GENERAL REMARKS.

The Ship Juliana embarked 244 Emigrants, at Gravesend (men, women and children, the latter being in very large proportion to the adults) on the 17th October 1838. - and on the 22^d October she finally sailed from the Downs, for Sydney N.S. Wales.; a series of storms then commenced, which lasted without intermission till Nov. 9th the ship being at sea, all the time - the master alledging the impracticability of putting into the Ports of Falmouth or Plymouth on account of the thickness of the weather,

The Emigrants were consequently in a very miserable condition, nearly all of them sea sick; terrified, & unable to take care of their children - the deck overhead ~~also~~ leaking much, in many places; & wetting the bedding; these circumstances also prevented a due degree of cleanliness being observed.

when the weather became moderate, many of them from their appearance, had evidently suffered considerably, and there being several with scrofulous Constitution, these became afterwards the prey of Phthisis -

Five deaths were occasioned by that disease three of which were in members of the same family, viz. one brother and two sisters, (adults).

Owing to there being no power vested in the Surgeon Superintendent, to enforce his regulations much difficulty was encountered, in attaining a moderate degree of cleanliness, of the decks, berths, and bedding - The only mode indeed by which the emigrants could be driven off the lower deck, to allow a cleansing by water to take place, was by closing the hatches & smoking them up, with the fumes of Sulphur, Cayenne pepper &c - during a considerable part of the voyage to the Cape of Good Hope,

When the ship had entered the Tropics a fever of the Remittent type, made its appearance and became very general among the emigrants; attacking children, as well as adults. The disease generally commenced, by heaviness and pain in the head; and pain extending down the spine, and across the loins; In very few instances was there any increase of heat of skin, at the beginning; and in many Cases the tongue was clean, when the patients first complained.

The most successful treatment appeared to be, Section ad deliquium, whenever the pain in the head and back was severe; followed by large doses of Calomel, until ptyalism was induced; when the disease immediately gave way - as examples of which treatment the Cases of Saml Osborne No 4. Jane Harmer 6, may be cited

As the ship approached the Tropic of Capricorn, & the weather became cooler, the disease entirely subsided, but there being many weakly convalescents, I gave the Master of the Ship directions to put in, at the Cape of Good Hope, for refreshments, - in endeavouring to do this, the ship was run on shore (Jan. 19th) at Green point, near Cape Town, where she afterwards became a total wreck.

The Emigrants with their baggage were safely landed, and lodged in Barracks at Cape Town, - While waiting for vessels to convey them to their destination - the Cases of incipient Phthisis which had appeared on the voyage changed rapidly into the state of Phthisis consumens which ran its course with awful dispatch. The before mentioned family of three, vizt. Tho. Walsh & his sisters Priscilla Walsh. & Ann Ranger - all dying within the space of two months - and the two patients who chose to remain at the Cape, vizt. Samuel Sweetman, & Hanna Daniels appeared to be declining nearly as fast.

Dysentery became rather prevalent among the emigrants during their stay at the Cape which proved fatal to 3 individuals, in whom, it assumed the chronic form - The last of the emigrants sailed from the Cape on the 18th March 1839 for Sydney, where on their arrival there was no case of sickness on board - The 3 cases in the Nosological Synopsis, placed in the Column, as "Remaining" - being two persons who chose to remain at the Cape, and one case of lumbar abscess rapidly curable when the patient landed at Sydney. on the 21st May 1839 -
