rifle at this stage the witness replied that he did not WT13.96 E.

v) He went on to describe a second fall of shots on the waste ground in the vicinity of Eden Place WT13.96 F.

vi) He was asked directly if he could see other soldiers firing at this point and he replied that he could not WT13.97 A.

vii) He made his way forward and saw three or four shots fall in the vicinity of the Command Vehicle. The witness then went on to relate the circumstances in which he discharged his single round. When asked by Mr Hill BL whether the man who discharged the two shots with the pistol was his first experience of pistol shots that day the witness replied "No". He went on to allege that he saw a man firing a pistol in the Rossville Flats Courtyard although he never mentioned this before. He did claim to have mentioned this however in an earlier statement WT14.2 F-G. If this is so, then Counsel for the Families have not been provided with it, unless of course this intended to be a reference to the incident related in his Treasury Solicitor statement at B767.

18.7.2.169 It is difficult to conceive of a situation that arises and is then later described in such inconsistent and contradictory terms:

i) We ask rhetorically how a witness who has apparently experienced direct gunfire forget to mention that experience when providing his account before Lord Widgery.

ii) Secondly how could someone who on one account, claims to have heard thirty gunshots never mention this again.

iii) Thirdly how could a truthful witness allegedly see his colleagues engage a pistol-waving gunman in the Courtyard of Rossville Flats with sustained fire and yet fail to mention this at the first opportunity of telling.

The most likely explanation is that this individual has woven a variety of accounts and experiences picked up by him in the aftermath of events around a central but heroic role, which he has identified for himself. His evidence in respect of these matters amounts to an unreliable tissue of misinformation, fiction and falsehood. Rarely on the face of this evidence does this witness provide an account that is consistent in respect of any particular event he describes.

Arrests

18.7.2.170 One matter of which the witness does provide some measure of consistency concerns the fact that he appears to have arrested someone who slipped on ice. In his RMP statement he alleges that this individual was called "Charles Collins" B749. In his Treasury statement the name of the arrestee has been deliberately deleted however it is clear that U mistook the surname "Collins" for "Canning". Unsurprisingly, Mr Canning's account of his arrest is somewhat different. He claimed to have been arrested by a Paratrooper who he had observed firing his SLR toward the Barricade. He was ordered to the ground where he was kicked repeatedly. He was then taken to an APC and further assaulted. He was struck in the face with a rifle and at least one Paratrooper kept threatening to shoot him AC25.5. It is submitted however that Private U did not arrest Mr Canning but is more likely to have arrested Mr James Charles Doherty Day 369/134/1 to Day 369/136/15. It will be recalled that this witness gave evidence to the effect that he slipped and fell on ice Day 104/110/5 to Day 104/110/7 and that whilst on the ground he was struck by what he assumed was a rifle butt, lost consciousness briefly, and was subjected to a stream of anti-Irish racist abuse. At one point he was told "You're dealing with the fucking Paras now" AD69.2 paragraphs 13 to 19.

Did Private U shoot Hugh Gilmore?

18.7.2.171 One of the principal difficulties confronted by the Tribunal, is attempting to determine whether a direct relationship between soldiers who have allegedly fired and the deceased and wounded can be established.

Private U provides two different accounts in respect of the circumstances in which he allegedly, fatally shoots one person and potentially wounds another.

He described the incident in the following terms to the RMP at 0:00hours on 31st January 1972:

i) "As the rioters thinned out I saw a man on the waste ground behind the Barricade, he was about 150 metres from my position. He was standing in the middle of about five other men at GR43321678 and he was wearing a light coloured anorak." B749

ii) "In his right hand he had a pistol and I saw him fire two shots at other members of my unit who were on the opposite side of the road from me. From the standing aiming position I fired one aimed shot at this man. I saw that the shot struck him in the stomach and he jerked and fell. I also saw a man behind the one I fired at clutch his head with his hands and also fall to the ground." B750

18.7.2.172 Yet when describing the same incident to the Treasury Solicitor the witness stated the following:

i) "I was in this position about two minutes when I saw five or six men walking across from Glenfada Park towards Rossville Flats behind the Barricade. I saw one of these men had a pistol. He had a light blue jacket on." B768

ii) "The other men moved away from him as though they were surprised he had a pistol. He fired two shots in quick succession in the direction of the opposite side of Rossville Street from where I was standing where there were soldiers. Then I was in a standing aiming position, I took off my safety catch and aimed for the centre of his body. I fired one round. He fell backwards and the man behind him clutched his own head." B768

18.7.2.173 During his evidence on oath to Lord Widgery the witness repeated an account largely consistent with his Treasury Solicitor statement. Interestingly, no other member of the Parachute Regiment (including those positioned at Kells Walk) corroborates either of these versions as an event that actually occurred.

The trajectory line as identified on the trajectory map B754 and trajectory photograph B787 provides a line of fire along which Hugh Gilmore had travelled in an attempt to gain the safety of the southern end of Block1. None of the other soldiers who admit to firing provide a similar trajectory line.

However at least one other military witness describes a soldier firing from this location although in somewhat different circumstances.

The Soldiers in the Peter England Shirt Factory

Soldier 015

18.7.2.174 Soldier 015 was a Bombardier in the 22Light Air Defence Regiment and was positioned in the Peter England shirt factory on Little James Street. See photographs P415, P417, P427. He had an SLR, binoculars and a radio. In providing an initial statement to the RMP, he described a soldier at the same location as U discharging his weapon in the following circumstances:

i) "Suddenly all the troops in the area seemed to dive for cover and take up firing positions. One soldier I noticed was observing two men behind a Rubble Barricade that stretched from Block No1 Rossville Flats across Rossville Street to Glenfada Park." B1434.011

ii) "The soldier was positioned at the corner of Block No1 Rossville Flats. The men were continually throwing missiles in his direction. The two men suddenly jumped up and started running towards an open door half way down Block No1. The rear man stopped suddenly and turned to look at the soldier, as the soldier brought his SLR into the aim position. The man turned and started running faster towards the open door. I then saw the soldier fire one round in the direction of the fleeing man. The man dropped to the ground. He fell in the doorway, I then saw hands come from the doorway and drag the body in." B1434.011, B1434.012

18.7.2.175 It could be suggested that what is described in this account relates to the death of Kevin McElhinney, in that he potentially left the Barricade with one other person and that he eventually ended up inside Block1. The point however that this account does serve to highlight is that U fired on someone on the east side of Rossville Street who was both unarmed and presented no risk to himself or any of his colleagues. Certain aspects of the description however support the assertion that the most likely focus of U's attention was Hugh Gilmore as opposed to Kevin McElhinney. This conclusion is to be preferred for the following reasons:

i) The target was clearly seen to be throwing stones. It is accepted that Hugh Gilmore threw stones shortly before he was killed.

ii) No such allegation could be made against Kevin McElhinney at the time he was shot.

iii) It is clear from this description that the target is running as opposed to crawling and is shot at an early stage.

iv) A body of civilian and paramilitary evidence suggests that Hugh Gilmore had not only been throwing a stone (s) but was also taunting the soldiers and encouraging others to participate in his defiant behaviour.

v) A further consideration is linked to the fact that sequentially, Kevin McElhinney left the safety of the Barricade as at least three others lay dying or dead on its southern side.

vi) In conclusion, the most compelling reason for concluding that this incident almost certainly described the final moments of Hugh Gilmore is to be found in the concession by Soldier 015 to the effect that the individual be saw shot could have been dragged around the southern gable end of Block1 as opposed to the entrance doors to Block1 Day 360/202/25 to Day 360/203/18.

18.7.2.176 However when interviewed by Lt Colonel Overbury at Lisburn barracks on 16th February 1972 the witness was shown a photograph of the area. He changed his account in the following material respects:

i) The man he saw shot was running towards an open door as opposed to half way down the Block itself. B1422

ii) The man stopped, turned and faced the soldier. He raised his right arm to shoulder height and pointed towards the soldier. B1422

iii) He was unable to say whether he had anything in his hand. B1422

18.7.2.176 This is by the standards of any Inquiry a truly remarkable document. It is respectfully submitted that its content highlights the priority of necessity over the moral imperative of truth. It strains the thread of credibility, that a witness in providing an account of how a human being is gunned down on the street chooses to deliberately ignore, the very features of the account itself which might possibly justify it. The disturbing nature of this document and what it is clearly intended to achieve is further highlighted by the fact that the witness described the same event to the Treasury Solicitor in precisely the same terms as he had related it to the RMP B1425. It should be noted however that someone has seen fit to amend the typed copy in manuscript for the purposes of including the justification, which was set out the statement dated 16th February and recorded by Colonel Overbury. When Mr Heritage recorded 015's statement on 9th March 1972, 015 repeated, what in our submission was his truthful recollection of what he saw.

Colonel Overbury does not appear to have attended with him on this occasion. However when 015 gave evidence on oath to Lord Widgery, he provided the version set out in his statement to Colonel Overbury, namely that the man in Rossville Street turned, faced the soldier and brought up his right hand WT16.37 A.

18.7.2.177 It is respectfully submitted that this witness, more than any other, highlights the collective disregard for the truth, which many of the military witnesses have demonstrated. Notwithstanding the nature of the earlier accounts as provided by him, 015 for the purposes of this Inquiry goes so far as to express the assumption that the unarmed civilian that he initially described to the RMP must have had a pistol B1434.004 paragraph 29. When asked about this assumption by Counsel to the Tribunal, it was suggested that it arose from a belief that a soldier in the British Army would not fire without a reason, the witness agreed with this explanation Day 360/181/2 to Day 360/181/5.

To suggest that these differences are best explained by someone who was feeling "tired and confused" is tantamount to treating both the role and purpose of this Tribunal with an astonishing level of indifference and at worst, contempt Day 360/185/8 to Day 360/191/11.

Soldier 023

18.7.2.178 The description of events surrounding this incident take on an even more perplexing dimension, through the provision of a seemingly corroborative statement by Soldier 023 who was a trained sniper in the same unit. He was with 015 on the top floor of the Peter England shirt factory. He also had a pair of binoculars and an SLR with a telescopic sight. He describes the following scene in his Treasury Solicitor statement:

i) "I then saw a man appear from the southern end of Block1 of Rossville Flats. This man had a rifle which he aimed up towards the soldiers deployed in Rossville Street. I heard the sound of shots as he fired. The man then went back behind the wall and reappeared a couple of minutes later." B1522

ii) "I then took aim with my rifle. I heard the sound of a shot from his rifle. Before I could shoot I heard the sound of a high velocity shot and the man jumped back in the air and fell. A crowd gathered around this man and carried him away." B1522

Significantly, no other soldier claims to have shot anyone this far south in Rossville Street. Moreover the engagement has not been recorded on the "Shot Plot" as prepared by Captain Jackson.

It will be recalled that the first and only occasion during which 015 allegedly pointed out his observations to Soldier 023 was in the statement taken by Lt Colonel Overbury on 16th February 1972. 023 had no recollection of this exchange Day 360/40/5 to Day 360/40/22.

It would seem therefore that 015 and 023 although conducting observations along the same axis of activity see different things and experience different events. By way of example, after describing the man with the rifle being shot above, 023 went on to describe a man at a window at 57 William Street take aim with a rifle and discharge at least one round. He then described how the man reappeared a few minutes later and how a high velocity shot rang out from a position directly below his and the man fell backwards. He then described bodies being removed from Glenfada Park and Block1 to waiting ambulances B1519, B1520. 015 on the other hand, relates how he heard a bullet strike the building somewhere beneath his position and how he heard a high velocity round being fired from the same location. He recalls nothing of the drama outlined by 023 although both witnesses generally share in their description of the dead and the dying being removed in ambulances.

18.7.2.179 The variations provided by these accounts appear to derive from the following:

i) They are the result of a poorly contrived attempt to justify the circumstances in which Private U cut down an unarmed individual.

ii) That the accounts provide a number of accurate descriptions of not one but several shooting incidents in which both victims and soldiers have failed to come forward.

It could of course be suggested that any evidence linking Private U to the death of Hugh Gilmore has been undermined by the evidence of PIRA14 and PIRA 26 who testified that the soldier they believed to have shot Hugh Gilmore was on the west side of Rossville Street. However, such a suggestion fails to make proper account of the expert conclusions drawn by Messrs Shepherd and O'Callaghan, namely that Hugh Gilmore was likely to have been shot twice.

Further Observations by Private U

18.7.2.180 In concluding his initial account to the RMP, Private U outlined how he reported his "hit" to the CSM who was standing nearby. As they were about to move forward "to recover the body and weapon" a priest accompanied by approximately ten other people came upon the scene and appeared to remove the body B750.

Having provided a detailed statement on 31st January 1972 concerning Bloody Sunday, Private U provided a further statement on 4th February detailing a highly dramatic and moving event which he alleges occurred after he had shot the individual in the vicinity of Block1. That statement records how he saw two bodies lying behind the Barricade and how observed a man aged approximately 45 emerge from the Rossville Flats. (It will be recalled that the unchallenged testimony before Lord Widgery was that Mr Nash (senior) emerged from Glenfada Park North.)

18.7.2.181 Private U alleged that this man propped up the body of a youth who appeared to have a stomach wound. At or about this point an arm extended from the entrance of Block1 holding a pistol he observed the weapon jerk and a ricochet bullet strike five metres short on the southern side of the Barricade and then hit the middle-aged man in the right arm. Another shot was then discharged which appeared to strike the youth. The middle-aged man wandered off in a daze. A short time after this event an APC moved forward and removed three bodies from the Barricade. U believed that one of the deceased was the youth whom he had seen being shot earlier B759, B760.

18.7.2.182 The horrific nature of these events and the fearless actions of a father who in the face of overwhelming risk to his own life ran to the assistance of his dying son and whilst under sustained fire continued to provide what comfort he could during his final moments. It is beyond belief that Private U could witness such an incident and then neglect to include it in his initial description of the events witnessed by him that day. It is beyond all understanding that the event could be misrepresented in the manner described by U for no other apparent purpose other than to suggest that at least one of the deceased on the Barricade was killed by a civilian gunman.

Events not observed by Private U

18.7.2.183 Private U claimed not to have observed Kevin McElhinney shot as he crawled to towards the doorway of Block1. He was unable to explain how he could have failed to witness this despite the fact he must have been present when this happen Day 369/163/11 to Day 369/164/1. Similarly he claimed not to witness the shooting by Soldiers C and D from the pram ramp. He was unable to explain how he failed to see or hear this Day 369/164/2 to Day 369/164/11. He also was unable to explain how he failed to see the heated argument with Father Mulvey and Lieutenant N concerning the inhuman treatment of the denial of access to the bodies in the Mortar Platoon pig Day 369/166/18 to Day 369/167/12.

Missing Casualties

18.7.2.184 It is submitted that Private U never believed for one moment that the person he killed was not one of the thirteen bodies that were recovered. It is further contended that at no time did he inform any of his officers that "the person that I shot does not fit any of the known circumstances as to how people died that day", or that "the body that I killed was spirited away and, therefore, we will never know the truth of what happened". The witness confirmed that this was never a notion that struck him Day 369/175/18 to Day 369/176/6.

Loden Shot List

18.7.2.185 The witness said in evidence that he did not remember sitting in Major Loden's pig at Clarence Avenue telling him about the "gunman" he shot. He was asked whether he had seen the shot list before (B2283.020) and the witness said that he had only seen it recently when consulting with the Treasury Solicitors. Counsel pointed out to him that his allegations of shooting the pistol man do not appear on the list and the witness said that he accepted that he had not told Major Loden about the circumstances in which he opened fire Day 369/179/25 to Day 369/183/10.

18.7.2.186 A final example of the inconsistent character of the evidence provided by U concerns the experiences described by him after these events. In both his statements to the RMP, U makes no reference to the fact that shooting allegedly continued for some time after the events described by him were over however in his statements to the Treasury Solicitor, U provides the following account:

> "All this time I could hear sporadic firing from behind me in the direction of the forecourt of Rossville Flats. The firing was low velocity and high velocity. I heard no explosions." B769

In his oral evidence in 1972, U stated that the shots heard by him were between twenty and thirty in number WT13.100 E.

18.7.2.187 It is submitted that this serves to demonstrate this witness' willingness to adapt and expand upon evidence that he believes will serve to provide an impression of consistency among the soldiers. The willingness to lie in order to secure this objective is not only confined to U but represents a disregard for the truth which is shared by every soldier materially involved in the events of this day.

18.7.3 Anti-Tank Platoon

18.7.3.1 Anti-tank platoon were an 17 man platoon. They were deployed into Rossville Street in the last 2 Pigs to enter the Bogside, positioned behind the soft-skinned lorries occupied by Composite Platoon. The soldiers in Anti-Tank Platoon were under the command of Lieutenant 119, who was in the first of the Anti–Tank Platoon Pigs, the Platoon Sergeant INQ 1694 was in the second of these Pigs.

18.7.3.2 It has proved virtually impossible to identify which Anti-Tank Platoon soldiers were present in which pig. If the evidence of each soldier on this issue was to be accepted, virtually every soldier was in the second pig with only a tiny minority identifying themselves as having been in the first Pig.

18.7.3.3 We do know that the first Anti-Tank Platoon Pig to enter the Bogside was commanded by Lieutenant 119 and driven by INQ 1581. The second Pig was commanded by Platoon Sergeant 1694 and appears to have been driven by L/Cpl 036.

18.7.3.4 Table 1 at Appendix 1 shows the occupants of each pig with their designated roles and their movements after debussing, as far as we can tell from their own evidence.

18.7.3.5 None of the evidence given by soldiers of Anti-Tank Platoon sheds any light on the question of whether a proper order was given to go through Barrier 12. However, the evidence from a number of soldiers from Anti-Tank Platoon does shed light on the approach of Support Company to the arrest operation which was to be conducted.

18.7.3.6 Lieutenant 119 when asked about the operation "to control" rioters B1435 acknowledged that in reality by the time the Pigs entered Rossville Street there was little prospect of arresting anybody:

"Q. You agree with me, that there was little chance of arresting people?

A. I think by that time – at that stage, yes, sir."

Day 364/101/6 to Day 364/101/14

18.7.3.7 As appears from the Video and Photographic evidence by the time Anti-Tank Platoon debussed, rioters had dispersed from Barriers 12 and 14 and civil rights marchers were also running away from the Pigs down Rossville Street. If the objective was to prevent the march reaching the Guildhall and put a stop to rioting at the Barriers, the objective had been achieved before a single member of Support Company debussed.

18.7.3.8 Despite this the approach of Anti-Tank Platoon was to advance – advance – advance. As appears from Soldier J's RMP statement Anti-Tank Platoon's objective were in a continuous state of advance up Rossville Street. Day 370/111/23

B265 "We were tasked to advance along Rossville Street towards the Lecky Road. . . . As we advanced along Rossville Street . . . I was positioned on the right hand side of Rossville Street advancing near to Columbcille Court . . ." B266 ". . . my rifle which was cocked at the start of the advance . . . I then, accompanied by other members of my unit, advanced further along Rossville Street towards the barricade. . . . The advance was continued and the crowds from the barricade were dispersed."

18.7.3.9 Or as Soldier J articulated in his statement to this Inquiry "The only way to clear an area is to move forward. You can't stand still; you have to move on." B289.004 paragraph 24

18.7.3.10 It is submitted that Anti-Tank Platoon's approach to the arrest operation, demonstrates that by the time the Pigs halted in Rossville Street, if not before, the operation was not a genuine 'arrest' operation but was rather an organised attack or assault on the crowd of unarmed marchers. Which, in the case of Anti-Tank Platoon, involved shooting at fleeing civilians.

18.7.3.11 Anti-Tank Platoon soldiers have suffered an unusually high degree of collective amnesia about the events of Bloody Sunday, and most of these soldiers are unable now to state when and where their vehicles stopped. However the available evidence suggests that Anti-Tank Platoon "leapfrogged" Composite Platoon and were the first soldiers to take up position at the low wall at Kells Walk.

18.7.3.12 That this is the case is demonstrated by EP2.8 a photograph which shows Col. Wilford at Kells Walk. The evidence before the Tribunal is that the soldiers in that photograph are soldiers from Composite Platoon and that the photograph is taken at a point in time at which soldiers from Anti-Tank Platoon have gone through to Glenfada Park. (See for example, B1752.016 paragraph 27 Lt. 119)

18.7.3.13 Given that Anti-Tank Platoon arrived at the Kells Walk Wall first the group of soldiers at the lee of derelict buildings at the top of Rossville Street in P1116 would appear to be the soldiers from Anti-Tank Platoon. P1120 and P1121 show the arrival of soldiers from Anti-Tank Platoon at Kells Walk. As appears from these photographs soldiers from Anti-Tank Platoon passed in front of Kells Walk and appeared to speak with Soldiers P and 017 before returning behind Kells Walk. Neither Soldiers P, nor 017, nor any of the soldiers of Anti-Tank Platoon has advanced an explanation for what occurred at that point.

18.7.3.14 Another major issue which arises in relation to the deployment of Anti-Tank Platoon is the segment of Video 48 V48/11.35 to 11.55 which shows what appears to be a full platoon of soldiers passing around the front of the Kells Walk Wall and deploying down Rossville Street in front of Kells Walk Wall.

18.7.3.15 The majority of soldiers from Anti-Tank Platoon claim not to have entered Glenfada Park North. By the time EP2.8 has been taken there would appear to be no Anti-Tank Platoon soldiers on Rossville Street, in line with the evidence from the photograph and the evidence of the soldiers who identify themselves in that photograph. There is moreover no evidence from photographs, actuality footage or evidence from witnesses before the Inquiry of any retreat by soldiers from Anti-Tank Platoon back up Rossville Street prior to the arrival of Composite Platoon at the Kells Walk Wall.

18.7.3.16 No soldier from Anti-Tank Platoon has ever provided an explanation for the actions portrayed in this video whether in 1972 or subsequently.

18.7.3.17 What the video demonstrates beyond doubt is that:

i) More soldiers from Anti-Tank Platoon than have ever acknowledged the fact, left the low wall at Kells Walk and advanced down Rossville Street.

ii) They did so as a full Platoon, and not with a small group comprising 4 or slightly more soldiers leading the way.

iii) In advancing down Rossville Street they were totally exposed to the Rubble Barricade and clearly did not regard themselves as under any threat from persons behind the Rubble Barricade.

iv) Soldiers from Anti-Tank Platoon as a body failed to give an account of their actions in this respect in 1972. It is submitted that this collective failure demonstrates that soldiers were involved in collusion designed to mask the truth of the actions of Anti-Tank Platoon on Bloody Sunday, particularly with regard to their deployment into Glenfada Park North. Of course Video 48 was not available to the Widgery Inquiry and soldiers did not envisage that video evidence would subsequently demonstrate the dishonesty of their accounts.

v) Soldiers from Anti-Tank Platoon, without exception, have failed to give this Inquiry an explanation as to what was happening, demonstrating that soldiers are continuing to try to prevent the Inquiry from establishing the truth of the actions of Anti-Tank Platoon in either Sector 3 or Sector 4.

18.7.3.18 The accounts given by the soldiers as to how, where and when they fired their shots, when they gave evidence to Lord Widgery, are summarised in a table appended to Inquiry Counsel Report No. 1. As we have previously noted it is unwise to place any reliance on these accounts. Firstly, because soldiers gave different accounts when they were first asked to account for their shooting to Major Loden and subsequently the Royal Military Police, and also because some of their accounts have changed further in their evidence to this Inquiry. For what they are worth, they are summarised below. This summary is confined to the shots claimed to have been fired by soldiers from Anti-Tank Platoon within Sector 3 and does not deal with shots fired by these soldiers in other Sectors.

18.7.3.19 Anti-Tank Platoon admit to having fired 44 shots[9] in total in sectors 3, 4, and 5. Of those shots it is claimed that a total of 13 were fired in Sector 3, 15 if Soldier G's shots fired down the alleyway towards Glenfada Park North are included. However, if the account of soldiers of Anti-Tank Platoon was to be accepted the majority of these shots were fired at a point in time after all of the civilian casualties in Sector 3 had been killed or injured.

[9] This is based upon the premise that Soldier G's shots down the alleyway are regarded as having taken place in Sector 3. The total number of shots include the shots claimed by David Longstaff, INQ 023

18.7.3.20 Of the shots he claims to have fired in Sector 3 L/Corporal F claims to have fired only 1 of those shots over the Rubble Barricade, which shot accounted for the death of Michael Kelly. He claims to have fired a further 8 shots at 3 separate windows in Block 1 of the Rossville Flats at a point in time after Anti-Tank Platoon had returned to Rossville Street from Glenfada Park North and by which time all of the casualties in Sector 3 had been killed. Soldier G also claims to have fired 1 shot at window in Block 1 of the Rossville Flats at this time. In consequence 9 of the shots which soldiers from Anti-Tank Platoon claim to have fired in Sector 3 were not, on their evidence fired over the Rubble Barricade and were, in any event, fired at a stage in the day when they could not account for the deaths or injuries sustained by civilian casualties at the Rubble Barricade.

18.7.3.21 Thus the shots claimed by soldiers from Anti-Tank Platoon which are capable of accounting for the deaths behind the Rubble Barricade total 6.[10] L/Corporal F eventually admitted to having fired a shot from behind the low wall at Kells Walk at a man behind the Rubble Barricade, who he claims was attempting to throw what he believed to be a nail bomb. We know that L/Corporal F killed Michael Kelly. Corporal G fired 2 shots at a gunman in the alleyway between Glenfada Park and Columbcille Court. Corporal E fired 1 shot from the low wall at Kells Walk at an alleged sniper in Block 1 of the Rossville Flats. L/Corporal J fired 1 shot from the low wall at Kells Walk at someone he claimed to have believed to be throwing a nail bomb, however he claims to have missed his target. L/Corporal J fired a further shot from the alleyway between Glenfada Park North who was not one of the soldiers who gave evidence at the Widgery Inquiry and who now claims to have fired a shot in Glenfada Park.

[10] In addition we have the 2 shots fired by Soldier G which while included in this paragraph, cannot account for the deaths behind the Rubble Barricade.

and Columbcille Court at someone throwing a fizzing object from the s-w corner of Block 1.

18.7.3.22 Table 2 at Appendix 1 shows the soldiers who fired and their claims as to where they fired from, what and where they fired at, the number of shots they fired, by whom they were seen to fire, whether they struck their targets and the most likely victims. It will be submitted that it is evident from the inability of soldiers to account for the number of persons killed behind the Rubble Barricade that their accounts of the circumstances in which they fired cannot be accepted. . What is noteworthy with regard to this Table is the fact that no soldier apparently is capable of identifying any soldier from Anti-Tank Platoon shooting over the Rubble Barricade at the time when civilians were shot and killed, with the sole exception of Soldier 027 whose account provides no justification for the shooting by Soldier F of Michael Kelly.

18.7.3.23 Table 3 Appendix 1 shows the accounts of the soldiers as to when they first heard shots.

18.7.3.24 Table 4 Appendix 1 suggests a possible order in which shots were fired by soldiers. Relying, as it does, on admittedly unreliable soldiers' evidence, the contents of this table are highly speculative.

18.7.3.25 Table 5 Appendix 1 represents an attempt to provide a quick-reference tool which allows ready comparison of the accounts given by all the soldiers in Anti-Tank Platoon about certain material matters, such as whether they saw any civilians with weapons or heard any nail bombs. It will be remembered that, in Counsel Report No.2, Jacob Grierson prepared a comprehensive table identifying the apparent discrepancies and inconsistencies between the different statements made by each soldier and in Counsel Report No.3 there is an attempt to compare the accounts offered by the different soldiers.

18.7.3.26 Finally, while it is proposed to deal with the individual soldiers considered most relevant, this section will be confined to dealing with Sector 3. The conduct of the soldiers of Anti-Tank Platoon in Glenfada Park North and Abbey Park will be addressed in Sector 4.

Individual Soldiers in Anti-Tank Platoon

Lieutenant 119

18.7.3.27 Lt 119 was the commanding officer of Anti-Tank Platoon. As such he is the commanding officer of the Platoon which on any account is responsible for the majority of the deaths and injuries which occurred on Bloody Sunday. Anti-Tank Platoon account for all of the deaths and injuries in Glenfada Park North and Abbey Park, as well as for the deaths of Mickey Kelly, Bernard McGuigan and Patrick Doherty[11]. In addition, although they deny responsibility it is evident that, along with Soldier P, soldiers from Anti-Tank Platoon were responsible for the deaths of John Young, Michael McDaid and William Nash.

18.7.3.28 Even Lord Widgery found the conduct of soldiers from Anti-Tank Platoon to have "bordered on the reckless" and that their shooting in Glenfada Park was "without justification".

18.7.3.29 In these circumstances serious questions arise for the commanding officer whose responsibility it was to exercise command and control over the conduct of the soldiers of Anti-Tank Platoon in the course of the operation.

1972 Statements

18.7.3.30 In 1972 Lieutenant 119 made 3 statements about the events of Bloody Sunday, as well as giving evidence to the Widgery Inquiry. In his statement to this Inquiry he has stated that he wishes to:

> "reiterate the difficulty that I now have between determining what I now remember and what I have subsequently learnt about Bloody Sunday, particularly given the period that has passed. Having said which I am confident that what I said in my various witness statements at the time and what I said to the Widgery Tribunal was accurate." B1752.020 paragraph 47

18.7.3.31 The difficulty is that there are significant discrepancies between the various accounts given by Lt. 119 about the events of Bloody Sunday in the statements made by him in 1972.

18.7.3.32 Lt. 119's first RMP statement was made on the 31st January 1972. As Lt. 119 acknowledged in the course of his evidence to this Inquiry, it was made at a time when he had received reports about the actions of his troops and had made a report to Major Loden. Day 364/17/12 to Day 364/17/25 Inasmuch as it refers to Sector 3 he states that:

i) "We had been travelling down Rossville Street in the direction of Lecky Rd when the vehicles came under fire from the Rossville Flats and Glenfadda Flats. It was decided to debus and continue the advance on foot." B1435

ii) "As we were advancing along the right hand side of Rossville Street my Pl came under fire from snipers concealed in the Glenfadda Flats." B1435 The grid reference supplied GR 43201683 represents a position inside and to the south of the Glenfada Park North courtyard.

iii) "Under the command of 'E' and 'F' a number of my platoon entered a square, Columbcille Court ." B1435

18.7.3.33 Lt. 119 acknowledged in the course of his evidence to this Inquiry that, when making his first RMP statement, he would have understood the importance of providing any information to the RMP which would have justified the decisions made by his soldiers in opening fire. Day 374/19/9 to Day 374/19/22

18.7.3.34 Yet by the time he goes to make his second RMP statement on the 4th February 1972 he adds some significant matters not mentioned at all in the first account he gave to the RMP, specifically:

i) Anti-Tank Platoon were advancing towards "the mob of rioters with the object of arresting as many as possible." B1752.036

ii) As they advanced they "came under fire from at least two different directions". B1752.036

iii) On reaching the Kells Walk Wall he "heard a number of shots, from what sounded like a pistol, and also from an M1 rifle." He estimated that 7-10 rounds were fired in total and that they had "passed very close over our heads." B1752.036

iv) He stated that the pistol was "located at ground level at the corner of Glenfada Park Flats" about 30 metres ahead and to his right and that he saw "muzzle flashes" although not the weapon. He speculated that the gunman was "aiming quickly around the corner of this building without exposing himself." B1752.036

v) The M1 rifle was "located at one of the windows of Rossville Flats towards the Southern end and, probably on the top floor, and almost at the end of the building." Again he was unable to see either the weapon or the person holding it but based his conclusion on his "experience and the noise of the report and rounds passing overhead." B1752.037

vi) He then states that he "sent 'E' and 'F', together with a party of men around the right of Glenfada Park and sending for my vehicles at the same time for cover. When I had satisfied myself that the men in the open were now in cover I myself moved into Glenfada Park." B1752.037

18.7.3.35 Thus as between Lt. 119's RMP statement, inasmuch as they relate to Sector 3, there are the following discrepancies:

i) His first RMP statement describes coming under fire from a location within Glenfada Park North from which he could not have come under fire.

ii) In his first RMP statement he describes snipers (plural) firing from Glenfada Park North.

iii) He fails to describe a pistol man behind the Rubble Barricade and makes no reference to anyone firing from the Rossville Flats, in particular there is no reference to the use of an M1 carbine.

18.7.3.36 Lt. 119 then goes on to give a statement to the Treasury Solicitors in which he provides further information, which differs in material respects from his earlier accounts:

i) "I saw that the leading Platoon had come under fire. . . I was carrying an SLR and cocked it. I assume my men did the same. The sound of cocking is clearly audible and when the Commander cocks his weapon, his men will do the same." B1752.043 paragraph 5

ii) The reason for sending men to Glenfada Park North was with the objective of cutting "off the gunmen by the Barricade." B1752.044 paragraph 7

iii) "As soon as my vehicles were in a position to give us satisfactory cover from the fire from Block 1 I moved forward myself into Glenfada Park courtyard." B1752.044 paragraph 7

18.7.3.37 Finally Lt. 119 gave evidence at the Widgery Tribunal in the course of which he stated as follows:

i) That he saw 3/4 strikes land close to the right-hand side of the Mortar Platoon's vehicles. WT14.10E-F

ii) That 3/4 rounds passed overhead from the pistol located at the south east corner of Glenfada Park. WT14.12D-E

iii) That 8/9 shots were fired from the M1 carbine. WT14.13A

iv) That one soldier returned fire and that he was unable to identify that soldier. WT14.13C

v) That after they returned from Glenfada Park Soldiers F and G both left the vehicle with F at the front and G at the left hand side in response to the radio operator pointing out fire from Block 1 and that he saw F fire 2 shots. WT14.15D-E

18.7.3.38 There are significant and material discrepancies as between the various accounts given by Lt 119 in 1972. Specifically:

i) In his first statement he states in clear terms that the Pigs from his Platoon came under fire. When he deals with this subsequently he states that it was the lead Pig from Mortar Platoon which came under fire and that he saw 3/4 shots hit the ground on the right hand side of this Pig.

ii) In his first statement he states that once his Platoon began to advance up Rossville Street on foot they came under fire from snipers inside Glenfada Park. Aside from the fact that he could not have come under fire in Rossville Street from anyone located at the Grid reference which he provided, in his subsequent statement these snipers become, a pistol man at the mouth of Glenfada Park North and someone with an M1 carbine shooting from the top floor of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats. There is no explanation for the fact that in his first statement the snipers can be found at the same location, while in his second they are coming under fire from "two different directions". Moreover there is no explanation for the omission of the detail about the types of weapon being used in the first statement.

iii) The first occasion in which he describes a soldier as having fired a shot from the Kells Walk Wall is during the course of his oral testimony to Lord Widgery, he does not refer to this in any of his written statements.

18.7.3.39 Given that Lt 119 now contends that he has no real memory of what occurred and relies upon his 1972 account as accurate the question is which of the varying accounts he has given, if any, should be accepted by the Tribunal.

18.7.3.40 The second difficulty which arises from Lt. 119's reliance on his 1972 accounts is that some of the accounts are patently and demonstrably untrue as was clearly established in the course of his evidence to this Inquiry.

Pigs Coming under Fire

18.7.3.41 The first example of Lt. 119's evidence being untrue relates to his contention that the Mortar Platoon Pigs came under fire. As dealt with previously, in Lt. 119's original account it was the Pigs from his own Platoon which came under fire, significantly, no other member of Anti-Tank Platoon, apart from Soldier H has ever contended that their Pigs came under fire as they entered Rossville Street.

18.7.3.42 Since making his statement to the Treasury Solicitor Lt. 119 has consistently made the case that it was the lead Pig in Mortar Platoon which came under fire and that he saw 3/4 shots hit the ground on the right hand side of the lead Pig. In his evidence to this Inquiry he has stated that "I still have a snapshot of one of those rounds". Day 363/121/19 to Day 353/121/20

18.7.3.43 The difficulty for Lt. 119 is that EP29.3 which is a still from the heli-tele shows clearly that while the second pig of Mortar Platoon was quite close to the first pig "there was a sizeable gap between the second Pig and the next following vehicle which would have been Major Loden's command vehicle." Day 363/122/8 to Day 363/122/12

18.7.3.44 Video 48 also demonstrates that "the command vehicle is some way behind the second Mortar Platoon Pig and the Ferret is some way behind the command vehicle, apparently at a time when the fist Pig of Mortar Platoon has turned off and then behind the Ferret car are the two Pigs of the Machine-Gun Platoon and then there is the two lorries and then there is the two Pigs of your own Platoon." Day 363/122/24 to Day 363/123/6

18.7.3.45 It was thus clearly demonstrated, through the photographic evidence, and the actuality footage, that Lt. 119 could not have seen the Mortar Platoon Pig come under fire from his location in the first of the Anti-Tank Platoon Pigs. The only conclusion can be that he lied about this in order to provide some justification for the subsequent actions of soldiers in his Platoon involved in the use of lethal force. It is not without significance that he made the case that the fire came from the Rossville Flats in circumstances where soldiers from his Platoon apparently fired a large number of rounds at persons in the Rossville Flats whom they alleged were using weapons against military personnel.

18.7.3.46 The issue is significant not merely because it demonstrates that Lt. 119 was lying about what occurred on Bloody Sunday from the very outset of the engagement, but also because it provided the justification for Lt. 119 and the other soldiers in Anti-Tank Platoon to cock their rifles.

18.7.3.47 It is submitted that even had his evidence been truthful in relation to witnessing Mortar Platoon come under fire, the decision to cock rifles was in breach of the Yellow Card.

Cocking Rifles

18.7.3.48 Lt 119's evidence in his TSOL statement was

> "As we passed through . . . I saw that the leading Platoon had come under fire. When hostile fire is observed it is the practice to cock weapons without further order. I was carrying an SLR and cocked it. I assume my men did the same. The sound of cocking is clearly audible and when the commander cocks his weapon his men will do the same."
> B1752.043 Paragraph 5

18.7.3.49 Giving evidence to Lord Widgery, he said

> "A. Having observed that they were under fire I cocked my weapon as I de-bussed. I had an SLR, sir."

"Q. Of course, when the Platoon Commander cocks his weapon, is it right that the others do as well? A. Yes sir, that is right.

Q. Or should do, at any rate? A. Yes, sir." B1752.048

18.7.3.50 The Yellow Card, as it was in force at that time stated as follows

"...Unless you are about to open fire no live round is to be carried in the breech and the working parts must be forward. Company Commanders and above may, when circumstances in their opinion warrant such action, order weapons to be cocked, with a round in the breech where appropriate, and the safety catch at safe."[12]

18.7.3.51 The action taken by Lt 119 and the soldiers in his Pig in cocking their weapons was therefore contrary to the yellow card, even had Lt. 119 seen the Mortar Platoon Pigs come under fire. He was not of sufficient rank to authorise his men to cock their rifles and his men were not entitled to cock their rifles simply because their Platoon Commander did so. In reality of course Lt. 119 could not see any gunmen and was not "about to open fire".

18.7.3.52 It is unclear whether Lieutenant 119 failed to understand the limitations placed by the Yellow Card or simply disregarded it. The fact that he defended his actions by reference to the Yellow Card suggests the former rather than the latter. However, given the reliance placed by more senior officers on the Yellow Card as controlling the circumstances in which lethal force would be used by soldiers on the ground, Lt 119's apparent confusion as to what was permitted raises major issues. If a Platoon commander and the men of his Platoon were interpreting the Yellow Card as authorising them to cock their rifles in circumstances where they were not so authorised it undermines the effectiveness of the Yellow Card as a method of preventing unlawful use of force. It also raises the question of the extent to which more senior officers, at least within 1 Para, and apparently throughout Northern Ireland, failed to take steps to ensure that soldiers did not use lethal force except as permitted by law.

18.7.3.53 The decision of Lt 119 and the men of his Platoon to cock their rifles, even prior to debussing is also significant in that it illustrates the mindset of Anti-Tank Platoon on Bloody Sunday. A mindset in which there was a total disregard for the limitations placed on the use of lethal force by the Yellow Card and a willingness and eagerness to engage in the use of lethal force should the opportunity arise. An eagerness which went far beyond the use of lethal force in circumstances where soldiers believed themselves to be justified and which ended with the killing and wounding of unarmed civilians fleeing from the soldiers.

Kells Walk Wall

18.7.3.54 Lt. 119's evidence is that after they debussed and as they advanced up the right hand side of Rossville Street they came under fire. We have already addressed the discrepancies between Lt. 119's various accounts as to where they came under fire and from and by what weapons.

18.7.3.55 According to Lt. 119 it was the fact of being under fire which resulted in the decision to seek cover at the Kells Walk Wall. However Lt. 119 is unable to provide any explanation for the scene shown in photograph EP27.6 which shows "an obvious and substantial gap with nothing going on, between the convoy of vehicles at the north of Rossville Street and a group of 40 or 50 people standing up behind the rubble barricade". Day 363/126/1 to Day 363/126/6

18.7.3.56 Lt. 119 states that he was one of the first to debus and one of the first to arrive at the low wall at Kells Walk. B1752.015 paragraph 27 Thus on his own evidence Lt. 119 would have been among the first, if not the first, soldier from his Platoon to arrive at this location. He was also the officer in charge, and thus responsible for decisions with regard to deployment. At the time he arrived Soldiers P and 017 were already positioned in front of the Kells Walk Wall on Rossville Street. Despite this Lt. 119 has never given an account, either in 1972 or subsequently, to explain what was happening in photographs P1119 and P1120 where members of his Platoon advanced forward of the Kells Walk Wall and were involved in communication with Soldiers P and 017.

18.7.3.57 The photographs are significant in a number of respects:.

i) They demonstrate that there was communication between Anti-Tank Platoon and Soldiers P and 017, in circumstances where a reading of their statements would suggest that they were not even aware of each other.[13]

ii) The photographs contradict the evidence of Lt. 119 to the effect that Anti-Tank Platoon were coming under fire as they advanced down Rossville Street in that soldiers were able to move forward of the low wall without cover.

iii) At no stage does it appear that Soldiers P and 017 required cover from the Kells Walk Wall, moreover their location provided no cover from any fire directed from the Rossville Flats, undermining entirely Lt. 119's suggestion of a gunman with an M1 carbine.

18.7.3.58 Lt. 119 has moreover never provided an account of the actions of P and 017 in circumstances where we know that Soldier P fired at least 9 shots down Rossville Street and 017 discharged a number of baton rounds.

18.7.3.59 Lt. 119 also failed to see any of the targets whom his soldiers claim to have fired at, nor any of the nail bombs apparently thrown down Rossville Street and seen by Soldier J.[14]

[13] Soldier P does in the course of his Widgery evidence acknowledge that there were soldiers behind him, although he states that he believed that they were members of Composite Platoon.

18.7.3.60 According to Lt. 119 he was aware of only one soldier from his platoon firing a shot from the Kells Walk Wall and that shot was fired in the direction of the pistol man behind the Rubble Barricade. He has never identified the soldier in question.

18.7.3.61 His explanation for having been aware of only one shot, in circumstances where even on the account of Anti-Tank Platoon there were 3 shots, was that there were "A lot of other things going on at the same time." When asked what other things he replied "just the general situation". Day 363/137/6 to Day 363/137/14 That general situation was one in which Soldier P fired 9 shots, Soldier 017 was firing baton rounds, and at least 3, and probably more live rounds were fired by Anti-Tank Platoon and 4 young men were shot and killed behind the Rubble Barricade. Yet Lt. 119 missed all of those events, and cannot state beyond a reference to the "general situation", what it was that would have prevented him from seeing or hearing what was occurring around him, in circumstances where his platoon were in his immediate vicinity and he was ostensibly in control of their actions.

18.7.3.62 Of the 3 soldiers from his platoon who admit an involvement in shooting from behind the Kells Walk Wall, none of them claims to have fired at a man with a pistol. Soldiers F and J who admit shooting over the Rubble Barricade claim that their targets were nail-bombers, while Soldier E who shot in the direction of the Rossville Flats claims to have shot a gunman with a Luger machine pistol.

18.7.3.63 While Soldier P does claim to have fired at a man with a pistol behind the Rubble Barricade, there are a number of discrepancies between his account and that of Lt 119:

i) Soldier P fired 4 shots and was positioned in front of the Kells Walk Wall when he fired his shots, whereas Lt 119 claims that it was a soldier from his Platoon who fired 1 shot and was positioned behind the Kells Walk Wall.

ii) Soldier P's pistol man was crouching behind the Rubble Barricade while Lt. 119's target was apparently firing from the south-east corner of Glenfada Park North and "aiming quickly around the corner of this building without exposing himself." B1752.036

iii) Most significantly however Soldier P claims to have hit his target while the pistol man identified by Lt. 119 could not have been killed because it is the existence of that pistol man which provides the justification for the movement of Anti-Tank Platoon into Glenfada Park North.

Decision to Move into Glenfada Park

18.7.3.64 According to Lieutenant 119 the decision to advance into Glenfada Park North was in order to cut off the pistol man behind the Rubble Barricade. B1252.044 paragraph 7

18.7.3.65 His evidence is that he initially sent 'some' of his men, including Soldiers E and F into Glenfada Park North, while at the same time sending a runner back to the Anti-Tank Platoon vehicles to bring them forward to provide cover to allow the remainder of his platoon to advance.

> "To cover us from fire from Block 1 I sent a runner to order up our vehicles to give us cover on the road. I then ordered some men forward into the courtyard of Glenfadda Park, hoping to cut off the gunmen by the barricade. As soon as my vehicles were in a position to give us satisfactory cover from the fire from Block 1 I moved forward myself into Glenfada Park courtyard." B1752.044 paragraph 7 See also B1752.037

18.7.3.66 However photographs and actuality footage demonstrate that this account is patently untrue.

18.7.3.67 In the first instance V48/11.35 to 11.55 demonstrates that virtually every member of Anti-Tank Platoon advances forward of the Kells Walk Wall as a unit, the numbers advancing are approximately 17, the number of men in Anti-Tank Platoon, and it is clear that there is not at that time, nor has there been, any advance party. Whether or not they all eventually entered Glenfada Park North, all of Anti-Tank Platoon moved forward down Rossville Street together.

18.7.3.68 It is also clear that members of Anti-Tank Platoon did not wait to be provided with cover from vehicles prior to advancing up Rossville Street. V48/11.35 to 11.55 not only demonstrates that Anti-Tank Platoon moved as a unit, but they did so in the absence of cover and no vehicles had been brought forward when they moved. EP2.8 moreover demonstrates that, at a point in time after Anti-Tank Platoon had left the Kells Walk Wall their vehicles had still not been brought forward.

18.7.3.69 The evidence is also inconsistent with the evidence of Soldier 147. According to Soldier 147 the reason he remained with the vehicle was in order to take messages or to move the armoured vehicle to another position if ordered to do so. B1889 If Soldier 147 is correct, Lieutenant 119 had no need to send a runner back to the vehicles, he could simply have radioed Soldier 147 who was waiting in the vehicle for that very order.

18.7.3.70 It is contended that the evidence given by Lt. 119 that he had to wait for cover before advancing into Glenfada Park North is patently untrue and was advanced for the following reasons:

i) To perpetuate the suggestion that his soldiers were under fire from the Rubble Barricade and Rossville Flats and thus in need of cover. In this way Lt 119 sought to provide some justification for the decisions made by soldiers in his platoon to open fire.

ii) At the same time Lt 119 sought to distance himself from the movement by Soldiers E, F, G and H into Glenfada Park North and thus to distance himself from the murders carried out by his Platoon in that courtyard. Or as it was put by Counsel acting on behalf of the families what he was "looking for was an explanation as to how you as the commander of a platoon had failed to see the actions of that platoon and their conduct in Glenfada Park" Day 364/38/1 to Day 364/38/5

18.7.3.71 Soldier 027, Anti-Tank Platoon's radio operator, has made a number of serious allegations against Lt. 119 and other members of Anti-Tank Platoon.

18.7.3.72 He contends that at a briefing held the night before they went to Derry Lt. 119 said to his platoon "lets teach those buggers a lesson – we want some kills tomorrow". Lt. 119 denies that suggestion.

18.7.3.73 In relation to the events at the Kells Walk Wall he alleges that soldiers from Anti-Tank Platoon, and specifically F, G and INQ 635, opened fire in the direction of the Rubble Barricade and fired a substantial number of rounds, killing people behind the Rubble Barricade. He maintains that he could not see targets behind the Rubble Barricade. This allegation is also denied by Lt 119.

18.7.3.74 It is accepted that Soldier 027 was a witness prone to hyperbole and that he has since qualified the allegations contained in the document prepared by him in 1975. Nonetheless it is the case that the account given by Lt 119 is riddled with inconsistencies and lies. The same is true of the accounts given by other soldiers of Anti-Tank Platoon and the Mortar Platoon soldiers on Rossville Street. These accounts fail entirely to explain how John Young, Michael McDaid or William Nash met their deaths, in circumstances where they were killed by soldiers firing down Rossville Street at the time Anti-Tank Platoon and Soldiers P and U were positioned on Rossville Street.

18.7.3.75 Moreover the account of how Michael Kelly met his death was advanced at an extremely late stage in proceedings and at a time after it had been established that a bullet from Soldier F's gun had killed Michael Kelly.

18.7.3.76 In neither the evidence presented to the Widgery Inquiry, nor the evidence presented to this Tribunal have soldiers from Anti-Tank Platoon told the truth about the extent of the shooting from Kells Walk to the Rubble Barricade. In reality while the account given by Soldier 027 has undoubtedly been exaggerated it is probably as close to the truth as this Tribunal has heard.

18.7.3.77 Certainly soldiers from Anti-Tank Platoon fired more rounds from the Rubble Barricade than they have admitted, they fired them at unarmed civilians and they fired them in circumstances in which they feel unable to justify their use of lethal force.

Command and Control

18.7.3.78 Lt 119 gave evidence to this Inquiry that in circumstances where Anti-Tank Platoon could have been responsible for the deaths of 11 people and seriously wounding 7 others, people who it is accepted were unarmed, his "command and control on [Bloody Sunday] was . . . as it should be". Day 364/11/8 to Day 364/11/11

18.7.3.79 There is some evidence before the Tribunal that Lt 119 did not in fact command the respect of his troops and did not have sufficient authority to exercise command and control over soldiers in his Platoon and in particular some of the more senior NCOs such as Soldiers F.

18.7.3.80 INQ 1253 gave evidence to this Inquiry that he had spoken to Lt 119 shortly after Bloody Sunday and that as a result of that conversation he had got "the impression that it was troops whom he had commanded who were described as "out of control" and running ahead of him and being frightened?" Day 304/6/20 to Day 304/6/29 Or as he stated under questioning from Lt 119's counsel

> "I think he was concerned that he had been responsible for these soldiers and had found it difficult to control them and everything else because of the circumstances on the day. He felt that it -- I am not going to say that he felt it was unmanageable; he just felt that -- that there was something wrong on that day." Day 304/13/4 to Day 304/13/9

18.7.3.81 There is some confusion in INQ 1253's account as to whether the troops being referred to by Lt 119 were soldiers from Anti-Tank Platoon or soldiers from Composite Platoon, in that INQ 1253's impression was that the soldiers being referred to were soldiers from Headquarters but that they were under the command of Lt 119.

18.7.3.82 Another possible explanation for the confusion may be the fact that at least one of the soldiers from Anti-Tank Platoon and a soldier in respect of whom Lt 119 has been expressly critical, had only recently come from Headquarters, Soldier H.

18.7.3.83 Soldier 018, a member of Anti-Tank Platoon has also made a statement which would again suggest that Lt 119 was unable to exert the level of control required of a Platoon commander, or at least the Platoon commander of Anti-Tank Platoon of 1 Para which appears to have been somewhat dominated by figures such as F and G. Soldier 018 describes Lt. 119 as a > "young chap who had not long passed his officer training course. It may have been his first command of a platoon. He came with his own ideas and vision of what he wanted and, initially, he did not gel with the other men in the Platoon. However, he did mellow after a while, this may have been because the NCO's in other platoons had a word with him." B1489 paragraph 6

18.7.3.84 On the evidence before this Tribunal about the conduct of Anti-Tank Platoon on Bloody Sunday, it is clear that those soldiers were either: operating completely beyond the control of Lt 119, or that Lt 119 was in fact in control and that soldiers from Anti-Tank Platoon were out to "get some kills" on Bloody Sunday.

18.7.3.85 What is clear is that the photographic and actuality footage demonstrates that:

i) Lt 119 must have witnessed the killings at the Rubble Barricade, whether they were carried out by Anti-Tank Platoon, or a combination of Anti-Tank Platoon and soldiers from Mortar Platoon.

ii) Lt 119 has been demonstrably dishonest in his account of what happened on Bloody Sunday and that dishonesty has had as its objective the provision of some justification for the actions of his soldiers in using lethal force, while distancing Lt 119 from the use of lethal force.

18.7.3.86 It is contended that Lt 119, was at the very minimum a witness to the use of unjustified lethal force against unarmed civilians behind the Rubble Barricade. That he witnessed the murder of Michael Kelly, John Young, Michael McDaid and William Nash by soldiers of 1 Para, some of whom were members of his own Platoon, and that he has since that time participated in a criminal conspiracy to cover up the events of that day and the murder of innocent civilians by soldiers under his command.

18.7.3.87 Significantly, despite the fact that soldiers from his Platoon were expressly criticised by Lord Widgery for firing without justification, neither Lieutenant 119, nor any of the soldiers identified as being involved in that shooting, suffered any detriment to their career within the military.

Soldier F

18.7.3.88 Soldier F made a number of statements to the RMP which he confirmed that he had signed. His statements to the RMP appear at B121 to B133 and ARR46.5 and ARR46.6.

Soldier F's first statement to the Royal Military police was recorded at 2.04 hours on 31 January 1972. In summary he stated as follows:

(i) They deployed in pairs with himself working with "G". They advanced along Rossville Street towards the Rossville Flats where numerous rioters were located. He was armed with an SLR loaded with a magazine of 20 rounds. When they deployed he started to advance, he cocked his weapon with one round in the breech. The safety catch was on safe. B121.

(ii) They advanced about 30 yards and came under sniper fire which sounded like rifle fire. These shots came from the direction of Rossville flats. They were too far from the flats to pinpoint the gunmen at this stage. B121.

(iii) They continued to advance and got nearer the flats and he could see that there was a barricade across the street at the far end of the flats. He estimated that there were about 200 rioters in the area at that time. These rioters were throwing stones, bottles and other missiles at them and other troops as they advanced. He saw at least 2 nail bombs explode as they advanced. B121.

(iv) They took up position behind a wall on the right hand side of Rossville Street about 40 yards short of the Rossville Flats. They again came under sniper fire from the flats. He estimated that this gunfire was coming from the second floor of the flats and the third window along. He fired three aimed shots at this window and saw all three shots strike the windows. B121, B122.

(v) After these shots the sniper fire stopped and he saw about 30 – 40 rioters leave the barricade and go to the right behind the block of flats out of their sight. B122.

(vi) They then moved right to Glenfada Park where he saw a man light something. He saw it fizzle and spark and realised it was some form of bomb. The man raised his arm as if to throw the bomb. He fired two aimed shots at the man. The first shot struck him in the shoulder and the second struck him in the stomach. The bomb did not explode. By this time other members of his unit had joined them and they had advanced towards the rioters. The rioters dispersed. B122.

(vii) The remainder of his team gave him cover and he checked around the corner of the building. Around this corner he saw huddled against the wall about 20 people including 19 men and 1 woman. He called the remainder of his team and they arrested the 20 people. They then escorted these prisoners back towards Rossville Street covering each other as they moved back. By this time they were ordered to join their vehicles which were now near the Rossville Flats. They had handed the prisoners they had arrested over to the Military Police. B122.

(viii) They got into their vehicles and stayed in that position for a couple of minutes when the Radio Operator said, "There's a sniper up on the flats ". Soldier F jumped out of the vehicle and took up a firing position beside the vehicle. The Radio Operator told him where he had seen the gunman and he saw something move in the window. He fired approximately four aimed shots into the window and saw all four shots strike the area of the window. He changed position to near the vehicle parked in front of theirs. At this time a man appeared in a window in the second from the top floor of the flats. He had a rifle and fired two shots at them. Soldier F then fired four aimed shots at this man and saw the four shots strike the area of the window. He did not know if he hit the gunman or not. After about 10 minutes they withdrew from the area. B122, B123.

18.7.3.89 Soldier F's second statement to the Royal Military Police appears at B126. This statement was made at 14.10 hours on 31st January 1972.

(i) This statement described being shown a collection of photographs by Corporal Brobson of the SIB. He selected two photographs marked Donaghy showing two positions of a male dressed in a denim jacket and trousers with a wound to his left side. He stated that he was reasonably sure that he shot this man at a full-scale riot in the Glenfada Flats on 30th January 1972 for being in possession of nail bombs. B126.

18.7.3.90 Soldier F's third statement to the Royal Military Police appears at B129. This statement is undated but confirmed by Soldier F as having been made on 4 February 1972. In summary he stated that:

(i) At about 1610 hours he was positioned near the junction of Rossville Street and William Street where they had debussed. They deployed to the west of Rossville Street and moved southwards on some waste ground. They came under fire from a gunman who was south of his position but he was unable to locate him. He saw three men move from the barricade north-west into the area of Glenfada Park Flats. One of the men was carrying what looked like a rifle. B129.

(ii) Himself and Soldier G ran down an alleyway and came into a square formed by three blocks of flats and a block of garages. They were positioned at the end of the garages at about 50 metres west of the northwest corner of block 1 of Rossville Flats. He saw three men on the other side of the square about 30 metres away near to 24 Glenfada Park, south west of their position. He shot and hit one man as he attempted to throw an object which looked like a nail bomb. He saw Soldier G fire and hit another of the men who was carrying what appeared to be a rifle. The third man ran off but he believed he was engaged by another soldier. He did not see this engagement. B129.

(iii) They were ordered to remount their vehicles and withdrew. The vehicles were positioned level with the northeast wall of block 1 of Rossville Flats facing south down Rossville Street. As they entered the vehicles three shots were fired at them from a window on the second floor of block 1. The window was about the fifth from the southern end of the flats. The shots passed high over their vehicles. He returned two rounds at the gunman and he saw Soldier G return one shot. He saw all three bullets strike the windows. He could not say if the gunman was hit. B130.

(iv) He did not search the dead, wounded or arrested persons. The orders for firing were to fire when ordered or if the situation was covered by the yellow card issued to troops on IS duties in Northern Ireland. B130.

18.7.3.91 Soldier F's fourth statement to the Royal Military Police appears at B132 and was taken on 15 February 1972 at 1600 hours. A version of this statement is to be found at B167.034. In summary he dealt with arrests and stated as follows:

(i) During the course of the afternoon of 30th January 1972 he observed a group of rioters in Rossville Street in the vicinity of the barricade. He particularly observed four of this crowd and made a mental note of them. They were throwing stones and bottles at Soldier F and his colleagues. B132.

(ii) At about 1900 hours on 30th January 1972 he went to Fort George to try and identify some of the rioters he had previously seen. On his arrival he saw a large group of about 20 persons sitting or standing in a wire enclosure. He observed them and picked out four men as the ones he had previously seen attacking them with missiles in Rossville Street. He was photographed with these men for identification and their names were Bradley, Norrice, O'Keefe and McAllion. B132.

(iii) When he spoke to O'Keefe at Fort George O'Keefe told him he was a priest or part time priest. He was not wearing a clerical collar, which Soldier F thought odd. He did not address any remarks to O'Keefe concerning the clothing and he emphatically denied asking him "where is your fucking collar" as had been alleged by certain newspapers. B132.

(iv) After he identified the four persons mentioned above he took them to one side and waited for his turn to be photographed and documented. He allowed them to stand at ease one behind the other and to keep their hands behind their backs. They were not placed against a wall at any stage. B132.

(v) At about 1910 hours approximately he was processed with his four prisoners. Other members of the regiment were also with their prisoners waiting to be processed. B132.

(vi) He then dealt with allegations in connection with his treatment of two prisoners, namely McLoughlin and Liddy which he stated appeared in an article he had been shown in the Sunday Independent dated 6th February 1972. B167.034. He did not know either of these men, neither did he arrest them. He emphatically denied that he made these men expose themselves at the heat of a stove for half an hour. In fact he did not see any stoves at the detention centre. He did not strike any prisoner at any stage and he certainly did not use a rail and rubber hose pipe to assault any witnesses. The allegation that he spat into Mr McLaughlin's mouth was completely unfounded and without a shred of truth. B133.

(vii) At no time did he ill-treat any of the prisoners. Neither did he see any ill- treatment of any prisoners at this time. The senior NCO of the Coldstream Guards was at the detention centre, as was a Warrant Officer II. He did not speak to him concerning ill treatment of prisoners, neither did anyone warn Soldier F that one of his prisoners could have a heart attack as a result of any such alleged treatment. This was a completely untrue allegation. B133.

(viii) He made two further statements concerning arrests which are at ARR46.5 and ARR46.6.

18.7.3.92 It is submitted that the actions of soldiers, including Soldier F, towards persons in their custody at Glenfada Park North and later Soldier F at Fort George, showed a propensity for physical and verbal abuse towards civilians. Soldier F also demonstrated himself to be capable of gratuitous violence and torture.[15] In addition he was prepared to sign statements and forms concerning arrests which were completely untrue and he continued to lie about his activities in his fourth RMP statement.

18.7.3.93 It is submitted that Soldier F participated in no less than four false identifications of alleged rioters at Fort George picking people out as rioters and falsifying the reasons for their arrest. These matters were put to him at Day 375/152/11 to Day 375/164/16. He relied on a stock answer of not recollecting events described in the documentation he had appended his signature to. However his activity at Fort George demonstrated his personal capacity for sustained lying both orally and in writing. Soldier F must have been told to attend Fort George to make identifications by his army superiors since it is clear that Soldier F not only lied about making a mental note of the four people rioting earlier on Rossville Street, but hadn't actually arrested anybody. Those in charge of Anti-Tank Platoon and Support Company must have been aware at a later stage that Soldier F did not make the arrests he claimed to have done given the nature of the deployment on the day. It was put to him at Day 376/42/7 to Day 376/42/13 that the four statements[16] he made regarding the relevant arrestees which he had signed and declared to be true were, in fact, completely false. He replied:

" If you say so."

In examination at this Inquiry when he was not relying on failing to remember events described in arrest documents and statements he showed himself to be an unreliable and utterly untruthful witness. When Counsel for the families questioned him on an article from a newspaper[17] which included mention of him as a Paratrooper responsible for brutality towards prisoners he denied that any article in which his name appeared had been drawn to his attention at any stage. He declared himself "positive" about this. Day 376/36/6 to Day 376/36/11. It was then pointed out to him that in his fourth RMP statement in 1972 he had mentioned at 167.034 that he had been shown a newspaper article about his treatment of prisoners. It may also be illustrative to point out that at 167.033 he also mentioned allegations against him "by certain newspapers". When Counsel pointed out to him that his previous answer was thus clearly untrue he replied:

" If you put it in that context, it probably was, yes." Day 376/37/16 to Day 376/37/19.

18.7.3.94 Following Soldier F's four statements to the Royal Military Police he made a statement on 19th February 1972 to Lieutenant Colonel H Overbury at Lisburn Barracks. This statement appears at B135 and can be summarised as follows:

(i) After they first left their vehicles in the Rossville Flats area they did not, as he said earlier, fire at a window in the Rossville Flats. He fired these shots later.

(ii) He did however fire. He aimed a round at a man he saw behind the barricade about 40 yards from him who was about to throw a bomb. This was a large object and he saw sparks coming from it. As he said earlier, two nail bombs had earlier exploded near them as they moved towards the Rossville flats. B135.

(iii) When he moved with Soldier G into Glenfada Park he fired two rounds as he said earlier at another man who was about to throw a bomb. The object in the man's hand was definitely a bomb because it was fizzing. Immediately after this Soldier F ran along the eastern wall of Glenfada Park to the corner. As he did so he heard pistol shots coming from the area of the wall at the far end of the Rossville Flats. He shouted "there's a gunman" and he dropped to one knee and took an aim position. He saw a man near the wall facing his direction who turned as if to run. He saw he had an object in his hand. This man was the only person in the area from which gunfire had come. The object in his hand was large and black like an automatic pistol. He fired two rounds at this man and he fell to the ground. B135.

(iv) He then saw 20 people, 19 men and 1 woman standing near him huddled together at the end of the flats at Glenfada Park. He arrested these people with others including Soldier G who came up. B135.

(v) After he had returned to his vehicle and come under fire again as he described earlier, he fired three shots at the second floor window of the Rossville Flats. He also fired a further five rounds at men firing in his direction from the windows of Rossville Flats. He said he could work out the number of rounds he fired on the last two occasions from the ammunition check he made very shortly afterwards when he counted seven rounds left in his magazine. He was certain that he fired one round at the nail bomber at the barricade, two rounds at the nail bomber in Glenfada Park, two rounds at the gunman at the end of Rossville Flats and three rounds at the window of the second floor of the Rossville Flats. The remaining five rounds he fired on two separate occasions at different windows at the Rossville Flats. On each occasion he saw a man with a rifle who had on each occasion fired in their direction. At no time did he fire except aimed shots at the person who was attacking them. B135.

18.7.3.95 Soldier F gave a statement to the Treasury Solicitors which appears at B137 and can be summarised as follows:

(i) He claimed to be armed with an SLR and 20 rounds. (This suggestion may be contrasted with what he later came to tell Lord Widgery at WT14.45 B-C.) As soon as they left the vehicles on the junction of William Street, Little James Street and Rossville Street he heard shots coming from the direction of Rossville Flats. He then cocked his rifle which is the normal procedure on hearing firing. They then took cover in front of a wall at the north west side of Rossville Street near the William Street junction to weigh up the position. He saw explosions in Rossville Street near the north end of Rossville Flats. B137.

(ii) Together with Soldier G they moved off in the direction of the barricade in Rossville Street in order to make arrests. They worked in pairs to cover each other. There was a big crowd of about 200 people running away from them, some towards the barricade. Firing was taking place from the Rossville Flats and he was reasonably sure this was small, automatic fire. This fire was directed to his left. They took cover behind the wall at the south end of the low rise flats on the west side of Rossville Street in front of Columbcille Court. B137. It is notable that it is only in his Treasury Solicitor's statement that Soldier F mentioned "automatic" fire for the first time. He could not explain this when asked why it did not appear in his RMP statements. Day 375/169/15 to Day 375/169/19. It may be the case that it was suggested to Soldier F that Soldier G had talked of automatic fire in his statements and that Soldier F simply agreed with this proposition.

(iii) He then observed a number of people behind the barricade. One of them was attempting to throw what looked like a bomb which was in his hand. It was fizzing. Soldier F had seen nail bombs before and he was in no doubt that this was one. He fired one aimed shot and the person fell. The bomb did not explode. He did not see what happened to it. Then he saw three men leave the barricade. One was carrying a rifle and they moved to the right in the direction of Glenfada Park. B137.

(iv) Himself and Soldier G moved around the side wall to the right and into Glenfada Park in order to cut their retreat off. As they entered Glenfada Park the three men were directly in front of them on the far side. One of them turned and was about to throw what appeared to be a bomb (because it was fizzing) in their direction. Himself and Soldier G dropped down on one knee. He took an aimed shot. The first shot seemed to hit the man at the bottom of his shoulder, the second in the chest. The man fell to the ground. B137.

(v) He then asked Soldier G to cover him as he heard pistol shots in the direction of Rossville Flats. He approached the southeast corner of Glenfada Park. He got down on one knee. He observed a man with a pistol at the far end of Rossville Flats. He thought the man was wearing darkish clothes. The man had a black object which looked like a pistol in his hand. He then shouted to Soldier G "there's a gunman down here" and took two aimed shots and the man fell to the ground. The man was in a half crouching position moving to the right as he shot him. B138.

(vi) He then observed, in the position where he was, about 20 people (19 men and 1 woman) huddled against the side of a wall at the south end of the western block of Glenfada Park. He shouted to Soldier G to assist him in arresting these people. They then ushered them back through the rear of Glenfada Park into Columbcille Court and he saw soldiers taking them off. B138.

(vii) They were then ordered to withdraw back to their vehicles and they went back to the vehicles, which had moved to Rossville Street level to the end of Rossville Flats on the west side of the street. They got into the vehicles. They were checking that nobody was missing and then awaited further orders. By this time the Radio Operator was observing the Rossville Flats out of one of the windows of the vehicle and observed a gunman in the flats. B138.

(viii) Soldier F jumped out of the vehicle and ran to the front of the vehicle and asked the Radio Operator where the gunman was. The Radio Operator indicated where the gunman was and Soldier F fired three rounds in the direction of the window where the Radio Operator pointed out and where Soldier F saw a movement. He saw all of his shots strike a window. It was a second floor window. B138.

(ix) He then moved forward to the front of the vehicle and observed the flats. He spotted a man with a rifle at the same window and he fired three rounds at this window. B138.

(x) He then saw a gunman appearing in the top floor of Rossville Flats. He had a rifle. He saw the rifle fire. Soldier F then fired two rounds at the window. He did not know whether he had hit him or not. B138.

(xi) After this time everything went quiet and they moved around the side of Rossville Flats. He then checked his magazine and found he had seven rounds left. His platoon waited for about ten minutes for further orders and they were then ordered to move back to the waste ground between William Street and Prince Arthur Street. They did so. They then left the area. B138.

(xii) Soldier F confirmed that he made two statements on 31st January 1972 regarding the events of 30th January 1972. He stated these were statements taken in the early hours of the morning and furthermore this was his first operation in the area. Having seen aerial photographs of the area, he now realised some of the positions he gave in these statements were not accurate. He was now satisfied he had a clear understanding of the positions he took up that afternoon. B138.001.

(xiii) He also said he was reasonably sure he had shot a person whose photographs were shown to him called Donaghy. He stated that he shot this person in Glenfada Park. Having seen further photographs of Donaghy he was still reasonably satisfied that he was the person he shot because he bore a close resemblance. B138.001.

Discrepancies and issues arising from Soldier F's statements.

18.7.3.96 In his first RMP statement Soldier F described their deployment and advance along Rossville Street towards Rossville Flats where numerous rioters were located. He stated that when he deployed and started to advance he cocked his weapon with one round in the breech. The safety catch was on safe. He then described advancing 30 yards where he came under sniper fire which sounded like rifle fire. It is clear that Soldier F had his weapon cocked with a live round in the breech at a time when there was no threat to himself or his colleagues from any civilian or activity by gunmen. This was a clear breach of the Yellow Card.[18] At Day 376/64/4 to Day 376/64/7 Soldier F accepted it was such a breach. It was further pointed out to Soldier F that in his Treasury Solicitor statement at B137 paragraph 2, he claimed in contrast to his first RMP statement, that as soon as they left the vehicles the first thing he heard was shots coming from the direction of the Rossville Flats and he then cocked his weapon. Soldier F agreed they were two completely different accounts but could not explain it. Day 376/65/6 to Day 376/66/2. He went on to give further answer to Counsel on this matter which it is submitted is typical of his testimony to this Inquiry. At Day 376/67/7 to Day 376/67/12:

Q: "Which one is true?"

A: "As far as I wrote down at the time, or it was made out at the time, they were both true to the best of my knowledge."

Q: "They both cannot be true can they?"

A: "That is not for me to say."

Soldier F agreed that his Treasury Solicitor statement made the incident "Yellow Card compliant", but again could not explain it. Day 376/66/3 to Day 376/66/16.

18.7.3.97 In his first RMP statement he described shots coming from the direction of Rossville Flats. They were too far from the flats to pin point the gunmen. They continued to advance and as they got nearer the flats he could see the barricade. He then described the missiles etc. and the two nail bombs exploding. They then "took up a position" behind a wall on the right hand side of Rossville Street about 40 yards short of the Rossville Flats. In his third RMP statement he described coming under fire from a gunman who was south of his position but he was unable to locate him. Even though on Soldier F's evidence the soldiers were under sniper fire from the direction of either the flats or the south and could not pinpoint the gunmen or gunman, they continued on foot advancing towards the flats. He did not claim any attempt "to take cover" until his Treasury Solicitor statement. Advancing on foot under fire and towards incoming fire and without being able to locate the gunman, seems an inherently unlikely movement by military personnel. It is submitted the truth of the matter is that they were able to advance under no threat whatsoever to take up position behind the wall.

18.7.3.98 At WT14.66 E-G and WT14.67 A-C Soldier F was examined concerning the nail bombs he heard going off in front of the barricade. He described them as being about 40 metres in front of the barricade and exploded about 40 metres away from him. This placed him about 80 metres from the barricade. They went closer to the barricade after the explosion and confirmed that they kept on advancing, both himself and the other 16 soldiers who came with him. The concept of a group of 16 soldiers advancing into the face of exploding nail bombs towards the persons armed with such nail bombs and taking no action whatsoever is patently ludicrous. The only explanation for such a scenario is that no nail bombs exploded.

18.7.3.99 The above was not the only example from Widgery where Soldier F indicated that he and colleagues had proceeded onwards in the face of hostile fire. He confirmed that following his alleged sighting of the three men with the rifle he moved forward from the wall. He was asked the following at WT14.68 C-D:

Q: "As you came forward you were coming nearer and almost directly into commanding line of fire from Rossville flats."

A: "Yes"

Q: "How many of you moved forward there"

A: "A number of us sir, about four".

It is submitted that once again Soldier F was claiming to engage in a manoeuvre which was at best suicidal. In fact it is another example of a fabrication of a threat of hostile activity, in an attempt to justify army conduct on the day. It is submitted that Soldier F and other soldiers were able to reach the positions they did on Rossville Street precisely because they were not under fire.

18.7.3.100 In his first RMP statement Soldier F described continuing to advance towards the flats and seeing a barricade across the street at the far end where the 200 rioters were located. These 200 rioters were throwing stones, bottles and other missiles at themselves and the other troops as the troops advanced. He saw at least two nail bombs explode as they advanced. It is obvious from independent evidence such as the contents of Video 48/11/.35 to 11.41[19] that no such grouping of rioters or such number of rioters were engaged in that activity in the area described by Soldier F as the soldiers advanced down Rossville Street. The civilian evidence and the evidence of journalists and photographers behind the Rubble Barricade demonstrates that not only were there no nail bombs but the troops were not under attack. The evidence of Liam Mailey who took the series of photographs[20] from behind the Rubble Barricade gave evidence that during the time he was taking his series there were no nail bombs or petrol bombs. Day 163/131/25 to Day 163/132/7. Indeed as the soldiers advanced there were no crowds behind the Rubble Barricade and there was a clear gap between the soldiers and the group of people behind the Rubble Barricade.

18.7.3.101 By the time of his Treasury Solicitor statement the crowd of 200 were being described as running away from the soldiers as opposed to throwing stones, bottles and other missiles at the troops as they advanced. B137 paragraph 3. It is submitted that this alteration can only have come about as a result of Soldier F being advised that his original description was unsustainable on the basis of other evidence or information available. He therefore had to correct his false description in his first RMP statement.

[19] Also P1117, P1118, EP27.6, P1121
[20] AM50.14 to AM50.19

18.7.3.102 In his first RMP statement Soldier F described being behind the wall on the right hand side of Rossville Street and again coming under sniper fire from the flats. He estimated the gun fire was coming from the second floor of the flats, the third window along. He then described firing three aimed shots at this window and saw all three shots strike the windows. It will be seen that these shots completely disappeared from Soldier F's subsequent accounts of events and in fact he later acknowledged to Lt. Colonel Overbury at B135 that he did not witness or engage in any such incident. It is submitted that this incident at the flats was an invention designed to disguise the real use that Soldier F made of his ammunition on the day.

18.7.3.103 In his first RMP statement at B122 Soldier F described, after the sniper fire from the second floor of the flats had stopped, about 30-40 rioters leaving the barricade and going to the right behind a block of flats out of their sight. On seeing this they i.e. the soldiers moved position to their right to Glenfada Park where he saw one of the men light something. Soldier F saw it fizzle and spark and he realised it was some sort of bomb. The man raised his arm to thrown the bomb and Soldier F fired two aimed shots at him striking him in the shoulder and the stomach. The bomb did not explode. By this time other members of the unit had joined them. It is notable that in his third RMP statement at B129 Soldier F described three men moving from the barricade northwest into the area of Glenfada Park Flats. One of the men was carrying what looked like a rifle. At the stage of the third statement he thus claimed to have identified a group of three people as opposed to 30-40 rioters but has added that one of the group had a rifle. His explanation for the apparent differences in these accounts was given at Day 375/143/18 to Day 375/143/19.

"I do not know, maybe it was just the confusion at the time when the statements were made".

This attempt by Soldier F to explain the confusion was repeated throughout his testimony to both the Widgery Inquiry and his evidence to the current Inquiry. It is submitted that it can be completely rejected as inadequate, self-serving and thoroughly dishonest in keeping with the general content of Soldier F's evidence.

18.7.3.104 It is beyond comprehension why Soldier F left such a detail as a man with a rifle out of his first account of the movement from the barricade unless either he was inventing such a detail in his third RMP statement to emphasise the threat he and his colleagues faced or had become aware that Private H, for example, was claiming to have witnessed gunfire from behind the Rubble Barricade with what were possibly short rifles. The explanation may also lie in the fact that in his third RMP statement Soldier F also claims to have seen Soldier G fire and hit another of the same three men in Glenfada who: "was carrying what appeared to be a rifle". This incident did not appear at all in Soldier F's first RMP statement. It may be noted that in his first statement to the RMP at B168 taken at 02.15 on 31 January 1972 Soldier G claimed to have shot one of two men with small rifles in Glenfada Park.[21] This may well explain why Soldier F's account of the incident then appeared in his next RMP statement. It is a reasonable inference that Soldier F was attempting to verify Soldier G's account. For further consideration of Soldier F and Soldier G in Glenfada Park see submission on Sector 4.

18.7.3.105 In his third RMP statement at B130 Soldier F introduced, for the first time, the suggestion that he saw Soldier G fire a shot at windows in Rossville Flats and this is of course following the return to the vehicles. No mention whatsoever was made in the Soldier F's first statement of [21] This was eleven minutes after Soldier F's first statement was taken by the RMP.

Soldier G firing any shots at any time of the day. This may it is submitted provide an example of Soldier F attempting to account for and justify the shooting by Soldier G as well as his own shots.[22] Soldier F of course denied, quite implausibly it is submitted, ever learning from Soldier G or other members of his platoon what shots they had fired after the events of the day were over. Day 375/106/9 to Day 375/106/21.

The Shooting of Michael Kelly.

18.7.3.106 It was only in his statement to Lt. Col. Overbury on 19th February 1972 that Soldier F acknowledged that he fired a round at a man which he saw behind a barricade about 40 yards from him when he was about to throw a bomb. It was a large object and he saw sparks coming from it. This of course is the shot which was claimed to have killed a nail bomber. It was the shot which killed Michael Kelly[23]. Soldier F made no reference whatsoever in his RMP statements to shooting a man about to throw a bomb behind the barricade. It is submitted that it is quite clear that by this stage Soldier F must have been made aware that he was a prime suspect for the shooting of a civilian behind the barricade from his position at the Kells Walk. This is the only rational explanation for the introduction of this information by Soldier F into his statement to Colonel Overbury on the 19th February 1972. Hence the shooting of Michael Kelly had to be justified by the claim that Soldier F had in fact fired at a man about to throw a bomb behind the barricade.

18.7.3.107 At Day 375/165/13 to Day 375/166/18 Soldier F was asked what it was that caused him at the date of his statement to Colonel Overbury to state that he had fired a shot behind the barricade which was the first shot he had fired that day. His reply was, it is submitted, typical of Soldier F's stock response in evidence:

[22] Soldier F confirmed that himself and Soldier G worked as a pair. B121. Further, they were "great mates". Day 376/71/10 to Day 376/71/11.

"Well, that statement was made in 1972 and I obviously made the statement but I cannot recollect anything about it."

He was asked could he explain why the same situation arose concerning mentioning the man with the pistol behind the flats. He replied: "No."

It is submitted that he was then asked a key question by Counsel to the Inquiry at Day 375/166/19 to Day 375/167/1:

" Q. Is the position that by this stage it was becoming apparent in the course of the investigation as to what had happened on the day, that the accounts given by the Anti-Tank Platoon did not fit with the number of victims?

A Not to my knowledge

Q You cannot give us any assistance at all?

A That is correct."

He was then reminded that he had told Lord Widgery that he had not referred to shooting at the barricade because it had slipped his mind and that he had not mentioned the man with the pistol at the rear of the flats because his recollection had been prompted by seeing aerial photographs. He answered that he presumed it was seeing his statements not aerial photographs. Counsel suggested to him that it could not be seeing his previous statements that caused him to produce the statement including two new important shootings. He replied:

---

[23] WT14. 73G Soldier F confirmed the number of his rifle. This was the number of the rifle identified in Dr. Martin's evidence and Soldier F agreed there was no possibility of anybody else using that rifle that afternoon.

"I know, but obviously that is a statement I made but I have no recollection of it ". Day 375/167/2 to Day 375/167/15.

18.7.3.108 It is submitted that it is utterly inconceivable that Soldier F could have any honest reason to omit mention of such an incident in his first four statements to the Royal Military Police which were taken before the statement to Colonel Overbury on the 19th February 1972. He could only have come to mention it after being forced to do so by further information or circumstances being brought to his attention. Thus, not only does Soldier F mention the shooting but of course attempts to provide a justification for it also. B135.

18.7.3.109 The following exchange occurred at Day 376/86/15 to Day 376/86/22:
Q: "We know you shot and killed Michael Kelly because the bullet that you fired was recovered from his body. You know that do you not?"

A: "Yes."

Q: "The overwhelming evidence in this case is that Michael Kelly was completely and utterly innocent at the time he was shot; do you follow me?"

A: "Yes."

18.7.3.110 Soldier F's reason for the omission of any reference to the shooting at the barricade until the statement to Lt. Col Overbury was stated at Day 376/53/20 to Day 376/53/25.
Q ".does it follow from what you are saying that it did just slip your mind that you had killed a 17 year old boy when you made that statement?" [i.e. his first RMP statement]

A "During the events of the day there was a lot of confusion and it is possible, yes."

18.7.3.111 When the issue of why he had not mentioned his shooting of the man at the barricade or the man with the pistol behind the Rossville Flats was raised at Day 375/138/25 to Day 375/139/6 Soldier F's reply was:

"All I can say was there is errors of in the judgement of making the statements and they got confused."

18.7.3.112 At WT14.65 E-G Soldier F was asked about the numbers behind the barricade. He claimed there were about six to eight people behind it. When asked were the people behind the barricades throwing stones towards the troops, Soldier F gave the following answer:
"Only the person I observed was throwing."

The evidence of Soldier F to Widgery was therefore that at the time he shot the man at the barricade with the bomb, there was no other activity taking place around the man which could have justified firing.
Although it is virtually impossible to rely on anything Soldier F said as constituting the truth, in the context of this answer, it is highly unlikely that if other persons had been throwing any objects around Michael Kelly, which constituted a threat to Soldier F or his colleagues that Soldier F would have failed to mention this. Any suggestion therefore that it was the conduct of other persons around Michael Kelly that caused him to be shot by accident or ricochet is untenable on the evidence of the person who fired the fatal shot.

18.7.3.113 At Day 375/83/17 to Day 375/83/19 Soldier F was asked the following:
Q "Were you aware of other people falling at or in the vicinity of the barricade, apparently shot?"

A "No."

It is submitted that there is no doubt that throughout his statements Soldier F was sure he hit the person he aimed at. Any suggestion that the bullet which hit Michael Kelly was intended or struck someone else before him is unsustainable on the account of Soldier F.

As to his reasons for firing, the evidence of Soldier F is so discredited as to be unworthy of belief. He has been and remained in his evidence to this Inquiry a persistent and wholly transparent liar. One of the major reasons for his lies has been his knowledge that he murdered Michael Kelly at the Rubble Barricade. Even if it were not possible to conclude this on the evidence of Soldier F and the circumstances of the shooting itself, the civilian evidence that Michael Kelly was not engaged in any conduct justifying the application of lethal force confirms overwhelmingly that on 30 January 1972, Michael Kelly was murdered by Soldier F at the Rubble Barricade.

Soldier F and the shooting at the windows of the Rossville Flats

18.7.3.114 While there is disputed evidence about whether or not a ceasefire order was given at Kells Walk prior to Anti-Tank Platoon entering Glenfada Park North, there is no doubt a ceasefire order had been given when Soldiers F and G fired their rounds at the Rossville Flats. The need to justify the shooting after such an order no doubt contributed to the need to obtain a series of statements from soldiers who could report a gunman or gunmen shooting from the Rossville Flats at soldiers after their vehicles had moved up Rossville Street. The RMP clearly went to considerable lengths to obtain information designed to justify the actions of Soldiers F and G. See Table x attached showing the order in which soldiers from Anti-Tank Platoon made their statements.

18.7.3.115 In his first RMP statement at B123 Soldier F described how having returned to their vehicles on Rossville Street and after being in position for a couple of minutes their Radio Operator said: "There's a sniper up in the flats." Soldier F jumped out and took up a firing position beside the vehicle. The Radio Operator told him where he had seen the gunman and he himself saw something move in the window. He fired approximately four aimed shots at this window and he saw all four shots strike in the area of the window. He changed position to near the vehicle parked in front of theirs. At this time a man appeared in a window in the second from the top floor of the flats. He had a rifle and fired two shots at the soldiers' position. Soldier F then fired four aimed shots at the man and saw the four shots strike the area of the window. He did not know if he hit the gunman or not.

18.7.3.116 Soldier F's third RMP statement was made on 4th February 1972 which is significant date in the statement taking exercise. The Tribunal is referred to Section 5 of these submissions where it is demonstrated that a significant number of soldiers made statements on that date which were expressly designed to corroborate and justify the use of lethal force by other soldiers.

18.7.3.117 As can be seen a number of soldiers of Anti-Tank Platoon fall into that category and made statements on 4 February 1972 including, of course, Soldier F himself. Soldier J made a statement at 15.10 hours, (B269, B270), Soldier 018 at 19.15 hours, (B1487) Soldier 036 at 19.30 hours, (B1629, B1630) Soldier 147 at 20.00 hours (B1886, B1887) and Soldier F, time unknown. Soldiers 018, 036 and 147 had not made any statements prior to this date. The statements of each of soldiers 018, 036, 147 and Soldier J deal with the incident where they say they came under fire from the Rossville Flats and Soldiers F and G returned fire. In spite of the intention of this statement taking exercise by the RMP significant discrepancies arise in the 4th February 1972 accounts which are examined in detail in the submission on Soldier 036.

18.7.3.118 In his third RMP statement at B130 which was his 4th February 1972 statement Soldier F described what is clearly the same incident which occurred following the withdrawal from Glenfada and an order to remount into their vehicles. Their vehicles were positioned level with the northeast wall of block 1 of Rossville flats facing down Rossville Street. On his account in this statement three shots were fired at them from a window on the second floor of block 1 of the Rossville flats as they entered the vehicles. The window was described as about the fifth from the southern end of the flats. The shots passed high over the vehicles. Soldier F claimed to have returned two rounds at the gunman and saw Soldier G return one shot also. He saw all three bullets strike the windows. He could not say if the gunman was hit.

18.7.3.119 The incident described is at the same time and location as the two incidents of the four shots described in the first RMP statement and is clearly the same incident. It is not clear from this statement whether Soldier F was describing an additional two shots at the relevant location or was now claiming only two as opposed to previously claiming two sets of four in the first RMP statement. He did not mention the previous account in his third statement. It may be significant or it may be sheer coincidence that this is the only occasion that Soldier F ever claimed to have fired two shots at this location and that is precisely the number of shots attributed to Soldier F in the 4th February statement of Soldier 036. Soldier 018 described a total of three shots fired by Soldier F and Soldier G which is again a precise combined total of the shots claimed by Soldier F and Soldier G at that stage. Of course this exercise in chicanery is rendered redundant when Soldier F by the time of his statement to Lt Colonel Overbury on 19 February 1972 has to change his shot number again back to eight because by now he has to introduce the single shot at the Rubble Barricade and the two shots at the pistol man behind Block 2 of the Rossville Flats.

18.7.3.120 The third RMP statement introduced Soldier G as firing for the first time at the same general location. In spite of Soldier F's assertion to the Inquiry that he hadn't been made aware of other people's shots it is inherently likely that by the time Soldier F had come to make this statement that he had been made aware that Soldier G had admitted firing a shot at this location in his first RMP statement.

18.7.3.121 In his statement to Lt. Colonel Overbury, Soldier F referred to three shots he fired at the second floor window of the Rossville Flats following his return to the vehicle on Rossville Street. As well as these three shots he also described firing five rounds at men firing in his direction from the windows of the Rossville Flats. He introduced the figure of five for the first time into this statement fired on two separate occasions having previously divided the shots as four and four in his first RMP statement. Significantly he did not divide the five rounds up. It is submitted that there is no reason why he could not have done so in this statement given his knowledge as the shooter and the fact that he was quite happy in previous statements to divide the number and location of these shots. It is submitted that he must have been either by his own decision or on the advice of others declining to pin down the division of these shots pending further information. This submission is supported by the fact that when he came to speak to the Treasury Solicitor he was able to divide these shots into three and then two. B138 paragraph 10.

18.7.3.122 At B138 in his statement to the Treasury Solicitor Soldier F described having returned to the vehicles and awaiting further orders. Soldier F described the Radio Operator having observed a gunman in the flats out of one of the windows of the vehicle. According to the Treasury Solicitor statement, the Radio Operator was asked by Soldier F where the gunman was. It was the Radio Operator who indicated where the gunman was located. Soldier F fired three rounds in the direction of the window the Radio Operator had pointed out and where Soldier F saw movement. He claimed to see all of his shots strike the window. It was the second floor window.

18.7.3.123 In his Treasury Solicitor statement Soldier F then described moving forward to the front vehicle and observing the flats. He spotted a man with a rifle at a third floor window. Soldier F fired three rounds at this window.

18.7.3.124 He then claimed to have seen a gunman appearing on the top floor of Rossville flats. The man had a rifle. Soldier F claimed to have seen the rifle fire and he fired two rounds at the window. He could not say whether he had hit him or not. Soldier F then gave a further description of everything going quiet but moving round to the side of Rossville flats and there checking his magazine where he found seven rounds left. Thus his statement to the Treasury solicitor has amplified the claim first made to Colonel Overbury on the 19th February of a further five shots fired on two separate occasions at the Rossville Flats. It is quite clear once again in our submission that the pattern of Soldier F's evidence is to provide justification for his firing of what he claims to have been thirteen shots.

18.7.3.125 At Day 375/171/1 to Day 375/171/25 it was put to Soldier F that he had in his first RMP statement divided the shots into groups of four and four but by the time of his statement to the Treasury Solicitor the division of the shots had become three, three and two. He replied as follows:

" I cannot answer that. I do not know. I really do not know. Obviously it is in my statement and I have put it down, so it obviously happened but to answer your question I do not know."

Soldier F's evidence to the Widgery Tribunal and the shooting at the windows of Rossville Flats.

18.7.3.126 With regard to the firing at the windows after return to the vehicles at WT14.50 A-D Soldier F was being asked questions about the gunman at the window which the Radio Operator had pointed out to him. In this account Soldier F added substantial further detail to the account he gave in his statement to the Treasury Solicitor. When asked to describe the movements he actually saw, he claimed that it was the sort of movement "as though someone was pulling a rifle out of a window". When asked if it looked like a rifle, he replied yes. This may be contrasted with his accounts in his first RMP statement and his statement to the Treasury Solicitor which included only a description of "movement". It is submitted that on any reasonable reading of the exchange between Soldier F and Mr. Gibbens at WT14.50, Soldier F was making the details of his account up as he went along. He then returned at WT14.50 C to describing seeing the movement of a person and, as Soldier F fired, the person moved back. When Soldier F was asked was he firing at the window, he replied yes. It may also be noted in this account that Soldier F described shooting at the third window along on the second floor. His first RMP statement at B125 contained no such description of the location of the window and his Treasury Solicitor statement contained only a description of a "second floor window". Soldier F was once again providing detail at Widgery he had not included in his previous accounts.

18.7.3.127 Soldier F was then examined on the second alleged gunman in the flats as described in his Treasury Solicitor statement. This was the alleged gunman seen when he had moved to the front vehicle. This gunman was described at WT14.51 A as on the same floor as the previous gunman only the next window along that is the fourth window. It was pointed out to Soldier F at WT14.74 A-D that he had told the Treasury Solicitor at B138 paragraph 10 of his statement that he had seen the man at a third floor window. Soldier F's response was that "with the number of windows" he was confused. He claimed it was the second floor window. It is submitted that Soldier F's confusion arose solely from an inherent lack of truth in the accounts of the various incidents.

18.7.3.128 Soldier F's description of this gunman in his statement to the Treasury Solicitor at B138 is noticeably bare referring only to a man "with a rifle". In his evidence at the Widgery Tribunal at WT14.51 A Soldier F described the rifle as being out of the window pointing it in Soldier F's direction. He went on to describe a figure with a rifle sticking out of the window in his general direction. He claimed that this was not in an aimed position but he recognised it as a rifle. No such detail was given to the Treasury Solicitor. It is submitted that once again it is clear that Soldier F was embellishing his testimony at Widgery to bolster his account of events. He again claimed that his round struck the window but did not see whether they struck the man with the rifle. Again this information was not given to the Treasury Solicitor. The man then moved back from the window. After Soldier F had fired the man had just completely gone. At this stage Soldier F claimed that Soldier G was firing also but could not see what his target was. Soldier F claimed that Soldier G fired one round from the second vehicle. It is not quite clear how Soldier F would have known this or observed this since as Soldier F made so clear at WT14.52 A Soldier G fired from the second vehicle behind the vehicle that Soldier F was firing from.

18.7.3.129 In his statement to the Treasury Soldier F described the third gunman as appearing on the top floor of the Rossville Flats. He had a rifle and Soldier F claimed to see his rifle fire. Soldier F fired two rounds at the window. He could not see whether he had hit the man or not. In his evidence to the Widgery Inquiry at WT14.52 A-G Soldier F claimed to be able to identify the weapon as a single barrelled weapon and was able to say that whilst the gun man was not aiming at him, the gunman was aiming at troops at the junction of William Street and Rossville Street. Again Soldier F was providing detail under questioning which was quite remarkable in contrast to the paucity of detail on very significant events through his first RMP statement to his Treasury Solicitor statement.

18.7.3.130 It does not appear to have been explored with Soldier F at Widgery why a gunman with Anti- Tank Platoon personnel, vehicles and possibly other soldiers directly beneath him at Rossville flats should chose to put his weapon out of a window and fire up Rossville Street towards the William Street and Rossville Street junction. Soldier F claimed to have seen the muzzle flash from the window and it was one shot. He again claimed that he had been ordered to withdraw to the side of Rossville flats where he checked his magazine and found seven rounds left in his magazine out of ten. It is submitted that on an examination of the combined content of Soldier F's various statements and his evidence to Lord Widgery the reader is presented with a concoction of lies and self-serving justifications for the discharge of his weapon on the day.

18.7.3.131 Some insight into the conundrum of Soldier F's numerous different accounts of shot fired at the windows of the Flats can be gained by reference to WT14.60 G and WT14.61 A-E. Under cross-examination by Mr. McSparran QC the following exchange occurred after Soldier F's confirmation that he had told the SIB that he had fired a total of 13 shots:

"Q ... but you did not tell them you had fired two rounds at a man with a pistol? [i.e. the man behind block 2 of Rossville Flats.]

A. No sir.

Q. Will you tell the tribunal how you accounted for those two rounds at the time you made the statement to the SIB?

A. At the present time [meaning the time he was making the statement], sir, I mixed my rounds up. I was firing at the flats and later I then accounted for the rounds when I was firing at the gunmen...

Q. You told the SIB investigator that you had fired another two rounds at the flats?

A. Yes sir.

Q. Was that two rounds fired as a separate shooting incident at the flats or was that two rounds fired in addition to the rounds you had already mentioned had already been fired at any one of the separate incidents?

A. In addition, sir.

Q. So you detailed another shooting incident at the flats to the SIB Investigator did you which did not take place?

Lord Widgery: Is that right?

Witness: Could you repeat the question, again, sir.

Q. You told the SIB Investigator about shooting, firing two shots at the flats?

A. At that time sir.

Q. When, in fact that had not occurred at all. Those were two shots you had fired at a man with a pistol on the ground?

A. Yes sir.

Q. So apart from not telling the SIB investigators about firing at the man with the pistol, that was one inaccuracy, you failed to tell him about that?

A. Sir those two shots were mentioned came into account in one of the previous statements. I mentioned four rounds at one of the windows.

Q. That meant in one of the previous statements you said you had fired four rounds at one of the windows when you had fired two?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Why did you say you had fired four at a window when you only fired two?

A. At the time I made those statements it was in the early hours of the morning. There had been all riots during that day and I couldn't quite think about it..."

The exchange then continued regarding why Soldier F had made the statements he had. Counsel for the families in 1972 did not of course have access to the previous RMP statements or the two subsequent statements to Lt.Colonel Overbury or the Treasury Solicitor.

18.7.3.132 It is submitted that the following propositions arise out of the above exchange:

(i) Soldier F at Widgery admitted claiming shots he fired at the Rossville Flats in his RMP statements were in fact shots he fired at the man with a pistol behind block 2 of the Rossville Flats. He therefore admitted to Lord Widgery that he had concealed shots he had fired by claiming to have fired shots he had not in fact fired. He was concealing his shots behind block 2 and this could only have been because having fired those shots he could not justify them. The later allegation that the man had a pistol behind block 2 was either his own attempt or one which was suggested to him to justify his murderous and unlawful activity in firing behind block 2.

(ii) In the above exchange with Mr. McSparran Soldier F's own lies were beginning to unravel. In the exchange with Mr McSparran he clearly accepted the account of these two shots being fired at the window in the Rossville Flats were a substitute for his real two shots behind block 2. As we now know he had indeed given an account of firing two shots at the Rossville flats in his third RMP statement at B130 and these may well have been the two shots he was thinking of at this point in the exchange. As can be seen from the above Widgery extract during the exchange with Mr. McSparran Soldier F began by claiming the two shots were "additional" to the previous shots he had accounted for to the RMP. If that was the case Soldier F by the time of his third RMP statement had admitted fifteen shots. In the course of the exchange with Mr. McSparran he attempted to bring the total back to thirteen by saying that those two shots had in fact been part of an account of firing four shots at the Rossville Flats he had given to the SIB. The only account of four shots he gave to the SIB were the two groups of four shots at the Rossville Flats windows in his first RMP statement at B123. Soldier F was clearly capable of not only telling lies but lies within lies.

(iii) It is submitted that the two shots at the pistol man behind block 2 represented two out of the three shots which Soldier F had said in his first RMP statement had been fired at the flats by him on de-bussing. The third shot was his shot at the barricade. He had told Lt. Colonel Overbury that the three early shots were in fact fired later as part of the eight shots at the windows of the flats thus keeping his total at thirteen. He was still attempting to maintain this, even at this Inquiry at Day 376/61/3 to Day 376/61/22. It is submitted that this was a clear and deliberate deception by Soldier F to cover three previously unacknowledged shots at Michael Kelly and behind block 2 of the Flats.

(iv) Whether the two shots at the pistol man were concealed as part of the account in the first RMP statement or the account in the third RMP statement he of course did not own up to the pistol man shots behind block 2 until the statement to Colonel Overbury on 19 February 1972. It is submitted that the only reason he would have done so was by that stage he was aware or had been made aware by that date that he was the main candidate for the shooting behind block 2 of the Rossville Flats and could not get away with not admitting to any shots in that area. He therefore was forced to admit shooting there and invented two shots at a man with a pistol to justify it.

(v) The question as to why Soldier F made the third RMP statement claiming two shots were fired at the window in Rossville Flats is not clear. It may be that these two shots were an additional two to the thirteen he admitted to in his first RMP statement and if so the only logical inference is they were required to cover two further unjustified shots he had not admitted to or thought might be discovered. It is important to emphasise that there is no independent verification of exactly how many shots Soldier F fired on Bloody Sunday or where he fired his total number of shots. Given the amount of ammunition he was carrying, even as admitted, to Lord Widgery, it is highly likely that he fired more shots than he admitted. This would have particular significance in every area in which Soldier F is known to have discharged shots.

18.7.3.133 It is submitted that there can be little doubt that Soldier F and Soldier G fired a number of shots at the Flats and were clearly responsible for firing at the window of 12 Garvan Place.[24] The shots were fired at Fulvio Grimaldi[25] who was attempting to take photographs of the soldiers from the window of the flats. The window was located on the second floor and was the third window along when moving north to south. The bullet holes are shown at P544.[26] In his evidence to this Inquiry at Day 375/173/24 Soldier F was asked did he fire at least six shots at the same window said:

[25] M34.65 paragraphs 76 to 80

"I cannot remember. I have no recollection."

18.7.3.134 It is further submitted that no gunman fired at Soldier F or Soldier G in the Rossville Flats. Soldier F did not see a gunman or a weapon at that location. He did not see any shots or hear any fire. Nor did he believe he saw a gunman or a weapon. Their shots were fired wholly without justification. These shots demonstrate the mindset of the soldiers of Anti-Tank Platoon and in particular Soldiers F and G to the use of lethal force.

18.7.3.135 It would appear that the civilian and photographic evidence suggests there was possibly a total of seven shots. If this evidence is correct there is a question of what happened to the excess number of shots fired by Soldier F and Soldier G. Since neither soldier ever suggested that they had done anything but hit the window targets they were aiming for it cannot be the case that they simply missed. If the civilian evidence is accepted as correct, in all probability one or more of these shots accounts for some of the shooting by Anti-Tank platoon soldiers over the Rubble Barricade. The issue of shots over the Rubble Barricade is considered below.

[26] The photographs show that six shots went through the window. However, a number of the persons present refer to a further shot hitting the window frame. Margaret Featherstone AF5.4 paragraphs 20 to 23 refers to one shot hitting the metal frame, then six more coming through the window. Susan North said the following: "I was under the distinct impression there were seven bullets and one had hit the window frame which can also be seen in the photograph". M35.8 paragraphs 48 to 49, M35.9 paragraphs 53 to 58.

Soldier F and the other shots at the Rubble Barricade.

18.7.3.136 As has been seen already in this submission Soldier F admitted for the first time to Lt. Colonel Overbury on 19 February 1972 that he fired one shot at the Rubble Barricade. He maintained that suggestion in his statement to the Treasury Solicitor and to Lord Widgery. This was the bullet traced to the body of Michael Kelly. At Day 375/85/4 to Day 375/85/15 Counsel to the Inquiry asked Soldier F could he tell the Tribunal how the three, namely John Young, Michael McDaid and William Nash died. Given his known location and the timing of these shootings following Michael Kelly this must be an obvious lie. He said he could not nor could he say who shot them. Further he said he did not see them fall. He could not offer any explanation why on the accounts given to Lord Widgery and this Tribunal by the Anti-Tank Platoon there was no explanation for how the three died. He denied there had been a conspiracy of silence.

18.7.3.137 However the following matters were put to Soldier F and his response to them suggests not only his presence at the barricade at the time of these shootings but a probability of further shots by Soldier F at the Rubble Barricade in addition to the shot which killed Michael Kelly.

Counsel to the Inquiry put a portion of the evidence of Soldier 027[27] to Soldier F at Day 375/86/19 to Day 375/90/15.

"F of my section reached the pavement by the end of the small wall, he went down into a kneeling position beside it, raised his rifle to his shoulder, and without pause or hesitation commenced firing towards the centre of the crowd..." B1565.014.4.

Soldier F was asked if that was an accurate description. He replied: "Not as far as I can remember, no". The following exchange then occurred:

Q: "How are you able to tell if you have no recollection of the circumstances of your firing?"

A: "Well, basically I don't remember it anyway."

Q: "So you cannot tell us whether it is accurate or not?"

A: "That is correct." Day 375/87/10 to Day 375/87/22.

This passage was again put to Soldier F at Day 376/147/10 to Day 376/147/17.

Q: "He is likely to be right, is he not that when you fired towards the crowd at the barricade, you fired from a kneeling position?"

A: "It is possible yes."

At Day 375/87/17 to Day 375/87/25 a further portion of Soldier 027's statement at B1565.039 at paragraph 84 was put to Soldier F:

"Within seconds, other soldiers came on the scene, some kneeling and some standing joining in the firing. I could see strikes on the barricade. Two people towards the centre of the barricade fell within a few seconds of each other in the opening burst of firing." Counsel to the Inquiry then put the following to him:

"Q: So the picture that he is giving is that you come to the wall and immediately begin firing and then other soldiers join firing at the barricade and two fall. Are you saying you have no recollection of that? A: That is correct." Day 375/87/23 to Day 375/88/2.

Soldier F's reply was not a denial but a confirmation that he had no recollection of that. Further quotations from Soldier 027's statement were put to Soldier F including the following from B1565.040 paragraph 90:

"I would estimate that we were at that position for a number of minutes which is a long time in this context. I cannot say how many each individual fired. It all merged into a general outburst of shooting. Initially when there just two or three soldiers firing I would say that there were steady shots being fired at intervals of a second or two".

Soldier F was asked at Day 375/89/8 to Day 375/89/9:

Q: "Is that what happened?"

A: "I do not remember."

It is submitted that the absence of a denial is critical in assessing the weight to be given to these descriptions of events. Soldier F did not challenge the veracity of these accounts given by Soldier 027. Whilst certain other areas of Solder 027's evidence may give some cause for concern as to reliability this area was not challenged by the witness who was being accused.

A further quotation from Soldier 027 was put to Soldier F at Day 375/89/10 to Day 375/89/19:

"The level of shooting grew as more soldiers arrived. I have been told that during the Widgery Inquiry, Lance Corporal F started, firing in a kneeling position, it would not have taken long to fire three or four rounds. My impression was that the firing continued during the following minutes."

When asked did he have a recollection of the firing continuing for a number of minutes, Soldier F replied "No I do not". It is submitted that during this entire exchange Soldier F did not deny any part of the incident referred to by Soldier 027.

18.7.3.138 Soldier F did not admit until 19 February that he fired at all at the Rubble Barricade. The account given by Soldier 027 set out above was not denied by Soldier F and he acknowledged he could not tell whether it was accurate or not. It is submitted that it is entirely probable that Soldier F fired further shots at the Rubble Barricade in addition to the shot that killed Michael Kelly along with Soldier G and the other Anti-Tank Platoon soldiers at the Kells Walk wall.[28]

18.7.3.139 As has already been demonstrated the statement made by Soldier F to Colonel Overbury on 19th February 1972 contains very significant differences from the statements made to the Royal Military Police.

(i) In this statement Soldier F stated that he did not, contrary to what he said earlier in his first RMP statement, fire at a window in Rossville Flats after they first left their vehicles in the Rossville Flats area. He, in fact, fired these three shots later and formed part of his firing at the windows of the flats following his return to their vehicles. B135. The removal of these shots from the total of course allowed Soldier F to account for the shooting of Michael Kelly at the barricade and the two shots at the man with the pistol behind block 2 of the Flats. Soldier F confirmed this was what he had done at Day 376/59/15 to Day 376/60/6.

(ii) For the first time he introduced an acknowledgement that he fired a round at a man which he saw behind a barricade about 40 yards from him when he was about to throw a bomb. This was the shooting of Michael Kelly and is discussed at above.

(iii) Soldier F's account in evidence at WT14.67 F-G was of a nail bomb fizzing in the man's hand, but presumed it fell to the ground and confirmed there was no explosion. It is notable in our submission that the same fate befell the nail bomber allegedly seen by Soldier F in Glenfada Park North. It is submitted that this is not likely to have been co-incidental incompetence on the part of two nail bombers but in reality likely to have been because Soldier F invented both accounts. It also made it easier for Soldier F to stand over the two accounts if he said the nail bombs did not explode should anyone have asked why no one else saw or heard the nail bombs explode.

(iv) In this statement to Lt. Colonel Overbury Soldier F, also for the first time, introduced the account of hearing pistol shots coming from the area of the wall at the far end of the Rossville flats. He described shouting "there's a gun man" and dropping to his knee into a kneeling position. He saw a man near the wall facing in his direction who turned as if to run. He saw the man had an object in his hand. He was the only person in the area from which the gunfire had come. The object in his hand was large and black like an automatic pistol. Soldier F fired two rounds at the man and he fell to the ground. Thus again Soldier F introduced a description of firing and shooting a man in an area he had not mentioned at all at any stage in his four previous statements to the Royal Military Police. The only rational explanation for this particular omission is that Soldier F wanted to conceal his unlawful shooting in that area. By the time that Soldier F came to make the statement to Colonel Overbury on the 19th February 1972 the only rational explanation for mentioning was that he had been made aware that he was a likely candidate for shooting from the corner of Glenfada Park North behind block 2 of the flats. He therefore had to produce a justification. B135.

(v) As has been seen at paragraph 20.5.4.336-342 above Soldier F significantly reworked his distribution of shots at the windows in Rossville Flats in contrast to his previous RMP statements.

(vi) He claimed he could work out the number of rounds he fired on the last two occasions from the ammunition check he made shortly afterwards when he counted seven rounds left in his magazine. B135. He later told the Treasury Solicitor that this was done when they moved round the side of Rossville Flats. B138 paragraph 12. This was of course before he went to barracks and then waited four hours to make his first statement.[29] If Soldier F had been giving a remotely truthful account of his actions he could have provided this information in his first or even one of the subsequent RMP statements. He claimed to have been certain that he fired one round at the nail bomber at the barricade, two rounds at the nail bomber in Glenfada Park, two rounds at the gunman at the end of Rossville flats and three rounds at the window on the second floor of the Rossville Flats. The remaining five rounds he fired on two separate occasions at different windows of the Rossville Flats. B135.

Soldier F's Treasury Solicitor statement.

(i) As has been demonstrated at above Soldier F attempted to use his statement to the Treasury Solicitor to alter his account of the circumstances in which he came to have his weapon cocked on Rossville Street.

(ii) As has been demonstrated above Soldier F used his statement to the Treasury Solicitor to correct his obvious untruths in his first RMP statement concerning the conduct of the crowd running away towards the Rubble Barricade.

(iii) Solider F then described how he observed a number of people from his position behind the wall at what appears to have been Kells Walk. One of them was attempting to throw what looked like a nail bomb which was in his hand. It was fizzing. He had seen nail bombs before and he was in no doubt it was one. Soldier F fired one aimed shot and the man fell. The bomb did not explode. He did not see what happened to him. Then he saw three men leave the barricade. One was carrying a rifle and they moved to the right of Glenfada Park. B137 paragraph 4.

(iv) He then described the shooting in Glenfada Park.

(v) He described the shooting of the man with the pistol behind block 2 of the flats.

[29] WT14 61 G

(vi) As has been seen at above Soldier F then significantly reworked the breakdown and distribution of his shots at the windows of the Rossville Flats.

Soldier F's evidence to the Widgery Inquiry and his excuses for inconsistency.

18.7.3.140 At WT14.60 C-D Soldier F was asked why he did not tell the SIB that he had shot a man behind the Rossville Flats from his position at the southern end of Glenfada Park. His answer was: It slipped my mind what with the other offence that happened". "What other offence?" Answer: "Shooting the other two bombers". It is submitted that even for a witness of F's doubtful credibility the suggestion that the shooting of a man with a pistol behind Rossville Flats had slipped his mind when he was discussing other matters with the SIB is remarkable. It may also be noted that Soldier F in this attempted explanation put his slip of the mind down to other events being the shooting of the other two bombers. This was in itself an obvious lie since he had also failed to mention one of the "bombers" at the barricade to the SIB.

18.7.3.141 At WT14.61 F at the end of the exchange with Mr. McSparran considered above, Soldier F was asked for an explanation as to why he had said he had fired four shots at a window when he had only fired two, his answer was as follows:

"At the time I made those statements it was in the early hours of the morning. There had been all riots during the day and I couldn't quite think about it."

On the contrary it is submitted that it is clear that Soldier F had every opportunity to think about it and in fact at WT14.61 F Soldier F acknowledged he had about four hours in their barracks in Derry before he made his first RMP statement. It is submitted that what Soldier F did not have ample time to think about was just how he was going to present a consistent and plausible account of the discharge of his shots and avoid detection for the actions he had carried out. He therefore minimised his early accounts to the SIB in the hope that the actual amount of shots and his targets would not be discovered. It may be noted that at WT14.62 A-C Soldier F confirmed that he was firing at the man with the pistol behind the flats to kill him. He also confirmed that that had "just slipped" his mind.

18.7.3.142 At WT14.64 A-C Soldier F was asked why he did not refer to the shooting of the man with the pistol behind the Flats and what brought it to his mind on the 19th February. His answer was as follows:

"At that time I was shown aerial photographs of the immediate area and I realised that I had shot a man there. We had previously only had a map."

In his statement to Colonel Overbury on 19 February Soldier F had said that having read his previous statements and looked at maps and photographs of the air: " I realise that I have mistaken the sequence of events." B135.

He then went on, as we have seen, to disavow his first three shots at the Rossville Flats on de-bussing, add the shootings at the man at the barricade and the man behind the Rossville Flats and change the breakdown of his shots at the windows of the flats. He therefore did considerably more than change his sequence of shots with the use of previous statements, maps and aerial photographs.

18.7.3.143 Even Soldier F began to sense the ludicrous nature of the proposition he had put forward in his statement to Colonel Overbury and to Lord Widgery that his recollection had been prompted by maps and aerial photographs at Day 375/167/4 to Day 375/167/9. When asked about the matter he replied:

"No, I presume it was seeing my statements not aerial photographs."

He was then challenged by Counsel to the Inquiry on this statement on the basis that it could not have been his previous statements that caused him to produce the statement to Colonel Overbury which included two important new shootings. He replied:

"I know, but obviously that is a statement I made, but I have no recollection of it". Day 375/167/14 to Day 375/167/15.

It is submitted that in addition to being a different excuse from the one proffered earlier, as a statement in itself it beggars belief. It is submitted that he had failed to mention this incident before 19th February 1972 because he considered until that point it would not necessarily emerge that he was the soldier who had fired from the position at the corner of Glenfada Park North. By the 19th February 1972 the army were in possession of the evidence of Soldier 134 and others and it can only be rational to conclude that Soldier F had been made aware of that information. The Army had also to explain by that stage two civilian deaths and two woundings in that area, none of which had been accounted for by any soldier.

18.7.3.144 When the issue of why he had not mentioned his shooting of the man at the barricade or the man with the pistol behind the Rossville Flats was raised at Day 375/138/25 to Day 375/139/6 Soldier F's reply was:

"All I can say was there is errors of in the judgement of making the statements and they got confused."

18.7.3.145 It was pointed out to Soldier F that in his first RMP statement he was not confused about the number of bullets he fired. His reply was:

"Not at that particular time." Day 375/139/10.

He further acknowledged that he gave a precise account of the number of shots, the sets of shots, the targets and the sequence. Day 375/139/11 to Day 375/139/12. It is submitted that the only possible conclusion that be drawn form these answers is that Soldier F had no truthful or logical answer to the questions asked.

18.7.3.146 It was further pointed out to him that the shots omitted were shots where he was trying to kill his targets.

"Q. How can you possibly have forgotten those shots?

A. There was a lot going on that day, there was a lot of activity going on and when I made these statements, the statements got confused and there were errors made." Day 375/139/25 to Day 375/140/3.

It is submitted that these answers further demonstrate that the shooting was unjustifiable and that Soldier F was an utterly untruthful witness.

18.7.3.147 Soldier F had failed, even by the time of his third RMP statement, to mention either his firing at the barricade or his shooting behind the Rossville Flats. It is not known precisely when this statement was made but it must have been some days after his original statement. [Sentence inserted at the request of Madden and Finucane: The date has now been confirmed in Soldier Fs Eversheds statement as 4 February 1972.] Soldier F was asked to explain this failure. He replied as follows:

"All I can say is that it must have been an error at the time and I must have forgot and then later on, when more statements was required, obviously it was to come to light. I have no explanation for it." Day 375/144/19 to Day 375/144/22.

He went on to deny the suggestion from Counsel to the Inquiry that the reason there was no explanation was that in these statements he was telling lies in order to conceal the truth and therefore got in trouble with the details of what happened. Day 375/144/23 to Day 375/145/2.

18.7.3.148 Soldier F could not explain the appearance of either the shooting at the barricade or the shooting behind the Rossville Flats in the statement of 19 February 1972. It is submitted that Counsel to the Inquiry summarised the general truth about these omissions at Day 375/166/19 to Day 375/166/24 with this exchange:

"Q Is the position that by this stage it was becoming apparent in the course of the investigation as to what had happened on the day, that the accounts given by the Anti-Tank Platoon did not fit with the number of victims?

A. Not to my knowledge."

18.7.3.149 It is submitted that Soldier F's testimony to this Inquiry as well as being untruthful and self –serving was designed to continue to conceal his activities on Bloody Sunday. It is simply beyond logic or belief that he could have forgotten the incidents he was involved in entirely. If that is the case his "amnesia" can only have been part of a deliberate and conscious strategy to avoid answering as to the events of Bloody Sunday. It is important to note that at Day 376/28/20 to Day 376/28/22 Soldier F confirmed that he had no medical condition which accounted for his total lack of recall.

18.7.3.150 At Day 375/59/8 to Day 375/59/17 having confirmed that before Bloody Sunday he had not killed anyone and after Bloody Sunday he had killed no one in Northern Ireland he agreed it was a pretty dramatic day.

Q "Are you being truthful when you say that you remember practically nothing whatever about it?"

A."That is correct".

It is submitted that this was not correct and that Soldier F's vague recollection of the day was simply a device conceived by him to avoid answering questions likely to be asked of him and to which he could not answer truthfully without admitting to a litany of lies, torture, unlawful activity, wounding and murder.

18.7.3.151 He acknowledged in his Evershed's statement that he remembered some men leaving the Barricade and Soldier G. At Day 375/83/4 to Day 375/83/8 he stated he could not remember the scenes in P635, E14.012 and E14.016 and all he could remember was the barricade. It would probably be idle to speculate on why those items should stick in his mind but shooting to kill at least two men did not. However, it is of note that when certain propositions regarding his conduct were put to him he asserted they did not happen. Again it is not clear how he could have done this if his memory of the day was genuinely so vague.

The shooting behind Block 2 of the Rossville Flats.

18.7.3.152 It is submitted that the shooting by Soldier F behind the flats clearly accounted for the killing of Patrick Doherty and Barney McGuigan. It is also submitted that Soldier F in all probability fired more than the two shots he acknowledged into that area. These either shots which he claimed to have fired at the windows of the Rossville Flats or extra shots he never admitted to. Further submissions on this matter may be found at submissions on Sector 5. It is further submitted that the only evidence of the number of shots fired in this area by Soldier F and indeed his total of thirteen shots comes from himself. It is submitted that the number of Soldier F's inconsistent accounts make it difficult to conclude that he was being truthful as to the location of a number of even his declared shots. Soldier F denied in his statement to this Inquiry at 167.002 paragraph 15 and Day 375/116/7 to Day 375/116/8 that he had private supplies of ammunition.

18.7.3.153 It is notable that in his first RMP statement at B121 and in his statement to the Treasury Solicitor at B137 paragraph 1, he described himself as armed with an SLR with twenty rounds. He then describes deploying and debussing. In his evidence to the Widgery Inquiry at WT14.45 B-C, he was asked had he debussed near the junction of William Street and Rossville Street. He confirmed he had and was asked the following:

Q: "Were you armed with an SLR?"

A: "I was."

Q: "How many rounds of ammunition did you have?"

A: "20 rounds on the rifle itself, 20 rounds in my pouch and 10 rounds in a bandolier."

Q: "A total of 50?"

A: "Yes."

Soldier F would appear to have told Lord Widgery that he had left the vehicle with fifty rounds of ammunition as opposed to his earlier figure of twenty. This must raise yet another question as to the truthfulness or accuracy of any account given by Soldier F as to his ammunition supply and his use of that on the day.

18.7.3.154 At Day 375/59/8 to Day 375/59/17 having confirmed that before Bloody Sunday he had not killed anyone and after Bloody Sunday he had killed no one in Northern Ireland he agreed it was a pretty dramatic day.

Q: "Are you being truthful when you say that you remember practically nothing whatever about it?"

A: "That is correct".

In summary it is submitted that Soldier F remembered very well the events he was involved in but chose not to assist this Inquiry. He chose not to do so with the intention of obstructing the search for the truth about Bloody Sunday and to attempt to continue with his policy of self-serving lies and evasions. The purpose of such a policy was to cover up murder and wounding of innocent civilians and to cover up the wrong doing of his colleagues. His "amnesia" at this Inquiry was to prevent himself having to answer questions to which he had no answer and to avoid answering questions concerning the conduct of his colleagues.

Soldier J

18.7.3.155 Soldier J admits to having fired 2 live rounds while on Rossville Street on Bloody Sunday. Both rounds were fired over the Rubble Barricade, one on the Glenfada Park side of the Rubble Barricade and one at the corner of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats. In relation to both shots he claims to have fired at persons who were about to throw nail bombs at him and in both cases he claims to have missed his target.

18.7.3.156 Soldier J is a crucial witness in a number of respects. He is one of the few soldiers in Anti-Tank Platoon who admits to having fired live rounds over the Rubble Barricade in Rossville Street. While he claims to have missed those targets the location of his first target makes him a prime candidate for having killed one of John Young, Michael McDaid and William Nash, his second shot makes him a candidate for the killing of Hugh Gilmore. In these circumstances Soldier J may account for 2 of the deaths behind the Rubble Barricade.

18.7.3.157 It is alleged that Soldier J probably murdered at least one of John Young, Michael McDaid or William Nash at the Rubble Barricade on the 30th January 1972. Since that date he has lied about his actions and lied about the actions of his fellow soldiers in Anti-Tank Platoon, in order to prevent the truth about his role in the murder of innocent civilians from being told.

Soldier X

18.7.3.158 Soldier J was interviewed by Toby Harnden in 1999 and is the soldier referred to as Soldier X in articles written by Toby Harnden and published in the Daily Telegraph in May 1999. (L282.1, L282.2) Soldier J acknowledges that he has "previously, untruthfully" and repeatedly lied about his involvement in that interview, despite having been repeatedly asked by the Tribunal through his solicitor whether he was Soldier X. He eventually told the truth in September 2003, just prior to giving evidence. B289.028 paragraph 1 and B289.029 paragraph 7

18.7.3159 Soldier J explained that the purpose of having given the interview to Toby Harnden was to assist soldiers in their anonymity application and also because:

"I wanted to get over the point that we were fired upon first after a riot had got out of hand I was fed up with reading and hearing that the Paras went on an unprovoked attack." B289.028 paragraph 4

18.7.3.160 During the course of the interview with Toby Harnden Soldier J stated that he had witnessed events on Bloody Sunday that he had not actually witnessed. In the course of this Inquiry he justified this by stating that

"A. Because, sir, he was our last-gasp chance to get our anonymity. I had to put it -- lay it on thick. In other words, in this modern idiom today, you would say I sexed it up a bit." Day 370/9/4 to Day 370/9/9[30]

18.7.3.161 Soldier J was apparently incapable of acknowledging that he had told untruths to Toby Harnden preferring to hide behind phrases such as 'sexed-up' and 'hamming it up' rather than accept that he had told Mr. Harnden out and out lies.[31]

18.7.3.162 In Soldier J, the Tribunal is dealing with a witness who is demonstrably dishonest, who despite having had to accept that he had "previously, untruthfully" lied to this Inquiry, not once but "repeatedly", was unable to characterise blatant lies as untruths. Crucially it has been shown that this witness has, over a period of years, been dishonest in his dealings with this Tribunal, and was, in his interview with Toby Harnden, dishonest in relation to his involvement in Bloody Sunday.[32]

18.7.3.163 It is our submission that his evidence cannot be accepted as being given in good faith, and as with his interview with Toby Harnden, his

[31] "LORD SAVILLE: Another way of describing it would be that you told Mr Harnden things that you knew not to be true; is that right?
A. I told Mr Harnden things that I had gleaned from my first statements, from other people what had told me, just to ham it up a bit so he would make a good case for it and write things in the paper which could persuade the Prime Minister to give us anonymity." Day 370/91/10 to Day 370/91/17

[32] Soldier J's involvement in the arrest of individuals and the dishonest accounts he gave about the persons whom he had arrested are also evidence of his willingness to lie about the events of the day. This topic is addressed in relation to Soldier J's involvement in Sector 4.

objective in giving evidence to this Inquiry has been to present a view of Bloody Sunday sympathetic to the Paras, rather than to tell the truth about his role in the events of that day.

Soldier J's Recollection of events

18.7.3.164 Soldier J as with a number of soldiers from 1 Para claims to have a limited recollection of the events of Bloody Sunday. In relation to his current account, it is noteworthy that his recollection about the early part of the day is clear up until he was briefed about the operation in Derry, from that point on he states that:

> "I do not remember much more about the events of that day." B289.002 paragraph 12

18.7.3.165 In fact as became apparent in the course of questioning by Counsel for the Tribunal and Counsel for the Families, in relation to most of the issues on which he was questioned, Soldier J's stock response was that he had "no recollection". The only real exception to that reply relates to the shootings themselves in respect of which he maintains that he can clearly recollect that the persons he shot were nail-bombers and that he did not hit his targets. Thus he can assist this Inquiry to the extent necessary to provide himself with a defence to allegations of murder, but no more.

18.7.3.166 In the course of his interview with Toby Harnden Soldier J is quoted as saying:

> "I was grilled for several hours this year by lawyers acting for the Saville Inquiry. I told them the bare minimum and said that I could not really enlarge on anything said to Widgery or contained in my original statement the day after Bloody Sunday." B289.029 paragraph 4

18.7.3.167 Soldier J maintains that these are not his words but that Toby Harnden has "taken that out of context to make maximum headlines with it."

Day 370/94/4 to Day 370/94/9 Although it is noteworthy that when asked:

> "Q. Was it the position that the game plan was to threaten that if you were to be named, you would not tell the whole story because of fears for your safety in the hope that that threat would influence the decision on anonymity?
> A. Well, I do not know really for sure, but it seems a very good bargaining chip to make sure that we did not -- or we did get anonymity, but I cannot remember saying that to him. Again, I think it was a bit of journalistic licence." Day 370/94/22 to Day 370/95/6

18.7.3.168 It is the case, as Soldier J has had to concede, that his Eversheds statement is the bare minimum and does not enlarge in any way on the statements previously made or the accounts given to Lord Widgery. Day 370/93/25 to Day 370/94/7

18.7.3.169 It is our submission that Soldier J has lied to this Inquiry about the extent of his recollection about Bloody Sunday and that

> "the progression of your statements was a carefully constructed device to provide a smokescreen against those who would inquire as to the truth about what happened on Rossville Street and what happened in Glenfada Park". Day 370/129/1 to Day 370/129/6

18.7.3.170 It will moreover be contended that it became apparent during the course of questioning by our Counsel that Soldier J does in fact have a greater recollection of events than he wishes to acknowledge.[33] Soldier J, just as he lied to Toby Harnden about his role on Bloody Sunday, and as he lied to his own lawyers and this Tribunal about his role as Soldier X, is lying about the extent of his recollection about Bloody

[33] See Section 18

Sunday and is doing so with the express objective of obstructing the search for the truth.

1972 Statements

18.7.3.171 Soldier J made 3 statements in 1972, two to the RMP and one to the Treasury Solicitor. As with other soldiers in 1 Para who claim either a limited or no recollection about the events Soldier J invites this Tribunal to accept the accounts he gave in 1972 as accurate. As he stated on one occasion, when challenged about the accuracy of those accounts in light of objective evidence to the contrary:

> "I think because I put that down in my statement and spoke to Lord Widgery on that, it must be true to say that I did see nail bombs being thrown that day, sir." Day 370/84/12 to Day 370/84/14

18.7.3.172 However, as with Lt. 119 and other soldiers from Anti-Tank Platoon, the difficulty lies in establishing which of the various versions advanced by Soldier J in 1972, if any, should be accepted as accurate. Particularly given, not only the contradictions between the various accounts given by Soldier J, but the contradictions between his accounts and those given by other soldiers of Anti-Tank Platoon.

18.7.3.173 Soldier J's first statement was made on the 1st February 1972, two days after Bloody Sunday, and as he has acknowledged he felt under no pressure at the time he made the statement. Day 370/113/17 to Day 370/113/23 Inasmuch as it relates to Sector 3 he states as follows:

i) That 1 Para had been tasked to advance down Rossville Street to disperse a crowd of 1,500 rioters who were congregated at the Rubble Barricade. B265

ii) As they advanced down the right hand side of Rossville Street he heard automatic fire coming from the Rossville Flats. B265

iii) As they continued to advance they came under fire and heavy stoning from persons located in the Glenfada Court area. B265

iv) When he was 100m from the Rubble Barricade he could clearly see the Barricade and he could see youths throwing missiles. B265

v) Shots were being fired from gunmen behind the Rubble Barricade.

vi) He saw a youth whose hand was in the throwing position and who had an object in his hand from which he could see smoke B266

vii) His rifle had been cocked "on the start of the advance". B266 viii) He fired one round which hit the top of the Rubble Barricade. B266

ix) Meanwhile "Other troops had opened fire on other snipers located around the Rossville and Glenfada Flats area." B266

x) They then advanced further along Rossville Street towards the Rubble Barricade and several nail bombs were thrown at them. B266

xi) He saw a person at the junction of a block of flats holding a nail bomb, he was able to see smoke coming from the bomb. B266

xii) He fired one shot which hit the wall above the nail bomber's head, the nail bomber dropped and disappeared and Soldier J did not believe he hit him. B266 xiii) As this was happening he was under fire from the Rossville Flats the fire was automatic. B266

xiv) "The advance was continued and the crowds from the barricade were dispersed." B266

xv) He then went into Glenfada Park North to conduct arrests. B266

It should be noted that in his first RMP statement he gives no further information in relation to his involvement in the events of the day and no description of any kind in relation to what occurred in Glenfada Park North.

18.7.3.174 In relation to his first RMP statement it should be noted that, contrary to what he asserted, there never were 1,500 rioters behind the Rubble

Barricade. Soldier J was unable in the course of his evidence to this Inquiry to explain how he had come up with that figure. Day 370/12/19 to Day 370/13/1

18.7.3.175 While not a major issue in relation to the evidence he gives, this is just one more example of Soldier J's preparedness to lie in order to provide justification for the actions of soldiers.

18.7.3.176 Soldier J's second RMP statement was made on the 4th February 1972 and is in essence supplemental to his first in that, he does not rehearse those matters about which he had already given an account, but provides additional material, not contained in his first RMP statement. In essence the additional material is as follows:

i) In his first RMP statement he had stated that "Other troops had opened fire on other snipers located around the Rossville and Glenfada Flats area." B266 In his second statement he states that "From [the Kells Walk Wall] I observed two male persons taking cover behind a barrier which was placed across the street at Rossville Flats. The distance between them and myself was about 100 metres. . . . From my position members of my Coy returned fire at the nail bombers but I cannot say who they were as at this point everyone was wearing gas masks." B269

ii) Whereas in his first statement he simply refers to going into Glenfada Park North to effect arrests he now provides information in relation to the shooting carried out by F and G in Glenfada Park North.

iii) He gives a description of the incident in which F and G shot at windows in the Rossville Flats. Significantly, from inside the rear of the Pig he was able to say that he heard 2/3 low velocity shots "and more" fired from the "second storey of Rossville Flats at the northern end." B270

18.7.3.177 The fact that his second statement was made on the 4th February 1972, is not without significance. We would refer the Tribunal to Section 5 of these submissions wherein we make the case that a significant number of soldiers made statements on that date which were expressly designed to corroborate and justify the use of lethal force by other soldiers.

18.7.3.178 It will be seen from those submissions that a number of soldiers from Anti-Tank Platoon fall into that category. In particular we would refer the Tribunal to the fact that on the 4th February 1972 statements were taken from the following members of the Anti Tank Platoon: Soldier J at 15.10 hours, (B269, B270) Soldier 018 at 19.15 hours, (B1487) Soldier 036 at 19.30 hours, (B1629, B1630) Soldier 147 at 20.00 hours (B1886, B1887) and L/Corporal F, time unknown. Soldiers 018, 036 and 147 had not made any statements prior to this date. The statements of each of soldiers 018, 036, 147 and Soldier J deal with the incident where they say they came under fire from the Rossville Flats and Soldiers F and G returned fire.

18.7.3.179 However Soldier 018 now states that :

> ". . . I was not in a position to see whether there was a gunman in the flats when the shots were fired, nor could I see that they went through the window. The RMP told me that he needed to include this to substantiate details that had been provided by my colleagues to show that when they fired, they did not hit anybody. As the time I made my statement, I was led to believe the details about the location of the gunman in the flats and the area to which fire was returned were true. I had also heard the shots being fired from my position inside the pig. I therefore agreed to include the details in my statement". B1491.5 paragraph 42

18.7.3.180 Soldier J's statement of the 4th February is exclusively aimed at providing corroboration and justification for the actions of Soldiers F and G. In our submission it was made for that sole purpose and cannot be relied upon, except as further evidence of the willingness of Soldier

J to perjure himself at the Widgery Tribunal and to lie in order to assist his colleagues.

18.7.3.181 Soldier J's third statement was the statement prepared for the purposes of the Widgery Inquiry and taken by the Treasury Solicitors. Again this statement differs in material respects from the combination of the first two statements made by Soldier J in the following ways:

i) "We then moved along in front of the wall behind which are low rise flats and while we were moving along to the end of this wall I could see stones and bottles and also nail bombs being thrown in our direction, from the direction of the barricade. I saw one nail bomb explode." B272 A reading of this statement suggests that Soldier J initially went in front of the Kells Walk Wall and was forced to take cover behind it because of an exploding nail bomb. This is the first occasion upon which he suggests that a nail bomb exploded as they advanced down Rossville Street and prior to taking cover at the Kells Walk Wall.

ii) There was shooting from the Rubble Barricade, he saw three people and there was smoke coming from their rifles and two soldiers from Anti-Tank Platoon engaged the 2 gunmen. B272 In his first RMP statement he referred to his colleagues engaging snipers in the Rossville Flats and Glenfada Flats area. In his second RMP statement he suggested that his colleagues engaged nail bombers behind the Rubble Barricade, these nail bombers have now become gunmen. B269

iii) The nail bomber at whom he fired had a fizzing as opposed to a smoking object. B273

iv) As they advanced forward of the Kells Walk Wall several nail bombs were thrown from behind the rubble barricade and 2 exploded. B273 Although he refers to nail bombs being thrown at soldiers as they advanced in his first RMP statement, B266 in neither of his RMP statements does he refer to 2 nail bombs exploding.

v) Again the second alleged nail bomber at whom he fired had a fizzing as opposed to a smoking object. B273

vi) His description of Soldiers F & G firing after the return from Glenfada Park North now involves two separate incidents of civilian fire and return fire. He no longer purports to be able to identify the precise location from whence civilian fire came. B273, B274

18.7.3.182 Finally Soldier J gave evidence at the Widgery Inquiry during which he gave an account broadly in line with his Treasury Solicitor statement except as follows:

i) The 2 men with rifles who were engaged by soldiers from his Platoon were crouched behind the Rubble Barricade and all that could be seen were their heads and shoulders and "puffs of smoke" as they were firing. It was as a result of the shooting from these gunmen that they took cover at Kells Walk Wall. B277.

ii) They were ordered by the Platoon commander, Lt 119 to go into Glenfada Park to make arrests. This is the first time he mentions being ordered into Glenfada Park North.

iii) When he returned from Glenfada Park North and was positioned in the rear of the vehicle, he heard shots from the Rossville Flats. He does not suggest that he was able to identify precisely where the shots came from but states that the wireless operator pointed out to the sentry where the shots were coming from. This sequence was repeated once. B282

18.7.3.183 As can be seen above there are significant variations in Soldier J's account of events from statement to statement. The changes in the targets fired upon by his colleagues are significant in a number of respects, primarily because it is difficult to see how persons described as nail bombers can suddenly take on the appearance of men with rifles. The greater difficulty is of course that while two other soldiers from Anti-Tank Platoon have admitted firing from the Kells Walk Wall, F claims to have fired at a nail-bomber, while E claims to have fired at sniper at Block 1 of the Rossville Flats. No soldier claims to have fired at riflemen at the Rubble Barricade.

18.7.3.184 Of perhaps even greater significance, given that Soldier J's justification for the use of lethal force is his belief that the persons he identified were throwing nail bombs, both the sudden appearance of exploding nail bombs, and the change in description in the objects held by both of his own targets from 'smoking' objects to 'fizzing' objects.

18.7.3.185 In the course of his evidence to this Tribunal Soldier J failed to advance any explanation, coherent or otherwise, for the discrepancies between the various accounts given in 1972.

18.7.3.186 A more significant difficulty which arises however is that some of the other evidence before this Inquiry demonstrates that some of his accounts are patently untrue.

Exploding Nail Bombs

18.7.3.187 On Soldier J's account he witnessed 3 nail bombs explode on Rossville Street. The first exploded at or about the time Anti-Tank Platoon arrived at the Kells Walk Wall and a further 2 exploded as they moved forward of the Kells Walk Wall towards Glenfada Park North.

18.7.3.188 The movement of Anti-Tank Platoon up Rossville Street and their arrival at the Kells Walk Wall is caught on camera by Liam Mailey and the sequence can be found from P1116 to P1121.

18.7.3.189 Not only is it the case that the photographic evidence gives no indication that any nail bomb exploded in this area at or about that time, Liam Mailey who took the photographs, gave evidence to the Widgery Inquiry, and to this Tribunal. On his evidence no nail bomb exploded on Rossville Street at that time, or for that matter at any stage while he was on Rossville Street. Moreover while Liam Mailey was questioned by Counsel acting on behalf of Soldier J it was never suggested on Soldier J's behalf, that a nail bomb had exploded at or about the time Anti-Tank Platoon arrived at the Kells Walk Wall, or at any time. Finally, of course, Soldier J's account in this respect, as well as being contradicted by the evidence of media witnesses behind the Rubble Barricade, and the vast body of civilian evidence, is uncorroborated by the soldiers from Anti-Tank Platoon and Mortar Platoon who were with him on Rossville Street. That a nail bomb could explode on Rossville Street at a time when large numbers of civilians were behind the Rubble Barricade, and large numbers of soldiers were in the vicinity of the Kells Walk Wall, and not a single witness can lend support to Soldier J's account, renders it entirely implausible.

18.7.3.190 Soldier J contends that 2 further nail bombs exploded as soldiers advanced forward of the Kells Walk Wall. The image of soldiers from Anti-Tank Platoon moving forward from the Kells Walk Wall was caught on video and V48/11.35 to 11.55 shows, not merely the soldiers advancing but also the absence of people behind the Rubble Barricade. Not only is it evident that nail bombs were neither thrown nor exploded, it is evident that "there were not any crowds there before the soldiers went in advance of the Kells Walk Wall". Soldier J was specifically questioned about this issue and dealt with it as follows:

> "Q. Could you explain the sentence: "The advance was continued and the crowds from the barricade were dispersed."
>
> A. Well, as it says there, they must have dispersed and moved away from the barricade or from behind the barricade or whatever.
>
> Q. But we have seen the video, there were not any crowds there before the soldiers went in advance of the Kells Walk wall; how do you explain that?
>
> A. All I can say is, they must have moved before the photograph was taken or the video. Because, at one time -- according to that, at one time there was 1,500 people there, they did not just vanish into thin air, sir.

Q. This is after you have shot at a youth on the barricade, after you have gone ahead of the barricade; after, according to your subsequent statements, you have been nail bombed several times and you have seen one explode within 30 metres of where you were, and even after all of that, the advance continued and the crowds were dispersed?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. It just does not fit with the objective, independent evidence that exists from the media who were there; it does not fit, because you are lying and you know you are lying; is that not right?

A. No, sir." Day 370/119/24 to Day 370/120/25

18.7.3.191 Soldier J was given the opportunity in the course of this Inquiry to qualify his allegations with regard to nail bombs and stated as follows:

"Q. Your position, as I understand it, is that you now have, apart from your recollection of the man at whom you shot, no recollection of nail bombs being thrown or exploding; is that right?

A. That is correct, sir.

Q. The Tribunal has heard a very great deal of civilian evidence that no nail bombs were heard to explode on the day. Is it right that the noise of a nail bomb is deafening?

A. Well, it all depends on the kind of built-up area where it would go off, sir.

Q. Assume that a nail bomb was thrown towards you and exploded, either as you advanced towards the Kells Walk wall or as you advanced from the Kells Walk wall to the barricade, would that make a deafening noise?

A. I think it would, sir.

Q. Is it possible that whatever bangs and thumps that you heard did not in fact include an exploding nail bomb?

A. Well, I think because I put that down in my statement and spoke to Lord Widgery on that, it must be true to say that I did see nail bombs being thrown that day, sir.

Q. Is it possible that when you saw someone throw something or appear to throw something or with something in his hand, you chose to characterise it as a nail bomb whether you could see that it was or not?

A. If I saw the, the fizz or the smoke coming from it. I would have taken it for granted that it was a nail bomb, sir."

Day 370/83/11 to Day 370/84/20

18.7.3.192 Despite the large number of media witnesses present behind the Rubble Barricade on Bloody Sunday, including photographers and the actuality footage of Rossville Street on Bloody Sunday, there is no objective evidence which lends a shred of support to Soldier J's evidence that 3 nail bombs exploded on Rossville Street. It is our submission that the evidence establishes beyond doubt that no nail bombs exploded on Rossville Street on Bloody Sunday and Soldier J's insistence in continuing to assert that they did so, in reliance on what he said in 1972, demonstrates his continued willingness to lie about the events of Bloody Sunday.

Soldier J's Use of Lethal Force

18.7.3.193 Soldier J maintains that he does have a recollection of the circumstances in which he fired his two shots.[34] Day 370/28/16 to Day 370/29/13 He can identify his location at the time of the shooting, he can identify the location of his targets, he can describe their actions, he can state with certainty that they were about to throw a nail bomb and he can confirm that he did not hit his targets.

18.7.3.194 It is noteworthy that while he stated he could recollect the incident, he could not assist the Tribunal with any detail about the surrounding circumstances, in particular the two riflemen who were allegedly alongside the nail-bomber and who were being engaged by his colleagues at precisely the same time.[35]

18.7.3.195 In relation to his first target he told this Tribunal that his trajectory photograph P13 was inaccurate and that his target was at the Rubble Barricade but further west than the location identified in his trajectory photograph. Day 370/30/3 to Day 370/30/24

18.7.3.196 The location at which Soldier J places his first target is the location at which Michael McDaid, John Young and William Nash were killed, shortly after the killing of Michael Kelly.[36]

18.7.3.197 Soldier J maintains that he was able to identify the object in the persons hand as a nail bomb because, "as I wrote in the statement, I distinctly saw smoke or fizzing coming from it." Day 370/36/3 to Day 370/36/21 Whether it was smoking or fizzing depends of course on which of his 1972 accounts is to be accepted. He was not prepared to accept that he might have been mistaken in identifying his target as a nail bomber yet, he was wearing a gas mask when he fired his first

---

[34] Under questioning from Mr. Clarke QC he stated that it was all a bit 'obscure' but when pushed stated that he could recollect this incident happening.

[35] Day 370/33/20 to Day 370/34/6 "Can you be a little clearer as to whether you were referring to two or some other number of gunmen, where they were and what they were doing? You describe them as "gunmen".
A. Well, I do not remember now, sir.
MR TOOHEY: You mean you remember nothing about the number of persons who you described as "gunmen" at the time?
A. Well, sir, I am afraid I cannot recollect.
MR TOOHEY: Do you have any recollection of anyone at the barricade answering the description of the gunman at the time that you are referring to in your statement?
A. No, sir."

[36] It is our contention that Video 48 which shows Alex Nash at the Rubble Barricade, taken with the civilian evidence which states that these three young men fell at or about the same location, identifies, as precisely as is possible the location at which John Young, Michael McDaid and William Nash met their deaths.

shot, and was at a distance of approximately 75 yards from his intended target. Day 370/35/6 to Day 370/35/13[37]

18.7.3.198 Under precisely the same conditions Soldier J could not identify the soldiers of his own platoon, standing beside him, who also fired over the Rubble Barricade. Day 370/38/21 to Day 370/39/1 He never noticed Soldiers P or 017 standing in front of the Kells Walk Wall and never noticed Soldier P firing 9 rounds. He never saw any of the 4 persons who were killed behind the Rubble Barricade fall, Day 370/39/6 to Day 370/39/18 yet they were shot and killed while he was at the s Walk Wall and at about the time he was firing at a target at the precise location at which these young men fell.

18.7.3.199 When asked how he could fail to recognise his colleagues, he stated, "it is quite easy, really, I was observing that way, I was not really worried about what was going on at the sides of me. My whole vision was directed towards the barrier which there was people milling about on." Of course this is precisely the reason why he could not have missed witnessing Michael Kelly, Michael McDaid, John Young and William Nash as they were shot and killed.

18.7.3.200 It is moreover quite clear that, contrary to what he has said to this Tribunal, Soldier J does recollect precisely what happened at the time he fired his first round. When asked by Counsel for our clients:

> "Q. How could you have failed to have missed the scene of boys walking through the barricade, soldiers firing and people dying when you are looking there?
>
> A. I do not know the timescale of that, but I know there was not anybody really walking about at the time.
>
> Q Is that so.
>
> A. They were more like crouching or running.

[37] Mr. Clarke QCs questioning of Soldier J in relation to this shooting can be found at Day 370/34/7 to Day370/37/19

Q. That is an improvement, now we have a specific clear memory.

A. No, no, I am just saying, I would not have seen people standing like - -

Q No, no, no. Surely what you have said is, "but I know there was not anybody really walking about at that time"; is that now a memory that you have, it has come to you suddenly like a bolt from the blue?

A. No, sir, I am just saying that what I saw from the other side of the barricade certainly was not the same as what you see from this side." Day 370/115/25

18.7.3.201 While he backtracked once he realised his error, it is evident from the above excerpt that Soldier J has a much clearer recollection of his actions on Bloody Sunday than he has been prepared to admit to this Tribunal. The reason Soldier J chooses to hide behind a failing recollection is because he fired at least one live round over the Rubble Barricade, without justification, and he is guilty of the murder of, at least one of, John Young, Michael McDaid or William Nash.

18.7.3.202 Soldier J's second target was again identified as a nail-bomber. According to Soldier J at the time he fired this shot: he was still wearing his gas-mask; approximately 4 nail bombs had been thrown at him from the Rossville Flats side of the Rubble Barricade; 2 had exploded; and, he was also under automatic fire from the Rossville Flats.

18.7.3.203 Again Soldier J states that he has a recollection of the actual shooting in his mind's eye, albeit that he can no longer remember any of the surrounding circumstances, whether the exploding nail bombs, or coming under automatic fire. Day 370/49/19 to Day 370/49/23

18.7.3.204 Again Soldier J failed to witness events which were happening at the end of Block 1 at or about the time he was shot: he never saw Hugh

Gilmore fleeing for his life along the side of Block 1; he never saw him shot; he never saw the people who came to his aid. Day 370/51/7 to Day 370/51/25 But he is sure that: despite the distance; despite wearing a gas mask; despite the fact that it was a fleeting glance he could not be wrong in his identification of his target as a nail-bomber. Day 370/49/ 25 to Day 370/51/6 and Day 370/51/24 to Day 370/52/4

18.7.3.205 The photographic evidence and the actuality footage, in particular V48/11.35 to 11.55 which shows Anti-Tank Platoon advancing down Rossville Street, demonstrate that when Anti-Tank Platoon advanced there was no one behind the Rubble Barricade, no nail-bombs were thrown and they were not under automatic fire.

18.7.3.206 If Soldier J did fire that round in the direction of Block 1 of the Rossville Flats, then he is a strong suspect for having shot and killed Hugh Gilmore as he fled for his life. It is because, as with his first shot, his decision to fire live rounds at unarmed civilians was without justification that Soldier J lied in 1972 and has had to persist in his lies to this Inquiry.

1 Para's attitude to Derry

18.7.3.207 Soldier J was returning from Cyprus the night before Bloody Sunday and was not therefore at any briefing given by Lieutenant 119. Nonetheless as with all of the soldiers in Anti-Tank Platoon who have given evidence he rejects the suggestion that soldiers from Anti-Tank Platoon regarded this as "an occasion upon which 1 Para might be able to engage with the IRA and get some kills". Day 370/6/7 to Day 370/6/11

18.7.3.208 He claims that his current recollection was simply that they were there to police an illegal march at which trouble was expected. B289.002 paragraph 11 When questioned by Lord Gifford, Soldier J rejected the suggestion that his attitude in going to Derry was that he would like to get at the rioters and people in no-go areas, and deal with them as fully and strenuously as possible. Day 370/144/10 to Day 370/144/12

18.7.3.209 However, even in his statement to this Tribunal it is clear that when he went to Derry it was his view, and a view which was shared by his colleagues, that the situation in Derry was out of control:

> "Bombings and shootings seemed to have become a nightly occurrence in Londonderry. Subsequently, just before Bloody Sunday, two police men had been killed there. We had never been to Londonderry but we all saw the news reels on the television about it and wondered why it was going so badly there." B289.001 paragraph 6

18.7.3.210 His interview with Toby Harnden is more instructive about his approach and that of Anti-Tank Platoon both in terms of their attitude to the persons on the civil rights march and their expectations about to the operation in Derry.

"Q. "Soldier X, of the Support Company, said he had been told by officers that IRA activity was likely." Then there is the passage in quotes:

"We were briefed that it was an illegal march and that the civil rights movement had been completely infiltrated by Republican elements."

Is that what you said and what you were briefed?

A. I think so, sir, yes.

Q. You are then recorded as saying:

"Two policemen had been killed in Londonderry a few days earlier [we know that is true] and we were told that the IRA wanted to cause as much mayhem as possible; we were ready for the worst-case scenario."

Is that what you told Mr Harnden and what you yourself were told?

A. I think so, sir, yes. Day 370/89/24 to Day 370/90/14

18.7.3.211 Unusually, Soldier J accepted, both that this was what he had said to Toby Harnden and that it was true. In our submission this lends support to the view that at the very minimum the soldiers of 1 Para were dangerously hyped-up when they arrived in Derry, that they substantially over-estimated the risk posed to them by unarmed Civil Rights marchers, and that this attitude was encouraged, rather than suppressed by their officers.

Conclusion

18.7.3.212 Michael Kelly, Michael McDaid, John Young, William Nash and Hugh Gilmore were shot and killed at the Rubble Barricade by soldiers at a time when soldiers from Anti-Tank Platoon, including Soldier J were positioned behind the Kells Walk Wall. Soldier J, in common with the other soldiers from Anti-Tank Platoon[38] has been unable to account for how these young men met their deaths. The reason for this complete inability, on the part of any of the soldiers to advance an explanation is because, consistently with the body of civilian evidence, there was indiscriminate and unjustified firing from the Kells Walk Wall which was covered up.

18.7.3.213 A feature of Soldier J's limited recollection common to all soldiers in Anti-Tank Platoon, is his inability to account for the actions of other soldiers. He has never identified the two soldiers standing by his side, apparently shooting at persons who posed a threat to his life and the lives of his colleagues. He claims that he can no longer recollect any of the events in Glenfada Park and thus does not have to deal with questions about what occurred there. He can no longer remember the shooting by Soldiers F and G at windows in the Rossville Flats when Anti-Tank Platoon left Glenfada Park North.

18.7.3.214 Soldier J accepted that he was aware of and understood the implications of the immunity which has been granted to soldiers in relation to their testimony on Bloody Sunday. Day 370/109/14 to Day 370/109/25 While charges cannot be brought against any individual soldier on the basis of admissions made about the events of Bloody Sunday, charges can be brought on the basis of the testimony of other soldiers. Thus if Soldier J was to identify his colleagues who fired lethal rounds over the Rubble Barricade, or was to describe the actions of his colleagues in Glenfada Park his testimony could incriminate them. Soldier J, and other soldiers in Anti-Tank Platoon have adopted a strategy of mutual protection. Each individual soldier is left to account as best he can for the shots he discharged, but no Soldier will account for the shots fired by his colleagues. By failing to recollect the actions of their colleagues, they prevent effective questioning of those actions and nothing they say can be used to incriminate the other. In this way the truth about their wilful murder of innocent civilians on Bloody Sunday is hidden. Day 364/23/10 to Day 364/23/15

[38] With the exception of Soldier F who belatedly had to account for the death of Michael Kelly.

18.7.3.215 Soldier J has given a false account about the circumstances in which he fired live rounds on Bloody Sunday both to Lord Widgery and to this Tribunal "false both as to what they did say and false by reason of what they omitted." Day 370/149/2 to Day 370/149/8 He has moreover lied about the extent of his recollection of the events of the day. He has done so because on the 30th January 1972 Soldier J participated in murder, and in the years since he has participated in criminal conspiracy to prevent the truth about Bloody Sunday from emerging, to protect himself from the consequences of his actions on Bloody Sunday.

Soldier H

18.7.3.216 Soldier H fired more live rounds on Bloody Sunday than any other soldier, firing a total of 22 shots. According to Soldier H, 19 of those rounds were fired into a frosted glass window in Glenfada Park North. It is alleged, that as Lord Widgery found in 1972:

> "It is highly improbable that this cycle of events should repeat itself 19 times; and indeed it did not. . . . So 19 of the 22 shots fired by Soldier H were wholly unaccounted for."

18.7.3.217 Soldier H's conduct on Bloody Sunday is vital to understanding the truth of what occurred on Bloody Sunday. He was at the Kells Walk Wall when members of his Platoon and Mortar Platoon fired over the Rubble Barricade and 5 people were killed.[39] He was in Glenfada Park North when members of his Platoon shot and killed people in Glenfada Park North, Abbey Park and in Rossville Street. Most significantly, having fired 19 unaccounted for rounds, he must be a prime candidate for one or more of the civilian deaths which Anti-Tank Platoon have chosen not to account for, including the deaths of those murdered behind the Rubble Barricade.

18.7.3.218 Soldier H's conduct in Glenfada Park will be dealt with separately in Sector 4. However given that:

i) his 19 rounds remain unaccounted for; and

ii) soldiers from Anti-Tank Platoon have been unable to account for the casualties behind the Rubble Barricade;

it will be necessary to address the firing of those rounds, despite the fact that he has generally maintained that those rounds were fired in Glenfada Park North.[40]

18.7.3.219 Soldier H gave 3 separate statements to the RMP in 1972, he also made a statement to the Treasury Solicitor. His first 2 statements were apparently made within 20 minutes of each other, one of them is timed at 2.10am on the 31st January, B218 while the second is timed at 2.30am on the 31st January. B228B

[39] It is alleged that Soldier K was responsible for the murder of Kevin McElhinney

[40] During the questioning of Soldier H in this Tribunal he appeared to accept that he might be mistaken. Day 378/131/3 to Day 378/131/5 "I have always thought it was a toilet window and it has been proven here that it is not, but I did shoot through a window at all times." Moreover in his first RMP statement he appears to suggest that those rounds were in fact fired somewhere on Rossville Street. B221

18.7.3.220 As was noted by Counsel for the Tribunal the second statement appears not so much to be supplemental as "a complete re-write of [the first statement] and . . . appears to be markedly more intelligible." Day 377/126/21 to Day 377/127/6 Soldier H has been unable to assist the Inquiry as to the circumstances surrounding the making of these two statements within such a short time-frame.

18.7.3.221 There are significant discrepancies as between the various accounts which have been given by Soldier H about Bloody Sunday, in 1972 and to this Tribunal. It is not proposed to address each discrepancy in detail. Rather it is our submission that reading Soldier H's accounts of Bloody Sunday whether given in 1972 or 2003 a clear trend emerges, and that is a willingness to exaggerate, sometimes to fantastical levels, about alleged attacks on his Platoon and the level of threat faced by them as they entered the Bogside. In every account he has given about the events of Bloody Sunday, Soldier H has lied, and in suggesting that 1 Para faced an onslaught of hostile attacks from armed civilians he aims to distract attention from his actions and in some way to justify his involvement in murder.

Drainpipe Shot

18.7.3.222 In his first statement Soldier H makes no mention of hearing the drainpipe shot prior to receiving the order to move in. In his second RMP statement he describes hearing a shot which struck the east wall of the Presbyterian Church. B228 By the time he makes his Treasury Solicitor's statement he has not only heard the shot but seen the drainpipe fall. B233

18.7.3.223 This evolving state of knowledge about the drainpipe shot is not unique to Soldier H. A large number of soldiers from 1 Para now claim to have either heard or seen that shot, despite not having made that claim in their original accounts. Significantly the same soldiers never give an account of having heard the 5 SLR shots fired by soldiers from Machine-Gun Platoon when at that location.

18.7.3.224 It is accepted that the drain-pipe shot occurred and was heard and/or witnessed by some soldiers. However in 1972 it became a relatively common feature of the evidence of many soldiers of 1 Para despite the fact that an examination of those accounts shows them to be inconsistent as to the detail. This occurred, not because soldiers had witnessed this incident but rather because: having learnt of this shot subsequently, soldiers decided of their own volition to dishonestly insert it into their evidence; or, it was suggested to soldiers by the RMP that they should insert this into their statements. Whichever is true large numbers of soldiers claim to have witnessed this shot and have gave evidence about it in order to bolster the soldiers' case before Lord Widgery.

18.7.3.225 In the case of Soldier H, his claim to have heard the drainpipe shot is not without significance given what he said in his statement to this Tribunal:

> "I felt this was confirmation of our expectation that the IRA were prepared for us and that they had deployed their snipers around the Bogside. We knew we were going into a hostile environment and when the shot was fired at us we realised that the IRA had got their weapons out as soon as we had arrived. They didn't want us going in to the Bogside which had been their territory for two years. However, they were used to dealing with less well trained troops. Coming under fire like that would get you keyed up." B262 paragraph 5

18.7.3.226 In our submission the drainpipe shot has become, for many soldiers a ex post facto justification for the aggressiveness with which they went into the Bogside and the eagerness they displayed in the use lethal force.

Bullets striking the Vehicle

18.7.3.227 In his second statement to the RMP Soldier H describes hearing the sound of gunfire and bullets striking the left hand side of the vehicle before they debussed. B229 That account was not contained in his first statement and in subsequent statements he is more hesitant about the claim stating that he thought he had heard a shot strike the side of the Pig. B233 and B237.

18.7.3.228 When Soldier H made his statement for the purposes of this Tribunal he stated:

> "I heard bullets strike the side of our Pig. It was more than two bullets and I would describe it as a hail of bullets. It was very frightening to be shot at while you were sitting in a Pig. It was like being in a tin can with someone banging a stick on the outside." B263 paragraph 10

18.7.3.229 Soldier H has acknowledged in his evidence to this Tribunal that the sound he described may have been caused by stones hitting the side of the vehicle. No other soldier from Anti-Tank Platoon claims that their Platoon came under fire as they entered the Bogside in vehicles and is entirely dishonest. However Soldier H's account of coming under fire, even prior to de-bussing, is consistent with his overall approach to giving evidence.

Gunmen behind the Rubble Barricade

18.7.3.230 In his first statement Soldier H describes 4 gunmen behind the Rubble Barricade who were continually firing as Anti-Tank Platoon advanced from the Rossville Street/William Street junction up Rossville Street. B219 Moreover as Anti-Tank Platoon advanced up Rossville Street under this hail of gunfire Soldier H describes their being simultaneously stoned, nail bombed and acid bombed. B219

18.7.3.231 In his second RMP statement the number of gunmen has been reduced to two, while the nail bombs and acid bombs have disappeared. B229

In his Treasury Solicitor statement and the account given to the Widgery Inquiry he speaks of at least 2 gunmen. B233, B238

18.7.3.232 Soldier H maintains that 2 soldiers from his Platoon opened fire on the gunmen although he has never identified those soldiers and now claims that he cannot do so. As with Lieutenant 119 his explanation of the circumstances in which soldiers fired at the Rubble Barricade from the Kells Walk Wall is inconsistent with the accounts given by the soldiers who admit to having fired live rounds at that location.
