INVEST NOW IN THE DIGITAL MANAGEMENT OF YOUR ARCHIVES TO PROTECT YOUR ORGANISATION'S UNIQUE LEGACY

Digital preservation is essential for every organisation. Failure to preserve digital assets and information will have serious legal, cultural, reputational and business consequences.

The longer it takes to act, the more difficult and costly it will be to preserve the digital information you need.

The National Archives is offering a programme of free digital skills training and support

Novice to Know-How

Join our online training, which is practically focused and developed with the Digital Preservation Coalition. This will equip you with the skills you need to implement a proactive digital preservation strategy within your organisation.

Peer Mentoring

A one-to-one approach addressing particular digital skills. Mentors with a range of digital specialisms will be matched with mentees to provide tailored support, mainly via video or audio calls.

Workflows

This online guidance provides practical examples of workflows for managing digital content, which can be adapted for use in a range of organisations. It also advises on how to process and preserve digital content, including how to use free and open software.

Archives School

A series of practical, digital preservation workshops open to archivists, delivered by specialists from The National Archives.

We are here to help you keep your archive alive and accessible.
